They are, Wright proposes, that, whereas the Jews regarded themselves as still living in exile because of Roman domination, Jesus announced that the divinely promised and long-awaited restoration was under way. (So he appeared less a teacher of wisdom than a prophet.) According to him, moreover, the restoration was taking place in and through his ministry. How so, given that he was not throwing off the Roman yoke?

Well, Jesus had redefined the problem of Jewish exile and its solution. The problem lay, not in Roman domination, but in the Jews' satanically inspired zeal to free themselves from it by armed revolution instead of carrying out their divinely appointed task of leading Gentiles to worship the one true God. The solution lay in repentance from that nationalistic sin and in belief in Jesus as the focal point of a renewed people of God that included

Jesus and the Victory of God

By N. T. Wright

Fortress

741 pp., $65, hardback;

$39, paperback

Jewish outcasts and Gentiles. As such a focal point, Jesus spoke and acted messianically as well as prophetically, though neither for him nor for the Jews did messiahship entail deity.

To renew God's people more inclusively, Jesus also redefined the Torah along lines of mercy and forgiveness as opposed to Israelite ancestry, food laws, and such like. The temple he redefined in terms of himself and his followers. And so it became unnecessary to obtain forgiveness through offering a sacrifice at the temple in Jerusalem, to observe Mosaic restrictions on diet, or to observe other practices demarcating Jews from Gentiles.

No wonder that the leaders—Torah-centered Pharisees and temple-centered chief priests alike—opposed Jesus. He was dismantling the main symbols of Jewish national identity! It did not take omniscience for him to see the opposition mounting; so he made his last journey to Jerusalem under the conviction that there he would be put to death and thus suffer the great tribulation that was expected to befall Israel just before God ushered in his kingdom.

Then Jesus did something that galvanized his opponents, especially the chief priests. He physically assaulted the sacrificial system of worship that took place in the temple. The assault was no mere attempt at reformation. No, it was an acted-out prophecy of judgment, of coming destruction. And reports came that Jesus had predicted such destruction verbally, too.

In fact, he had. Earlier warnings of coming wrath had dealt, not with the eternal judgment of individual sinners hereafter, but with God's using the Romans to judge the Jewish nation here and now for their insurrectionism. More recently and specifically, Jesus had cleared the ground for a redefined temple by predicting that the old, corrupt one would be destroyed within a generation. Furthermore, this destruction would make obvious that he and the renewed people of God now constituted the true temple, that God had returned to it, and that for his renewed people, the exile, the real one, had ended.

What to do with Jesus? Get rid of him, naturally, and use the Romans to do so. His constant talk of God's kingdom and his own kingly deeds and words could be misrepresented as insurrectionary. The Romans crucified Jesus as King of the Jews, then. Only it was not so easy to get rid of him. He rose from the dead. That event, too, Wright treats as historical, not as fictional or eschatologically excluded from critical investigation.

Finally, Jesus came again at the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple in A.D. 70. Not in the way a traditional view of the Second Coming has it, of course. All that language about the sun's darkening, the moon's turning to blood, the stars' falling, and the Son of Man's coming in clouds derives from the Old Testament, where it is used metaphorically, not to describe an end to the space-time universe, but to invest human events with theological significance.

Thus, talk of celestial disasters painted the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple in colors of divine judgment, and seeing the Son of Man coming in clouds meant a recognition that the destruction both demonstrated Jesus' having already ascended to God's right hand, as distinct from descending to earth in the future, and vindicated God's renewed people still living on earth. So Jesus did not make a chronological mistake when he said that everything would happen before the contemporary generation passed away. Everything did happen, right on schedule. For the events of A.D. 70—the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple—were all that Jesus was predicting, and they took place within a generation of his prediction. Furthermore, those events marked the victory of God over those who had engineered the death of his son Jesus (hence the title of Wright's book).

There is much to learn from this reconstruction of the historical Jesus, and we may laud Wright for some sterling contributions: his calling attention to the neglected motif of exile and return; his maintaining Jesus' Jewishness; his defending Jesus' messianic self-consciousness (though self-consciousness of a uniquely divine sonship gets shortchanged); his resisting the separation of faith from history; his enlarging the historical base of our knowledge concerning Jesus; and his sharpening our tools of historiography, especially his developing a criterion of double similarity-cum-double dissimilarity: what is credible in first-century Judaism and as a starting point for Christianity, but sufficiently unlike both to be a mere reflection, is likely historical.

But there is also much to question. Most of it has to do with the possibility that Wright presses his thesis too far, makes it all-encompassing when, in fact, it validly covers only one aspect of Jesus' ministry. In other words, can all the synoptic and related texts tolerate the controlling story of reinterpreted exile and restoration that Wright places on them? For example, can the prodigal son, who wanted distance and wasted his substance in riotous living, represent Israel, who did not want to go into exile and had no substance to waste there? Or can the sower's sowing of good seed stand for God's causing true Israel to return from exile, even though Jesus describes as good, not any seed, but soil?

Why are Jesus' sheep scattered when he is struck? Is not the striking of the shepherd supposed to effect the opposite, their being gathered from exile? How is it that the elect are not gathered till after the great tribulation—that is, till after the Jewish War of A.D. 66–74, in Wright's view—if Jesus was already gathering them from their exile 40 years earlier? How is it that Paul put "our gathering together to him" not till a future "coming of our Lord Jesus Christ"? How is it that James and Peter addressed the recipients of their epistles as exiles in the Diaspora rather than as returnees from it?

According to Wright, Jesus thought that in his Passion he would suffer the great tribulation vicariously and thereby enable his followers living in Judea to escape the coming Roman slaughter, as they later did by fleeing Jerusalem before its destruction. Is not this restriction of the benefits of his suffering to Judean disciples too severe? Does not his expanding to "all" the address of his command, "Watch," imply a larger group? The destruction benefited disciples outside Judea by putting a stop to persecution emanating from there, yet this benefit did not derive from Jesus' suffering but from that of unbelieving Jews; and the benefit was erased by a shift to Roman persecution.

If Jesus he would suffer the great tribulation for his disciples, why did he put it after the abomination of desolation and link it with their later experience rather than with his own immediate experience? And how is it that he called on them to take up their crosses and follow him? Of what did their restoration from exile consist if they were not only going to continue living under Roman domination but also endure persecution for Jesus' sake? Does not answering that their restoration consisted in deliverance from the sin of insurrectionism spiritualize the restoration in a way analogous to the doctrine of "abstract atonement" on which Wright pours scorn? Does not most of Jesus' pacifistic teaching have to do with nonretaliation against Jewish persecutors rather than with nonrebellion against Roman overlords?

Does it not turn scriptural emphasis upside down to interpret the plural "sins" that people repentantly confessed as primarily the singular sin of nationalistic insurrectionism, only secondarily of individuals' sinning in various ways that Jesus discusses at length in his moral teaching? And has not Wright's fixation on redefined exile and restoration likewise led him to ignore and even deny Pharisaic legalism as an object of Jesus' critique?

If Jesus' charge that the temple had become "a den of robbers" meant that it had become "a den of revolutionaries," why did Jesus drive out the buyers and sellers of sacrificial animals and birds? In what way did their activity represent insurrectionism? And if Jesus meant to do away with the temple and its sacrificial worship, why did he tell a cleansed leper to go show himself to the priest and offer the things commanded by Moses? Why did Jesus say to offer your gift at the altar after reconciliation with your brother? Why did Jesus clear the outer court of the temple to enable Gentiles to pray there?

Why should we regard the mountain being cast into the sea as Mount Zion, where the temple was located, when that mountain has not been mentioned in the context, when the Mount of Olives has been mentioned recently, when "this mountain" refers more naturally to the Mount of Olives, right where Jesus and his disciples were located, than to Mount Zion in the distance, and when he hardly meant that the destruction of the temple would happen because some disciple of his was actually going to tell Mount Zion to be thrown into the sea?

If in speaking of judgment to come Jesus did not refer to the last judgment but to the destruction in A.D. 70, what are we to make of the Ninevites' and queen of the south's being raised "in the judgment with the men of this generation"? Did he think the Ninevites and queen would rise from the dead at the destruction? And in what sense did the destruction fulfil the judgment of "all the nations," a judgment issuing in "eternal life" for "the sheep" and "eternal punishment" for "the goats," not in temporal survival and death, as in A.D. 70? Did the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple really exhaust Jesus' warnings of judgment?

Does the accusation that Jesus said he would destroy the temple and in three days build another one form "the rock of history" on which, "ironically enough," we may stand? Is not the irony rather that Wright takes as rock solid a testimony whose wording differs seriously from passage to passage and whose description as false he freely admits? Solid but slippery? How can the house built on the rock be "a clear allusion to the temple," that is, "the true temple" built by Jesus, when the wise man who builds that house is a person who "hears and does" Jesus' words, not Jesus himself?

Can it be that no first-century Jew would take Daniel 7:13 as the Son of Man's descent from heaven? What of John 3:13, "And no one has ascended into heaven except the one who descended from heaven, the Son of Man"? Does not Wright's way of saving Jesus from making a mistake about the occurrence of "all these things" within a generation come at the price of subverting the natu-

RECOMMENDED READING

Frederica Mathewes-Green, National Public Radio commentator and author of Facing East: A Pilgrim's Journey into the Mysteries of Orthodoxy (Harper-SanFrancisco)

I'm fed up. Are you fed up? Let's secede.

There are times when that looks like a pretty good last-ditch strategy. Novelist Walker Percy suggested that Christians and defenders of tattered morality would eventually gather in the fictitious town of Lost Cove, Tennessee, and leave the rest of the world to continue its handbasket journey. In The Revolt (Word, 1996, 425 pp.; $12.99, paper), first-time novelist Susan Wise Bauer has relocated that encampment to the state of Virginia—or rather the Commonwealth of Virginia, which flies the brand-new flag of the Reformed American States.

In this lively political thriller, Bauer has assembled a cast of characters who actually move the plot by force of their character: psychologically complex figures make decisions, and make mistakes, that make things happen. It is a refreshing change from the puppet-fiction that dominates this genre—indeed, from most modern fiction.

Another quality that sets The Revolt apart from most of its classmates is that it never loses touch with believable reality—in part because Bauer has done an extraordinary amount of nuts-and-bolts research. The plotlines include a love story, paramilitary plotting, panicky White House strategy sessions, and behind-enemy-lines detective work at risk of death. There is something for everyone in this novel, and it is all refreshingly well done.

Give The Revolt to your favorite Clancy or Grisham fan. It's just the thing to educate a palate. CT al meaning of Jesus' other eschatological pronouncements?

If Paul agreed with Jesus by referring the Day of the Lord to the destruction of Jerusalem rather than to the end, as Wright avers, how is it that Paul made that day an object of watchfulness and source of comfort for Christians living far off in Greece, and described the day as one in which the Lord himself will descend from heaven, the dead in Christ will rise, and living Christians will be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air? How can Wright allow that Paul was describing Jesus' return to earth yet affirm that Paul thought of the Day of the Lord as entailing intermediate destruction rather than final return?

Wright also avers that later Christians invented the doctrine of Jesus' return because they could not conceive that he was resurrected if not to join those who will yet be resurrected to populate the coming new earth. But where is the evidence for any puzzling over the problem of Jesus' absence from the new earth—tell someone hit on the solution of a return? For that matter, why could not Jesus himself have followed the line of reasoning that Wright ascribes to later Christians?

Maybe Wright can answer these and similar questions. It is a compliment to him that his writing provokes them; but because the questions are serious, they need not only answers, but convincing ones. Otherwise, readers who are understandably eager to celebrate Wright's demolition of the Jesus Seminar and its anemic Jesus might think twice before accepting the Jesus that Wright has reconstructed as an alternative. CT

Robert H. Gundry is Kathleen Smith Professor of Religious Studies at Westmont College in Santa Barbara, California. He is the author of commentaries on Matthew and Mark and other scholarly works. His most recent book, written for a lay audience, is First the Antichrist: Why Christ Won't Come Before the Antichrist Does (Baker Book House).

How Evangelicals WON THE SOUTH

And what they lost in the process.

Evangelical Christianity seems as natural to Southern culture as grits, stock-car racing, and tobacco farming. But in this sweeping reinterpretation of the origins and growth of evangelical religion in the land of cotton, University of Delaware historian Christine Heyrman persuasively argues that things have not always been that way. Indeed, evangelicalism proved a latecomer to Southern life, not gaining a firm foothold until nearly the middle third of the nineteenth century.

Evangelical shock troops, mostly Methodists and Baptists, arrived in Dixie in the mideighteenth century. Though they should have been well poised to scavenge marooned Anglicans after the Revolutionary War, plus the very large number of “worldlings” lacking any semblance of a church affiliation, they nonetheless faced an uphill battle all the way. So the question is, Why did they have such a hard time for so long?

Heyrman contends that the majority of Southerners found evangelicals too countercultural, too subversive of conventional mores—in a word, too odd—to take seriously. For one thing, in the beginning evangelicals seemed excessively introspective, overly concerned to chart the slightest variations in the temperature of their souls. Their propensity toward extreme emotion—weeping, fainting, prostration, and the like—offended the natural reserve of common folk whose hardscrabble lives offered little room for such luxuries. And evangelicals seemed to many to spend entirely too much time worrying about the meaning of dreams, apparitions, natural portents, and the ever-present threat of a physical Devil.

More crucially, early evangelicals offended social mores in countless ways. They countenanced the religious views of women, especially mature matrons. They encouraged converted women to teach and to speak publicly of their religious experience (though they rarely permitted any to preach). Evangelicals urged men of all ages to avoid the pastimes cherished by the majority of Southern males, including fighting, gambling, drinking, parading, cockfighting, and horseracing. They refused to pay the customary deference to the gentry. And they disrupted timeless protocols about the family, too. Men and women sat apart in worship; evangelical churches placed discipline in the hands of church elders rather than patriarchs of households; and they made clear that the bonds of faith took priority over kith and kin—with the result that evangelical fervor sundered families as often as it bound them. White evangelicals denounced slavery and, in limited ways, even subordinated themselves to the spiritual mentoring of blacks. Little wonder, then, if common folk worried that evangelicals threatened the tacit understandings on which Southern culture was founded.

In the most arresting chapter of Southern Cross, Heyrman shows that evangelicals particularly aroused antagonism by their willingness to give authority to brash young men—Methodist itinerants and Baptist farmer preachers still in their twenties and early thirties. These “young gifts,” as believers often called them, possessed a degree of spiritual leverage unparalleled in living memory. Methodist itinerants, in particular, held the very keys to the kingdom in their callow hands, baptizing, marrying, burying, controlling access to the Communion table, and, most portentously, guarding the power to expel the wayward from the body of Christ. All too often, it appeared, the zealotry of youth turned into the zealotry of the crusader. Where the seasoned pastor might have tempered justice with mercy, the young gift administered justice by the letter of the law—then rode away heedless of the human consequences.

But things did not remain such. Evangelicals did win the South, albeit ever so gradually. And they won, Heyrman argues, by selling out. She never puts it quite this baldly, but that is what it amounts to. In almost every respect, she contends, evangelicals—at least white ones—imperceptibly accommodated themselves to prevailing social conventions. Hence, by the midnineteenth century, they had tempered the display of emotion in their meetings, downplayed the physical reality of the Devil, relegated women to subordinate positions in the church and in the home, gave fathers control over the spiritual discipline of their families, and compromised their resistance to slavery. Above all, they replaced a clergy corps of young gifts, as rigid as they were rigorous, with a new one drawn from the ranks of mature men sensitive to the pragmatic necessities of accommodating human frailties.

Heyrman's argument, bold and powerful though it is, invites critique. For one thing, she pays little attention to the role of theology. She rightly insists that the heart of evangelicalism lay in the “language of Canaan,” the language of the contrite soul seeking reconciliation with God through the submission of the mind, heart, and will. Yet Heyrman barely acknowledges that theological structures might have prepared the way for the contrite heart to emerge in the first place, or that theological ideas might have structured religious life and debates long thereafter. Nor does she allow much room for the possibility that evangelicalism grew partly because outsiders came to believe the truth of

Southern Cross:
The Beginnings of the Bible Belt

By Christine Leigh Heyrman
Alfred A. Knopf
336 pp.; $27.50, hardcover
Univ. of North Carolina
Press, $16.95, paper

their message. After all, evangelicals were good preachers and furious publicists, and it strains common sense to think that outsiders dismissed all those words as only “flapdoodle and wind.”

Still more problematic is the Edenic model that underlies the entire book. In the beginning, Heyrman effectively says, there were giants in the land, men and women who rode tall in the saddle, heedless of popular opinion. But little by little, the desire for social approval and numerical success tempted them to crouch lower and lower until they had rendered themselves virtually indistinguishable from the mass of worldlings around them.

The problem with this model is that if it were fully valid, evangelicals should have self-destructed long ago. But they have had a remarkable way of coming back in full force decade after decade. Heyrman nearly admits this point in the epilogue, where she acknowledges the countercultural character of contemporary movements like Promise Keepers.

Such questions pale, however, in the face of Heyrman's achievement. For one thing, most historians, not to mention most theologians and journalists, could take a writing lesson from this scholar. Many of her sources, she tells us with characteristic verve, consisted of clergy journals and diaries, "weatherbeaten books no larger than the palm of a hand, their stained, brittle pages packed with daily entries scrawled in a tiny, cramped hand, a barely legible script blotted with phonetic spellings." Methodologically, too, Heyrman proves herself a free spirit. And though she offers no hint of personal affiliation with the evangelical tradition, she takes it seriously as an important social movement worthy of study on its own terms. The book reveals not a trace of economic or psychological reductionism.

Of greatest interest to readers of CHRISTIANITY TODAY, perhaps, are Heyrman's insights into the dense realm of perception—how outsiders perceived evangelicals, how evangelicals perceived outsiders, how evangelical clergy perceived laity, and the reverse. As a case in point, we learn, through story after story, that the mass of antebellum Southerners resisted revival, not simply because they cherished their own cussed ways more (although some did), but also because they truly feared that evangelicals' ideological fervor would undermine the stability of social conventions hard won through generations of precarious living.

We learn, too, that evangelical firebrands followed the ever-moving line of westward expansion, at least partly because revivals caused so much dissension in local churches that young pastors needed to keep moving in order to find fields of labor that hadn't already been worked over by older pastors. And we learn that pastors of all generations perennially had to cope with obstreperous members who challenged their sermons, criticized their personal habits, and, of course, kept them appropriately impoverished and thus, presumably, humble.

Though no area of American religious history has received more careful attention than antebellum evangelicalism, Heyrman has moved the story forward in ways both subtle and important. We come away from her book realizing that for all their faults, evangelicals still sought (in a classic phrase) to bear the hot coal of God's Word upon their lips and in their lives. For those of us who count ourselves latter-day heirs of those angular partisans, the reading of this powerful book should prove as unsettling as it is rewarding. CT

Grant Wacker is associate professor of the history of religion in America at Duke University and a member of Orange United Methodist Church in Chapel Hill, North Carolina.

RECOMMENDED READING

Daniel Pawley, associate professor of journalism at Northwestern College in Saint Paul, Minnesota

On an overcast afternoon in 1954, John Johnson, publisher of Ebony magazine, fired Ben Burns, his longtime executive editor. Burns left the Ebony offices with tears clouding his eyes, only to break into "convulsive" weeping when his wife, Esther, met him at the door of their home.

Why had Johnson done it? Burns was never sure. Was it simply the logical conclusion to Johnson's and Burns's endless bickering over how Ebony should read and what it should cover? Or was something rotten here: perhaps the fact that the FBI had been trailing Burns for 15 years (because he had once been a member of the American Communist party); might the J. Edgar Hoover machine have pressured Johnson into cutting Burns loose? Only Johnson could tell us now.

The Johnson-Burns story is the main element of Burns's must-read memoir, Nitty Gritty: A White Editor in Black Journalism (University Press of Mississippi, 1996, 230 pp.; $27.50, hardcover), but along the way he provides a superb anecdotal history of black American journalism—a world that is still terra incognita to most white readers.

The Johnson-Burns team seems an almost mythical embodiment of the editor-publisher relationship in American journalism. Here was Burns, a fatherless Jew from the Chicago slums, teaming up with Johnson, a fatherless African American from "Jim Crow" Arkansas, first on Negro Digest, then on Ebony. In at least 84 tries, there had never been a successful black magazine in America until these two got together.

We see Burns fighting furiously to get up to speed on black issues: learning culture and history, becoming street-smart, acquiring the vocabulary of "jive." We see Johnson at the Chicago newsstands, "priming the market" with his own money; inducing friends to buy his magazines; using his business savvy to get racist distributors to keep pace with Ebony's rapid growth.

After the flurry of those fun, early times, however, we see the ideological bone each man had to pick with the other. The essence of the problem was this: Johnson's ultimate goal in publishing was to escape the black press's radical label, and Burns was a radical. Together, they nobly charted a moderate course, which made Ebony during its heyday one of the great magazines of the century—but at what expense to the sandpaper relationship between editor and publisher?

Burns's orientation toward the black press had been strongly influenced by the great African-American intellectual Metz T. P. Lochard, who had received his Ph.D. from the Sorbonne. From his early editorial work at the Chicago Defender, one of the nation's leading black newspapers, through his long tenure at Ebony, Burns never lost the radical edge that led him to attack racial discrimination wherever he found it. Johnson, on the other hand, simply wanted to publish a "black Life magazine" that would explore "the happier side of Negro life," and as the man with the money, he squelched Burns's activist spirit at every turn.

Like partners in a troubled marriage that nevertheless gives the world a fine child to ponder, Burns and Johnson ground each other into helplessness right up until their divorce, yet gave the world Ebony. And the child appears to be doing just fine these days.

SUBMIT YOUR BOOK

BOOKS AND CULTURE AND IFACS
(INSTITUTE FOR ADVANCED CHRISTIAN STUDIES) ANNOUNCE SECOND ANNUAL

$10,000 BOOK PRIZE COMPETITION for 1997 or 1998 published volumes exemplifying scholarly excellence and integrative Christian thinking

Deadline for submission: August 1, 1998
Winners to be announced: March 1999

for guidelines contact:
IFACS Promotion Coordinator, P.O. Box 44362, Madison, WI 53744-4362

FIRST BOOK PRIZE WINNERS

STEPHEN EVANS

for The Historical Christ and the Jesus of Faith
(Oxford University Press)
"Challenges prevailing notions; rich, provocative."

JOHN HARE

for The Moral Gap
(Oxford University Press)
"Unusual and highly original;
challenges Christian readers
[as well as] Kant scholars."

INTERVIEW
BY WENDY MURRAY ZOBA

ABORTION'S UNTOLD STORY

How journalist Cynthia Gorney has helped both sides of the abortion debate to view the other side honestly.

In 1989, after the Supreme Court agreed to hear the pivotal abortion case William L. Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, reporter Cynthia Gorney was dispatched by The Washington Post to “do a curtain raiser” on the law that was at issue. That law had been fiercely debated in the Missouri general assembly, passed in 1986, and was to become the centerpiece for the Webster v. Wade case. It seemed, at the time, that the Supreme Court entertained the possibility of overturning Roe v. Wade, but wanted each side to make its case about the validity of the Missouri law before making a ruling.

Gorney had not written in depth about abortion before. Nor had she encountered the energy that “strong religious faith” brings to this issue. Her unrelenting desire to understand the nuts and bolts of the controversy and the passion behind it compelled her to “press the flesh.” (She integrates over 500 interviews into her narrative.)

When she began the formidable task of gathering background material from archives, she looked for an objective account of the evolution of the thinking on both sides. She needed a book, she says, “whose mission was not to convince but rather to explain.” That’s when she discovered that such a book “did not exist.”

Now it does. Gorney’s Articles of Faith, recently published by Simon & Schuster, offers an unprecedented fair-minded account of the passion and conviction that inspired people on both sides to become activists, leaders, and volunteers in this wrenching debate. She organizes the book around the two real-life figures of Judy Widdecombe and Sam Lee, vigorous activists in opposing camps. Putting human faces on this ideological battle has had the surprising effect of evoking empathy for both sides from both sides.

Gorney is a writer living in California. Articles of Faith is her first book.

How would you characterize the heartbeat of the pro-life movement?

There were a couple of revelations I had in the course of the reporting, which I hadn't seen anywhere else and which changed my view of how the right-to-life community developed and grew. The first decade of right-to-life work, from about the mid-1960s on, was dominated by Roman Catholics. The right-to-life effort, it has to be remembered, did not begin with Roe v. Wade but with the early attempts to change state abortion laws around the country way before Roe.

The first right-to-life groups were local groups. One great misconception is that bishops were urging their parishioners to rise up. That's not the case at all. In many regions, Catholic people banded together to oppose changes in their own state abortion statutes.

What motivated them?

The thing that fascinated me as I interviewed those early right-to-life advocates, that I kept hearing over and over, was: "Yes, I was Catholic. Yes, I was educated Catholic. But, no, I was not doing it because I was Catholic. It was not my Catholic faith that I was trying to promote."

Everything they knew in the world they knew as Catholics. They knew geometry as Catholics. They knew American history as Catholics. They knew catechism as Catholics. They had learned all their lives to separate out religious training from what was general training applicable in the world and in a secular society.

So there was a collection of lessons they had learned as Catholics that they understood to be part of their Catholic faith. There was another collection of lessons that they had learned as moral people in the world. Into that second collection went a whole list of broad principles.

One of those broad principles was, You don't kill innocent life. The notion that what is in the womb constitutes human life that is indistinguishable morally from born life was so basic to their understanding of biology—and everything—that it never seemed to them that this could be regarded as dependent on their distinctively Catholic convictions. It seemed to them obvious, scientifically provable.

So, in the early stages of the debate, it was not broached as a "religious issue"?

No, it wasn't. Take, for example, the Handbook on Abortion, written by J. C. Wilke, who was a Catholic general practitioner and one of the influential early leaders in the right-to-life movement. That book was the teaching guide for many right-to-life speakers and organizational groups. It's done in Q&A form, and it gives right-to-life speakers a logical, historical, and persuasive guide to the nature of their argument. You will not find God mentioned anywhere in that book. It asserted: This is clearly a human life because of the chromosomal development. It's very deliberately nonreligious, which was the broad intent when the national right-to-life committee was formed.

And the second revelation?

The second thing I learned, which really surprised me—and evangelicals with long memories will already know this—is that when Roe v. Wade came down in 1973, evangelicals did not shout out in opposition. You find editorials, in CHRISTIANITY TODAY, for instance, saying that this is a bad decision. But if you read the editorials carefully the tone is clearly, "Hey, folks! This is not just a Catholic issue. You should pay attention to this."

The Southern Baptist Convention (this factoid always floors people) endorsed Roe v. Wade in 1973. They saw it as a furtherance of the separation of church and state. The Southern Baptist Convention's Christian Life Commission was headed at that time by a pastor from Texas who actually thought Roe v. Wade was a pretty good thing because it removed government from this decision. His position, which was reaffirmed annually at the Southern Baptist Convention's meetings for the next four or five years, was that abortion is a very serious thing, it's not a good thing, it's a very prayerful matter, and it basically needs to be left to the prayerful consideration of the woman and her pastor and her physician.

When did evangelicals become galvanized on this issue?

A combination of things that took place from 1978 to 1981 really hauled evangelicals into this struggle. There was great upheaval in the Southern Baptist Convention, and a faction that was much more conservative, theologically and politically, took over the leadership. But this was only one influence on the abortion issue. The others were, first, two very influential evangelicals, C. Everett Koop and Francis Schaeffer, who felt very strongly about abortion and what they saw as a slide toward a devaluing of human life.

They were concerned that evangelicals seemed to be ignoring this issue. Part of this was because there was genuine confusion about what posture to take, and part of it, clearly, was because of a thick strain of anti-Catholicism.

So Koop, who had been working as Articles of Faith

By Cynthia Gorney
Simon & Schuster
575 pp., $27.50,
hardcover

a surgeon in Philadelphia doing repair on neonates—doing all this work to keep tiny babies alive when they were aborting babies not much younger—got together with Francis Schaeffer. And together, along with Schaeffer's son, Franky, they drew up plans for a film series called Whatever Happened to the Human Race?

Audiences were not crazy about the movies, and Schaeffer and Koop didn't get the kind of attendance that they had hoped they would. But the very presence of these films, and Koop and Schaeffer urging people to become concerned about these issues, was quite influential in and of itself.

What was the other factor that galvanized evangelicals?

In addition, there was a concerted political effort going on directed from Washington, between 1978 and 1981, to rouse evangelicals into a powerful voting bloc. The small coterie of New Right people in Washington, D.C., who started this effort—Paul Weyrich, Richard Viguerie—themselves were not all that agitated about abortion. They cared about international politics, taxation, more Washington-oriented subjects.

But they figured out that the way to rouse a community that wasn't particularly politically oriented into their voting bloc was to put together a social-issues agenda that included abortion, homosexuality, feminism, taxation, and Taiwan. They saw clearly that abortion was going to be the top item on this agenda because it could be portrayed as the most alarming factor in a whole bunch of slides toward immorality.

So they rounded up Jerry Falwell and a number of other preachers who had abortion on their minds. Falwell had been preaching about abortion ever since 1973. His Moral Majority campaign, and the deliberate attempt to make this into a political agenda with religious people at its core, was drummed up by these no problem with saying, "It's bad because God says it's bad and because Scripture tells us that it's bad." This brought in a great influx of people of faith, but it also unnerved some people of the previous generation who had been working to make this look like a secular wrong, not a religious wrong.

Would you characterize the evangelical presence in this debate as monolithic?

What was interesting to me was discovering that there was still a great deal of dispute and debate among evangelicals about how abortion ought to be viewed, organizers out of Washington. At the same time, certain evangelical leaders, like James Dobson, were putting abortion at the top of their list of concerns, and radio audiences were multiplying rapidly. So really, from 1978 to 1981, there was a giant infusion of new energy into the right-to-life movement. That was very successful in rousing evangelicals. It worked.

When Roe v. Wade came down in 1973, evangelicals did not shout out in opposition.

Did evangelicals then join forces with the Catholics who were already mobilized?

There were a lot of ways in which the evangelicals didn't get along with the Roman Catholics. It wasn't just the old religious tensions; the agendas were quite different. The Catholic right-to-life movement included many activists with a strong "social justice" commitment who didn't see eye-to-eye with the more conservative evangelical activists.

Were the evangelicals using the name of God in a way that the Catholics weren't?

Very explicitly. This made a lot of the Catholics uncomfortable. The evangelicals, for the first time in this debate, were relying on Scripture. As you know, the word abortion never appears in the Bible. But the standard roster of scriptural quotations used to buttress the right-to-life position started to emerge in the late 1970s. When the evangelicals spoke about why abortion was bad, there was what the law ought to say, and about what a person's responsibility was in the public arena. The majority of right-to-life people in this country, I think, are still uncomfortable with the notion of civil disobedience, and the vast, vast majority are horrified by violence. There's a great deal of dispute about tactics and compromise. There are, I think, large numbers of evangelicals who don't necessarily support a purist right-to-life position. But, by nature, evangelicals are people who argue broadly amongst themselves. There is no official line or mutual authority. So you've got people with all kinds of different views on it.

One of things that many nonreligious newspaper reporters tend to do is misuse the word evangelical. Many people who are not familiar with religion tend to say evangelical and fundamentalist in the same breath and not understand what evangelical means and how broad a brush that really is. There are many reasons for this, but one small part is the abortion movement. People have allowed a very narrow stereotype to become the defining image for the right-to-life person. That stereotype is somebody who is unable to talk about anything except what God wants and has a crazed look on his or her face and is blocking the doorway to an abortion clinic.

I've observed in reading newspaper accounts that it seems to be impossible for persons of strong religious convictions to hold a Bible; they are always "clutching" a Bible.

Did you come into this project with this kind of predisposition?

No. I'm used to being impressed by my own ignorance. One of the things that pulled me into this book project was discovering not only how little I knew about the origins of the right-to-life movement and the nature of right-to-life thinking, but what surprised and upset me was how little I could find that was written in a clear, dispassionate, nonde-meaning voice to make these ideas accessible to me. Everything I could find about the right-to-life movement fit into one of two categories: One was "preaching to the choir" books, written by right-to-life people for right-to-life people; the other was books written by the other side that professed to be objective accounts. Almost without exception I found those to be silly, demeaning, careless, and clearly written with the intent to describe these people as fairly stupid, easily misled, religious zealots. That made me mad, because I needed to understand things better than that.

That was when I began thinking that this was a book somebody needed to take on. It seemed terribly important to tell the stories of these people in a longer format.

How has your book been received by both sides of this debate?

I expected people to be mad because, whichever side they were on, the book made their enemies look like human beings. I expected this more from the pro-choice community than the pro-life community, because the pro-life people are accustomed to being treated in a hostile way in the secular press. I thought I would be going on radio shows and getting pro-choice people calling in saying, "How could you make those bad guys look like good people? They're bombers, they're name-callers. They throw things at us as we walk in."

None of that has happened, to my astonishment. Instead, as I go out and speak, people from both sides have said, "I really don't get it. Can you explain why they think this or why they do that?" The tone has been one of baffled interest.

What do you say to people who support abortion on demand who ask you, "Where are these people coming from?"

What I say is this: "The Supreme Court has just decided that states have to make it legal for women who are in a terrible situation to dispose of their three-year-olds in medical clinics. It's a grave and serious matter, but ultimately, the three-year-olds are the offspring of those women, and it must be up to the women and their doctors to decide when, and if, those three-year-olds get terminated. That is how Roe v. Wade looks to right-to-life people. It's that horrifying.

"If that happened tomorrow, would you try to overturn it or stop other people from doing it?"

That's the way I tend to explain it. There is often a stunned silence and they'll say, "Really? It really looks like that?" And then they rethink a lot of things that they have thought about pro-life people. The thing that is hardest for pro-choice people to understand is that most pro-life people are in this because it is genuinely clear to them that once conception or fertilization takes place, you're talking about a human life that is as individual and as different as a born life; that this is the central motivation, not taking women back to the 1950s or overturning the advances of the last 20 years or making sure people don't have sex.

What do you say to pro-lifers who can't fathom the mind of abortion advocates?

A lot of pro-lifers don't see that for most pro-choice people there is something between life and nonlife, which sounds nonsensical to pro-life people. Everybody that I know who is pro-choice believes that there's something going on in the uterus that's "potential life." The in-between stage is mysterious to the pro-life person and totally clear to the pro-choice person.

How does late-term abortion look according to that line of reasoning?

Many pro-choice people are uncomfortable with late-term abortions, especially with what are variously called partial-birth or D&X abortions. Nobody likes this kind of thing, and most pro-choice people who defend it are holding their noses. At that point, a lot of the people who think of themselves as solidly pro-choice suddenly begin wavering.

Would you characterize a lot of these people as being more conservative than the vocal leadership?

The difficulty right now—the political difficulty—is that if you take apart the polls, it looks like a majority of Americans are willing to keep abortion legal, but only in certain fairly rare circumstances. The polls show that a majority of Americans think abortion ought to be illegal in the very circumstances in which most abortions are actually done. They reject the reasons most often given by women who choose abortion: it should be illegal, for instance, to have an abortion just because you feel that you can't afford the child. It should be illegal to have an abortion so that you can continue your education, with which a child would interfere.

But there's a big catch. What Americans say in a poll is very different from what a lot of them will actually do when it's their sister or their daughter who's in the same situation.

How has writing this book changed you?

The whole issue now, morally, is infinitely more complicated to me than it was when I began. There was one review that almost made me cry. Someone who thought very highly of the book said in the last couple of paragraphs of the review: "Here's what really bothers me about this book. She seems to know more about this issue than anybody else in the country. Why doesn't she tell us what to do? We need to get some guidance from her on where we ought to go."

about the fact that there clearly exists a tiny faction of the right-to-life effort that has argued its way toward violence against persons.

I think also—though I know this is a very difficult subject for a lot of right-to-life people—that right-to-life people need to sit down and think out publicly their positions on contraception. I understand the reason for the silence on contraception. The pro-life movement includes people of all persuasions on this issue, and to address this would be divisive. But the silence on contraception seriously reduces the credibility of the right-to-life position in the mainstream and in the pro-choice communities. One of the questions I'm asked most frequently on radio shows by pro-choice people is, "Why won't they help us on contraception if they think abortion is bad?"

What advice would you give the abortion advocates?

They were formed as a battle group, but battle isn't the right metaphor anymore. They need to get out of the defensive crouch and understand that in the fundamental ways now—in the courts and in Congress—they've won. The battle is over. There is not going to be a constitutional amendment protecting life from conception. So I wish they would

I expected people to be mad because, whichever side they were on, the book made their enemies look like human beings. None of that has happened, to my astonishment.

I thought, "I wish I could." But there's a way in which I'm the least capable person right now. The intensity of both sides makes such sense to me.

If you were to offer advice to pro-lifers about what they can do to move the discussion forward, what would that advice be?

I wish right-to-life folks would think about stepping up repudiation of the violence in a more public way. I understand that every right-to-life group, whenever there's a bombing or physical attack, immediately says, "This is awful. This is not us." But I think there needs to be a more collective rethinking of what to do stop labeling everybody either only pro-choice or anti-choice. Somebody who thinks abortion should be legal but that a 48-hour waiting period is okay is not anti-choice.

I also would urge them to acknowledge publicly that there are a lot of people out there who are opposed to abortion who are good people, who could be reached out to and worked with; that not every abortion opponent is the guy with the bomb on the steps of your clinic. There's a huge community of pro-life people who are very sorry that the doctors are having to go to work wearing bulletproof vests and still think abortion is very wrong.

Christian Celebrity: An Oxymoron?

While we are crucified with Christ, some of us are also pitchmen for Christ—such is the fate of the Christian publicist. Carol DeChant is head of DeChant-Hughes & Associates, a leading public relations firm in Chicago. Her ruminations are excerpted from BOOKS & CULTURE, a companion publication of CHRISTIANITY TODAY.

Ushering a bishop into a big autographing event, I give him a four-inch button imprinted with the title of his book. He winces. "Won't wearing this be incredibly self-serving?" "Yes, of course," I nod, grinning.

In 20 years as a publicist, I've seen changes in how media perceive religion. Faith was once a talk-show taboo. Media now realize religious topics can hook audiences, especially when advocates become hostile. Many media, however, also appreciate our longing for inspiration. What builds ratings today reflects this ambivalence of seeking heroes yet being suspicious of the noble. Working with inspirational books, I am enmeshed in this conflict.

The pastor didn't project the energy which radio producers believe lights up the phone lines. ("We love religion," one of them says. "It makes people fight.") And the pastor declined to let me use what would have been the headline material—the Names who had abandoned him. I had to sell what they call a soft segment: a good man's faith helped him endure evil and forgive his unnamed persecutors. Sales of his book were modest. The PR was handicapped by humility.

A publicist in my office sits beside an eager-to-learn intern, who is soaking up the real and often peculiar PR world beyond the classroom. The publicist hangs up after talking to a lawyer who had hired a ghost writer to package his story. "So, what was the matter?" asks the intern.

The publicist explains, "He's disappointed because the guy who interviewed him for the radio show hadn't read his book."

The intern is puzzled: "Why? He didn't write it!" A Chinese woman wants feedback on a press release for her pastor's book. It's about holiness, heaven, wisdom. Media won't buy these abstract notions, I warn. Americans need to know: how does that impact me?

No, it doesn't matter that your pastor has hundreds of thousands of followers abroad; what can he say to people in Nashville? Unless . . . are there any famous followers? Is there a Richard Gere or a John Travolta?

She wants me to understand that her faith is grander than this. I explain that in America, she needs a hook. She blinks. Embarrassed, I tell her the comic's bit about the evolution of our culture as seen in our magazines: from Life to People to Us to Self. She wonders how she will explain this to her people.

Perhaps our ambivalence about heroes indicates vestiges of a culture that identified heroism with the once-manly courage of attack. Onto that cultural heritage add today's worship of self-actualization—make that speedy self-actualization. Perseverance and humility now seem like wimpy virtues. "Blessed are the meek"? Not on this planet. In volume 3 of his Companion to the Summa of Aquinas, Walter Farrell notes that when we let others provide our heroism, we resign ourselves to abandoning the possibility of the heroic in ourselves. For my heroes out there I cheer, "Go for it." To the hero in me, I mutter, "Chill out."

Yet vicarious heroism is always unsatisfying, Farrell points out. "Courage is as necessary for the living of human life as air, food, or drink; not only the courage of the venturesome, but also that principal courage that holds on, even when holding on is the best [a person] can do." Human life is the real adventure, and genuine heroes are those who possess "the courage that refuses to relinquish the good."

As a publicist, I notice how often after Jesus healed, resurrected, or exorcised he said, "See that you don't tell this to anyone" (Mark 1:43). It was a tall and always impossible order. (How does one respond to "What happened to your leprosy?" or "Weren't you, uh, just dead?") So those who were healed publicized the matter, and then "Jesus could no longer enter a town openly but stayed outside in lonely places. Yet the people still came to him from everywhere" (Mark 1:45).

I see myself in the leper and in the crowd. I hope to encounter the incarnation of all that I might strive toward. I seek truth and charity in this world. Worthy books and humble authors are often a source. Still, I'm attuned to the buzz of that skeptic in the wings. Can anything good come from Nazareth? Watts? Orange County? Doubleday?

When I use the Bible as something other than a weapon for my petty agenda, I find stories of incredible human courage, of valor that amazes even the frail people who exhibit it. The ultimate Hero asks me to build that courage within my vain, idol-worshipping, fearful, mean, impatient self. Heroism is within our power, through grace. It allows us to seek out and to accept no substitutes for the good and the true in our sorry, silly, and sometimes wonderful world. CT

To subscribe to BOOKS & CULTURE: A CHRISTIAN REVIEW, call 1-800-523-7964.

Can anything good come from Nazareth?
Watts?
Orange County?
Doubleday?

NEW Youth Leadership
TRACK

We asked youth ministers how we could help them reach their educational objectives. You said being able to complete a youth work M.Div. without having to move to seminary would be a nice start. So be it. Announcing our new M.Div program for those already in youth ministry. Now you can complete your degree without relocating and disrupting your present youth ministry. Call (800) 255-8706 ext. 6288 today for details.

What you hear could affect your vision.

BETHEL SEMINARY

SAINT PAUL • SAN DIEGO

www.bethel.edu AOL: keyword BETHEL

Amistad's Unsung Hero

Tim Stafford

Stephen Spielberg's Amistad is based on a famous historical case—a slave ship that, after mutiny and months of wandering, reached the coast of Long Island. There the Africans were arrested and charged with piracy and murder.

The Amistad had, as it happened, sailed right into the middle of a raging American struggle over slavery. Antislavery abolitionists took up the Africans' case, contending that they had been illegally kidnapped and, by mutinying, had merely exercised their right to self-defense. Against them stood President Martin Van Buren, determined to send the Africans back to sure death in Cuba.

While Amistad takes some liberties with the facts, it is mostly faithful in illuminating this dramatic part of America's story. Most abolitionists were Christians, as Amistad plainly reveals, and wanted not only to free the Amistad captives but to tell them about Jesus Christ.

One remarkable scene shows one of the Africans grasping the gospel story from looking at pictures in a Bible. Many of the Africans did, in fact, become Christians and went back to their native Africa with the intention of spreading the gospel.

Unfortunately, the man who did most to free the Amistad prisoners, Lewis Tappan, gets cursory treatment in the film. His most memorable scene is an invented conversation with a black abolitionist, in which Tappan suggests that it would be preferable for the blacks to be martyred than to be set free. The scene paints Tappan as something of a racist, a complaint nobody ever made about the real man.

Lewis Tappan had no use for the gingerly way most abolitionists treated black-white relations. He quarreled with evangelist Charles Finney over Finney's insistence that blacks occupy separate seating in his huge Broadway Tabernacle. Even interracial marriages did not bother Tappan in the least. "In a thousand years," he wrote Lyman Beecher, "probably all the inhabitants on this continent would be of one color, neither black nor white . . . but copper colored."

That was startlingly frank language, for miscegenation, as it was called, was considered the last horror. Tappan, however, always said what he thought, without much concern for public relations. He was quintessentially a businessman, a very successful one who, with his brother Arthur, built up the largest silk-importing firm in New York City. The firm went bankrupt in the Panic of 1837, after which Tappan worked hard to repay all debts and went on to found the world's first credit-rating organization, one that still survives under the name of Dun & Bradstreet.

Tappan made a great deal of money, but he lived simply and gave a great deal away. Extraordinarily hard-working, blunt to a fault, intelligent but without subtlety, a kind of human steam engine, Tappan was always outshined by more charismatic abolitionists like Theodore Weld or Frederick Douglass. Nobody, however, made a larger impact on the movement.

That was so regarding the Amistad captives, too. As soon as he heard of them, he formed a committee to free them. Visiting the Africans in prison, he launched into an impromptu sermon on the Providence of God, even though none of them spoke English. He then arranged for Yale divinity students to continue visiting the prisoners while he began publicizing their plight and raising money for their defense. He searched the wharves of New York to find someone who spoke the prisoners' language and hired the best lawyers he could find to take on their case. For almost two years he was tirelessly vigilant on their behalf, until news came that the Supreme Court had set them free. Then he set to work raising funds to send them back to their homes in Africa.

All this he did at the same time he was untangling his silk-importing company from bankruptcy, starting Sunday schools for New York blacks, and sitting daily with his beloved daughter Eliza, who was dying of tuberculosis. Six hours a day were enough for office work, Tappan believed; the rest of a Christian businessman's time should go to help others who were less fortunate. He liked nothing better than to use his spare time in wandering the New York waterfront, handing out tracts and talking about Jesus. More often, though, he worked behind the scenes, doing office work, editing publications, writing letters, arranging funds, sitting on committees.

Five years before the Amistad was captured, a Manhattan mob broke into Tappan's house and burned all its contents, right down to doors and window frames, while police stood by. He was routinely insulted by strangers and threatened in anonymous notes. Somebody sent him a Negro's ear through the mail, with a note recommending it for his "collection of natural curiosities." His business struggled when Southerners and their supporters refused to trade with a firm identified with abolition. Yet Tappan continued, faithful to Christ and unstoppable in his activism, for over 30 years. He lived to celebrate Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation, and as one of the founders of the American Missionary Association, helped send missionaries south to help the new citizens.

So go ahead and enjoy a worthwhile movie, but thank God for a largely unthanked yet worthy man. CI

Lewis Tappan

Nobody made a larger impact on the movement to end slavery.

ANDERSONVILLE BAPTIST SEMINARY

P.O. Box 545 • Camilla, GA 31730-0545

www.andersonvilleseminary.com

Established in 1981, Andersonville Baptist Seminary has hundreds of students presently enrolled. There were over 1,900 graduates in 1996. The seminary has students in all 50 states and 12 foreign countries. Conservative and fundamental, every course is Bible and students work at their own pace. Studies are by cassette tape based on King James Version. Preachers use these practical studies every week in their sermons.

Studies feature such exciting courses as BB794 (1 John-Jude) which has over 1,080 Minutes of Lecture covering topics such as fellowship, sonship, eternal security, and election.

- Over 8,000 Graduates World Wide
- Completely Debt Free
- Excellent Accreditation
- Baptistic In Doctrine
- Excellent Faculty holding Master & Doctoral Degrees
- 18 Degree Programs Offered
- Credits Accepted at Over 200 Colleges
- Member of the National Christian Counselors Associations
- Open Book Examinations
- Work At Your Own Pace
- You Keep All Material for Your Library
- Over 2,500 students presently enrolled

Accredited by Accrediting Commission International

Payment Plans Available
Never Any Interest!
Spouse Education Free*
Main Textbook is the Bible

Associate - Doctorate!
Great Bible Education!
Great Prices!
Call for Payment Plans!

Offering Degrees
in the following Areas

Theology
Ministry
Divinity
Christian & Pastoral Counseling
Christian Education
Religious Education

*External studies!
Interactive Website!
No On-Campus work required!
Credit for lifetime experience!
Transfer credit accepted!
Call for evaluation!*

Practical Counseling Program designed for the Pastor. ABS is also a Certified Academic Institution for the National Christian Counselors Association and offers a Licensed Pastoral Counselor Certified through the NCCA.

Excellent Master of Divinity program allows students to cover both Testaments. Excellent Ph. D. programs as well!

Information and Free Catalog:

1-800-525-1611 • Fax 912-336-7000

Survivors of the Maraghar Massacre

The ancient kingdom of Armenia was the first nation to embrace Christianity—in A.D. 301. Modern Armenia, formerly a Soviet republic, declared autonomy in September 1991 and today exists as a member of the Commonwealth of Independent States. There you find many of the oldest churches in the world, and a people who have upheld the faith for nearly 1,700 years, often at great cost.

Nowhere has the cost been greater than in the little piece of ancient Armenia called Nagorno-Karabakh, cruelly cut off from the rest of Armenia by Stalin in and left with all the pickings from the looting.

I, along with my team from Christian Solidarity Worldwide, arrived within hours to find homes still smoldering, decapitated corpses, charred human remains, and survivors in shock. This was truly like a contemporary Golgotha many times over.

I visited the nearby hospital and met the chief nurse. Hours before, she had seen her son's head sawn off, and she had lost 14 members of her extended family. I wept with her: there could be no words.

With the fragile cease-fire that began in May 1994, we have been able to visit survivors of the massacre at Maraghar. Unable to return to their village, which is still in Azeri hands, they are building "New Maraghar" in the devastated ruins of another village. Their "homes" are empty shells with no roofs, doors, or windows, but their priority was the building of a memorial to those who died in the massacre.

We were greeted with the traditional Armenian ceremony of gifts of bread and salt. Then a dignified elderly lady made a speech of gracious welcome, with no hint of reference to personal suffering. She seemed so serene that I thought she had been away on that terrible day of the massacre. She replied: "As you have asked, I will tell you that my four sons were killed that morning, trying to defend us—but what could they do with hunting rifles against tanks? And then we saw things no human should ever have to see: heads that were too far from their bodies; people hacked into quarters like pigs. I also lost my daughter and her husband—we only found his bloodstained cap. . . . We still don't know what happened to them. I now bring up their children. But they have forgotten the taste of milk, as the Azeris took all our cows."

How can one respond to such suffering and such dignity? Since the cease-fire, we have undertaken a program to supply cows. On our last visit, we met this grandmother, and, smiling, she said: "Thank you. Our children now know the taste of milk."

Nagorno-Karabakh is a place where we have found miracles of grace. The day of the massacre I asked the chief nurse, whose son had been beheaded, if she would like me to take a message to the rest of the world. She nodded, and I took out my notebook.

With great dignity, she said: "I want to say, 'Thank you.' I am a nurse. I have seen how the medicines you have brought have saved many lives and eased much suffering. I just want to say, 'Thank you,' to all those who have not forgotten us in these dark days."

The Baroness Cox is president of Christian Solidarity Worldwide, P.O. Box 99, New Malden, Surrey, KT3 3YF, England.

PHOTO COURTESY OF CSW

It was truly like a contemporary Golgotha
many times over.

1921, and isolated today as a Christian enclave within Islamic Azerbaijan. Only 100 miles north to south, 50 miles east to west, there are mountains, forests, fertile valleys, and an abundance of ancient churches, monasteries, and beautifully carved stone crosses dating from the fourth century.

This paradise became hell in 1991. Vying with Armenia for control of this enclave, Azerbaijan began a policy of ethnic cleansing of the Armenians of Karabakh, and 150,000 Armenians were forced to fight for the right to live in their historic homeland. It was a war against impossible odds: 7 million—strong Azerbaijan, helped by Turkey and, at one stage, several thousand mujahideen mercenaries.

On April 10, 1992, forces from Azerbaijan attacked the Armenian village of Maraghar in north-eastern Karabakh. The villagers awoke at 7 A.M. to the sound of heavy shelling; then tanks rolled in, followed by infantry, followed by civilians with pickup trucks to take home the pickings of the looting they knew would follow the eviction of the villagers.

Azeri soldiers sawed off the heads of 45 villagers, burnt others, took 100 women and children away as hostages, looted and set fire to all the homes,

Classic and contemporary excerpts

Our Power Center

We can choke God's word with a yawn; we can hinder the time that should be spent with God by remembering we have other things to do. "I haven't time!" Of course you have time! Take time, strangle some other interests and make time to realize that the centre of power in your life is the Lord Jesus Christ and His Atonement.

—Oswald Chambers in Run Today's Race

The Soul's True Home

Prayer is not a strategem for occasional use, a refuge to resort to now and then. It is rather like an established residence for the innermost self. All things have a home; the bird has a nest, the fox has a hole, the bee has a hive. A soul without prayer is a soul without a home. Weary, sobbing, the soul, after roaming through a world festered with aimlessness, falsehoods, and absurdities, seeks a moment in which to gather up its scattered life, in which to divest itself of enforced pretensions and camouflage, in which to simplify complexities, in which to call for help without being a coward. Such a home is prayer.

—Abraham Joshua Heschel in Moral Grandeur and Spiritual Audacity

We Need More of God

I want to simplify your lives. When others are telling you to read more, I want to tell you to read less; when others are telling you to do more, I want to tell you to do less. The world does not need more of you; it needs more of God. Your friends do not need more of you; they need more of God. And you don't need more of you; you need more of God.

—Eugene H. Peterson in Subversive Spirituality

All Is Vanity

The world passes away with all its concupiscence and deceitful pleasure.

—Thomas à Kempis in The Imitation of Christ

Road to Unbelief

What a man does not want to believe, he can find a way to deny.

—Michael Ignatieff in
The Needs of Strangers

No Four-Letter Words

I have a strong dislike for vulgar phrases and find that the terms "good grief" and "rats" will cover virtually anything that happens.

—Cartoonist Charles Schultz interviewed in Vanity Fair (Oct. 1996)

God's Promise

God . . . is not in the business of granting wishes. God is in the business of raising the dead, not all of whom are willing. . . . There is nothing wrong with letting God know what we want, as long as we do not mistake our list for the covenant. The covenant has no conditions. The covenant is no deal. It is God's promise to be our God, which contains within it the promise that we shall be God's people—not by our consent but by our creation.

—Barbara Brown Taylor in Gospel Medicine

The Anger Barrier

There is no greater obstacle to the presence of the Spirit in us than anger.

—John Climacus in The Ladder of Divine Ascent

A Greater Harm

In the more virtuous days of the Roman empire the Roman citizens feared harm only from their enemies, but when those days had become degenerate, they had to endure greater misery from their fellow citizens.

—Saint Augustine in
The City of God

When New and Improved Isn't

What is so often missing from much of contemporary worship is a sense of the beauty, the blessing, and the being of God. . . . As long as the church continues to confuse the hunger for God, extant in every human heart, with the same yearnings that drive a market culture and a consumerist society, its worship will remain irrelevant at best, and an outright impediment at worst.

As long as the church insists on serving up "Twinkies," even new and improved ones, many of those once-churched-now-unchurched will continue to seek their bread in the world at large, wherein a still-living, all-loving God continues to reveal self day by day in 10,000 marvelous ways.

—Craig Rice in Circuit Rider, quoted in Context
(July 1, 1997)

Real Wisdom

Seek wisdom, Scripture says—and wisdom includes sanctified "street smarts." Wisdom starts in heaven but works at street level, where we bump shoulders with others. It isn't satisfied with information retrieval: You can't access wisdom by the megabyte. Wisdom is concerned with how we relate to people, to the world, and to God.

—Edmund P. Clowney in Tabletalk (March 1995)

Our Greatest Evil

The worst sins of men are spiritual.

—C. S. Lewis in
The Four Loves

"I don't know you from Saddam."

THE SPECTATOR (UK), AUGUST 11, 1990

THE MARKETPLACE

Cost: 46 cents per character (each space & punctuation counts as a character); avg. 45 characters per line. Min. $39.10 (85 characters). CT blind box number available at $6 each insertion; checkmark box ☒ $14 each insertion. Supply permanent street address and phone number. Ads set display style: $276/column inch. Combination package available for CHRISTIANITY TODAY, CHRISTIAN READER, & YOUR CHURCH: 2 magazines—44 cents per character per insertion; 3 magazines—42 cents per character per insertion. Display style: 2 magazines—$263 per insertion; 3 magazines—$252 per insertion. All classified ads will now be automatically placed on CHRISTIANITY ONLINE at no additional charge. IMPORTANT: Prepayment & written confirmation required to process ads. Visa, MasterCard, or personal check accepted; fax (630) 260-0114. Employment ads are given priority. All other ads will be placed in first available issue. Deadline for reservation or cancellation is seven weeks prior to actual issue date. Address correspondence to: Classified Advertising, Christianity Today, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

SENIOR PASTOR

Wortley Baptist Church, London, Ontario, a growing Canadian city of 326,000, is seeking a senior pastor to give strong leadership to its fine pastoral team and congregation of about 600. Excellence is required in Bible-based preaching/teaching, with contemporary relevance. Graduate training in theology desirable. Contact: Robert Kline, Chair of Search Committee, Wortley Baptist Church, 250 Commissioners Rd. East, London, ON N6C 2T1; (519) 439-7355.

SENIOR PASTOR

Grace Evangelical Lutheran Church of Deephaven (AALC) is seeking a full-time pastor. Ten years work experience desired, including experience as a senior pastor. Should have strong skills in preaching and teaching God's Word, a desire for outreach and evangelism, and experience in leading young people of all ages. Weekly average church attendance is approx. 300. Interested candidates should send résumés to: Pastor Calling Committee, Grace Evangelical Lutheran Church of Deephaven, 18360 Minnetonka Blvd., Wayzata, MN 55391.

MINISTER OF FAMILY LIFE. Innovative mainline congregation seeks second pastor to lead creative ministries to children, youth, and parents. Lead small groups, small-group leaders, and worship (on occasion) also. We're looking for someone who loves Jesus, students, and their families. Full-time. Excellent package includes salary, housing, and all benefits. Contact Rev. Jim Morse, First UCC, P.O. Box 222, Bremen, IN 46506; (219) 546-2459.

DIRECTOR OF DEVELOPMENT for Pioneer Clubs, dedicated to the Christian education of children through the local church. Seeking experienced development professional who can manage the total development program, with special emphasis on major donor/planned-giving program. Resp. for increasing revenue from churches, individuals, and foundations. Candidate should have experience with a variety of acquisition techniques. Should have ability and vision to build a long-term development plan. Experience with Pioneer Clubs at local-church level a plus! Salaried with benefits. Send résumé to: Mary Hackman, Pioneer Clubs, Box 788, Wheaton, IL 60189. No phone calls please.

DIRECTOR OF DISCIPLESHIP We're a growing and dynamic PCA church in the Chicago suburbs, looking for a creative, experienced person with a desire to be on staff at a church with a vision of being a regional resource church in church planting and renewal. Should have a passion for seeing Christ formed in people and a heart for both nominally church people and nontraditional ministry. Send résumé to Art Wittmann, Naperville Presbyterian Church, 943 Sanctuary Lane, Naperville, IL 60540.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

MALONE COLLEGE is seeking candidates for the following three president's cabinet-level positions:

- Vice President for College Advancement: reports to the president; experienced in college/institutional advancement/development; capital-campaign experience, and master's degree desired. Applications to Mr. Richard A. Pakel, Executive Vice President Administration.
- Academic Dean—reports to the provost; seeking a dynamic academic leader with vibrant Christian faith and strong commitment to Christian higher education. Must possess an earned doctorate and leadership experience at least at the department chair level. The dean will provide immediate oversight for all activities of the undergraduate offerings of the college. Applications to Dr. Robert C. Suggs, Provost.
- Dean of Student Development—reports to the provost; seeking an effective student-development professional with a broad range of student-development-related experience, a commitment to Christian higher education, and demonstration of effective integration of Christian faith and higher education. Applications to Dr. Robert C. Suggs, Provost.

Candidates should submit a letter of application, résumé with three references, and statement of Christian commitment to the administrator named above. Malone College, 515-25th Street N.W., Canton, OH 44709-3897. Review of applications begins immediately and will continue until the position is filled.

MINISTER OF MUSIC, full-time for fast-growing Presbyterian Church in Lady Lake, Florida. Experience in adult and children's choirs, handbells, and instruments preferred. Résumé to North Lake Presbyterian Church, 40404 First Street, Lady Lake, Florida or fax: (352) 753-3982.

DIRECTOR OF MUSIC

Second Presbyterian Church, Memphis, Tennessee, a 3,400-member, 154-year-old evangelical church in the Reformed tradition, is seeking a director of music. We have a 100-member adult choir, brass, handbell, and string ensembles, and youth and children's choirs. We have a rich tradition of special programs of great composers' works, with full orchestral accompaniment and a 100-rank pipe organ. There are four paid music staff. Applicant must possess ability to develop excellent choral sound and build solid program with willingness to develop expertise in drafting liturgy. Will be responsible for two morning worship services, which are primarily traditional, but with some contemporary music. Will also assist with evening contemporary service. Ministering to those in the music ministry while working closely with the entire church staff is important. Send résumé to: John C. Adamson, Executive Administrator, Second Presbyterian Church, 4055 Poplar Avenue, Memphis, TN 38111.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

HEAD OF STAFF

"Wow, What a wonderful Pastor!"

If this is said about you, and you have had some (8) years of a glorifying God ministry, then READ ON. If you can (1) inspire a 1,000-member congregation to seek the Lord's will; (2) train a well-informed lay leadership to even higher Christ-centered service; (3) shepherd the spiritual needs of a growing year-round church family and a most responsive group of "snow birds"; (4) meld all currently viable ministries within our historically dynamic, Christ-centered, biblically directed and human-need-driven congregation; and (5) acclimate to our beautiful Coachella Valley located some 120 miles southeast of Los Angeles. The Palm Desert area is famous for pleasant climate, country clubs, 100 golf courses, hospital specialties, higher educational opportunities, cultural events, charity drives, and other features elucidated in our CIF. We are anxious to hear from you! A top Presbytery salary and benefit package is available. CIF upon request. Send PIF to: Armond Deane, Chairperson, PNC, P.O. Box 1896, Palm Desert, CA 92261; fax: (760) 346-8173.

PASTOR OF MUSIC AND WORSHIP is needed at College Park Church in Indianapolis, IN. Church of 1,700 searching for spiritually mature, trained, and educated in music person to take over entire ministry. Individual should be skilled in leading and teaching congregation to worship our Heavenly Father. He must also be able to lead choirs, ensembles, and other special music groups in preparation for presentation. Position will be part of full-time staff. Must be a team player. Send résumé to College Park Church, Indianapolis, IN 46268, Attn. Elliott Archer or call (317) 875-0282.

WHEATON COLLEGE seeks candidates for the position of Director of Human Needs and Global Resources (HNGR) Program. The HNGR program is an undergraduate Third World Studies program designed to increase understanding of global poverty and development through on-campus course work and a six-month internship in an international setting. Academic administrative staff position with faculty status. Preference for doctorate, field experience in development and fluency in Spanish. Send letter of interest, résumé, and reference to Ward A. Kriegbaum, Dean of the Faculty, Wheaton College, Wheaton, IL 60187. Application forms will be sent to promising applicants, and applications will be accepted until the position is filled. Duties will commence early spring semester, 1999. Wheaton College is an evangelical Christian liberal arts college whose faculty and staff affirm a statement of faith and adhere to lifestyle expectations. The college complies with federal and state guidelines for nondiscrimination in employment. Women and minority candidates are encouraged to apply.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

PRESIDENT

Prairie Bible Institute invites nominations and expressions of interest for the position of president. As chief executive officer of the Prairie Schools, the president reports directly to the board of directors. PBI is an independent, evangelical Christian educational institution. Prairie Schools include a graduate school/theological seminary in Calgary, AB, accredited four-year baccalaureate Bible college, and elementary, junior, and senior high schools on one campus in Three Hills, Alberta, 75 minutes N/NE of Calgary. Total enrollment stands just over 1,400. Alumni of the secondary and postsecondary schools serve in 114 countries. The qualities desired in the successful candidate for president are the ability to identify with and promote Prairie's mission as an evangelical institution. Christian character and integrity. We are looking for a proven leader whose experience, skills, and qualifications are particularly well suited to the PBI Schools and the opportunities they face in the 21st century. Candidates should possess an earned doctorate, demonstrated leadership skills in an academic environment, and the ability to work with the board, faculty, staff, and students to further the institution's mission. Nominations or letters of interest should be sent to: Dr. Paul Virts, Chairman, Presidential Search Committee, PBI Board of Directors, P.O. Box 4000, Three Hills, AB, Canada T0M 2N0. Copies of the president's job description, qualifications, and application procedures can be obtained from: Office of the President, PBI, P.O. Box 4000, Three Hills, AB, Canada T0M 2N0. Review of applications will begin immediately and continue until the position is filled. By law, preference will be given to qualified Canadians.

SOJOURNERS, a faith and social justice nonprofit, seeks development officer to initiate and oversee cultivation and solicitation strategy for all major donor prospects and foundations, along with budgetary and staff responsibilities. Salary negotiable, plus excellent benefits. Send cover letter and résumé to Publisher/Managing Director Job Search, Sojourners, 2401-15th St. NW, Washington, DC 20009.

SENIOR WRITER

The Christian Broadcasting Network (CBN), headquartered in beautiful Virginia Beach, Virginia, has an immediate opening for a seasoned senior writer to work in its Direct Marketing Department. We are seeking a highly innovative and creative individual to write inspirational appeals. The successful candidate will have experience as a writer of direct mail, advertising, or marketing materials, preferably for a nonprofit organization. A degree in journalism, English, or marketing is required. Ability to work as a part of a creative high-energy team a must. CBN offers a competitive salary and excellent benefits package, including relocation allowance. If you meet the listed qualifications and share our vision and purpose, call our 24-hour line, (800) 888-7894, to request an application. Résumés can be faxed to (757) 579-3899.

MINISTRY PLACEMENT for pastors & associates or churches. Call (503) 357-7830 or Believer's Dynamics, POB 596, Forest Grove, OR 97116. Since 1977.

CHRISTIAN SCHOOL in scenic Galena seeking administrator and position in K-12. TSCS, 11084 Hwy. 20 W., Galena, IL 61036; (815) 777-3800.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

FACULTY POSITIONS

WAYNESBURG COLLEGE

COMMUNICATION—radio emphasis; teaching communication and advising student radio station. Master's required, practical experience desired, doctorate preferred.

COMPUTER SCIENCE—two positions possible (one may be combined with mathematics); teaching all levels of programming and/or applications. Master's required, varied computer experience desired; doctorate preferred.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE—possible opening; likely to include forensic accounting.

EDUCATION—possible appointment as department chair; teaching (elementary or other specialties), and supervising student teachers. Doctorate strongly preferred; school experience as administrator required.

MATHEMATICS—teaching range of mathematics courses, including algebra, precalculus, calculus, differential equations, college geometry, statistics, number theory, and numerical analysis; position possibly combined with computer science.

MUSIC—band and other instrumental ensembles; teaching range of music courses; responsible for music program, including recruiting, programs, part-time faculty.

See home page (<http://waynesburg.edu>). All positions require commitment to Christian higher education and breadth of teaching skills, plus normal full-time faculty responsibilities. Send CV, copies of transcripts, letter addressing qualifications and philosophy of education, and three references to Richard Stanislaw, Vice President for Academic Affairs, Waynesburg College, Waynesburg, PA 15370 or rstanislaw@waynesburg.edu.

LIFE-CHANGING TEACHERS

Wheaton Academy believes teachers must have a growing relationship with Christ, must be excellent in their field, must believe biblical integration and scholastic excellence are inseparable, must hold high standards, must be capable of motivating a range of students, and must enjoy working specifically with teenagers. Our mission to "nurture growth in students through excellence, relationships, and service, all to the glory of God," is truly the foundation and philosophic centerpiece of everything we do at Wheaton Academy. Founded in 1853 and accredited since 1911, we serve Christian families with a traditional college preparatory curriculum, an innovative January term (Winterim), and comprehensive extracurricular programs (15 sports). Our growing student body (400+) benefits from a personal environment, a mature student culture, and regular opportunities for leadership training. Our school is located on a beautiful, country-style 43 acres in Chicago's western suburbs. A 6-year, 15M Learning Resource, Field House, Fine Arts expansion plan begins this spring.

1998-99 OPENINGS: Science (chemistry emphasis), math, Spanish/other combination, contact Jon Keith, Principal, at (630) 231-0727, ext. 16, or write: 900 Prince Crossing Road, West Chicago, IL 60185 for an information packet and application.

ASSOCIATE PASTOR needed for a growing (350+) church in a growing area near Indianapolis. Recently completed building project attests to our commitment to grow. We seek someone who loves the Lord and years to lead and equip our youth and adults. M.Div. preferred. Join our team, to help lead us upward and onward! Contact John Van Namen, c/o Community Congregational Church, 4592 Hurricane Road, Franklin, IN 46131.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

CHRISTIAN ED. DIRECTOR: 850-member nondenominational community church in suburb between Cleveland and Akron metro areas seeks full-time DCE. Résumé to: Search Committee, The Church in Aurora, Box 244, Aurora, OH 44202.

COLLEGE & YOUNG SINGLES PASTOR

We are seeking a person who has a pastor's heart and a passion for ministry to college and young singles to join our energetic ministry team. He should have an appropriate education, prior effective ministry experience, and be a gifted communicator with strong organizational skills. Our college ministry includes students from nearby Wheaton College and other regional college campuses. Address inquiries to: Pastor Gary Dausey, Wheaton Bible Church, Main at Franklin Street, Wheaton, IL 60187.

YEW CHUNG EDUCATION FOUNDATION
We operate bilingual international schools (preschool through secondary level) in Hong Kong, Shanghai, Beijing, Chongqing, and USA, providing students with quality education within a Christian environment. Enthusiastic Christians who have visions and missions in education ministry are welcomed to apply for the following positions:

- Western Primary/Secondary School Co-Principals (Primary: Beijing & Chongqing; Secondary: Hong Kong). Yew Chung schools are administered by two co-principals, one Western and one Chinese, working in consultation and collaboratively in a multicultural education environment. Qualifications include: Degree or higher or equivalent, teacher qualifications, and considerable classroom practice, substantial experience in school administration.
- Admission Officers (Congqing, China). Degree or equivalent, substantial experience in public relations or media, administrative experience in education.
- Secondary Science Teachers (all campuses). To teach General Science (junior high level) and either Biology or Chemistry or Physics (higher level), degree in science and teacher training, substantial classroom experience.
- Music Teachers (all campuses). Degree in music or equivalent and teacher training.
- Class teachers (General Education). Degree and teacher training.

Send full résumé with names & addresses of 2 referees to: Human Resources Division, Yew Chung Education Foundation, 20 Somerset Road, Kowloon Tong, Hong Kong; fax: (852) 2338-4045; email: issic.leung@ycef.com; web page: <http://www.ycef.com>

DUE TO GROWTH AND EXPANSION, Belhaven College seeks those faculty who are excited to serve in the following areas at a college that prepares students to serve Christ Jesus in their occupation, relationships, and in the world of ideas.

- Director of the Library (Librarian master's required)
- Sports Science Faculty (PhD & Athletic Training Certification required)
- Theater Department Chair (MFA required)
- English Department Chair (Ph.D. required)
- Business Administration Faculty in Memphis (DBA or Ph.D. required)

Send vita to Daniel C. Fredericks, Provost, 1500 Peachtree St., Jackson, MS 39202. Minorities are encouraged to apply.

INTERNATIONAL, interdenominational, English-language church in Egypt seeks a mature and experienced pastor. Travel costs, apartment, car, and monthly stipend are provided. Please e-mail: rcapp@compuserve.com

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

SENIOR PASTOR. An innovative, biblically conservative, growth oriented, mid-America, SBC community church is seeking a gifted pastor. Details at: www.LakelandChurch.org SOJOURNERS, a faith and social justice nonprofit, seeks publisher/managing director to occupy the number two position within the organization, oversee all day-to-day operations, and serve as publisher of Sojourners magazine. Salary negotiable, plus excellent benefits. Send cover letter and résumé to Publisher/Managing Director Job Search, Sojourners, 2401-15th St. NW, Washington, DC 20009.

NATIVE-SPEAKING ENGLISH TEACHER for Hong Kong Christian schools: 2-year English-teaching experience required. U.S. $5,000/mo. Call: (630) 942-0000.

CHRISTIANITY TODAY, INC. seeks to fill the following positions:

- Advertising Sales Manager: Degreed individual with 5-10 yrs. sales-management experience in the Christian market to provide day-to-day management of advertising account executive staff and departmental sales efforts.
- Associate Editor: LEADERSHIP Journal seeks editor with 3-5 years of experience and a thorough, broad-based understanding of the Protestant milieu/theology. Pastoral experience strongly preferred. Must be editor first, writer second. Send detailed information elaborating on interest in ministering through a magazine for church leaders and qualifications to do so, plus writing samples.
- Market Research Analyst: Degreed analyst with 2-3 years experience in market research analysis. Should be skilled in PC & Mac software, survey development for both qualitative and quantitative research, data analysis.
- Director of Marketing: Degreed individual with 8 years experience (preferably in magazine/book publishing) to provide strategic direction for ancillary product direct-mail marketing, supervise marketing managerial staff, and give input to new product R&D. Must have proven experience managing direct-mail marketing efforts.

To combine career with ministry, mail/fax résumé with cover letter detailing salary history to: Christianity Today, Inc., HR Dept.-CT, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188; fax: (630) 260-0114; E-mail: CTIHRDept@aol.com.

U.S. DIRECTOR

Our client is a Christian, nonprofit, international social-development organization. We are seeking a U.S.-based, experienced fundraising professional who will feel comfortable working in a variety of cultural contexts. The successful candidate will be responsible for setting strategy and implementing all U.S. fundraising activities. The position reports to the U.S. board of directors and will implement major gift, direct-mail, special-event, and grant-proposal strategies. Please send résumé and current salary information in confidence to: Van Dyke Associates, 1755 South Naperville Road, Suite 100, Wheaton, Illinois 60187.

looking for pastoral staff?
seeking a new ministry?
www.ministrysearch.com
e-mail version also available:
info@ministrysearch.com

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

PASTOR OF YOUTH AND CHILDREN Arlington Countryside Church, an independent evang. church in suburban Chicago seeking godly leader with proven ability in developing youth programs and supervising children's ministries. Successful candidates are creative, enthusiastic, relational, organized, and focus on outreach and spiritual growth. Ron Hall, ACC, 916 E. Hintz Rd., Arlington Heights, IL 60004; fax: (847) 255-7986; e-mail: acchurch@flash.net

FOUNDATION PRESIDENT for well-known mission organization. Must have knowledge of planned giving and experience in raising endowment funds. Able to manage office and enjoy contacting donors. Salaried with benefits. Fax response/résumé to: (714) 654-9197.

POSITIONS WANTED

CFO/CONTROLLER position sought with a privately held company or nonprofit organization. Currently a partner in a large regional CPA firm, but also experienced as CFO in industry. Broad base of experience, including manufacturing. Wish to return to private position. Location open. Reasonable salary. Reply to CT Classified Ads Box 215, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188

ARTICULATE, well-read Christian woman is seeking employment as a lady's traveling companion/secretary. Please forward replies to: Katrina Barber, Box #10, 535-13th Street North, Lethbridge, AB T1H 2S6, Canada, or fax reply to (403) 320-9235.

ASBURY SEM. GRAD seeks to serve as asst. pastor or serve ministry/seminary with strong admin. gifts; (614) 487-9634 or tim_rosalie@juno.com

UNIVERSITY ADMINISTRATOR/PROF. with 20 years of experience seeks challenging position in higher education. Ordained min. with extensive admin., adult educ., and teaching background. Contact (812) 299-1423 for a C.V.

STRATEGIC PLANNING and leadership-development retreats and seminars for churches. Visit the ChurchPlanning Web site at www.churchplanning.com

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

WHAT'S MISSING? In finding fulfillment, Wisdom for Practical Living, Paul Serwinek, Ph.D., discusses the 8 areas of life a Christian must account for to attain balanced living. 234 pp., $13.95 postpaid. Check or credit card # & expiration to: Agency Advisors, 8884 Commerce Rd., Commerce, MI 48382 or toll-free: (888) 457-3146.

FROM AUGUSTINE TO C. S. LEWIS: Legacies of the Faith, by Dr. Ed Erny. Daily devotional readings collected from over 30 years of great Christian literature. Subject index aids ministers, evangelists, and Christian workers. Order your copy/ies now for only $8 plus $1.25 (U.S.) P/H per copy from the OMS International Bookstore, P.O. Box A, Greenwood, IN 46142-6599.

SHORT-RUN BOOK PUBLISHING! We can publish your book professionally in quantities as low as 250 books for less than $1,200 U.S.! Take advantage of the Canadian dollar: For free info contact: Essence Publishing, 103B Cannifton Rd., Belleville, ON, Canada K8N 4V2; (1-800) 238-6376; fax: (613) 962-3055; www.essence.on.ca

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

Authors Wanted

Successful, full service, subsidy publisher can transform your manuscript into an attractive, quality book — and promote it. Send your completed work for a no-cost, no obligation assessment — or request a free brochure.

Rutledge Books, Inc. • 1-800-278-8533
Dept. CT16 • P.O. Box 315 • Bethel, CT 06801

EVANGELISTIC MATERIAL IN ARABIC: books, tracts, cassettes. In English: The Bible and Islam ($4.95 U.S./$5.95 Canada). Write Arabic Dept., Back to God Hour, 6555 W College Dr., Palos Heights, IL 60463.

JUST PUBLISHED! A new edition of Dr. George M. Lamsa's The Modern New Testament from the Aramaic. The one New Testament capable of reordering the theology of practicing Christians and saving the church universal from itself and the cults! This is not a revision. It is the first English translation of the New Testament of the Peshitta of the Church of the East, the oldest Christian Bible known to man! Dr. Lamsa was a graduate of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Mission College in Persia and of the Virginia Theological Seminary in Alexandria, Virginia. Hundreds of obscure passages are illuminated by the one Bible translator born in the land of the Prophets with the language of Jesus. These verses are footnoted in numbers for immediate use in comparison. Order today for just $23. No S&H for a limited time. Visa and MasterCard orders accepted. The Aramaic Bible Society, Inc., 1912 Highway 142 East, Covington, GA 30014-8830; telephone: (770) 784-9062; fax/phone: (770) 385-7216.

PUBLISH YOUR BOOK!

Our FREE step-by-step guide to Self Publishing gives you all features and prices up-front. You're ensured quality with in-house printing and bindery services. We offer low minimum quantities — only 200 books! Call or write for our FREE guide.

MP
MORRIS
PUBLISHING
3212 E. Hwy 30
Kearney, NE 68847

800-650-7888, ext. CT4
<http://morrispublishing.com>

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

BUSINESS-MINDED CHRISTIANS

Join the world's 1st online Christian franchise. Exclusive territories from 20K, yielding exceptional ROI. Full training & support. For free info, call (1-800) 663-7326.

CHRISTIAN BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY. Call (800) 585-5873, ext. 3. Mention ID#8778.

HOME-BASED BUSINESS. Great income potential. Safe alternatives for air you breathe and products you use. An established company with primary purpose of glorifying God. (888) 200-3137.

CHRISTIAN BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY. Call (1-800) 585-5873, option 3, to receive a FREE info pack. No sign-up fee. Leave my ID#7098 at the end of the message.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

BECAUSE "EVERYONE has a kitchen or knows somebody who does," Pampered Chef® reps needed in your area. For free info: (1-800) 842-8937.

PUBLICATIONS

THE END TIMES, a bi-monthly prophetic newsletter. $10 yearly. P.O. Box 506, Wentzville, MO 63385.

WHEN A BELIEVER MARRIES A NONBELIEVER, by Bebe Nicholson. Learn how to grow together in love, faith, and joy: 303 pp./paperback; $12.95. Priority Publishing (1-800) 541-9579 or Amazon.com or pripubinc.com.

A PLEA FOR CRITICISM of the singular meaning idea for NT Greek words, 24 pp., a revolutionary hermeneutic, with brochure of other books; $3. R. C. Averitt, 7026 2nd Ave., Lino Lakes, MN 55014.

SERVICES

ASPIRING WRITERS—Get fired, fired with enthusiasm for developing God-given writing talent. Send for FREE STARTER KIT. Christian Writers Guild, 260-H Fern Lane, Hume Lake, CA 93628; phone: (209) 335-2333; fax: (209) 335-2770; or: NVRohrer@Juno.com

BEGINNING A COUNSELING CENTER is a one-of-a-kind manual on establishing a counseling center. If you would like more information about this unique manual or about our counseling training program, please write: Institute of Christian Counseling, P.O. Box 878, Aberdeen, MD 21001, or call: (410) 658-7253.

ORDINATION. International Ministerial Fellowship, an association of evangelical churches and ministers, offers many services, including ordination, newsletters, networking, ecclesiastical endorsement, consultation in area of legal, accounting, church planting, biblical/theological training, Internet services (FREE Web site and E-mail address) and a missions sending agency. For free information, check out our Web site: www.i-m-f.org or write: P.O. Box 32366, Minneapolis, MN 55432; (612) 571-5967.

LOOKING FOR A NONPROFIT ORGANIZATION to assist you with your personal ministry? We do mission work in the office (donor receipts, financial reporting, prayer, and administrative support) while you do mission work on the field as we both serve the Lord of the harvest. Write Tim Smith, Ripe for Harvest, Inc., P.O. Box 182184, San Diego, CA 92178-2184; (619) 637-8778.

INTERNATIONAL ADMINISTRATION OF COUNSELORS, Education & Registration, P.O. Box 2632 Stn. R, Kelowna, BC V1X 6A7.

Moving Interstate?

The Service and Thrift Relocation Service offers discounted rates and other benefits to reduce your moving cost on moves within the Continental U.S. For a free, no-obligation estimate call Lewis, CORD northAmerican:

1-800-873-2673

ICC MC 167012

northAmerican
VAN LINES/AGENT

SERVICES

INVENTIONS/NEW PRODUCTS! Presentation to industry/national exposition. Patent services: (1-800) 288-IDEA.

UNLIMITED INTERNET ACCESS for $19.95 per month. Service includes 7 e-mail accounts, 10MB home page, 24-hr. tech support and 10% donation of bill to Christian ministry. Free net-blocker software. Call (1-888) 4321 DTN.

PRODUCTS

FREE CATALOG. Blank audiotapes & supplies, sound eq., conf. recording, duplication. Call toll-free: (1-800) 817-0759

FUNDRAISING

GREAT FUNDRAISING IDEA! Need a fundraising project for your church or group? Call (1-800) 872-1278 now for a free color brochure on full-color commemorative plates offered by Preston-Hopkinson, P.O. Box 1, Lynchburg, VA 24505. Ask for brochure 2013.

FINANCIAL

MONEY TROUBLES? Overdue bills? Reduce interest, cut monthly credit card payments, restore credit. Nonprofit agency can help. Call (1-800) SAVE-ME-2.

TRAVEL

JOIN THE INTERNATIONAL Christian Bed & Breakfast Network. Call (1-800) 881-1940, or write to ICBBN, 550-777 Royal Oak Dr., Box 139, Victoria, BC V8X 4V1 Canada.

PASSION PLAY AT OBERAMMERGAU. See the play, enjoy the Alps and Rhine. Flights, hotels, meals, sightseeing, play tickets, all included. Weekly departures. May to Sept., 2000. Optional extension to Italy. Phone for brochure: Matterhorn Travel: (1-800) 638-9150.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN VACATION among aspens and pines. Golf, fish, hike, ride horses, relax and be spiritually rejuvenated. 2-3 bedroom log homes or condos: $580 for 7 nights. Call Tom Perry, Angel Fire Resort Real Estate. (505) 377-4210.

NEAR GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, MONTANA. 3BR log cabin; secluded. Color brochure: (320) 384-7739.

EDUCATION

FREE, 40-lesson Bible correspondence course. No private interpretations. Freedom Facts, P.O. Box 447, Long Key, FL 33001-0447

COLUMBIA Evangelical Seminary offers all levels of degrees through distance learning. Also, WALSTON'S GUIDE TO RELIGIOUS DEGREES is now on sale for only $13! POB 847, Longview, WA 98632; (1-800) 768-3997; (360) 577-8039; Faraston@tdn.com; www.Faraston.edu.

COLLEGE/SEMINARY DEGREES off-campus. Christian Bible College, P.O. Box 8968, Rocky Mt., NC 27804.

If you are interested in placing an ad in The Marketplace, fax your ad to Karen Booker at (630) 260-0114.

GET RESULTS!

We'll expand your job search!

Inter Cristo will put you in touch with current job leads in the United States and overseas.

If you're interested in using your job skills in Christian service and are open to relocating, call Inter Cristo now at

1-800-426-1342

www.jobleads.org

or return the coupon below

The Christian Career Specialists
19303 Fremont Ave N
Seattle, WA 98133-3800

Name CT
Address
City State Zip

1998 BIBLE COLLEGES

Four Myths About Bible Colleges

Mythology is not restricted to the ancient Greeks. America has developed its own "urban legends"—legends like the microwaved poodle, the angelic hitchhiker, or the cat in the shopping bag, all of which get recycled regularly.

Unfortunately, there is an unfortunate mythology abroad about Bible colleges, and it seems intractably lodged in the collective subconscious. Let's explore and explode four of these myths.

MYTH #1:

THE FULL-TIME MINISTRY MYTH

Some believe Bible college is only for those who are called into so-called full-time Christian ministry. Go only if you want to become a pastor, youth minister, or missionary, students are told. Furthermore, its gender corollary says that Bible college is only for women who wish to become a pastor's wife.

This myth confuses "full-time" ministry with "vocational" ministry. Unabashedly, Bible colleges are in the business of equipping men and women to minister "full-time," because that is every Christian's mandate as a servant of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Bible college curriculum is certainly geared to train students who have vocational ministry aspirations. But Bible colleges also equip Christian

EAST

TOCCOA FALLS COLLEGE

...has designed an academic experience committed to you and your relationship with the Lord Jesus Christ. Every one of our 42 majors and 39 minors is designed to encourage what God has made you to be.

Every practicum,

every student ministry, every social event, and ultimately everything we do and all that we are is wrapped up in preparing you to obey Christ's call on your life as an individual. Toccoa Falls College celebrates the uniqueness of you and God's call on your life.

Toccoa Falls College

Office of Admissions

Toccoa Falls, GA 30598 • 800/868-3257

E-mail: admissions@toccoafalls.edu

COLUMBIA BIBLE COLLEGE

Vocational preparation that's as unique as you are!

Columbia's dual "Bible and..." majors offer customized preparation for your vocational goal. Within a dynamic multicultural community, under caring, experienced faculty, you'll gain biblical competence and develop ministry skills that fit your style and personality.

Discover how you can impact the world—in time, for eternity—for his kingdom. Call Columbia's admissions office at 800/777-2227 ext. 3024 for more information.

Columbia Bible College

7435 Monticello Road • P.O. Box 3122

Columbia, SC 29230-3122

800/777-2227

Columbia Bible Coll

LANCASTER BIBLE COLLEGE AND GRADUATE SCHOOL

"Up close and personal"

That's the number one reason students choose LBC. LBC rigorously pursues that personal touch. It's evident from your first step on campus to completion of any one of the 30 undergraduate and graduate programs of study. It works. Over 430 ministry organizations recruited LBC graduates last year. Financial aid is available—91% of last year's incoming class received aid. Call LBC toll-free at 1-888/CALL LBC (225-5522).

Lancaster Bible College and Graduate School

901 Eden Road • Lancaster, PA 17601 • 888/CALL LBC (225-5522)

PHILADELPHIA COLLEGE OF BIBLE

For an education founded on the ROCK...

Are you looking for a college that will prepare you for ministry as well as life? PCB, one of the nation's foremost accredited Bible colleges, offers dual degree programs where students may earn a Bachelor's degree in Bible as well as in Business, Education, Music, or Social Work. Take part in social activities, ministry opportunities, sports, music, and academics on our beautiful suburban campus, and experience college life that is founded on the Rock of Christ.

For more information contact the Admissions Department.

Philadelphia College of Bible

200 Manor Avenue • Langhorne, PA, 19047 • 800/366-0049 • <http://www.pcb.edu>

WEST

MULTNOMAH BIBLE COLLEGE

It's the Bible you want, then you want Multnomah!

You have a healthy appetite for God's Word, Multnomah Bible College serves up a hearty diet at a surprisingly manageable cost. For 60 years, every Multnomah graduate has feasted on a minimum of 52 dit hours of Bible and Theology. This core diet abined with one of eleven second majors prepares you to meet the real world challenges of today. For a list of our majors and other information, call us or visit our website: <http://www.multnomah.edu>.

Multnomah Bible College
5 N.E. Glisan Street
Portland, OR 97220
(275-4672 or 503/251-6485

SAN JOSE CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

Choosing to Make a Difference

Located in the culturally rich, ever-changing environment of the San Francisco Bay area, SJCC is uniquely positioned to provide:

- Solid Bible-based Christian education and front-line training for Christian ministry.
- A healthy balance in preparation to live, to serve, and to lead.
- Four- and two-year degrees and certificate programs in Bible and Theology, Christian Education, Counseling, Missions, Pastoral Ministry, Youth Ministry and Music.

San Jose Christian College
790 South 12th Street
San Jose, CA 95122
408/293-9058 • 800/355-7522
www.SJChristianCol.edu

professionals, educators, artists, writers, and business people to be biblically and theologically literate, empowered to minister effectively in their sphere of influence, wherever it is.

Many Bible colleges have graduate programs or seminaries for professional, vocational ministry. But what Bible colleges do offer is a collegiate experience in the Word, in worship, and in ministry that enriches as well as equips. Most Bible colleges would agree with a motto at Multnomah Bible College: "We deal in life change."

MYTH #2:

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL MYTH

This myth maintains that the Bible college is an academic lightweight—simply an advanced Sunday school masquerading as a baccalaureate institution. If you come from a strong Bible-preaching church or are a graduate of a Christian elementary or secondary school, it goes, you don't need Bible college.

It's hard to know who perpetuates—or even believes—this myth. It's definitely not the Bible college student or graduate. Most have found the curriculum is just as demanding—often more so—as that of its public counterparts.

This is true for two reasons:

1. Practically, state and federal agencies, as well as accrediting institutions, stipulate specific institutional and academic standards. Accredited institutions must meet and maintain these standards, and lack of accreditation often spells disaster.

CANADA

NORTHWEST BAPTIST COLLEGE

Looking for direction? Set your compass for Northwest.

You'll experience meaningful Christ-centered education in addition to practical opportunities for living out your faith in the "real world." Evangelistic drama; cross-cultural missions; prison, youth, and worship ministries will guide you directly into God's plan for your life.

Three FREE and EASY ways to reach us: 800/661-8910 • E-mail: admissions@nbtbc.bc.ca • Web site: <http://www.nbtbc.bc.ca/>

Northwest Baptist College
(Affiliated with Trinity Western University)
22606 76A Avenue • Langley, B.C. • Canada V3A 8B8

PROVIDENCE COLLEGE

Providence Is Learning

Providence (turn), to acquire knowledge (of) or skill (in) by study, instruction, or experience.

Study to prepare for your life's work combined with a strong biblical basis.

Instruction by men and women with earned doctorates who have time to care about their students.

Experience personal growth through meaningful field education assignments and lasting friendships.

Learn by combining biblical teaching with the high academic standards of our academic programs.

Providence College
Otterburne, Manitoba, Canada R0A 1G0
204/433-7488
E-mail: info@providence.mb.ca

PROVIDENCE
COLLEGE

COLLEGES

For more schools, see next page.

members at a Bible college teach there because of their intense and serious commitment to God's Word, church ministry, and mission. Their commitment inevitably raises the academic quality of the curriculum apart from any external requirements.

MYTH #3: THE BIBLIOLATRY MYTH

At best, this misguided view sees the Bible college and its curriculum as too narrow. Studying the Bible is fine, it says, but young people need a broader educational exposure and focus. At worst, the Bible college engages in "bibliolatry"—worshiping the Bible. It is said that so much emphasis is placed on Bible study that Jesus, worship, and practical service are ignored.

But nothing could be further from the truth. Historically, the Bible college movement has always stressed a love for the Savior and an urgency to equip and deploy laborers into a ripe harvest field. But a deep love of God grows out of a knowledge of God, just as effective service stems from an informed understanding of human need and Christian hope. At Bible colleges, God, not the Bible, is worshiped. But they recognize that their only infallible source of information about our God resides in his Word.

Moreover, Bible college curriculum effectively develops critical thinking, hermeneutical expertise, analytical ability, and historical perspective. Graduates are not just trained for Christian vocation: they are equipped for life.

NORTH CENTRAL

Education for today...

Leaders for tomorrow...

Values for eternity!

The high-quality, affordable education you receive at Grace University equips you as a servant-leader, ready to excel in your chosen career field, rooted in God's Word, and possessing Christian values necessary for this life and life eternal.

At Grace, every student completes a double major: Biblical Studies and a second major of their choice selected from among various academic and professional fields, including ministry vocations.

Grace University
1311 South Ninth Street
Omaha, NE 68108
402/449-2831 or
800/383-1422
Fax: 402/341-9587
E-mail: admissions@graceu.edu
Web: <http://www.graceu.edu>

CROWN COLLEGE

Something Different. Something More.

A Bible college with more?

Crown College offers accredited four-year programs that prepare you for ministry as well as seminary and graduate studies.

That's more.

Crown also offers professional majors such as teacher education with licensures, business, English, and psychology.

That's more.

Christian Ministry and Management & Ethics majors are offered evenings for adults completing their degrees.

That's more.

Graduate ministry programs will soon be offered.

That's much more.

CROWN COLLEGE

Admissions Office
6425 County Road 30 • St. Bonifacius, MN 55375-9001
800/68-CROWN • E-mail: info@gw.crown.edu
Web: <http://www.crown.edu>

NEBRASKA CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

Attitudes for a Lifetime

You've been preparing for something your whole life. Preparation for what's next is just a fact of life. How you prepare has a lot to do with the attitude you bring to each task. Attitudes are a fact of life.

Nebraska Christian College is in the business of developing attitudes—attitudes of learning, service, growth, commitment, friendship, and most importantly, attitudes of Christ.

Find out more. Call, write, e-mail, or visit our web site.

Nebraska Christian College
Admissions Office • 1800 Syracuse Ave. • Norfolk, NE 68701
402/379-5000 • Fax: 402/379-5100 • E-mail: admissions@nechrist.edu
Web: <http://www.nechristian.edu>

REFORMED BIBLE COLLEGE

Major in Ministry

- Youth Ministry
- Evangelism
- Church Education
- Child Development
- Teaching
- Missions
- Seminary
- Social Work

At Reformed Bible College, classroom learning and personal formation go hand-in-hand. RBC students are known for their compassion, creativity, and willingness to take chances. By graduation you will know the Bible thoroughly. You will know your gifts and have experience in ministry. Plus, RBC faculty have professional experience in ministry, and 92% hold doctoral degrees.

Make a difference!

Reformed Bible College
3333 East Beltline N.E. • Grand Rapids, MI 49505 • 616/222-3000 • Fax: 616/222-3045

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE

Ministry is at the heart of Moody

For over a hundred years, Moody graduates have gone around the world ministering the gospel—and the commitment of Moody continues. Check out these majors:

International ministry	Youth ministry
Communications—writing or broadcasting	Pastoral studies
Bible and theology	Music
Jewish ministry	Missionary aviation
Sports ministry (new Fall '98)	Linguistics
Educational ministries	Elementary education—

ASCI certified

If you have a heart for ministry, then you need to get at the heart of Moody.

Call or write for an application.

Moody Bible Institute • Admissions • 820 N. La Salle, Chicago, IL 60610 800/967-4MBI

VENNARD COLLEGE

Consider God's will...

Should I go to a Bible college? Have you been called of God? Ask yourself, "Where does the LORD want me to go to college?" not "Where do others suggest?"

Consider Vennard College

An interdenominational Bible college in the Wesleyan-holiness tradition, Vennard offers majors in Business & Human Resource Management, Elementary & Secondary Education, Counseling, and Christian Ministry (Pastoral, Youth & Urban Ministries, Christian Education, and World Missions). At Vennard we teach you HOW to think...not what to think.

Vennard College

Admissions • PO Box 29, 2300 Eighth Avenue E., University Park, IA 52595
515/673-8391 or 800/686-8391 • Fax: 515/673-8365 • E-mail: admiss@kdsi.net

SOUTH CENTRAL

CALVARY BIBLE COLLEGE

Looking for more Bible?

"I received training I received at Calvary helped me to help others with the spiritual needs of those I work with...to help discover the freedom God offers through the scriptures."

Like Lusardi,
plain, Kansas City
Missouri, Kansas City
Missouri

Calvary Gives You More Bible!

Whatever your future vocation, your ability to help and others will depend on your knowledge of God's Word. That is why Calvary Bible College includes 46 credit hours of Bible in every major.

Write for a free catalog.

Calvary Bible College
Kansas City, MO 64147
326-3960
www.calvary.edu

ARLINGTON BAPTIST COLLEGE

Training servants for greater service since 1939!

ABC offers a Bible-based curriculum designed to prepare you for a lifetime of ministry. Educational programs are available in Pastoral Ministry, Missions, Youth Ministries, Biblical Languages, Education, and Music Ministries. A dedicated and experienced faculty will teach and encourage you. The cost is low, and financial aid is available to qualified applicants. Distance education courses and a degree completion program are offered.

For information, write or call:

Admissions
Arlington Baptist College
3001 W. Division Street • Arlington, TX 76012
817/461-8741 • Fax: 817/274-1138

MYTH #4:

THE CULTURAL BUBBLE MYTH

Perhaps the most common objection to a Bible college is that it isolates its students from the real world. Bible colleges create an unrealistic and sheltered environment, claim the naysayers, one that not only ill prepares students for life but may in fact be damaging.

Frankly, I wish it were possible to provide such a sheltered environment. After all, horticulturists value greenhouses as essential for bringing tender plants to maturity. But unfortunately, in a world of mass media and computers, such insulation is impossible. In fact, students who are willing to invest in a Bible-focused education often discover the spiritual battle actually intensifies. Temptations, financial obstacles, stress, and physical difficulties do not evaporate; they often seem to escalate.

What Bible college provides is community—a place where students and faculty can work, study, worship, and live together in an environment that fosters accountability, fellowship, mentoring, and mutual edification.

SEEK TRUTH, NOT MYTH

The Bible college offers a unique and important kind of collegiate experience. It may not be for everyone. But if you are making a choice about your education, make sure that choice is informed by truth, not myth.

By Daniel R. Lockwood, president of Multnomah Bible College and Biblical Seminary, Portland, Oregon.

Jack Hayford
announces
the opening of

THE KING'S SEMINARY

A GRADUATE
PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL
OF THEOLOGY
September 1998

Jack W.
Hayford
President and Founder

Preparing—

Spiritually vibrant, biblically strong, theologically-balanced, culturally sensitive, Spirit-empowered, ministry-minded
Leaders for the 21st Century

- Located on the 24 acre campus of
The Church On The Way
Van Nuys, California
- An evangelical, Spirit-filled faculty
with earned doctorates
- Library resources
approaching 100,000 units
- Multi-denominational
- Courses offered:
 - In 10 week Quarters
 - In One-week intensives
 - On-Line

Paul G. Chappell, Ph.D.
Chief Academic Officer

For information, call Toll-Free:
1-888-779-8040

e-mail: tki@earthlink.net
website: www.kingsseminary.edu

THE KING'S
SEMINARY

Also...

THE JACK W. HAYFORD SCHOOL OF PASTORAL NURTURE

PASTORAL CONSULTATIONS

Join a small group of pastors and and spend a week with Pastor Hayford in disciplined reflection and interaction—

- Be with, talk to, question, and "feel the pulse of" Jack Hayford, pastor of one of America's leading churches
- Discussing key themes and values that make a mindset and lifestyle for ministry
- Providing exposition and sermonic resources and
- Sharing God's Word to nurture the shepherd's soul

For available dates, call 1-888-779-8040

COMING AUGUST 26 - 28, 1998

A Special 3-Day Colloquium on Preaching and Communication

featuring three of our Nation's best known Preachers and Communicators.

Jack W. Hayford
The Church On The Way

Lloyd J. Ogilvie
Chaplain, US Senate

John C. Maxwell
INJOY

For registration information, call
1-888-779-8040

THE JACK W.
HAYFORD
SCHOOL OF PASTORAL
NURTURE

A Leadership
Advancement
Program

*focused on increasing the ministry effectiveness of pastors and leaders
and facilitating personal growth
and renewal.*

THE KING'S
SEMINARY

Why Fidelity Matters

If Americans truly understood what adultery does—that it leads to the dis-integration of the human being—they would not dismiss it so lightly.

Writing about a fast-breaking news event for a magazine with six weeks lead time is risky business. By the time you read this, the salacious charges involving the President and Monica Lewinsky may have faded like a bad dream, or possibly taken even more bizarre turns.

But whatever the facts turn out to be, there will remain disturbing questions about one aspect of the scandal: the astonishing public response. At this writing, the President's approval ratings continue to soar with each new accusation. In an NBC/Wall Street Journal poll, a whopping 66 percent said the President should not be impeached even if the accusations prove true. Man-in-the-street interviews reveal a general indifference. Even the usually indignant feminists opine that since the alleged sexual relationship was consensual, it is no big deal.

How could so many shrug off such charges?

I put the question to Robert George, professor of political philosophy at Princeton.

"It's because they've lost a sense of the sacredness of human life," he replied.

"I'm not talking about abortion," I said, puzzled. "I'm talking about adultery."

"Both derive from the same world-view," George explained. Modern secular orthodoxy splits the human being, dividing the person from the body. The body is treated as an instrument for getting what the self wants—pleasure, emotional satisfaction, whatever.

This may sound abstract, but the consequences of a person/body dualism are painfully concrete. It follows that the body is not really "me" but something other than my real self—something like a possession to be deployed or disposed of. Thus abortion: Secularists insist that a human embryo is merely a body, not a full person, and can be readily discarded. Thus assisted suicide: Secularists who decide the body is giving them too much pain or bother may opt for suicide—and even demand that a physician help out. Thus sex outside marriage: The sexual union of two bodies does not necessarily mean the union of two persons on all levels of their being (marriage), but only that two selves are using their bodies for mutual pleasure or affection.

We will not understand the secular position on these contentious moral issues unless we grasp the underlying person/body dualism. The idea that sex outside marriage is morally okay implies that the body is merely a vehicle for getting what you want—just as you use a car to get where you want to go.

This runs totally against the grain of the Christian world-view. Since the apostles, the church has opposed dualist heresies. We believe that God created each individual as a unity—body, soul, and spirit. At the end of time, our bodies will be raised to life eternal. We affirm this whenever we recite the Apostles' Creed: "I believe . . . in the resurrection of the body." Christianity grants the body extraordinary dignity. What we do with our bodies expresses who we are as full persons. We utterly reject any dualism that breaks up the individual and relegates the body to a merely instrumental role.

This explains why God speaks so strongly against sex outside marriage. The sexual unity is a unity of two whole persons. That's how we were made. If we engage in sex outside marriage—if we form a bodily union apart from a union of whole persons—we violate our wholeness.

That is to say, we violate our integrity (which literally means wholeness). We dis-integrate ourselves. That's why sex outside marriage is so devastating: It shatters the integrity of our being.

In our sex-saturated society, Christians cannot simply proclaim that adultery is against the Bible and stop there. We will be accused of "imposing morality." Instead, we must explain the contradictory understandings of the human person.

And we must press upon people what is really at stake. First, a person/body dualism is radically dehumanizing. It provides the justification for a host of pernicious practices—not only guilt-free adultery but also homosexual acts, abortion, fetal experimentation, euthanasia, assisted suicide, and disregard for human rights. These practices strip the body of its intrinsic dignity and treat it as a commodity to be used, managed, even disposed of to suit our desires.

Second, if we engage in these practices, we deceive ourselves by embracing a false view of human nature. We sever the body from the self, destroying our integrity, our wholeness. We experience dis-integration. If Americans truly understood what adultery does—that it leads to the dis-integration of the human being—they would not dismiss it so lightly.

Finally, we must constantly expose the secular myth that personal behavior has no effect on public morality. For the dis-integrated individual is incapable of forming and sustaining virtuous character, because the self abdicates moral control over the passions and impulses. And without character we cannot maintain relationships of trust, so that dis-integrated individuals in turn create dis-integrated communities.

This is what we are witnessing today: The spectacle of the President in the dock, with more than half his cabinet, should awaken us to the disastrous consequences of the modern secular world-view. That is something Americans cannot afford to shrug off. CT

Gambling: None Dare Call It Sin • News: Colombia's Newest Martyrs

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

MAY 18, 1998

The dramatic ups and downs of a man, a marriage,
and a ministry:
Promise Keepers'
Bill McCartney

McCARTNEY ON THE REBOUND

US $2.95 CANADA $3.95

06

A&L Keyword: CT
www.ChristianityToday.net

The only limits we have in experiencing the fullness of life that God offers are those we impose on ourselves.

In his new book, LIVING BEYOND THE LIMITS, Franklin Graham provides practical insight on how to put God's Word into practice and see amazing results. It's a stirring collection of real-life stories about real people who, with God's help, have done remarkable things for the Kingdom – even under the most difficult of circumstances. Stories that will move you, engage you, and challenge you.

Order your copy today!
1-800-393-3333

COME JOIN THE ADVENTURE!

LIVING BEYOND THE LIMITS
the new book by Franklin Graham

Franklin Graham is the president of the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association, a Christian evangelist, author, and speaker. He has written several books, including Living Beyond the Limits, which is a collection of real-life stories about people who have done remarkable things for the Kingdom of God.

THOMAS NELSON

CELEBRATING 50 YEARS OF
HONORING GOD AND SERVING PEOPLE

1987

RSI CAPITAL STEWARDSHIP
PROGRAM FOR NEW WORSHIP
CENTER

$2.2 Million Raised

1990

RSI DEBT RETIREMENT
PROGRAM

$1.8 Million Raised

1994

RSI CAPITAL STEWARDSHIP
PROGRAM FOR NEW EDUCATIONAL BUILDING

$2.1 Million Raised

1995

RSI ANNUAL BUDGET
PROGRAM

17% Increase in Giving

ONE GOOD PROGRAM LEADS TO ANOTHER.

WHEN IT IS TIME TO BUILD, MOST CHURCHES REALIZE THAT A SINGLE CAPITAL STEWARDSHIP PROGRAM RARELY COVERS ALL OF THEIR EXPANSION COSTS. TO STAY FINANCIALLY RESPONSIBLE, SOME BUILD IN STAGES AND FUND EACH PHASE WITH BACK-TO-BACK CAMPAIGNS.

OTHERS CHOOSE TO BUILD THE ENTIRE PLAN, BORROW THE OUTSTANDING FUNDS, AND CONDUCT MULTIPLE STEWARDSHIP PROGRAMS TO RETIRE REMAINING DEBT.

ACROSS THE UNITED STATES, CHURCHES TRUST RSI. AS THE NATION'S LEADING STEWARDSHIP CONSULTING FIRM, RSI HELPS THEM EXPAND THEIR BUILDINGS, RETIRE DEBTS, AND INCREASE GIVING — NOT JUST ONCE, BUT AGAIN AND AGAIN. CALL TODAY TO LEARN MORE. RSI — A NAME YOU CAN BUILD ON.

RESOURCE SERVICES, INC.

12770 MERIT DRIVE, SUITE 900

DALLAS, TEXAS 75251

800-527-6824

www.rsi-ketchum.com

3 Good Reasons to Earn Your Degree At Home

Balancing the needs of your ministry with the needs of your family isn't easy. But furthering your ministry through education doesn't have to disrupt your home life. You can study for your bachelor's, master's, or doctorate and still continue your ministry through the external studies program at Trinity Theological Seminary.

Trinity Theological Seminary allows you to complete your education through a personalized, accelerated degree program without a residency requirement. Our traditional external studies program, along with our virtual campus and optional regional seminars, lets you choose the course of study that best fits your responsibilities to your ministry and your family. And in recognition of our high standards of education, Trinity is the only seminary in the United States to earn the accreditation of the University of Liverpool.

Contact the admissions counselors at Trinity for more information.

- Accredited by the University of Liverpool, England
- Accelerated Study
- Regional Seminars Available
- Off Campus and On-line Degree Programs
- Financial Grants are Available
- Virtual Campus with Chat Rooms, File Libraries and Message Boards
- Bachelor's, Master's, and Doctoral Degrees

800-457-5510

International Academic and Administrative Offices
Newburgh, Indiana, USA

Phone: 800-457-5510

Fax: 812-858-3235

E-mail: 74777.245@compuserve.com

Visit our website! www.trinitysem.edu

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Volume 42, No. 6
May 18, 1998

A Magazine of Evangelical Conviction

FEATURES

26 Cover Story: McCartney on the Rebound

He started a ministry to heal men's relationships while his own marriage was in crisis; he drew a million men to Washington only to announce a few months later that he was laying off all his staff. Now he's hiring them back. Who is this man piloting Promise Keepers' wild ride? By Phyllis Alsdurf

Plus: News Update: Up from the Ashes?
Excerpt: The Coach's Burden

34 None Dare Call It Sin

How did Mississippi's Bible Belt succumb so quickly and so completely to the gambling industry? By Tim Stafford

Plus: Conversations: A Methodist pastor talks about how to fight gambling.

40 Special News Report: Colombia's Bleeding Church

Despite the murders of 120 church leaders, Christians are fighting for peace in one of the world's most violent nations. By David L. Miller

46 In the Word: The Day We Were Left Behind

Hungry as we are for the presence of God, the one thing we do not need is a day to remind us of God's absence. By Barbara Brown Taylor

50 Church in Action: Under the Streets of Bucharest

Lifting manhole covers and crawling inside is a first step in a Romanian ministry's outreach. By Tomas Dixon

DEPARTMENTS

6 Inside CT: Bright Lights, Big City

8 Letters: The Power of Art

24 Editorial: Gambling with the Enemy

52 Comic Relief: Lulu Brimley's Last-Chance Christian Books

54 Frederica Mathewes-Green: I Didn't Mean to be Rude

56 Books: Inside the Vatican

68 Reflections

88 Phillip Yancey: And the Word Was . . . Debatable

NEWS

- 16 Nonprofits: Child-Sponsorship Marketing Myths
- 18 School Prayer: Religious Freedom Amendment Resisted
- 19 Broadcasting: Latino Christian Radio Finds a Growing Audience
- 20 Washington: Lawmakers Divided on Persecution Bills

Plus: Evangelicals Warned About the Cost of Political Apathy

14 North American Scene

22 World Scene

Senior Editors: George K. Brushaber, Chairman; James I. Packer, Visiting Scholar; Timothy George, Senior Adviser; Maxie D. Dunnam, Jesse Miranda, Earl F. Palmer, John D. Woodbridge

Editorial Director: Harold L. Myra
Executive Editor: David Neff
Managing Editor: Michael G. Maudlin
Art Director: Carla Sonheim
Associate Editors: Richard A. Koffman
 Timothy C. Maughan
 Wendy Murray Zoba
Administrative Editor: Carol R. Thiessen
Associate News Editor: John W. Kennedy
Book Review Editor: John Wilson
Assistant Editor: Kevin D. Miller
Associate Designer: June M. Gunawan
Editorial Resident: Mary Cagney
Editor at Large: Philip Yancey
Senior Writer: Tim Stafford
Senior News Writer: Arthur D. Moore
Editorial Coordinator: Paulette DePaul
Administrative Assistant: Lara Badalamenti

Board of Directors: Billy Graham, Chairman; B. Clayton Bell, Sr., Executive Chairman; Harold L. Myra, President; Miriam Adeney, John N. Akers, Jill P. Briscoe, Stephen W. Brown, A. Kenneth Curtis, Susan S. Eames, Robert P. Evans, Eugene B. Habacker, Ben Haden, Pete Hammond, Michael E. Haynes, Oswald C. J. Hoffmann, C. B. Hogue, John A. Huffman, Jr., Edward L. Johnson, Jay L. Kesler, Dennis F. Kinlaw, Jack Modesett, Jr., William W. Pendleton, Robert Reccord, Paul D. Robbins, W. Fred Smith, Jr., Howard S. Williams

Billy Graham, Founder; Carl F. H. Henry, Editor 1956-68; L. Nelson Bell, Executive Editor 1956-73; Harold Lindsell, Editor 1968-78; Kenneth S. Kantzer, Editor 1978-82; V. Gilbert Beers, Editor 1982-85; George K. Brushaber, Executive Editor 1985-91; Terry C. Muck, Executive Editor 1985-90

Contributing Editors: Miriam Adeney, Nigel M. de S. Cameron, Charles W. Colson, James R. Edwards, Nathan O. Hatch, Kenneth A. Myers, Mark A. Noll, Thomas C. Oden, Ben Patterson, David Schiedermayer, David A. Seamands, Howard A. Snyder, John R. W. Stott

Consulting Editors: Paul M. Bassett, Colin Brown, Harold O. J. Brown, Robert E. Cooley, David S. Dockery, William A. Dyrness, Stanley J. Grenz, Christopher A. Hall, Walter C. Kaiser, Jr., Kenneth S. Kantzer, Donald W. McCullough, Alister E. McGrath, Richard Mouw, Roger E. Olson, Haddon W. Robinson, Stephen A. Seamands, Aida Besançon Spencer, John G. Stackhouse, Jr., Donald A. D. Thorsen, Edwin M. Yamauchi

Corresponding Editors: Tokunboh Adeyemo, V. Elving Anderson, Donald G. Bloesch, Edith L. Blumhofer, Darrell L. Bock, Calvin B. DeWitt, Samuel Escobar, C. Stephen Evans, Ajith Fernando, Richard J. Foster, Vernon Grounds, Allen C. Guelzo, Christopher D. Hancock, Alan F. Harre, Roberta Hestenes, Arthur P. Johnston, Robert K. Johnston, David Livingstone, Paul L. Maier, George M. Marsden, David L. McKenna, Stephen V. Monsma, Leon Morris, Terry C. Muck, Nancey Murphy, Bradley Nassif, Armand M. Nicholi, Jr., Roger Nicole, C. René Padilla, William E. Pannell, Eugene H. Peterson, Richard V. Pierard, Robert C. Roberts, John Rodgers, Vinay Samuel, David P. Scaer, Bruce L. Shelley, Ronald J. Sider, Russell P. Spittler, Elmer L. Towns, Grant Wacker, Robert L. Wilken, J. Rodman Williams

Advisory Editors: Leith Anderson, Myron S. Augsbarger, William Bentley Ball, David B. Barrett, Paul W. Brand, Michael Cromartie, Edward G. Dobson, James Engel, George Gallup, Jr., Charles E. Hummel, Diane L. Knippers, Steven T. McFarland, Dean Merrill, Bryant L. Myers, Richard John Neuhaus, Will Norton, Jr., Michael Novak, Matthew Parker, James W. Reapsome, Beth Spring, Joseph M. Stowell, Warren W. Wiersbe

CHRISTIANITY TODAY, INC.

Harold L. Myra, President, C.E.O.
 Paul D. Robbins, Executive Vice President, C.O.O.
 Laurie Powell, Executive Assistant
 Harry Genet, Executive Administrator
 Keith Stonehocker, Senior Vice President
 Harold B. Smith, Corporate Vice President
 David Hemstreet, Vicki Howard, John C. LaRue, Jr., Kevin A. Miller, David Neff, Linda Schambach, JoAnn Selander, Marshall Shelley, Carol Thompson, Vice Presidents

Advertising: Joyce Bardin, Karen Booker, Joel Carlsen, Lee Cunningham, Heather Dake, Kevin Flanagan, John Grey, Carol Hayes, Tom Jones, Daniel Poormon, Joel Stombres

Circulation/Marketing:
Production: Charlene Perez, Director
Fulfillment: Jo Ann Rosenbaum, Director
 Norma Bormann, Ingrid Cagwin, Bradley Dupuy, Heidi Hall, Julie Kaminski, Sherry Kyle, Dianne Lambert, Debra Lane, Jeremy Long, Nancy Nance, Louie P. Parker, Karen Raad, Jennifer Stenzel, Elizabeth Tolentino, Bonnie Willman, Joy Windes, Philip Woods

Financial Operations: Terumi Echols, Manager, Chen Peterson, Credit Manager, Gary Johnson, Sandra Johnson, Judy Van Zanten

Human Resources: Susan Cronk, Manager, Kate Bryant, Bert Davidson, Philip DiCicco, Lew Radabaugh

Internet Online Services: Judy Gill, Manager, Clayton Anderson, Kathy DePue, Sky Findlay, Wendy Harley, Michelle Hayes, Michael Herman, Elesia Hodge, Christine Kirsh, Todd Watermann, Aaron Welch

Market Research: Cynia Solver, Manager, Grace Ferroni, Rachel Wetzler, Douglas Zimmerman

Production Services: Cynthia Cronk, Manager, Jeff DiNanno, Ted Gysan, Kelly Johnson, Theresa Phillips, Rebekah Santos, James Smeenge, Les Smith

Special Sales: Kathryn Stephens, Manager, Becki Bustin, Michael Fister, Rodney Heckler, Dav Kott, Lynn Long

Editorial/Advertising Offices: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, Ill. 60188 630-260-6200; FAX: 630-260-0114. Advertising in CHRISTIANITY TODAY does not necessarily imply editorial endorsement.

Subscription Services: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, P.O. Box 37060, Boone, Iowa 50037-0060. Customer service: 800-999-1704.

Manuscript Policy: Unsolicited manuscripts are not accepted. A query letter must be sent first, describing a proposed manuscript (poetry is not accepted). Unsolicited manuscripts sent without a self-addressed, postage-paid envelope will not be returned.

Permissions: CHRISTIANITY TODAY grants permission for any original article (not a reprint) to be photocopied for use in a local church or classroom, provided no more than 1,000 copies are made, are distributed free, and indicate the source is CHRISTIANITY TODAY.

Australian Agent: MEDIA/COM, 14 Eton Road, Keswick 5061, South Australia. United Kingdom Agent: MASTERPLAN PUBLISHING CO., 63-67 Kingston Road, New Malden, Surrey KT3 3PB, phone 0181-942-9442.

Indexes: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is indexed in Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature; Christian Periodical Index; Religion Index One: Periodicals, Religious and Theological Abstracts; Book Review Index; and Academic Abstracts and Magazine Article Summaries. ISSN 0009-5753. © 1998 CHRISTIANITY TODAY INC.

Christianity Today (ISSN 0009-5753) is published monthly (semi-monthly in April and October), 14 issues per year, by Christianity Today, Inc., 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188. Periodicals postage paid at Carol Stream, IL, and at additional mailing offices.

Postmaster: Send address changes to Christianity Today, P.O. Box 11618, Des Moines, IA 50340-1618. 1-800-999-1704. GST Registration Number R126028836. Canada Post Mail Product Sales Agreement #59536. Printed in U.S.A.

Subscription Rates: Regular subscription price: one year $24.95. Outside U.S. add $8.00 postage prepaid U.S. currency. $2.50 per copy.

Subscription Renewals? Gift Subscriptions? Address Changes? Call toll-free 1-800-999-1704.

E-mail: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is available electronically on America Online (keyword: CT), address CHRISTIANITY TODAY at ctditd@aol.com. CT is also on the Web at <http://www.christianity.net>. For information on how to enroll in Christianity Online, call 1-800-633-9888.

Knowledge on Fire

Our purpose, for the last 25 years has been to train men and women to fulfill the Great Commission. Combining academic excellence with Pentecostal fervor, AGTS graduate programs are designed to propel graduates into powerful, life-changing ministry. Our goal is to let knowledge on fire.

Each faculty and staff member is committed to a Spirit-filled life and ministry. Biblical and theological studies, counseling principles, pastoral training, educational methodology, and missiological strategies are all taught within the Pentecostal tradition.

You want an accredited seminary with a good reputation...and one that is affordable. Give us a call at 1-800-467-AGTS.

Change your world with knowledge on fire!

Receive your:

- Doctor of Ministry
- Master of Divinity
- M.A. in Missiology
- M.A. in Theological Studies
- M.A. in Counseling
- M.A. in Christian Ministries

ASSEMBLIES OF GOD
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

1435 N. GLENSTONE AVENUE
SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI 65802
(417) 268-1000 • 1-800-467-AGTS
EMAIL: AGTSADMISS.AG.ORG •
WWW.AGTS.EDU

WITH GREG LAURIE
PRESENTS:

Chuck Swindoll.

John MacArthur.

Chuck Smith.

DAVID JEREMIAH, ALISTAIR BEGG AND MANY MORE

SEE THE "DREAM TEAM" OF BIBLICAL TEACHING IN ACTION!

"I believe the greatest need in our world today, as well as in the church itself, is the clear proclamation of the Word of God. Paul told Timothy: "Preach the Word!" However, relevant and truly Biblical preaching is becoming more and more a lost art! I've invited some of America's most powerful communicators to spend three days teaching on the topic of how to effectively bring God's Word to our generation. Will you join us? You'll also have the opportunity to witness America's longest running annual evangelistic event, the Harvest Crusade. I hope to see you there!"

GREG LAURIE

PREACH THE WORD!

LEADER'S TRAINING SEMINAR
ANAHEIM HILTON
AUG 26 - 29

CHUCK SWINDOLL

JOHN MACARTHUR

CHUCK SMITH

For reservation information please call:

1-800-821-3300

or visit our web site at:

www.preachtheword.org

David Neff,
Executive Editor

Bright Lights, Big Pity

INSIDE CT

Last year Tim Stafford was asking himself lots of questions about gambling: Why does anybody get involved in such a losing proposition? Can our state governments do anything more obscene and decadent than to entice their citizens to throw their money away?

But Tim's most burning question about gambling had to do with the apparent lack of resistance from Christians. To be sure, there are Christian activists who fight gambling, but given the rapid spread of casino gambling throughout the U.S., Tim thought he wasn't hearing nearly enough protest from the churches.

Why not visit someplace notably religious, he thought, some spot in the Bible Belt that had been invaded and co-opted by casinos, and see just how the churches were handling it. As CT's California-based senior writer, Tim has a license to travel, so he considered Iowa first, and then settled on Mississippi—on Gulfport, near Biloxi, and Tunica County, just a short drive from Memphis. (You can read Tim's account of his trip, beginning on p. 34.)

In Las Vegas and in Reno, gambling is blended with entertainment: It peeks out from behind circus acts and showgirls and magicians who make elephants vanish and singers with lowest-common-denominator appeal. The bright lights and the fanciful architecture and the showgirls and the cheap meals all allow visitors to construct their own reasons for being there, and to make themselves believe, if they want, that gambling is marginal to their holiday.

But in Tunica County, there are no scantily clad cocktail waitresses and no lavish shows in glitzy nightclubs. Tunica is about gambling pure and simple. There is little entertainment and no sleaze. It is family friendly, complete with childcare facilities. This is where us rubes from fly-over land, with our loosely cut Kmart clothes for our more ample forms, can feel comfortable feeding the slots. The casinos attract all kinds, including a good many low rollers from towns where the coffee shop that serves biscuits and gravy is the biggest attraction around, says Tim.

But for all its appeal to the middle-American comfort zone, the Bible Belt gambling business is not family friendly. And it is not church friendly. It paralyzes churches—churches that have a moral witness but whose members rely on the service jobs created by the casinos. The gambling business devastates some lives and it co-opts others into complicity. After observing thousands of middle Americans clutching their plastic cups of quarters under the glaring casino lights, Tim still doesn't get it: Why do people follow the siren song of Lady Luck when they know she's all show and no go?

CT

Prepare for Your Future . . . Prepare for Life Atlanta Christian College

It's the difference between focusing on what you're going to do and focusing on who you're going to be! At Atlanta Christian College, you will receive excellent training for a vocation, but your preparations will extend beyond your choice of a major.

Through our Christ-centered faculty, curriculum, and student body, A.C.C. equips you to make a difference in the church, our society and the world. Call us for a brochure and application today at 1-800-776-1222 or if you're in the Atlanta area, call 404-761-886.

After all, there's more to life than making a living.

Portable Sunday School Partitions

simply the world's most versatile portable partitions!

Imagine . . . being able to easily partition any area in your church to provide the Sunday School classrooms you need. Partitions which are tackable, sound absorbing and totally free of any exterior connections. No complicated or limiting track systems, no costly structural supports, no interference with your building's heat, light, and ventilation systems. Screenflex Portable Sunday School Partitions . . .

the partitions of the future are here!

YOUR CLASSROOM NEEDS

... NO PROBLEM!

FOR COMPLETE INFORMATION PLEASE CONTACT:

Screenflex Portable Partitions, Inc.
250 Lexington Drive
Buffalo Grove, IL 60089
800-553-0110

Locate partition

Unlock partition and pull handle

Position partition as desired

Create instant Sunday School classrooms as easy as . . .

*Words of wisdom
from the pulpit.*

*Words of wisdom
from the lunch table.*

In the intimate mountain setting of The Cove, you'll hear some of the great inspirational Christian speakers of our time. You might even get a chance to ask a follow-up question or two over lunch or coffee. Now that's Christian fellowship.

The Cove

Billy Graham Training Center At The Cove • www.thecove.org • 1-800-950-2092

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Power of Art

■ I am a hopeless non-artist from a family of artists. I am hung up on the cognitive and the analytical. My right brain is usually foreign territory for me to traverse. But when I am suddenly surprised by the power of aesthetic passion (the arts), as I was in the April 6 issue, I am amazed at how my life, my mind, my spirit are so enriched. "Were You There?" is a fabulous addition to CT's pages. Please, sir, I want some more!

*Chip Moody
Phoenix, Ariz.*

■ Another wonderful, thought-provoking, spiritually stretching issue! Many thanks! But when will an artist realistically portray the Last Supper and include the women (and children) who were undoubtedly there?

Millie Samuelson McPherson, Kans.

Justice and the Death Penalty

■ The editorial ["The Lesson of Karla Faye Tucker," Apr. 6] asserts that "Christians know that we all deserve death," implying that capital punishment is unfairly reserved for murderers. But this gives short shrift (pun intended) to the legal distinction between innocence and guilt that is required of our earthly communities by God.

The justice of capital punishment becomes evident when we ask not, "Does a murderer deserve to die?" but rather, "Does a murderer deserve to live?" This focuses attention on the innocent life that was stolen by the murderer, and hence why society requires the forfeiture of the murderer's life. The Bible, in more places than CT cares to cite, suggests this answer, and makes deterrence, unequal enforcement, and consolation of the victim's survivors ancillary issues at best, and rhetorical red herrings at worst. May CT continue this conversation by doing justice to the best arguments for the death penalty, and extending mercy to those of us still beholden to the biblical concept of retributive punishment of wrongdoers.

Lucas Morel Siloam Springs, Ariz.

■ While it may be popularly true that there is a (sinful) instinct to want someone to suffer what they have caused someone else to suffer, the biblical principle of punishment has a different feel. As Paul notes in the passage the editor mentions, the magistrate has divine sanction for punishment. It goes without saying that a private morality, free of a vengeful and grudge-bearing spirit, is God's purpose on a personal level [that] is commanded. The biblical mandate for public relationships is different, and in that setting a dispassionate application of punishment for public order is appropriate.

*Rev. Bill Fennema
Grand Rapids, Mich.*

■ I have long believed that the biblical mandate for capital punishment has nothing to do with vengeance, justice, or deterrence. I believe it has to do with mercy. It is not for the benefit of society. It is for the benefit of the murderer.

Barring a radical conversion such as that of Karla Faye Tucker, what are the options available to a murderer? (1) An empty life of perpetual uselessness extended indefinitely by incarceration; (2) An unreformed return to society where one must live always with fear and with the knowledge that one cannot atone for a heinous act; (3) Death.

I really believe that an all-wise, all-loving God, knowing the relative insignificance of this life compared to eternity, provided capital punishment as an act of mercy to the perpetrator. This belief has not, unfortunately, helped me resolve my ambivalence about capital punishment. But it has given me a less selfish perspective from which to view it.

*I. Dale Carroll, M.D.
St. Joseph, Mich.*

I appreciate the fact that your editorial on the death penalty reminds the reader that God extended grace with consequences to the first murderer, Cain. Our Heavenly Father came to the garden seeking the sinner after the first sin, and he later came to the scene of the first crime seeking to relate with both the criminal and the victim. We, following this example, need to be seekers of those hiding from God and seekers of the ones who fail to relate lovingly in the problem situations of life. Meanwhile, as those in the business of reconciliation, we can trust God for the vengeance that is his and his alone.

*Deborah J. Smith
Cincinnati, Ohio*

J. I. Packer As Mentor

■ Wendy Murray Zoba's article "Knowing Packer" [Apr. 6] was such a gift. I became a Christian in 1970, began my "growing up" in Jesus in the 1970s in InterVarsity Christian Fellowship in college—and J. I. Packer, through his book Knowing God, was one of my "mentors." Not only do I feel like I now know him, but I am even more grateful to God for his sovereignly leading me to read Packer's book and to start my journey to God's heart through it.

*Gerrie Riihimaki
Eugene, Oreg.*

I am a retired seminary professor who used Packer's books as collateral reading in many of my courses. I join a host of others in appreciating many of his insights and contributions.

I respectfully and strongly differ with his evaluation of the Keswick tradition and emphasis. Contrary to its tradition being "pietistic goofiness," as Packer called it, the Keswick emphases ultimately were attempts to unfold and apply the very teaching of mortification of sin for which Packer extols Owen, the great Puritan. I hardly think that some of the better known speakers at Keswick, including F. B. Meyer, H. C. G. Moule, Andrew Murray, John R. W. Stott, Hudson Taylor, and R. A. Torrey, can be linked with such terminology. As Ian Sellers states: "Keswick maintains that the Christian's tendency to sin is not extinguished but merely counteracted by victorious living in the Spirit" (The New International Dictionary of the Christian Church, Zondervan, 1975).

*Frederic R. Howe, Th.D.
Cincinnati, Ohio*

Thank you for the excellent article about James I. Packer and for the stimulating photographs that accompany it. Surely his services to the evangelical community and his steadfast commitment to the Word of God deserve such a tribute as well as Dr. McGrath's fine biography.

*Roger Nicole
Reformed Theological Seminary
Orlando, Fla.*

Women Getting Together

The movers come tomorrow, but I just had to respond to the Special News Report: "Good News for Women?" [Apr. 6]. I'm thrilled that women are getting together in many excellent conferences. I Christian Best Sellers!

CLOTHBOUND NONFICTION

- (5) 1. What's So Amazing About Grace?, Philip Yancey, Zondervan
- 2. Final Dawn Over Jerusalem, John Hagee, Nelson
- (8) 3. Joy for the Journey, J. Countryman/Word
- (1) 4. Streams in the Desert, Updated Edition, L.B. Cowman & edited by James Reimann, Zondervan
- (3) 5. The Great House of God, Max Lucado, Word
- (2) 6. The Weigh Down Diet, Gwen Shamblin, Doubleday
- (9) 7. Prayers That Avail Much, commemorative gift edition, Word Ministries, Harrison House
- (13) 8. Boundaries, Henry Cloud & John Townsend, Zondervan
- (4) 9. Lay Aside the Weight, T.D. Jakes, Albury Publishing
- 10. The Mom Factor, Henry Cloud & John Townsend, Zondervan

PAPERBACK NONFICTION

- (1) 1. Stories for the Heart, Alice Gray, editor; Multnomah
- (6) 2. Victory Over the Darkness, Neil T. Anderson, Regal (Gospel Light)
- (13) 3. And the Angels Were Silent, Max Lucado, Multnomah
- (2) 4. Apocalypse Code, Hal Lindsey, Western Front Ltd.
- 5. Six Hours One Friday, Max Lucado, Multnomah
- (15) 6. No Wonder They Call Him the Savior, Max Lucado, Multnomah
- (17) 7. God Came Near, Max Lucado, Multnomah
- 8. More Stories for the Heart, Alice Gray, editor; Multnomah
- (7) 9. The Fear of the Lord, John Bevere, Creation House
- (4) 10. A Divine Revelation of Hell, Mary Baxter, Whitaker House

CLOTHBOUND FICTION

- (1) 1. Nicolae, Tim LaHaye & Jerry Jenkins, Tyndale
- 2. Beyond the Picket Fence, Lori Wick, Harvest House
- (2) 3. This Present Darkness/Piercing the Darkness, Frank Peretti, Inspirational Press
- 4. The Tender Years, Janette Oke, Bethany House
- (3) 5. Only the River Runs Free, Bodie & Brock Thoene, Nelson

PAPERBACK FICTION

- (1) 1. Left Behind, Tim LaHaye & Jerry Jenkins, Tyndale
- (2) 2. Tribulation Force, Tim LaHaye & Jerry Jenkins, Tyndale
- (3) 3. The Confession, Beverly Lewis, Bethany House
- (4) 4. Redeeming Love, Francine Rivers, Multnomah
- (5) 5. The Shunning, Beverly Lewis, Bethany House

* Indicates last month's position.

This list is based on actual sales in Christian retail stores in the United States and Canada during February. All rights reserved. Copyright © 1998 CBA Service Corp. and Spring Arbor Distributors. Distributed by the Evangelical Christian Publishers Association.

hope someone like Mary Cagney will take note of the growing numbers attending the AD2000 Women's Track Conferences.

Two books (Women As Risk-takers for God, by Lorry Lutz, and Our Time Has Come, edited by Judy Mbugua) show there are women not avoiding hot-button issues.

Pat Argue
Kirkland, Wash.

Repentance and Accountability Needed

■ The review of The Apostle [Apr. 6] did a great thing by encouraging Christians to attend a viewing of this film, especially in light of all the negative publicity given to other movies. Thank you.

However, only a superficial, thoughtless viewer could conclude that the reason for E.F.'s crisis was the sudden realization of his wife's adultery and her usurping of authority at his (sic) church. What preceded her adultery was his womanizing, the battering, emotional, and spiritual abuse of her and the two children. What led to others' voting him out of the church was his absence for his "solo" evangelistic meetings, though ostensibly the present issue was the (unspoken) charges of his wife. E.F.'s lust for accomplishment was the sin this viewer was never wholly convinced that he ever repented of. Nor was it clear whether he ever repented of his murderous beating of the youth pastor.

The polity issues made me glad to be part of a connectional denomination. Neither the minister nor congregation were accountable to another body of spiritual leaders outside of this congregation.

Dawn Swartz
Wichita, Kans.

■ Although I know too little about films to be a movie critic, Randall Balmer's comments about Hollywood's Renegade Apostle aroused my warm admiration. The final paragraph is a gem of wisdom millions of Christians could benefit by reading.

Gerald Wright
Cambridge, Ontario,
Canada

King and the Evangelical Church

Thanks for the insightful cover write-up on Martin Luther King, Jr., evangelicals, and race relations in the United States [Mar. 2]. As an African evangelical, I believe candidly that the church's task of evangelism carries along with it the mandate from God to speak against social injustice wherever it is found—whether it is racism in America or tribalism in Africa.

What we cannot fathom is why the conservative/evangelical church's relative silence over the civil-rights movement of the 1950s and '60s and all it sought to achieve. Was this reticence due to Martin Luther King's alleged promotion of the "social gospel," "communist involvement," or sexual impropriety? Granted that these allegations are true, the question still remains: Were the concerns Dr. King raised genuine and ones the church as the beacon of light should have been addressing?

Nathan Irmija Elawa
Jimeta-Yola, Nigeria

America has admitted and tried to deal with the primary racism of the white community. Meanwhile, the secondary problem of black racism has not only been ignored, but actually encouraged to where it has become institutionalized in our society. Like some others who strongly supported civil rights and opposed white racism in the 1960s, I don't feel hypocritical in opposing black racism now. Blacks have had their agendas supported and funded by government for nearly 30 years and are worse off than before. They got what they wanted, but not what they needed; what the integration movement was all about: the elimination of racial barriers so that blacks would be treated as individuals. Your article laments that evangelicals missed the chance to confront white racism. The irony is poignant that you now miss the opportunity to confront black racism. Once again, social acceptability takes priority over social justice.

Stanton Carter
Livermore, Calif.

It's not enough to catch up to Dr. King's dream. Rather, believers must surpass his vision in a new commitment to the costly discipleship required to redeem these times. His ministry was not about dreams and feel-good pieties, but about a transformative faith that reconstructs lives and systems in obedience to Jesus' reign. Christians might more fully identify with King's work by seriously reappropriating the fundamentals of his spiritual formation—the prophetic Scriptures, the pacifism of A. J. Muste, the socialism of Norman Thomas, the charisms of all who've borne the burden of unmerited suffering.

Carol Davidson
Battle Creek, Mich.

Forgiven Trespasses

I opened your March 2 edition to read the article "Still Wrestling with the Devil," by Randall Balmer, with myself fully dressed in my sanctimonious Sunday's best! Halfway through the article, I found myself being delicately disrobed by the Holy Spirit. I have oftentimes believed that I had forgiven trespasses as the Lord had forgiven mine, but Balmer's article made it painfully obvious that I had not.

Thank you for printing such a balanced article. I pray that God reaches out and restores Jimmy Swaggart 100 percent in both the spiritual and ministry efforts. As Balmer points out, humanity has us all in its clutches! God bless Jimmy for "staying the course."

Larry Elsey
Millville, N.J.

Accountability is appropriate for behavior but not for condemning personal traits. Balmer's article is slanderous, but I would stop short of accusing him of being a slanderer. You can say that Swaggart looks like an actor, but to call his preaching "performing" is a slam on the sincerity of his character. Balmer may have started the article with good intentions but should have deserted it once Swaggart refused to be interviewed. We Christians insist on feeding upon our own wounded. The fact that Balmer was amused reveals his less than encouraging intentions. The sins dug up again here are the type that are usually symptomatic of greater personal problems, which may have been the only angle worthy of meaningful exploration. Balmer brings no integrity to the piece in the last two paragraphs where he attempts reconciliation.

Derek Lehman
Winnipeg, Man., Canada

What a magnificent piece of journalism on Jimmy Swaggart. Balanced yet truthful, it breathes the down-home culture that he was raised in. As one raised in the Assemblies of God in the 1940s and '50s, but now a Presbyterian, I agree with Randall Balmer's suggestion that free-flowing ecclesiastical styles of Pentecostalism may have led to Swaggart's excesses. However, that characteristic is also Pentecostalism's strength.

The article's best part is Balmer's observation of the demons that we all wrestle with. We see ourselves in Jimmy Swaggart, and if we're honest, we too are in need of amazing grace.

Gary W. Collins
Boulder, Colo.

[I read] this amazing statement run in the March 2 issue of Christianity Today: "Surely the transgressions of Bakker and Swaggart were not that much more egregious than Pat Robertson accepting Rupert Murdoch's millions for the sale of the Family Channel, a property that Robert-

DISCIPLESHIP UNBOUND

THE DIVINE CONSPIRACY

REDISCOVERING OUR HIDDEN LIFE IN GOD

A masterpiece and a wonder the book I have been searching for all my life.
—From the Foreword by RICHARD FOSTER

DALLAS WILLARD

HarperSanFrancisco
A Division of HarperCollins Publishers

Renowned philosopher and Christian theologian, Dallas Willard, urges today's "consumer Christians"—believers mostly concerned with personal salvation—to embrace the powerful presence of Christ in our daily lives thus transforming us into the authentic people God wants us to be.

"The Divine Conspiracy is the book I have been searching for all my life. Like Michelangelo's Sistine ceiling, it is a masterpiece and a wonder. And like those famous frescoes it presents God as real and present and ever reaching out to all humanity."—Richard J. Foster

From the Author of The Spirit of the Disciplines

Who will be the great preachers of the next century?

- Never before has the challenge been greater. • Never before has the potential for success been more vast.
- Never before in the history of the world have we had the abilities and the technical resources to communicate to more people than we have today. Step up, step forward, and stand out... allow God to work in your life and show you how to develop preaching skills that will dramatically change lives in your congregation and community.

DR. ROBERT H. SCHULLER
Chancellor and faculty member

Enroll now in the Fuqua International School of Christian Communications, formerly ISOCC.

DR. BRUCE LARSON distinguished faculty member at the June 8-12, 1998 session

For your FREE catalog:
13280 Chapman Avenue,
Garden Grove, CA 92840
Ph: (714) 971-4238
Fax: (714) 971-4204
E-mail: fisoce@aol.com
www.crystalcathedral.org

F U Q U A

FUQUA INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL OF CHRISTIAN COMMUNICATIONS

Fuqua, an advanced postgraduate training facility, located on the campus of the world famous Crystal Cathedral in Garden Grove, CA.

son developed from tax-deductible contributions of the faithful." Frankly, I am shocked that a Christian publication of your stature would put out anything as misleading as this. The truth is:

1. The Family Channel was not sold to Rupert Murdoch. Murdoch's company bought International Family Entertainment, a New York Stock Exchange publicly traded company with a number of divisions and corporate subsidiaries.

2. What Murdoch bought was not "developed from tax-deductible contributions of the faithful." International Family Entertainment was financed by Telecommunications, Inc., Mario Gabelli, Alliance Capital, and many other investor companies and stockholders.

3. The Family Channel was sold in 1990 to International Family Entertainment when the Internal Revenue Service forced CBN to divest it because the Family Channel was too profitable to keep within a nonprofit charity.

4. When it was sold there were absolutely no "contributions of the faithful" that had not been repaid to CBN dozens of times over.

5. The entire transaction was described by our Washington counsel as a "dream deal." Out of it Regent University now has a $305 million endowment, which makes it the best-funded evangelical educational institution in the country. CBN has received at least $250 million, which has enabled it to win well over 100 million people to faith in Jesus Christ around the world to date. CBN is the remainder beneficiary of a trust which I set up, which hopefully will bring it as much money as it has already received. On top of that, CBN has retained in perpetuity 17.5 hours of extremely valuable air time each week on the Family Channel for its religious programs.

Pat Robertson
The Christian Broadcasting
Network, Inc.
Virginia Beach, Va.

Randall Balmer responds:

I am willing to concede Pat Robertson's point. Yes, it is technically true that "The Family Channel was not sold to Rupert Murdoch." Rupert Murdoch's corporation purchased International Family Entertainment, of which Mr. Robertson and his son, Tim, had a considerable financial stake, and IFE, in turn, owned the Family Channel. Beyond this obfuscation, however, the central question remains: Did Mr. Robertson and his son, Tim, or did they not garner "a personal profit of $227 million from the sale of the parent company of the Family Channel," as reported in the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot and elsewhere? And isn't it true that this property was developed out of the 700 Club or CBN, which in turn was built from, in my words, "the tax-deductible contributions of the faithful"? To put it another way, is there any way that Robertson could have realized millions of dollars in profits had his charitable organizations not received countless checks for 10, 20, and 50 dollars?

Libertarians and government

I am grateful to Ronald J. Sider and Fred Clark for addressing the issue of libertarianism ["Should We Give Up on Government?" Mar. 2]. I was disappointed, however, at their failure to provide persuasive scriptural support for their position against it. After stating that there is a "large body of biblical teaching that says the government has a responsibility to care for the poor," the authors quote seven passages of Scripture to support this assertion. Upon closer scrutiny, however, most of these passages state only that government has a responsibility to protect the poor from injustice—this being a proper function of government according to the libertarian view. Not a single passage cited constitutes a clear biblical mandate for the redistribution of wealth through the power of government—which is what I assume the authors mean by "caring" for the poor.

There may be a biblical case against libertarianism—and even for providing for the needs of the poor through the power of government—but I do not think that Sider and Clark have succeeded in presenting it.

Michael S. Iachetta
Plano, Tex.

One of the critical issues of our day is the increasing concentration of power in the hands of the central government and its increasing reach into every aspect of our lives. "Conservatives" in general and the so-called Christian Right in particular have failed to resist that behemoth in a serious way. They have been rendered impotent because they have succumbed to the most transparent seduction of political power—one that the liberals gave in to long ago. Sometimes called the "golem temptation," it is the dream of using the behemoth's mighty power to do good on a lavish scale (shades of the Grand Inquisitor!). Libertarians, in contrast, make resisting the behemoth their central and focused goal—an attitude that (in my opinion) is necessary to any hope of success against it.

Libertarianism isn't workable as a way of life. It is inadequate as a basis for society. But no Christian need buy into it at that level in order to affirm it as an effective tool for critique and deconstruction. As an ideology of politics it will (like any other) produce abominations if it is applied with enough consistency over a long enough period of time. But right now, that is a contingent danger. Right now, all of us face dangers that are much closer and more concrete. In that context, Sider's and Clark's plea that we "not give up on government" seem a perverse entreaty to those who are caught in the jaws of the behemoth. It seems a bit like asking David not to "give up on Goliath."

Why are Christians attracted to the libertarian agenda? The answer is simple. Against the relentless encroachments of centralized power, libertarians have a pruning hook that might actually trim some of it back. Nobody else does. Brooks Alexander
Berkeley, Calif.

The attempt to discredit libertarianism by informing us that a millionaire pornographer has libertarian sentiments is unworthy of serious thinkers.

Also egregious is the exegesis of the Hebrew scriptures on which Sider and Clark seek to ground their assertions that libertarianism violates biblical principles. No doubt, we can discern general principles in the history of God's dealings with Israel: faith in God calls for just treatment of the marginalized. But the facile move from what God prescribed for a theocratic monarchy to the specifics of what's morally proper for a modern secular state belies an unprincipled, opportunistic use of the biblical text.

In the ideal, as Sider and Clark point out, government is God's servant for good. But, as Augustine saw, in reality it is often little more than a den of thieves. Which it is will in part depend on whether its Christian citizens testify to the moral bounds within which ought to operate, rather than acquiescing to the statist idolatry of the dominant culture.

Prof. Donald H. Wacome
Northwestern College
Orange City, Iowa

Brief letters are welcome. They may be edited for space and clarity and must include the writer's name and address if intended for publication. Due to the volume of mail, we cannot respond personally to individual letters. Write to Eutychus, CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188; fax: 630/260-0114. E-mail: cted-it@aol.com (✉).

SAMARITAN'S PURSE

Voted most effective relief agency
by this panel of international experts

*We don't just see the needs of the world.
We see one person who has a world of needs.*

Samaritan's Purse provides food, medicine, and relief supplies, and shares the Good News of Jesus Christ with people in need in 80 countries. But we can't help without people like you. It's that simple. For more information on how you can be involved, call 1-800-245-9600.

Samaritan's
Purse Reaching a World of One.

Franklin Graham, President
P.O. Box 3000-H
Boone, NC 28607

LIBERTY UNIVERSITY

Falwell Denounces Operation Rescue

Operation Rescue (OR) is accusing Liberty University and its chancellor, Jerry Falwell, of being soft on child pornography.

At the entrance to the Lynchburg, Virginia, school on March 19, three dozen protesters held placards showing photographs of nude children from a book they claimed was available at the campus bookstore.

Falwell quickly and angrily called the demonstrators "thugs and thieves." The protesters took part in ten days of rallies and prayer vigils for OR national director Flip Benham, jailed in Lynchburg for trespassing during an anti-abortion protest (CT, Apr. 6, 1998, p. 19).

Patrick Mahoney, director of the Washington, D.C.—

based Christian Defense Coalition, and Keith Tucci, Benham's predecessor at OR, Targeting Falwell: Tucci leads a protest at Liberty.

led a series of demonstrations in Benham's support. At the March 19 rally, Mahoney held a copy of the book Age of Innocence, by photographer David Hamilton, which he said had been ordered at the campus bookstore operated by Barnes & Noble. Although the store does not carry the book, it had been ordered through the store by an OR worker.

However, Mahoney admitted, the store manager canceled the book order and refunded the deposit money upon discovering its contents. The copy displayed had been purchased elsewhere.

The relationship between Falwell and OR, both longtime abortion opponents, turned contentious after Falwell distanced himself from Benham after the local protest.

Falwell denounced Benham's tactics, apologized to city officials, and reimbursed the city for the costs incurred from Benham's protest.

*By Christopher Calnan
in Lynchburg,*

Leaders Retain 'Chastity' Vow

Mainline Presbyterians have rejected an effort to loosen their official standards on who may be ordained and on clergy sexuality, effectively banning ordination of practicing homosexuals.

In late March, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (PCUSA) announced that the denomination's regional bodies had defeated by a 2-to-1 margin the "fidelity and integrity" amendment. As a result, the PCUSA will retain its "fidelity and chastity" amendment, approved at last year's general assembly (CT, Aug. 11, 1997, p. 56).

More Light Churches Network, a group of 95 congregations that openly ordain homosexuals, is not expected to abide by the reaffirmed amendment, which states that clergy are expected to demonstrate "fidelity within the covenant of marriage between a man and a woman or chastity in singleness." The defeated replacement amendment said, "Among these standards [for church office] is the requirement to demonstrate fidelity and integrity in marriage or singleness, and in all relationships of life."

According to Presbyterian News Service, the More Light network anticipates disciplinary actions against openly homosexual PCUSA clergy. But some conservative activists say they do not advocate "purging" homosexual clergy. Joe Rightmyer of Presbyterians for Renewal says, "We need to recover what is offered in Scripture, not just what is opposed."

Former moderator John Buchanan worries about the consequences of polarization within the denomination, saying, "The church needs to show a divided world how to stay in dialogue and service with each other, even when we disagree."

CT

CONGRESS

Bankruptcy Exemption Progresses

A bill that protects churches from creditors seeking to confiscate donations made by bankrupt contributors is making headway in Congress.

Recent court rulings have not protected churches from efforts by debt collectors who have successfully demanded church tithes given by individuals who had filed for bankruptcy.

Rep. Ron Packard (R-Calif.) says his bill, the Religious Freedom and Charitable Donation Protection Act, which would shield church tithes from bankruptcy proceedings, has strong support from both parties. "Most were shocked it was even an issue," says Packard, a Mormon. The Senate counterpart introduced by Iowa Republican Charles Grassley, a Baptist, would bar collection agencies from suing churches for donations and would allow bankrupt members to tithe during the repayment period (CT, Dec. 8, 1997, p. 76).

Although the bill has wide congressional support, bankruptcy lawyers are actively opposing its passage. "It would be different if, forgive the analogy, the church was selling salvation or offering a specific service for the money that was given to them," says Stephen Case of the National Bankruptcy Conference. "The church would treat a person the same if they didn't give them a dime."

The new legislation comes after the Supreme Court struck down the first civil test of the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (CT, Aug. 11, 1997, p. 48). Since then, there has been a surge in the number of suits against churches for contributions made by bankrupt donors. For example, attorneys for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints say collection agencies are seeking to recover church donations in about 100 cases.

By Walter R. Ratliff in Washington.

Two Cook Magazines Join CTi

Christianity Today, Inc. (CTi) and Cook Communications Ministries in April started a "strategic partnership," under which CTi assumes ownership and operation of Cook magazines Virtue and Christian Parenting Today.

The Colorado Springs-based Cook Communications abruptly shut down both publications on February 20, just after the March/April issues had gone to press. The new publications bring to 12 the number of magazines published by CTi, based in Carol Stream, Illinois (www.christianity.net). Existing CTi magazines have a combined circulation of 1.5 million.

"Both magazines are viable and show solid growth potential in the CTi environment," says president Harold L. Myra.

Christian Parenting Today, launched 10 years ago, has a circulation of 120,000. Virtue, which has been published for 20 years with the purpose of "helping women build Christ-like character," has 100,000 subscribers.

Most of the 14 employees of the two magazines had found other jobs by the time of the purchase. In the interim, before new editorial staff is hired, some of CTi's 140 employees will produce the publications. The purchase accelerates building expansion plans that CTi already had in the works.

Under terms of the agreement, Cook will develop book clubs using CTi's subscriber data base.

CTi also has announced a three-year partnership agreement with Promise Keepers to develop a bimonthly devotional publication, Men of Integrity, beginning in July. The company does not expect recent Promise Keepers financial difficulties (CT, April 6, 1998, p. 18) to impede the plans. CT

MUSIC

New Oratorio Features Black Gospel

When classical composer Paul Schoenfield, 51, grew up in Detroit, he spent many Sunday mornings enthralled by the gospel music he would hear of black church worship services over the radio. So when Schoenfield, an American Jew now living in Israel, was asked to compose an original, sacred oratorio, he agreed to do it if he could use a black gospel style to tell the story of Deborah as recorded in Judges 4-5.

The result is D'vorah, a five-part, 45-minute oratorio written in an eclectic style that Schoenfield says draws upon "nineteenth-century spirituals, the ragtime and jazz influences of the early twentieth century, and today's rap and disco gospel."

D'vorah is the first of three millennium works based on biblical themes and commissioned by Soli Deo Gloria (SDG) of West Chicago, Illinois. D'vorah premiered in five March concerts in Haifa, Israel, before sold-out crowds,

News Briefs

◆ The Christian Broadcasting Network (CBN) reached an agreement with the IRS in March to preserve the ministry's tax-exempt status. CBN spokesperson Patty Silverman says the ministry founded by Pat Robertson and the IRS disagreed over the "tax significance of CBN activities." However, CBN lost its tax-exempt status for 1986 and 1987 due to an IRS ruling that three affiliate organizations were involved in political activities during those years. Silverman says "CBN made a significant payment to the IRS to settle the dispute."

◆ Paul Bubna, president of the Christian & Missionary Alliance for the past two years, died of a massive heart attack March 31 while playing tennis. He was 65. Bubna had served on the C&MA board of managers for 14 years and had been president of Alliance Theological Seminary in Nyack, New York, from 1991 to 1996.

Bubna

◆ Suspended Roman Catholic priest Rudolph Kos, 52, was sentenced on April 1 to life in prison for sexually assaulting altar boys. Last year, a jury in a civil suit ordered the Roman Catholic Diocese of Dallas to pay a record $119.6 million in damages for sexual abuse caused by Kos (CT, Sept. 1, 1997, p. 95).

◆ Religious broadcaster John Hagee is suing the U.S. Postal Service, claiming it has "delayed, held, and even censored" his ministry's mailings. Hagee, pastor of the 16,000-member Cornerstone Church in San Antonio, alleges that for ten months last year the Postal Service denied use of the nonprofit standard mail rate and charged higher rates.

◆ A bipartisan group of lawmakers has formed the Religious Prisoners Congressional Task Force, which will allow representatives to "adopt" foreigners imprisoned for their religious beliefs. Rep. Joseph R. Pitts (R-Pa.) says the task force urges legislators to act "as a voice for suffering religious believers." Task force organizers are Rep. Tony Hall (D-Ohio), Sen. Sam Brownback (R-Kan.), and Sen. Joseph Lieberman (D-Conn.).

◆ Gospel Rescue Ministries of Washington, D.C., has had its membership status reinstated in the Evangelical Council for Financial Accountability after complying with council standards (CT, Jan. 12, 1998, p. 57). CT followed by three American performances last month in Washington, D.C. SDG cofounder John Nelson (CT, April 7, 1997, p. 38) conducted the concerts at both venues.

D'vorah is written for a black gospel choir and five soloists, including a tenor who serves as narrator and "preacher" with some freedom for improvisation. The story portrays two strong women: Judge Deborah, whose army led by Barak overcame Israel's enemy, the Canaanites; and Jael, who killed Canaanite commander Sisera when he sought protection from her after his troops were defeated.

Making music: Nelson and Schoenfield.

But Schoenfield does not glorify the violence, nor does he allow the moment of victory to become an occasion for musical exaltation.

By Richard A. Kauffman
in Washington, D.C.

The Myth of the Needy Child?

Newspaper exposé finds the promise of some child-sponsorship programs falls short.

The Chicago Tribune, in a lengthy exposé of child-sponsorship charities, reported that the marketing of some nonprofits creates false impressions, and that management at times is so lax that individuals were paying to support children who had died.

The Tribune investigated four major groups—Save the Children, Childreach, Christian Children's Fund, and Children International—concluding that the concept of individual sponsorship of a poor child is largely a marketing myth. The March reports, in two 16-page sections titled "The Miracle Merchants: Myths of Child Sponsorship," revealed that individual children often receive few or no direct benefits, even though marketing campaigns suggest otherwise. Three years ago, Tribune reporters began sponsoring a dozen youth from these organizations. Last year, the journalists visited their sponsored children to find out if the donations had made a difference.

The newspaper asserted that while most of the groups have evolved in their field work from an individual focus to community development, their market-driven method of funding has remained the same: one donor, one child.

But the groups say their supporters understand the concept. "We're very open about it," says Save the Children spokesperson Alan Carter. "We want individual sponsors for individual children, but the sponsor's money doesn't go directly to that child."

NO BIG FALLOUT: Starting nearly 60 years ago with wartime orphans, child-sponsorship efforts have grown to become a billion-dollar-a-year charitable enterprise, potentially touching millions of families worldwide. Yet it is an industry that struggles to align its message with its product.

Child-sponsorship agencies say the impact of the exposé on donors has been less than expected. For example, Save the Children fielded 257 calls, with 93 sponsorship terminations, by mid-April. "The articles were very misrepresentative of our work, and we're displeased about that, but overall the impact has been pretty minimal" says Cheri Dahl of Christian Children's Fund, which was founded in 1938 and is nonsectarian in its orientation.

The Tribune says its investigation has caused a number of child sponsorship agencies to review their operations. Save the Children beefed up its field accountability and reprimanded workers in Mali where the organization failed to notify donors of the deaths of two dozen sponsored children.

Keeping in touch: Guatemalan siblings 11-year-old César and 14-year-old Judith Mux write to a sponsor using a form letter provided by Children International.

Three prominent evangelical child sponsorship groups—World Vision, Compassion International, and Food for the Hungry—received only brief mention in the series. World Vision and Food for the Hungry are members—along with Save the Children, Christian Children's Fund, and Childreach—of a coalition of 160 relief-and-development organizations called InterAction. Member child-sponsorship agencies have requested an independent advisory panel to review sponsorship practices.

RAISING STANDARDS: More than 20 organizations that have child sponsorship as part of their ministry are members of the Evangelical Council for Financial Accountability (ECFA). In 1996, ECFA issued an advisory that outlined specific guidelines that member child-sponsorship agencies must follow. The advisory said that if a group appeals for funds for an individual child, the sponsored child must receive a direct benefit from the development activities in the community.

"The [ECFA] standards committee felt that some of the solicitations were not clear, or may even in some cases have been misleading," says ECFA president Paul D. Nelson. "What we were calling for is raising that standard so that there's less questioning by anybody who reads it."

Although many other groups as well as state and federal agencies keep an eye on nonprofit child sponsorship, some charity leaders believe that the child-sponsor relationship itself also provides accountability. Don Paterson, vice president for donor and field relations for World Vision, says, "The sponsor has the opportunity to correspond with that child, and if they are able, to visit their family and community and hold us accountable to the work that we're doing."

A BETTER WAY? Daniel Borochoff, president of the American Institute of Philanthropy, believes, however, that child sponsorship is not the most efficient way to help a child. "Just think of the savings if the charity didn't have to do this charade of matching up an individual with a kid," he says.

But the agencies that attempt to change their marketing are likely to have less money to work with overall. Ken Waters, former public relations director for World Vision, says that if a child-sponsorship organization would reposition itself as a development agency, it could "expect as much as a 50 percent loss of income over a two- or three-year period."

Borochoff notes that if donors fully understood the amount of money spent on mass-market campaigns, donors might be less inclined to participate in child sponsorship. In addition, the different ways that charities report their spending practices makes it difficult for donors to determine which group spends its funds most productively in helping needy children.

Of the $22 that a sponsor gives monthly to the Scottsdale, Arizona-based Food for the Hungry, 62 percent goes toward support of the child. In 1996, Save the Children reported that 80 percent of its child-sponsorship income went to program services. But Borochoff says at least 60 percent of Save the Children's child-sponsorship budget came from government sources. Save the Children would not indicate what percentage of individual donations went to program services. "The public shouldn't give them money if they can't answer that basic question," Borochoff says.

Waters, now a journalism professor at Pepperdine University, says evangelical groups have faced the dilemma of what is the best way to raise money in contrast with the best way to deliver services to needy children in the developing world. Waters says experiments in marketing community development projects fell flat.

TV marketing: Sad-looking children often are part of commercials for agencies such as Save the Children.

He says, "They're boring, and they just don't compel people to respond."

Fifteen years ago, while Waters worked for World Vision, the organization tried a new approach to fundraising called Life Sharing, in which they appealed to donors to sponsor a community. "People just did not respond," Waters says. "They wanted that one-to-one relationship with a kid. So it was with a bit of reluctance that World Vision went back to child sponsorship and tried to retool it to be a bit more upfront in what you would expect and what was really happening."

For example, a recent World Vision ad featuring celebrity Debby Boone solicits sponsorship for individual children. But halfway through, the text says, "Your sponsorship gifts will also help your child's entire community become more self-sufficient."

At Compassion International, which has had child sponsorship programs in place since 1952, president Wess Stafford says his group has never shifted its services toward community development. "We have not changed," says Stafford. "These Tribune articles have compelled us to change absolutely nothing." The Colorado Springs-based organization sponsors about 250,000 children through partnerships with local churches.

But Childreach CEO Sam Worthington says his organization over the past decade has made a shift from working through families and communities as an end, to seeing them as a means—with the child as the end. Worthington notes, "Our marketing has evolved to reflect this message."

By Art Moore.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL

Since 1887

Philadelphia Theological Seminary

Committed to training capable pastors, effective missionaries and competent lay-workers.

Since 1887 we have been training Christ's people for Christ's ministry in Christ's way. If you are looking for a Seminary with a rock-solid commitment to the Bible as the Word of God, a faculty of scholar-pastors, fidelity to "the faith once delivered to the saints," and a seminary experience packed full of practical pastoral experience and training in preaching the Word of God, PTS may well be the Seminary for you.

Ask about our one-third scholarships for resident M.Div. Students
or

Talk to us about beginning with Seminary At A Distance.

We are Biblical, Episcopal, Liturgical, Evangelical and Reformed.

For more information call or write:

Philadelphia Theological Seminary
7372 Henry Avenue
Philadelphia, PA 19128-1401

1-800-899-5158
Associate Member of
The Association of Theological Schools

Still opposed: Vashti McCollum is still against efforts to reintroduce religion in public schools.

Back to the Future?

Antischool-prayer crusaders cite a 50-year-old case in resisting the proposed Religious Freedom Amendment.

When the House Judiciary Committee on March 5 approved the Religious Freedom Amendment barring the government from infringing on religious expression in public schools, 85-year-old Vashti McCollum thought she had won such a battle long ago.

It was five decades to the month that the Supreme Court ruled in her favor in McCollum v. Board of Education, prohibiting for the first time religious instruction in public schools.

"Ever since the decision was handed down, people have tried devious ways to put sectarian religion in the public schools and to get the public funds for parochial schools," says McCollum. "I think [the Religious Freedom Amendment] is designed to undermine the First Amendment of the Constitution."

However, Rep. Ernest J. Istook Jr. (R-Okla.), who has been leading the fight for the Religious Freedom Amendment, says federal judges are the ones who are undermining the Constitution. "When prayer or religious expression occurs on public property, [judges] turn a blind eye to the fact that it's protected as free expression of religion." He believes judges are misapplying the constitutional ban on the establishment of religion. He says, "The same First Amendment that protects us has been turned upside-down and is used as a weapon against religion." His amendment, Istook believes, will restore full freedom of religion as originally intended.

McCollum's own case began in the early 1940s in Champaign, Illinois, where public school students thought nothing of saying the Lord's Prayer before assembly.

McCollum was a homemaker raising three sons when her eldest, 9-year-old Jim, came home and asked her for a quarter so he could take religious instruction in his public grammar school. The McCollums had never been churchgoers, and her husband, John "Pappy" McCollum, a University of Illinois professor, vehemently opposed the class. But Vashti, although a humanist, gave Jim the money so he would not feel left out.

'RELIGIOUS INDOCTRINATION': Jim McCollum, now 63 and a computer consultant in Magnolia, Arkansas, remembers balking at illustrated Bible stories, and his mother recalls fuming over a poster her son made of the Resurrection.

The next year, Jim opted out of religious instruction and often spent the hour in a chair in the hallway used for detention. "He came home crying and I thought, If he can't take it, I can't take it."

School administrators were unresponsive, she says, so she contacted Philip Schug, a local Unitarian minister, who agreed she had grounds for a lawsuit.

Schug, now 83, remembers rustling up support from wealthy Chicago liberals committed to church-state separation. "Soon we were raising a lot of money," he says, "and we filed a suit against the legislature of Illinois."

Their first lawyer, Landon Chapman, wanted to prove that religious teaching is inevitably sectarian by demonstrating how minority groups were discriminated against when schools got involved in religion. Vashti McCollum's father, a prominent atheist, took the stand and announced to the court that the Adam and Eve story was fictitious and ministers who believed in God were insane. Soon the press dubbed his daughter "the atheist mother." The court ruled Jim was not harassed, that the Champaign system was not sectarian, and that religion class was like any other extracurricular activity in the schools.

ANOTHER STRATEGY: When the Illinois Supreme Court agreed to hear the case on appeal, Vashti McCollum hired a new lawyer, Walter Dodd, an expert on constitutional law. Dodd argued that publicly segregating students in sectarian groups for religious education in schools during school hours violated constitutional guarantees of freedom of religion. And he said such action is not validated by allowing children to be excused.

In June 1947, the U.S. Supreme Court agreed to review the case.

Given the potential precedent, religious groups that had remained on the sidelines went public with their support of Vashti McCollum. The Synagogue Council of America, the American Unitarian Association, and the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists filed briefs on her behalf. The Joint Conference Committee on Public Relations, set up by the Southern Baptist Convention, the two Northern Baptist Conventions, and the National Baptist Convention, also filed a brief backing the McCollums.

In March 1948, the Supreme Court ruled 8 to 1 that public school systems may not assist religious groups in giving religious instruction and thus spreading their faith. Half a century later, Istook says that his amendment (CT, April 27, 1998, p. 15) is a response to decades of Supreme Court decisions that have barred or discouraged religious expression in public places. Istook says the McCollum case had the unacceptable consequence of shutting out religious expression from public places. The amendment would restore students' right to religious expression, including prayer, in public schools.

By Julia Lieblich, Religion News Service.

Hispanic Christian Radio Grows by Blocks and Blends

New information-age strategy enables stations to compete with secular counterparts.

In Orlando, Florida, a Spanish-language Christian station has tied its major secular competitor for first place in the ratings wars.

Offering a full service of news, sports, and advice to a non-Christian audience, the station's successful programming formula blends spiritual and practical themes, linked with Hispanic Christian music. "We need to offer what the listeners need to hear: how to buy a house, how to finance a car, how to stay healthy," says Luis Hernandez, general manager of Orlando's WRLZ, known as Radio Luz.

Melvin Rivera, the Miami-based publications coordinator for the United Bible Society and past president of Hispanic National Religious Broadcasters, says Radio Luz, WWRV Radio Vision Cristiana in New York, and several Christian-format stations in Puerto Rico are "changing the way that Christian broadcasting is being done."

Along with its information format, Radio Luz fills 75 percent of its airtime with Spanish-language Christian music, in contrast to other Christian-format stations, which rely heavily on preaching and teaching programs. "As a result, non-Christians listen," Hernandez says.

STATION EXPANSION: The number of Spanish Christian radio stations is expanding, especially in Texas and Southern California.

There are around three dozen Hispanic Christian radio stations in the United States, including Puerto Rico, and about 15 Hispanic Christian TV stations. Churches or ministries own the majority of stations, which is different from English-language Christian stations, which are most frequently operated by commercial groups.

Hispanic Christian-format stations are not limited to areas traditionally thought of as Spanish-speaking strongholds. In some Michigan communities, for example, stations have started inserting two-hour blocks of Spanish programs.

"That's how most Christian stations in the U.S. start," Rivera says. "In Miami, right now there [are] churches starting broadcasting with a block of five to six hours a day with the goal of purchasing a station."

Community impact: Radio Luz general manager Luis R. Hernandez interviews Orlando mayor Glenda Hood, one of the ways WRLZ competes with other stations.

But recent federal changes have made it easier for commercial interests to own more broadcasting outlets.

"The big corporations are buying all of the stations that they can buy," Rivera says. "Those who have one small station are increasing the price and selling them to the groups, which want more presence in the market. That makes it difficult for Spanish broadcasters to buy."

The high cost of owning a station has not stopped Puerto Rican Christians who have a tradition of supporting religious broadcasting. New York has a large Puerto Rican population, which has contributed to the success of Radio Vision Cristiana, purchased for more than $11 million. "In most other cities, Christians do not have the history of knowing what a station can do, so they do not have the custom of giving to broadcasting," Rivera says.

PROGRAMMING SHORTFALL: Hispanic broadcasters are discovering that truly helpful programming is hard to find.

Linda Martin Monroe, program director of Spanish-language KHCB in Houston, says, "We need to have programs that discuss divorce, abuse, unfaithfulness, and a macho lifestyle." Her station provides talk shows featuring Christian professionals as counselors. However, Monroe says, the majority of her station's listeners are women, and she has not found programs for men.

Rivera says three networks currently provide programming, but more are needed. "I would love to see the day when we have satellite services for all the Hispanic Christian radio stations in Latin America and the United States," Rivera says. "We need to have programming that is not just translating English into Spanish but is produced by Hispanics with the Spanish mentality, with more orientation to Spanish culture and needs."

Hispanic listeners are receptive to evangelical radio, producers agree. Many immigrants are a long way from their families in Latin America. Monroe says, "Many are nominally Catholic, do not attend church, and so are very open to the gospel."

There is an increasing need for networks to produce segmented programming for children, teenagers, young married adults, and non-Christians. Rivera says, "The stations are there and are discovering that they need to grow, but they don't have the resources."

The Hispanic National Religious Broadcasters, an arm of the National Religious Broadcasters, has been instrumental in getting Spanish-speaking Christians to cooperate. "In the past, we have not worked together or learned from each other or done networking," says Rivera, who completed a three-year term as president of the Hispanic National Religious Broadcasters in February. "We may have theological differences, but basically we are the same. We can learn from one another, we can work together, and we can change the world together."

By Kenneth D. MacHarg.

Senators Champion Rival Bill on Religious Persecution

When U.S. senators, unhappy with a proposed House bill on religious persecution, are supporting rival legislation that they believe will do a more effective job of protecting religious freedom globally.

On March 25, the International Relations Committee sent the Freedom from Religious Persecution Act, also known as the Wolf-Specter Bill, to the full House. The measure, which has undergone many revisions, would cut off U.S. aid to countries that tolerate or engage in religious persecution (CT, April 27, p. 25).

The next day, assistant Senate majority leader Don Nickles (R-Okla.) introduced the International Religious Freedom Act. His legislation has the backing of Senate Foreign Relations Committee chair Jesse Helms (R-N.C.), as well as support from Catholic, Jewish, mainline, and evangelical representatives. Those backing the bill include Joseph Lieberman (D-Conn.), Connie Mack (R-Fla.), and Mike DeWine (R-Ohio).

A BROADER BILL: Critics of the Wolf-Specter Bill believe that it defines religious persecution too narrowly in focusing mostly on threats to life and limb. They say under the definition of "widespread and ongoing torture" in the Wolf-Specter Bill, limited sanctions could be applied only to Sudan.

By contrast, the Nickles bill would:

- Include a broader definition of religious persecution.
- Create an ambassador at large for religious liberty in the State Department, rather than a director of an office for religious persecution.
- Allow more flexibility in choosing from a range of 16 different economic or diplomatic sanctions.
- Provide federal financing for promotion of religious freedom.
- Include limits of choice to economic sanctions for gross violators.

Rep. Bob Clement (D-Tenn.) says the State Department last year reported that 77 countries violated the religious liberties of their citizens in some way. The Nickles bill would have required action in all those countries while the Wolf-Specter Bill would have covered only a handful, if any, according to Clement. Religious freedom experts are debating whether legal restrictions on religious expression in reality constitute a more ominous threat than the relatively few incidents of torture and persecution.

PERSECUTION WATCHERS

REACT: Religious persecution experts are glad the issue is receiving widespread recognition.

"We're excited about the national debate that these bills are creat-

Religious punishment: Voice of the Martyrs says children in an Islamic school in Bangladesh have been chained for not memorizing the Qur'an.

Evangelicals Warned Against Persecution Apathy

Evangelicals should increase the pressure on the U.S. government to work more aggressively in protecting religious freedom worldwide, according to experts in the struggle against religious persecution.

"We have accepted silence as the dominant option for too long," says Paul Marshall, author of Their Blood Cries Out (Word Publishing, 1997).

In March at the first International Conference on Religious Persecution, in Columbia, South Carolina, scholars, church leaders, and public-policy experts gathered to strategize ways to keep the plight of the suffering church on the minds of American Christians.

Some experts believe that the situation in Nigeria shows what can happen when Christians stand quietly on the sidelines. In Nigeria, neither the Muslims nor the Christians represent a clear majority of the nation's 107 million people. But Muslims hold control of the government and the military, giving them the power to implement Islamic law, which discriminates against all non-Muslims.

"For some time, Christians refused to be involved in the affairs of the nation," says Nigerian Jeremiah Gada, a doctoral student at Columbia International University. "Now, they are trying to reassert themselves."

Despite growing awareness among evangelicals to the plight of the persecuted in the past year (CT, Aug. 11, 1997, p. 61), Marshall believes most Christians remain indifferent. Indeed, only 100 ministry leaders attended the conference. Marshall says Christian groups should be issuing statements, educating their members, raising the matter of persecution with political leaders, and attempting to contact Christians in other nations.

"It is vital that the evangelical community in the U.S. apply political pressure," says Marshall, of the Institute for Christian Studies in Toronto. Unless political pressure is put on federal officials, "the attention on the issue of religious persecution will cease," Marshall says.

Marshall also advocates requiring annual reports on persecution by the State Department, as proposed by the Wolf-Specter Bill now before Congress. "Unless clear, forthright reporting and mechanisms for addressing these issues are put into place, then the religious persecution campaign of 1997-98 will be useless."

Rep. Bob Inglis (R-S.C.) says congressional representatives have clout internationally: "People from other parts of the world are very conscious about what members of Congress think about them."

Yet persecution of Christians is still widespread. According to Marshall, 200 million Christians are suffering severe persecution, and there are "situations of violence" in more than 30 countries.

Michael Horowitz of the Hudson Institute sees a parallel to Jewish persecution during the Holocaust. "I know as a Jew what the consequences will be if you [Christians] do not stand in fellowship with your brothers and sisters."

By Mary Cagney in South Carolina.

ing among the public," says Steve Haas, coordinator of Prayer for the Persecuted Church. "This issue should be worthy of one or more legislative efforts on behalf of Congress. This is an important issue, and we as Christians can't be silent now."

Yet some experts on the issue believe the Nickles bill does not offer as concrete a response to persecution as the Wolf-Specter Bill. They claim it would allow government bureaucrats too much latitude in determining the penalties for countries that restrict religious freedom.

Ann Buwalda, U.S. director of the British-based Jubilee Campaign, is concerned about the Nickles bill. She said, "I prefer to see an approach that gives enforcement of human rights standards as in the Wolf-Specter Bill."

Nina Shea, director of the Freedom House Center for Religious Freedom, says, "I feel the Nickles bill has many positive elements in it, but I'm concerned that the bureaucratic process for imposing sanctions under the Nickles scheme may weaken its impact." Religious leaders in the countries where freedom of religion is in jeopardy are ambivalent about resorting to penalties against their countries' governments. Several have expressed concern that Wolf-Specter takes a one-size-fits-all approach to penalties without allowing any diplomatic approach.

IMMIGRATION PROBLEMS: James Robb of Evangelicals for Immigration Reform, is concerned about the effect of the Wolf-Specter Bill on immigration. Robb testified before a congressional committee that the Wolf-Specter Bill redraws the definition of credible fear, which is the legal threshold of danger that must be experienced by a refugee to receive an asylum hearing in the United States. Robb says if asylum seekers, such as Coptic Christians in Egypt, merely belong to a group that the Office of Religious Persecution Monitoring has determined is persecuted, it may be reason enough to allow them into the country immediately.

Robb predicts that, as a result of the Wolf-Specter asylum provisions, many

Nickles

Middle Eastern countries would be "emptied of Christians in a few decades," and that "Congress would have unwittingly worked to undo the labor of Christian missionaries and martyrs over the centuries."

Robb believes that the Wolf-Specter Bill is a "good idea in concept," but he has endorsed the Nickles bill. "I hope we don't squander this moment," he says.

By Mary Cagney.

Buying? Selling?
Refinancing?

Let the Christian Purchasing Network Help You Realize Your Dream of Home Ownership

We are a nationally recognized provider of goods and services for the Christian Community, serving more than 400,000 churches. Our church partners value our integrity as well as our business acumen.

Now you can use our reputation for honesty, quality and exemplary service to help you realize your goal of buying a home. The Christian Purchasing Network has formed an alliance to provide a full array of real estate and mortgage services tailored to meet your needs. And we're so confident about our mortgage program, that we'll guarantee your mortgage...twice. We'll provide you with a same-day decision or pay you $250!*

And if we don't close your loan on the date you select, we'll reduce your interest rate by 1/8 of one percent for the life of your loan. Excellent pricing and tremendous service...all from people you can trust.

Let us help you achieve your dream.....

Call us now!!

Christian Purchasing Network
Home Ownership Services Program®

1-800-372-1791

CPN+

Christian Purchasing Network
Home Ownership Services Program®

Trial by fire: Muslim soldiers burned a log upon a Sudanese Christian who refused to renounce his faith.

Financing provided by PHH Mortgage Services Corporation, 6000 Atrium Way, Mt. Laurel, NJ 08054. Arizona Residential Mortgage Licensee #BK10039; Georgia Residential Mortgage Licensee; Illinois Residential Mortgage Lender; Massachusetts Licensed Lender #ML0060; Licensed Mortgage Banker - N.J. Department of Banking; Licensed Mortgage Banker - NYS Banking Department; Rhode Island Licensed Lender; Minnesota - This is not an offer to enter an interest rate lock-in agreement.

* conventional first mortgages only.

NIGERIA

Pope's Visit Blindsides Evangelicals

Key Nigerian evangelical leaders were surprised and disappointed by the actions of some Protestants during Pope John Paul II's March visit.

Rick Calenberg, Nigerian director of the Society of International Ministries, says he was amazed by the wide variety of people who overreacted to the pope. "Just about anybody who wanted a special spiritual experience showed up," Calenberg says. "They wanted to have the chance to touch the seat where the pope had sat, thinking they could get such blessings from that," Calenberg says. Many Nigerian Protestant leaders in pursuit of a papal blessing traveled to the cities of Abuja and Onitsha, where the pope was speaking.

Calenberg says the Protestant overreaction "reaffirms the need for sound biblical teaching and training for the African continent."

Victor Musa, president of the Evangelical Church of West Africa, was troubled by the pope's beatification Gift-giving: A Nigerian welcomes the pope.

Spiritual harvest: Nigerian Pentecostal churches, including Redeeming Love Chapel in Lagos, are the fastest-growing religious group in the country.

of the first Nigerian, twentieth-century priest Michael Iwene Tansi. Musa says, "We should exalt the Creator, the Savior more than the person that is a beneficiary of the grace of God." Just before the papal visit, Tansi's body was exhumed and prepared for beatification, a step toward canonization. Thousands of Christians, many seeking a miracle, struggled to touch the body lying in state at Holy Trinity Cathedral in Onitsha.

Catholic leaders called the pope's visit a dynamic success. More than 4 million Nigerians attended two papal masses. In addition, John Paul II called for Nigeria's military dictators to release political prisoners.

With a total population of 107 million people, Nigeria has 42 million Muslims. The country includes 10 million Roman Catholics, 6.7 million Pentecostals, and 5.7 million Anglicans, according to World Churches Handbook.

By Obed Minchakpu
in Jos, Nigeria.

ISRAEL

'Antimissionary' Bill Effort Backfires

An agreement designed to defuse the tension surrounding an "antimissionary" bill aimed at Christian and Messianic Jew activity in Israel (CT, Feb. 9, 1998, p. 86) has generated controversy of its own.

Drafted by an ad-hoc committee of Jewish and Christian leaders, the agreement between 50 local "representative Christian bodies" and Knesset member Nissim Zvilli was supposed to provide an assurance of goodwill on the part of the Christians. In return, Labor party leader Zvilli would withdraw his support for the bill.

At the last minute, however, some Christian groups declared they would not sign because Zvilli told the Associated Press the agreement was "better than a law," and that it meant that Israeli Christian organizations would stop all missionary activity.

Not so, says Chuck Kopp, president of the United Council of Churches in Israel, one of the dissenters. "We have not surrendered our right to speak freely about our faith," Kopp says. Baruch Maoz, chair of the Messianic Action Committee, says, "Asking Messianic Jews not to witness is like telling the Labor party that it can continue to exist only on the condition that it stops trying to win elections."

Despite Zvilli's remarks, most of the Christian groups agreed to refrain from aggressive missionary efforts targeting Jews.

Maoz warns that the fight is still not over. "No amount of explaining can make up for the wrong impression" given by Zvilli's remarks, says Maoz. "Many Knesset members cannot afford to vote against this bill, so they will simply abstain, opening the way for a slim majority."

A new, much harsher bill has been drafted by Rafael Pinchasi of the religious Shas party in response to what Pinchasi called the "weakening" of the original bill.

By Sean Aaron Osborne
in Jerusalem.

Agreement announced: Zvilli (left) explains the accord with American Jewish Committee Middle East director Joseph Alpher, who helped mediate the compromise.

Five Killed in Mission Plane Crash

Searchers in southern Venezuela found the bodies of five passengers in a plane operated by New Tribes Mission (NTM) seven days after it crashed in rugged mountainous territory of the Amazon jungle. The Cessna 207 slammed into Mount Marahuaca on March 23, shortly after takeoff in hazy weather made worse by extensive wildfires burning in the rain forest in northern Brazil and southern Venezuela.

Killed in the crash were the pilot, Rick Burd, 45, of York, Pennsylvania, a 22-year veteran of flying for NTM; Tim Stucky, 15, of Newton, Kansas, the son of NTM missionaries; Bob McCormick, 60, and Ida McCormick, 56, of Whitehorse, Yukon Territory, Canada, volunteer teachers with the mission; and Freda Lopez, a Maquiritare woman of Venezuela.

The plane was reported missing soon after takeoff from the village of Toqui bound for Puerto Ayacucho. A locator signal was detected that evening, but it took seven days for rescuers to reach the crash site due to rugged terrain, high winds, and poor visibility.

Searchers finally reached the plane after the Venezuelan military dropped them above the crash and they rappelled down to the site. The Sanford, Florida-based NTM has worked in Venezuela since 1946 and has more than 100 American personnel in the country.

By Kenneth D. MacHarg.

MISSIONS

Do Churches Send Wrong People?

Many Christians may feel called to a career in foreign missions, but churches and mission agencies are not doing a good job of evaluating candidates, according to a missions expert.

Tom Telford, a United World Mission consultant and author of Missions in the 21st Century (Harold Shaw Publishers, 1998), says that nearly half of new missionaries drop out by the end of their first four-year term because churches and agencies often send the wrong people.

Besides a strong relationship with God, Telford says the most important quality a missionary must have is adaptability. "In the United States we're raising up a lot of people who can't adapt to other countries," says Telford, who helps churches mobilize in sending missionaries.

Telford

The solution? Weed out misdirected candidates early on, recruit fewer, and train more. "Don't let people lay hands on themselves," he warns. "Only the [candidate's] church knows if they are fit to go."

But Telford's news is not all bad. Television, travel, and immigration have exposed young people to international cultures in ways their parents and grandparents never saw.

Yet, Telford says the next generation of missionaries must be sold on missions in a new way. Younger Christians "want to feel it, taste it, see it before they invest," he says. "They support people. They don't just give to the mission fund." Telford says short-term "vision trips" to a foreign country in which people personally connect with believers outside their own culture often spurs them to support missions financially and may inspire them to return to the field as a career.

By Deann Alford.

News Briefs

◆ Palestinian Christian Elias Freij, 80, died March 29 in Jordan. Freij, a Greek Orthodox, was one of the first Palestinians to call for a negotiated settlement with Israel 21 years before the Israeli-Palestinian peace accord in 1993. He served as the mayor of Bethlehem from 1972 to 1997, and he became the first minister of tourism for the Palestinian Authority in 1994.

◆ The National Bolivian Evangelical Association has filed suit to stop the government from enforcing a resolution issued by the vice minister of Foreign Relations and Worship. The resolution states that churches "cannot carry out unauthorized acts geared toward proselytism, propaganda, or collecting funds."

◆ Thanks in large part to U.S. evangelical publishing houses, more than 15,000 African pastors have received basic libraries containing 40 books each to help them in ministry. The books have a total value of $1,125,000, but the pastors needed only to pay the equivalent of $75 for the sets to offset the cost of mailing and distribution.

◆ CBInternational will relocate its headquarters to Denver from Wheaton, Illinois, next year. The mission agency has 41 staff members and works with Conservative Baptist missionaries.

Remembering Elias Freij: The peace-maker's coffin is carried to the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem.

SPAIN

Evangelicals Protest Media Shutdowns

Spanish Protestants have raised an outcry of religious persecution following government orders to shut down evangelical radio and television stations.

Complaints came after Public Minister Rafael Arias Salgado ordered the closing of Trinity Broadcasting Network's Tu Pueblo Television station in Madrid, along with nine of the sixteen evangelical radio stations of the Radio TV Amistad chain linked with the Church of God of Spain.

Spanish authorities say they are enforcing new regulations, not engaging in religious discrimination.

Stations operating before 1995, such as Tu Pueblo and the Amistad chain, had an eight-month exemption from compliance with new regulations. During the transition period, the government failed to provide the necessary compliance procedures.

Mariano Blazquez, executive secretary of the evangelical umbrella organization FEREDE (Federation of Evangelical Religious Entities of Spain), believes evangelical radio and television stations have been singled out, because many other stations "operate in the same conditions."

In addition, both Enlace, the operator of the TV station in Madrid, and the Amistad radio stations have also experienced interference on their frequencies from a government-owned network.

Tu Pueblo has endured the obstruction of its signal in 70 percent of its area coverage. The TV station is fighting the frequency interference and the closure order in court. The Amistad radio stations are also contesting their closure. FEREDE has opposed the closure of the Amistad stations as a breach of freedom of religion and expression.

By Jeff M. Sellers
in Madrid.

Gambling with the Enemy

Instead of folding, the church should be upping the ante.

When “Lefty” Rosenthal was owner of the Stardust Hotel and Casino in Las Vegas, he lustily embraced a gambler’s lifestyle. Although it made him rich and powerful, he is today an embittered man. Last year, in discussing Las Vegas gambling on public television, he said that “99.9 percent of the public, including myself, have two chances to win; one is slim, the other is none, and slim’s out of town.”

Gambling is an ancient vice that has soured lives and destroyed families for generations. American reformers by the end of 1910 succeeded in banning nearly all gambling. But since 1978, gambling has made a breathtaking comeback. Last year, Americans legally wagered more than $550 billion, which is more than three times the revenues of General Motors, the country’s largest corporation.

As gambling has become socially acceptable, the voice of the church, which once condemned gambling as immoral and destructive, has been drowned out. Gambling, American style, has been cleaned up, civilized, licensed, government approved, and transformed into supposedly family-friendly entertainment. But the gambling industry is a family-killing enterprise if there ever was one.

Corporate America, state and local governments, and the media have all played a part in shifting public opinion toward the belief that gambling is largely harmless, mostly fun, and certainly not immoral enough to warrant prohibition. Church leaders in communities such as Tunica, Mississippi, where gambling now dominates the economy and the culture, feel helpless in confronting the highly buffed largess of gambling potentates, who employ their church members, donate generously to local charities, and provide a strong influx of new tax revenue (see “None Dare Call It Sin,” p. 34). But if Christians look beyond the gambling industry’s guile and guise, they will find within their grasp the ability to turn the public’s perception of gambling toward reality and away from fantasy.

First church of the co-opted

A first step for churches to recover a prophetic voice against gambling is to confess that the theology of chance has infected the lifeblood of many congregations. The theology of chance, putting us at the mercy of blind fate, violates our Christian understanding of how God as Creator interacts with us. One aspect of this pathogen within the church is shown by the prevalent attitude that low-stakes gambling is benign. Charity raffles may be a mostly harmless fundraising activity, but they condition us to think that gambling can be fun, exciting, and socially acceptable. Whose heart would not beat quicker in anticipation of winning admission to an NBA playoff game for the price of a $1 raffle ticket?

Another symptom of this infection is the fevered logic in which gambling winnings and revenues are counted virtuous when put to good purposes. Under such a rationale, churches in Alberta, Canada, have since 1993 accepted $3.7 million in video lottery proceeds for community-development projects.

But their willingness to take gambling-tainted funds may be ending. After Alberta’s Catholic bishops issued a call for banning video lotteries because of an increase in gambling addictions, a leading Canadian politician suggested that churches were hypocritical to accept lottery money while criticizing gambling. To their credit, two congregations have sacrificed in response: One returned a check for $80,000, and a second has refused the state’s annual gambling payoff of up to $125,000 per organization.

Make visible the invisible social cost

Why are the consequences of gambling so hard to see? American culture has long celebrated the winning gambler as a hero and the losing gambler as an untutored fool, presuming that skill makes the difference between winners and losers. But experts tell us that casino gambling gives the "house" an unbeatable mathematical advantage, and the longer anyone plays the more he loses.

When it comes to the social cost of gambling, Americans have an acquired blindness. In embracing a philosophy of individualism, we have rightly valued personal achievement, but we too easily view an individual's failure as limited to his or her own life and family. Unfortunately, the cumulative effect of thousands of failed marriages and careers, poisoned by compulsive, addictive gambling, brings with it dire symptoms from which all of us suffer.

The gambling industry has put a false spin on the issue of gambling addiction. It argues first that the problem is very small, and second that the problem is treatable. But the industry's reasoning fails to acknowledge the many lives that are shattered when just one member of a household becomes a gambling addict. Recovery may take a lifetime. "Lefty" Rosenthal shamefully relates how one head of household lost $18,000, a life's savings, after being lured into Rosenthal's casino, which advertised a 49-cent farmer's breakfast.

Where should the church position itself in dealing with gambling's victims? Certainly, the church's function as a social and emotional safety net for gambling's victims must be maintained. But there is a more pronounced role for churches: In communities where gambling does not currently exist, churches should not ignore gambling issues. In regions where gambling has been approved, church leaders must overcome historic denominational and racial barriers and organize, strategize, and speak out jointly at every opportunity. The first place to make visible the invisible consequences of gambling is within the walls of our churches.

Do moralistic arguments work?

Frank Fahrenkopf, president of the American Gambling Association, is one of the nation's leading gambling promoters. Lately, he and other gambling proponents have been talking about morality in the gambling debate. Arguing that morality is mostly a private matter, he says, "Most Americans resent religious leaders or others trying to tell them what they should and should not do."

But Fahrenkopf does not accurately locate the sources of resentment. In large measure, Americans do not object to moral guidance itself, but to moral dictates without moral instruction. Moral dicta in a values vacuum invite rebellion. Persuasive reasoning, however, leads people to consider the issues. The recent successes of the National Coalition Against Legalized Gambling show that voters can think clearly for themselves when encouraged to do so (see "How to Fight Gambling," p. 39).

However, in those communities where gambling already is allowed, Christians are having great difficulty in beating back the gambling industry through the use of moral suasion. In South Carolina, Gov. David

Beasley, a Baptist, is waging war against video poker, calling it a "cancer" on the citizenry. His metaphor is appropriate, because the solution to the state's gambling problem is not regulation and taxation but excision. Even though moral arguments may starkly frame the gambling issue, they are not likely to be decisive in rolling back gambling because of its strong hold on the human psyche.

There are two underlying reasons to prohibit gambling. First, if the social purpose of gambling is entertainment for the masses, the price tag is just too high. Gambling is like illicit drug use: people may value the entertainment and escapism, but the social cost far outstrips any putative value. Second, casino gambling guarantees a win-lose situation. With the odds firmly stacked in favor of the house, such gaming violates our commitment to fairness and falsely advertises itself as a short-cut around thrift and hard work—values rooted in Christian teaching and practice. Gambling seduces us into believing in gain without pain and earnings without effort. The explosive growth of gambling reveals how Americans embrace money as the ultimate lifestyle guarantee.

The dishonesty theology of gambling violates relations between God and humanity, because God's perfect will for each of us cannot be had for the price of a lottery ticket.

Pursuing the 'peak experience'

"People gamble, whether it is legal or not, because it helps them face the world more successfully than they could without the spark which it gives," says English professor Felicia Campbell of the University of Las Vegas. Campbell correctly identifies the emotional and spiritual dynamic at work in a gambler's heart. However, the argument that gambling provides a ready emotional charge rests on the false premise that any peak experience is good. Like all lusts, the promise of gambling is energizing. But sin entraps us rather than equipping us for life's challenges.

The deceitful economics of gambling violate relations between people, because neither goods nor services are exchanged. The dishonesty theology of gambling violates relations between God and humanity, because God's perfect will for each of us cannot be had for the price of a lottery ticket.

When Christians focus on not only the physical toll, but also the spiritual toll that gambling takes, they are well positioned to take the upper hand in the gambling debate. CT

McCartney — ON THE — REBOUND

How a workaholic jock and insensitive husband became the nation's leading Promise Keeper.

PHYLLIS E. ALSDURF

Bill McCartney is an enigma to folks within religious circles and without. Founder of the men's ministry Promise Keepers, he is a man whose religious fervor is both admitted and looked upon with suspicion. Some see him as the archenemy of feminism; others dismiss McCartney and PK as the latest fuzzy fad for the therapeutic culture. While many Christians see him in revivalistic terms—the latest great hope for the church—others are disquieted by his radical sold-outness. Is his spiritual intensity, they wonder, just one more manifestation of an impulsiveness and extremism that have been McCartney's trademark for years?

In his recent autobiography Sold Out, McCartney appears to have attempted an end-run on his critics by being the first to own up to a lifetime of failings and foibles. "Tucked away in the folds of my life are countless episodes that coldly strip away the mystique and pretense of what some think of me," he writes. He calls himself a "highly flawed, ordinary man who has made it through only with the help of an extraordinary God."

There is a certain drop-dead seriousness about McCartney that comes through despite his polite congeniality. One gets the sense that even while McCartney is listening, he is anticipating where the conversation will go next, keeping ahead of the game, getting ready to call the next play. Although he is ever the gentleman, he still plays hardball.

I begin to gain some firsthand clues to how McCartney operates when he reaches over and turns off my tape recorder during an interview with him and his wife, Lyndi. I'd asked about PK's curiously elusive position on gender equality in light of the group's clarion call for racial equality. His marriage, not PK, was to be the focus of the interview, McCartney informs me. My hands duly slapped, he allows me to turn the recorder back on, and we continue the interview.

This incident illustrates both the strength and weakness of Bill McCartney: his aptitude for focus and control, yet little room in his approach for those who don't operate according to his game plan. Over the years, these tendencies have given him both trouble and exceptional successes. Just this year his turn-off-the-recorder-and-fix-it mentality came through again when he laid off all 345 staff members in his Promise Keepers organization through an announcement that surprised even top staff members. God had told him (and his board, which had earlier miscalculated the amount of donations that would come in when admission charges for stadium events were dropped) that it was time for the churches to support the ministry, and that the work could be done through volunteers. (As it happened, on April 9, PK announced that a surge in donations allowed it to rehire most of its staff. See News Update on page 29.)

In Sold Out, McCartney refers repeatedly to King David. In many ways, this Old Testament character is a fitting exemplar for understanding McCartney. Like David, the former University of Colorado football coach and husband has made grievous mistakes, but also like David, he has humbled himself and mended his ways as the Holy Spirit has convicted him of particular sins. While not always pretty, McCartney's story, like David's, is ultimately about growing obedience and big flaws redeemed by a radical, even heroic, faith.

breaking point. To cope, she rarely left the bedroom of their home in Boulder, Colorado. There she contemplated taking her own life. For more than seven months she vomited every day, losing 80 pounds. McCartney, busy with football and with managing the burgeoning Promise

McCartney uprooted his nine-month-pregnant wife without consulting her when a better coaching position became available—and then left her for a weekend of hunting with his newfound coaching buddies an hour after they had arrived at their new home. A year after that, he interpreted a phone call about another coaching job as God's direction that it was time to move again. The call came just minutes after he'd returned to his pregnant wife and eight-month-old son from a weekend away from home. McCartney had the family in the car headed for his new job within 20 minutes.

Lyndi claims she wasn't bothered by Bill's lack of attention during their 30-year marriage "most of the time." And she stayed reasonably happy with her responsibilities as a mother of four "most of the time." But she also admits that they lived separate lives. As her husband soared to the pinnacle of his career, "I just felt like I was getting smaller and smaller and smaller," she recalls.

The recent renewal within the McCartneys' marriage to a large degree has been about Lyndi recovering her voice and regaining a sense of who she is. Describing herself as "bolder, stronger, and not nearly so intimidated as I once was," Lyndi says she "needed to be heard" by Bill. "I feel like I'm even recovering my personality, which had kind of disappeared too," she notes.

For his part, Bill says he is learning to listen to Lyndi. The result has been "sweeter and sweeter harmony" between them, he claims. To fulfill what he sees as his God-given responsibility to bring Lyndi "to splendor," Bill now budgets his time "to give the Lord and my wife top priority."

God's drunken zealot

McCartney has never done anything halfway. Raised in a blue-collar Michigan family that was sold out to all things Irish, Catholic, Democrat, and Marine Corps, McCartney says lukewarmness or indifference were "foreign concepts" to him. He distinguished himself early not only for his athletic abilities but also for his knowledge of sports. As a young boy, he also had an "insatiable zeal to know God," which translated into a disciplined commitment to the Catholic church. "I attended mass every day," McCartney remembers. "I literally went ten years without missing daily Communion."

Sold Out describes early manifestations of McCartney's religious fervor. As a seven-year-old at a Catholic school Christ-

Lyndi and Bill McCartney

Through Lyndi's eyes

Sold Out is presented as McCartney's story, but the book also contains nine sections written by Lyndi. They provide a good window into McCartney's spiritual journey, and they helped him write a book that was "closer to the truth," he says. Lyndi reveals the monumental price she paid as McCartney's "trophy wife," a woman who for years stood on the sidelines while McCartney coached the University of Colorado's football team to a national championship. They also help underscore what brought their never-great marriage to a crisis in 1993, when Lyndi says she found herself in "an emotional deep-freeze."

That year began in soap-opera fashion when, on New Year's Day, Bill came clean to Lyndi about an affair he had had with another woman two decades earlier in their marriage. That confession, which the McCartneys chose not to put in the book but which was reported by the New York Times last fall, left Lyndi devastated. At the time, McCartney was at the pinnacle of his coaching career and riding high with PK involvements. In a manner typical of the way McCartney operated at the time, he confessed his adultery just moments before walking out the door to coach a Fiesta Bowl game.

In the months that followed, Lyndi's emotional and physical health reached the Keepers movement, remained oblivious.

"I thought she was just exercising discipline," McCartney told the New York Times. "I saw her losing weight, but I didn't see it as a bad thing. You know how ladies are concerned about the pounds. I saw that she was losing weight, and I was proud of her."

While Lyndi had no intention of leaving her marriage, she says she began building "emotional siege walls" between herself and Bill. "The Lord was the only one I felt I could trust."

The daughter of a southern California screenwriter father, she says her childhood dreams were "to sing, to dance, to act, to write." Her home was a place where the arts were emphasized and celebrities were entertained. "The glitz, glitter, and romance of Hollywood greatly influenced my life," she says. "I believed in 'happily ever afters.'"

While a student at Stephens College, a prestigious women's school in Columbia, Missouri, she met Bill, a football player for the University of Missouri. They married when Bill was 22 years old and Lyndi only 19. Lyndi quickly learned that she would have to adjust to Bill's destructive drinking binges, from which he often returned drunk. She also learned she would need to adapt to the many spur-of-the-moment, unilateral decisions he made.

For example, early in the marriage,

Up from the Ashes?

With $4 million in donations, Promise Keepers recalls its staff—for now.

The roller coaster ride known as Promise Keepers (PK) is back on top, at least for the moment, after recalling its entire staff that had been laid off fewer than three weeks earlier. Around 70 of its 345 workers had found other work before the April 16 callback.

PK seemed to have reached its zenith last October when nearly a million men gathered for the largest event ever staged in Washington, D.C. (CT, Nov. 17, 1997, p. 62). Yet the announcement at the Stand in the Gap "sacred assembly of men" that PK would drop its $60 registration fee at future stadium events had an immediate impact.

Switching to donor financing plunged the Denver-based organization into a cash crunch and spurred the March 31 layoffs of its 345 full-time staff members (CT, April 6, 1998, p. 18).

Yet, the news stirred 35,000 Christians who have seen the way the ministry has transformed the lives of men. More than $4 million has come in since the layoffs were announced. Around 95 staff members volunteered during the interim. Although salaries had been cut, benefits continued throughout.

"The body of Christ responded," McCartney told CT. "Men, women, and children sent in their checks, they sent in their dollar bills, they sent in their change. Many churches have sent in a thousand dollars." The generosity has enabled PK not only to reinstate staff but to pay off all vendors and to make stadium deposits for some of this season's 19 men's gatherings.

Paul D. Nelson, president of the Evangelical Council for Financial Accountability, says PK has been cooperative in revealing financial figures.

"ECFA is watching the situation very carefully," Nelson told CT. "We've seen their internal documents, and they have maintained the ECFA seal throughout this process."

Until the recall announcement, many men had been waiting to see whether PK would be around before planning to attend a stadium rally. Freewill donations will be taken to cover each event, which costs $1 million to stage.

NO FUTURE CUSHION: McCartney, the 56-year-old retired University of Colorado football coach, took the team approach to both layoffs and rehiring. The recall took place even though PK has no assurance of meeting cash-flow demands past mid-June.

"We can't look beyond that," McCartney says. "But we felt the way that people are responding we had to call our staff back. And, even though we had anticipated it would be longer, we couldn't deny God's generosity in good faith to our staff, some of whom were really struggling."

McCartney is relying on the donations to keep the operation afloat. "It's God's plan to ask the body to do this together," he says. "If each church gives a thousand dollars, we'll be in business." So far, according to PK public affairs director Steve Ruppe, 1,500 congregations have given $1,000 or more.

But PK is relying on more than one-time gifts. Last year, the organization started a "covenant partners" program that has been growing steadily. Currently, 40,000 partners are donating an average of $200,000 a month, Ruppe says. In addition, PK receives a cut of the sale of every PK devotional, hat, and T-shirt sold. Promise Keepers has a $48 million budget this year, compared to $112 million in 1997.

Campus Crusade for Christ founder Bill Bright has been the chief PK cheerleader. His letters to pastors and lay leaders raised more than $500,000 "to help our brothers in their time of crisis."

Smaller parachurch ministries have also jumped on the bandwagon. During a two-day radio broadcast, FamilyLife Ministry in Little Rock, Arkansas—where PK will rally on May 22–23 for the first time—spurred listeners to send in $50,000 to Promise Keepers.

Children whose fathers have attended PK events have also eased the financial crisis. "We received letters saying, My daddy's never been the same, and the kid sends in a quarter," McCartney says.

NOW WHAT? During the next two years, PK will focus on stadium events. This year, 10 of the 19 gatherings will be in new locales, including several midsize cities such as Columbia, Missouri; Grand Rapids, Michigan; and Tucson, Arizona. The season's kickoff event, May 15–16 in the Silverdome in Pontiac, Michigan, is expected to draw 50,000.

Stadium meetings are not on the agenda after 1999. McCartney believes PK has accomplished much of what God intended, including racial reconciliation, marriage restoration, healing of denominational rifts, and pastor encouragement. On January 1, 2000, PK is planning assemblies at every U.S. state capitol. Afterwards, the outreach will be global. "We're going to hand off the baton to the various ministries in churches, and we're trusting God to duplicate what he's doing with men in this nation around the world," McCartney says.

McCartney is certain the new financial plan will succeed. "God has never removed the anointing," he says. "He's showing up every time we invite him."

According to ECFA's Nelson, any Christian organization must combine prudent decision making with faith. "Ministries can only make payroll as long as God's people provide the means," Nelson says. "Promise Keepers has demonstrated that they're not afraid to take risk or be unconventional. They have demonstrated a track record of accomplishment."

By John W. Kennedy.

On top of the world: McCartney at Stand in the Gap.

The Coach's Burden

Sold Out:
Becoming Man
Enough to Make a Difference, by Bill McCartney with David Halbrook (Word Publishing,
 1997, 370 pp.;
 $19.99, hardcover).
Used with permission.

The first-ever Promise Keepers conference was held in Boulder, Colorado, on July 31, 1991. Toward the end of that program, as I casually gazed out on the crowd, my eye caught something. The crowd was almost entirely white. I knew the Holy Spirit was prompting me. As we were about to close in prayer, I walked back up on the stage with a simple word of caution. "Men," I said, "next year at Folsom Stadium we expect a sellout. But I believe that if we fail to gather a fair representation of all God's people, God will not join us."

The elated crowd left on a wave of exhilaration that would only be multiplied in years to come. But my last remarks on the racial issue had clearly hit a raw nerve, igniting a minor firestorm of hate mail and caustic letters, chastising me: "How dare you imply God won't be there." Others stated angrily, "God did not state in Scripture, 'Go ye therefore and eradicate racism.' He said, 'Go preach the gospel to all nations.'" Many quoted the Scripture where Jesus says, "For where two or three come together in my name, there am I with them" (Matt. 18:20) to debunk my exhortation. And I understood their point. But what it really gave me was a first glimpse of the seething giant of racism lurking within the Christian church.

I never backed off my original statement. As I have since learned, Matthew 18:20 probes deeper into the heart and character of his church than most want to believe. God requires more than mere proximity, numbers, and verbal assent. God knows whether or not his children are truly joined in wholehearted purity and oneness of spirit.

Shortly after Promise Keepers' first stadium conference of 22,000 men in 1992—again, a mostly white audience—a much heavier burden for this racial issue fell upon me. I had begun to see many of the subtle ways our culture inflicts pain, shame, and lack of opportunity on the minority communities in our midst. And it horrified me to see this dynamic thriving in the church as well.

With the help of Christian broadcaster James Dobson, I began scheduling speaking engagements at churches across the country, delivering a controversial message on racial reconciliation. I'd show up to churches filled with men eager to hear about the mas party in Trenton, Michigan, he began to beseech God when he learned that a new wallet would be included in a grab bag of gifts for the children. When his turn came, he reached into the bag with his eyes obediently closed and promised God he would do anything for him if he would just allow him to pull out the wallet. When he did, young Bill began to reason, "If I could call on God for something like a five dollar wallet, what else could I pray for?"

"It confirmed everything I'd been hearing in catechism and already strongly suspected: There really is a God," McCartney remembers thinking. "He really does love me. I could actually talk to the God of the universe and expect him to hear."

By the time he entered college, his zeal had grown dogmatic. McCartney once warned his college roommate—the son of a Protestant minister—that "he was going to hell because he was not Catholic." During a summer break of corresponding with Lyndi, his girlfriend, he carefully printed the initials JMJ on the top of each letter. Standing for Jesus, Mary, and Joseph, the insignia was one that McCartney had been using faithfully since his Catholic grade-school days.

An even more telling example of McCartney's spiritual disposition occurred at a sorority party his senior year. He was drinking beer with other jocks when, from across the room, he overheard Lyndi, his new girlfriend, casually use God's name in vain. "Using God's name in vain at all, much less around my teammates, for heaven's sake, was like committing the unpardonable sin," he writes. "Never mind that I was obnoxiously ignoring my own drunken stupor. I clamped down on her innocent slip with all the irrational fury of a pit bull. I exploded. To her shock, I turned mean and berated her for her careless blasphemy."

Lyndi tried to apologize, but McCartney hustled her out to the car and drove her recklessly to her dorm. Arriving in a drunken fury, he skidded into the side of an occupied police car parked there. Before a crowd of Lyndi's dormmates who had heard the crash, McCartney boisterously resisted the arresting officer. Even when handcuffed, McCartney wrestled free just long enough to return to Lyndi, hug her as best he could, and announce loudly, "Oh Lyndi, I love you!"

The incident cost him his football scholarship, but not his girlfriend, who had been dreaming of the day McCartney would express his love for her for the first time—even if not quite in this manner. In Sold Out, Lyndi wryly observes that "Bill first told me he loved me while he was handcuffed to a police officer. . . . The next time he told me he loved me, he got my name wrong. He used his old girlfriend's name. That was perhaps my first clue that Bill was a paradox."

Bill remained a paradox to her in marriage. He rose quickly through high-school coaching positions to more lucrative college contracts—all the while giving Lyndi and the four children less and less time. But even as he put in 16-hour days six days a week and continued drinking compulsively during the noncoaching season, he remained passionate in his desire to serve God. Often he would rise at four or five in the morning and go to early mass to confess his drunkenness and other sins from the day before.

"Society told me I was doing the right thing," McCartney says about his long work hours. "I got compensated com-marvelous move of God called Promise Keepers—and I'd begin to share. I spoke from my experience as a football coach, recognizing in my players' faces a conditioned resignation toward cultural injustice; I tried to explain how a subtle spirit of white superiority has unwittingly alienated and wounded our brothers and sisters within the church, and how the ten o'clock hour on Sunday morning is the country's most segregated hour of the week.

Drawing from Scripture, I tried to show how we must shake off the dust of complacency to pursue intentional relationships with our precious brothers and sisters. I even demonstrated biblically where God lifted up an ambassador of reconciliation in King David, who assumed generational responsibility for crimes and injustices committed against the Gibeonites that he did not personally commit (see 2 Sam. 21).

But always when I finished there was no response—nothing. No applause. No smiles. Everyone instead looked crestfallen. In city after city, in church after church, it was the same story—wild enthusiasm while I was being introduced, followed by a morguelike chill as I stepped away from the microphone. I repeatedly returned to my prayer room shaken and dejected. “Am I hearing you, Lord?” I asked. “Is this really the message you want me to share?” And every time he would impress on me, “Just be faithful.”

As my speaking tour came to a close, I had an engagement at a church in Portland, Oregon. My message ended to the usual wall of silence. Yet before I could leave the podium, a black speaker at the back of the stage stood up. As he got closer, I could see the tears in his eyes. He approached the podium. After a long delay, in a broken voice, he finally said, “I never thought . . . that in my lifetime . . . I'd ever hear a white man say . . . what this man has said.” He paused to compose himself. The church was stone silent. In a tone that broke my heart, he concluded: “Maybe there is hope.”

To this day, the racial message remains a highly charged element of Promise Keepers' ministry. Recent correspondence told us that, of the 1996 conference participants who had a complaint, nearly 40 percent reacted negatively to the reconciliation theme. I personally believe it was a major factor in the significant falloff in PK's 1997 attendance—it is simply a hard teaching for many.

In the past two years, I have held meetings with ethnic pastors in over 60 U.S. cities. Everywhere I go, pastors of color are profoundly encouraged, eagerly waiting to see good intentions put into action, while some among the white clergy remain aloof. Even within Promise Keepers, there has been pressure to de-emphasize or soften the racial message. But we hold firm. We press on, taking our cue from ethnic brothers and sisters who, for the first time, are expressing hope of seeing these racial walls fall once and for all.

That hate mail really gave me a first glimpse of the seething giant of racism lurking within the Christian church.

mensurate with somebody who was doing something important. In reality [coaching] had stolen the first place in my life from what should have been there, what I thought was there, and what I told people was there.”

Promise procrastinator

To this day, people are amazed to learn that the McCartneys' marriage was flourishing even after he started Promise Keepers. It also continues to amaze the sports world that Coach McCartney abruptly resigned in December 1993, following another stellar season at the University of Colorado. Both facts reflect on McCartney's spiritual pilgrimage.

When he began Promise Keepers in 1990, McCartney truly believed that his marriage and family life were fine. But, he now acknowledges, he was out of touch. If he was busy with coaching before starting Promise Keepers, he was even busier afterward. His all-or-nothing commitment to both coaching and PK, McCartney says, allowed him to camouflage the hypocrisy of his personal life. “It may sound unbelievable,” he writes, “but while Promise Keepers was spiritually inspiring to my core, my hard-charging approach to the ministry was distracting me from being, in the truest sense, a promise keeper to my own family.”

God used two events to turn McCartney around. One was a PK rally where men were told to write down the number their wives would give their marriages if rating them on a scale of one to ten. He had to admit with embarrassment to the other men on the platform that Lyndi—the wife of the founder of Promise Keepers—would probably only give their marriage a six.

Then, in the fall of 1994, a guest speaker at the Vineyard Fellowship church the McCartneys attended in Boulder pointedly stated: “If you want to know about a man's character, then look into the face of his wife. Whatever he has invested in or withheld from her will be reflected in her countenance.” That word did to McCartney what the prophet Nathan's story about the rich man's stealing a poor man's sheep did to King David. Literally turning to face his wife, McCartney saw in his wife's haunted, empty eyes his own sinful neglect staring back at him. “Escorting my wounded wife out to the church parking lot,” McCartney writes, “I began to pray about the timing of my resignation from the University of Colorado.”

“God told me . . .”

One of Bill McCartney's strengths is that he will act when he believes God has told him to do something—regardless of the consequences. Determined that rebuilding his marriage would require drastic action, in November 1994, he announced that he was retiring from coaching in order to spend time with Lyndi. To do so, he gave up the ten years remaining on his $350,000-a-year contract. Sports Illustrated called it “un-American.”

“I thought he would wind up hating me,” Lyndi says. In actuality, it marked a turning point in their marriage. “It was symbolic to me because he was giving up something he loved very much for us. He gave it up for the Lord, but it was for us, too, for our relationship.”

McCartney, who took his family from the Catholic church in 1988 to join the Boulder Valley Vineyard, speaks the language and world-view of the charismatic Vineyard fellowship of churches. For example, he writes that God drove the nail into the coffin of his football aspirations through "a word" from Randy Phillips, then president of Promise Keepers. "Mac," McCartney says Randy told him, "first of all I'm coming to you as a brother in Christ. I'm not here on my own accord. What I'm going to share with you, I truly believe is from the Lord. . . . I'm not saying you should quit coaching at Colorado. I believe the Lord would have me tell you that you're not supposed to coach anywhere next year."

McCartney continues: "I could tell Randy had heard from the Lord and had tested it long in prayer. It was new territory for me. . . . I closed my eyes for a moment and sensed the Holy Spirit's soft, calming confirmation. Then I looked Randy square in the eye. 'Phillips, I'm accepting what you've told me on faith. I receive it as a word from the Lord.'"

McCartney's slow journey out of the Catholic church had begun in 1974 when he was "born again" at a Campus Crusade for Christ event that one of his players had invited him to attend. As Christian athletes at the meeting shared their testimonies, McCartney says in his autobiography, "I suddenly understood that while I loved God, knew Jesus Christ was His Son, and certainly considered myself saved, I needed to make the simple request, 'Jesus Christ, please save me.' . . . I needed God's healing power to fight off the craving of alcohol. Instead, I was pinning my hopes on a program. A static routine. A passive ritual. What I needed was a relationship."

His conversion began to transform some areas of his life. After reading that John Wesley had fasted every Wednesday and Friday from 8 A.M. to 4 P.M., he began a similar fasting pattern, and he quit a three-pack-a-day cigarette habit. Eventually, he and his family began attending a "Spirit-filled" Catholic church.

His struggle with the bottle, however, would last off and on another 16 years, until July 1990, when he pledged himself to abstinence. It was the only approach that truly allowed him to kick the habit, Lyndi writes, since "once he took one drink, he was out of control again." As McCartney became serious about kicking his drinking habit, he "immediately, perhaps even callously, cut ties with some very good friends of ours" who drank, he recalls in Sold Out. "I didn't take into account how this might strike [Lyndi]. There was no discussion to it."

The foreword to Sold Out reveals another example of McCartney's on-a-mission-from-God outlook. Just as McCartney would consecrate his football program to Jesus Christ on the day he was hired by the University of Colorado, and just as he would hear God telling him before one important game, Do not fear, for I will go before you. . . . This battle belongs to Me!, so too the very writing of Sold Out is considered a work of great spiritual importance by all involved. In the foreword, literary agent and lawyer Sealy Yates states that "McCartney told David Halbrook [McCartney's writer] and me that it was imperative for us to diligently seek God's will regarding whether we should join with McCartney to write and publish this book . . .

McCartney's a the-buck-stops-here kind of guy with years of practice at being in charge.

because God has such a purpose for them with respect to the delivery and distribution of that book, Satan and his armies intend to do all they can to attack and defeat them and all God has for them to do in that regard." The foreword ends with a list of spiritual attacks Yates believes did indeed occur during the publishing process.

When it came to my own interview with them, Bill informs me, I was granted it on CHRISTIANITY TODAY's behalf only because the Holy Spirit had cleared my name through the publicist. Other interview requests, he lets me know, had been denied.

Ever the coach, McCartney will always remain comfortable with hierarchical structures in which he is calling the shots, taking responsibility, directing the game plan. He's a the-buck-stops-here kind of guy with years of practice at being in charge.

In Sold Out, Lyndi notes that the concept of a man "seeing his wife as a teammate is a recent revelation for Bill. You'd have to find another analogy to fit how he viewed our relationship during most of our thirty-four years of marriage. He may have seen me as a loyal cheerleader, which I was; or perhaps he saw himself as the coach and me as someone desperately trying to make his team. . . ."

She concludes cautiously: "I must admit that while the Lord is showing Bill that I am his teammate, we're still growing into this reality, little by little. I think it's hard for Bill to see himself as anything other than the coach."

McCartney says there is no turning back for him on this issue. "Now that I'm tasting and experiencing the relationship that God always intended in our marriage, it's thrilling! I mean, I think about it during the day. It's on my heart. It's not just a passing thought before I walk in the door. We've entered into that kind of really rich relationship that has the love, the respect, the unity. It's a real honoring process."

Whatever McCartney's "blindness," which he admits he still has, his childlike craving to serve God and his willingness to be corrected set McCartney apart from lukewarm Christians. Describing himself as "theologically unbending," McCartney recognizes that his passionate pursuit of his life goals—spiritual and otherwise—has not made him popular with some Christians. "There are many who are within the Kingdom family who are ashamed of me," he writes. "They want to apologize for me. They want to disassociate from me."

This is a man who, in 1996, in preparation for a PK pastors conference, fasted 40 days, dropping from 206 to 184 pounds. On day 39, he writes, God "told me specifically why He had called me to such an extensive fast. Reading John 4:34, in which Jesus says, 'My food is to do the will of him who sent me,' I suddenly knew. That's it! . . . He awoke me to the fact that my food, my sustenance, literally, is to do His will. That's where the power lies in a Christian's life. Do His will." Like Sonny Dewey, that engaging Pentecostal evangelist portrayed in Robert Duvall's The Apostle, McCartney's evangelistic zeal in the present is still haunted by the sins and excesses of the past. As McCartney well knows, "sold-outness" to a goal can quickly become a drivenness that all but destroys those caught in its wake. "A thin line separates 'sold out' from 'sell out,'" McCartney concludes in his autobiography. But that does not diminish the urgency he feels to make God's will his sustenance. And indeed, as he puts John 4:34 into practice—especially the part about remembering where true power lies—it's enough to make McCartney a man after God's own heart.

Phyllis Alsdurf is a doctoral student in journalism and mass communication at the University of Minnesota.

Last Minute Budget Programs Don't Work Any Better Than The Sermon You Wrote On Saturday Night.

You know it's coming. So don't do to your annual stewardship drive what you wouldn't do to a sermon. This year, plan ahead to guide your congregation in the privilege of giving. RSI gives you three self-led programs to choose from — each one unique, prepackaged, proven, with detailed instructions . . . everything you need to conduct a successful annual budget campaign.

Call RSI today to order your manual, and mark one big project off your list. You can use the extra time to polish your close.

RESOURCE SERVICES, INC.

12770 Merit Drive, Suite 900

Dallas, Texas 75251

800-527-6824

www.rsi-ketchum.com

NONE

How Mississippi's Bible Belt

DARE

succumbed so quickly

CALL IT

and so completely

SIN

to the gambling industry.

Not long ago, gambling was illegal almost everywhere. In those days, America sent gamblers into the desert to pursue their dissolution. Las Vegas—"Sin City"—existed like a disease under quarantine, separated from the commonwealth by hundreds of miles of arid wilderness. If you went to Las Vegas, you didn't tell your mother; you didn't take the kids.

But not today. Without much fuss, Vegas has come near to us all. You can legally gamble in 48 states of the Union. Gambling has become normal, like the sale of beer at Safeway. Casinos offer childcare.

Nowhere is this transformation more obvious, nor more surprising, than in poor, conservative, Bible Belt Mississippi, which now trails only Nevada in square feet of casino gambling space. In five years, Mississippi has grown 30 thriving casinos producing nearly $2 billion annual gambling losses. These losses are, of course, the casinos' gain, and the government's, for gambling operations are taxed by state and local authorities there at a 12 percent rate.

A deep strangeness

I began my tour of gambling in Mississippi at its southernmost part. As I followed State Highway 49 toward the Gulf of Mexico, billboards advertising games of chance slowly proliferated in the piney woods, until I reached Gulfport and saw my first Deep South casino. Downtown Gulfport looks beat-up and gray, with plenty of vacant storefronts and pawn shops. But on the waterfront gleam the Copa Casino—a converted cruise ship—and the glittering Grand Casino Gulfport, both seemingly lowered from a spaceship.

Mississippi's Gaming Control Act states that Gulf Coast casinos must be floating in the gulf waters. The Grand Casino sits on a barge so vast it is unthinkable that even a tidal wave could rock it. It has its own landside parking garage, its own 400-room hotel. You can walk upstairs and down on the gambling barge, from one mirrored wall to another, with only a vague sense that there is any world outside. The decor is gaudy and bright: patterned carpets, fountains of multi-colored lights, mirrored walls and ceilings. The electronic bells of slot machines make hypnotic background music against the harsher rhythm of large tokens dashing into metal trays—the sound, literally, of money poured out.

I had forgotten the deep strangeness of the casino environment. Whether I visited Mississippi casinos late at night or at 9:00 in the morning, I always found plenty of people, black and white, old and young, male and female, dressed in sweatshirts and jeans and pantsuits—a Kmart crowd. Most play the slots. They sit holding plastic drink cups full of quarters, smoking, drinking, patiently tending the simple machines that roll ahead every ten seconds to inform them whether they have won or lost money. The atmosphere is surprisingly chaste. No cocktail waitresses approach in skimpy costumes. Clean and bright childcare facilities are available. Even when a slot machine is slamming out a reward, no excitement is visible—no whooping or hollering, no hugging or high fives. You would not readily imagine that this is entertainment. It has more the flavor of an assembly line.

And yet, the people are there, spending (losing) large amounts of money. They come from throughout the South—Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Texas, Louisiana, Tennessee, and Arkansas, to judge by the license plates in the parking lot. About a third of the gamblers are Mississippians, according to the casinos.

I crossed to the other side of the street in the morning, to the sober red brick of First Baptist Church. Pastor Kiely Young met me in worn cowboy boots. He told me he had fought hard against the casinos. "Unfortunately," he said, "our projections of negative impact have been fulfilled." The church's benevolence ministry—handouts and help to needy people—has tripled since the casinos arrived in 1992. One prominent church member recently made the front page of the local paper. He lost his law practice, his family, and his place in the community to gambling and drink he couldn't control. Young told me of another high roller who was met at the airport by a casino limousine. After he had lost everything—and since the casinos offer ATMs, and credit card advance losses can be much more than what you carry in your wallet—the same limo drove him to the Salvation Army.

The sirens of vice: Gulfport's neon-anointed Grand Casino.

Spectacular flops make the Mississippi newspapers—like the three children under five years old who, left in the parking lot while their parents played the slots, set the family car on fire and almost killed themselves. Or the elementary school teacher arrested for embezzling $1,800 in Adopt-a-School funds to feed her gambling habit. Or the father of two, over $100,000 in debt to a casino, who killed himself after losing the last $40 in his wallet. I found plenty of such stories in back issues of the newspapers, and I heard more from the pastors I visited. Pastors feel the burden of increased social dysfunctions—more marriage counseling, more people hitting the church office for financial help. Yet they almost visibly shrugged when I asked what the church can do about it. Gambling has come to Mississippi for good, they say, and the only role they see for themselves is picking up the pieces.

That's partly because of the enabling legislation. Mississippi's law allows individual counties along the Mississippi River and the Gulf Coast to vote on whether they want gambling. The catch is that if citizens vote no, gambling proponents can call for another election a year later—and keep calling them forever. (Recently, the "waiting period" has been lengthened for some counties.) If citizens vote yes, however, gambling is legalized forever. There's no way to reverse the choice.

Even if there were, it's very unlikely Gulfport and their near neighbors in Biloxi would do it. They love the money. "That's what put us on the map," Pastor Young said. "That's what stabilized the economy."

Thousands of new jobs have been created. Real estate prices are soaring. Housing subdivisions and huge hotels are under construction. Championship golf courses are in the making, causing people to hope the Mississippi coast might become a destination resort.

The casinos bring in name entertainers. Casinos offer attractive and inexpensive restaurants (I don't know how many people told me that you can get steak and lobster for $5.99) and burnish an image of Mississippi as a smart and savvy place.

Memphis magazine put it this way: "Mississippi lawmakers, regulators, and casino operators made decisions that were smarter, bolder, and ultimately more profitable than competitors' . . . The skeptics who said 'the nation's fiftieth state' was too small, too conservative, too religious, too isolated . . . were wrong."

It is not lost on Mississippians—even Mississippi Baptists—that people in a big place like Memphis now admire their smarts, perhaps for the first time in history.

It remains to be seen whether the economic development has a wide impact. Casinos hire a lot of barmaids, but most of the jobs don't have a strong career path. Will the boom keep going, transforming the region, or will it leave a poor community with some gaudy casinos on its margins? The lessons of Atlantic City would favor the latter; Las Vegas, the former.

So far the beach strip shows few signs of renovation—it's still dominated by curio and T-shirt stores, aging motels, and graceful old homes. One of those homes is Beauvoir, the last home of Jefferson Davis, president of the Confederacy. I stopped to tour the well-preserved house, and strolled a sandy path to an old oak tree where an aging Davis would sit and read his Bible. I couldn't help wondering what old Jeff Davis would think of the casinos, visible just down the beach. He led a rebellion not just to preserve slavery, but to protect the South's traditional, agrarian way of life—a world ruled by concepts of honor and nobility. That's all gone now. Money rules Mississippi.

How the legislation passed

The Southern Baptists of Mississippi wield considerable influence, and if you doubt it, you should see the large office building they own across from the state capitol in Jackson. There I met Elizabeth Holmes and Paul Jones from the Baptist Christian Action Commission. When I asked them how it happened that Bible Belt Mississippi had accepted gambling casinos, Jones recalled a lunch he had with a very confident casino executive back in 1985.

Mississippi would surely become a gambling state, the executive had predicted, for three reasons. First, Mississippi was such a poor state, "the economic argument will be heard." (The campaign to bring gambling to the Gulf Coast used the slogan, "Vote Yes for Jobs.") Second, white Christians would fail to find allies against gambling among a new breed of black leadership, who remember too well the failure of white Christians to confront racism. Third, "Mississippi is probably as good an example of cultural Christianity as we have ever seen anywhere. We'll get the businessmen, and once we've got them, we'll silence the church."

That was the year, Jones explained, that the president pro tem of the state senate was caught taking a $50,000 bribe. His arrest and imprisonment set back gambling interests for several years. Then, in 1989, Gov. Ray Mabus proposed a new educational agenda, seeking to fund it through the establishment of a lottery. Baptists and other antigambling forces fought and defeated the lottery bill. The next year, the governor called a special session of the legislature to consider again educational reform. It happened that Southern Baptists and Methodists were holding their annual meetings that week, so many pastors were out of town. When they returned home on Saturday, they learned that the legislature had established the Mississippi Gaming Commission. Two years later, in August 1992, the first casino opened its doors.

I went by the Gaming Commission, where a helpful public relations officer, Warren Strain, gave me detailed statistical information on the gambling industry and explained how the commission's oversight operates. "We're not for it and we're not against it," he stressed, "even though it does put bread on my table." Strain verified that the casino operations are at pains to show themselves clean and mob free.

I drove out to Vicksburg to visit one of the casinos built on the Mississippi River, stopping to see the Civil War battlefield on the way. The tourist slogan is, "History . . . and so much more." It appears that this means, "History . . . and gambling." Unfortunately, people who are interested in history don't much gamble, and vice versa. The town of Vicksburg looks as though it had died and someone forgot to bury the body. At the top of the famous bluff overlooking the Mississippi is the old town, with handsome spired churches and historic houses. At the bottom, on the river, is Harrah's casino, an ersatz neon riverboat. In between is an attempt to establish a street of boutique shopping, with brick sidewalks. Half the stores are empty. The riverboat no doubt brings tax money to Vicksburg, but it evidently does no more for its environment than a tire factory.

That's not necessarily an indictment, however. I tried to think how Vicksburg would be altered if the casinos became factories for some other useless product—bobble-head dolls, for instance. I'm sure Mississippi would happily accept regional leadership in bobble-head doll manufacturing. The jobs would require, presumably, about the same skill levels as do casino jobs. The main difference would be felt by the addicts. There are no problem consumers of bobble-head dolls the way there are problem gamblers. And the state, addicted to revenue, would never be able to tax a manufacturer at 12 percent of revenue.

The pornography of success

Legal gambling is not new to these United States. In the early Republic, games of chance were common (Jefferson and Washington recorded their losses at cards), and lotteries financed everything from roads to schools to churches. Corruption was so common, though, that lotteries were gradually outlawed through the early part of the nineteenth century. After the Civil War, several Southern states turned back to lotteries for revenue, and the Louisiana lottery continued to operate for decades; but cheating was legendary. A reform-minded Congress outlawed all lotteries in 1894, and gambling remained illegal everywhere for 40 years. Not until the financial desperation of the 1930s did Nevada begin its experiment. New Hampshire waited until the 1960s to lead the states back to lotteries.

Most Protestants have viewed gambling as inherently problematic, if not sinful (in point of fact, a lot of Christians Catholics particularly—never have seen gambling as sin). Gambling may be entertainment, but it is not wholesome entertainment—it depends on lust as surely as does pornography. Gambling appeals to people's fantasies that they can get something for nothing. It is the pornography of success, undermining that important element of character known as the work ethic—the conviction that all people need to work persistently at productive tasks.

The vast majority of people can "handle it," as the gambling industry is quick to point out, but gambling does cause persistent social problems. Poor people tend to gamble away larger percentages of their income, so it's a "tax" on those who can't afford it. A recent study found that the poorest of Mississippians—those making less than $10,000 a year—spend more than 10 percent of their income on gambling if they live in a county where it's legal. Most troubling of all, a certain percentage of people—estimates run from 1.5 to 6.5 percent—can't control their gambling, and these "problem gamblers" increase when gambling is readily available. Problem gamblers become the embezzlers, bank robbers, suicides, child abusers, and bankrupts you read about in the newspaper. Robert Goodman in The Luck Business estimates that each "problem gambler" costs society $13,200 a year, including bankruptcies, fraud, embezzlement, unpaid debts, and criminal justice costs. Other estimates range from $20,000 to $30,000.

America's Gambling Habit

Legal gambling has swept across the United States three times. The second wave ended shortly after the turn of the century. We are now in the middle of the third wave of legal gambling.

1909 Nevada outlaws casino gambling. By the end of 1910, virtually all gambling is outlawed in the United States.

1931 Nevada relegalizes casinos, becoming the only state with legal casino gambling. In the 1930s, 21 states bring back racetracks; low-stakes charity bingo spreads through the nation.

1940s and 1950s Almost all states change their laws to allow parimutuel betting on horses and low-stakes charity gambling.

1963 New Hampshire rediscovers the state lottery. The first drawing is held in 1964, the first legal lottery in this century. Players fill out long forms for drawings held only twice a year.

1978 First casino opens in Atlantic City, making New Jersey the second state with casinos. Total preopening cost of the first casino, Resorts International: $45.2 million; 1996 gross revenue at same casino: $224.6 million.

1985 First interstate lottery, linking the state lotteries of Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont.

1987 Cabazon case decided by U.S. Supreme Court, affirming the right of Indian tribes to self-regulate high-stakes versions of all games not prohibited by state law.

1988 February: State lotteries create first national lottery, "Lotto America." October: President Reagan signs the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act. November: South Dakota voters amend their constitution to allow low-stakes casinos in Deadwood.

1990 New York amends its parimutuel wagering law to allow off-track betting operators to accept phone-in bets from residents of other states.

1991 Picturesque, low-limit riverboat casinos open in Iowa on April 1 to nationwide television coverage. Six months later, high-limit riverboat casinos open in Illinois.

1997 By the end of this year, 25 states and three territories have legalized true casinos through statutes and tribal-state compacts. Many of these are not yet open. At least 12 state lotteries are in the quasi-casino business with video lottery terminals and keno.

A 1997 study from Mississippi State University estimated there are between 46,400 and 88,700 problem gamblers in Mississippi. If Goodman's estimates of social costs are accurate, then problem gamblers cost Mississippi at least $600 million annually—a lot more than casinos pay in taxes. However, the cost of problem gamblers is diffuse, while the taxes are money in the bank.

Really, the argument over gambling rarely reaches this level, because the rhetoric of choice sweeps every other argument away. For economic conservatives, casinos offer a pure form of capitalism: an ingenious product sold to willing buyers. Mississippi casinos promote economic development without much government involvement; they keep taxes low; and they locate only where local counties vote to invite them in. Isn't this what Newt Gingrich has been advocating—low taxes, less government, local control? The logic of the market won't let some higher authority say what products are worthwhile or restrain unwise choices by consumers. If people like to buy bobble-head dolls, let them. If they get a bigger kick out of pouring money into slot machines, that's their choice. If they blow away their rent money in the process—that's their problem, not mine.

The rhetoric of choice appeals to liberals, too, though in a different way. Liberals react against traditional moralism. Abortion, pornography, sexual behavior, saluting the flag—these they think should be a matter of choice, not public morality. (On other matters, of course, liberals can become quite moralistic.) Regarding gambling, why should the state tell people whether it's wrong? Why shouldn't people choose for themselves? Meanwhile, casinos satisfyingly integrate different ethnic groups (gambling is a great leveler) and offer jobs to poor people rather than lecturing them on their need to stay married and to avoid drugs and crime.

So both conservative and liberal impulses meet when gambling is legalized. It's probusiness yet socially liberal. Actually, you'll notice this combination on most of the social vices. Pornography, alcohol, gambling, tobacco—where would they be without corporate America? Vice makes excellent business, and businesses promote vice very efficiently. Only they don't call it vice. In America today we don't have any language to discriminate between legitimate and illegitimate business. As Warren Strain of the Mississippi Gaming Commission put it, "We're not for it and we're not against it, even though it does put bread on my table."

Mardi Gras on the Mississippi Delta

The strangest locale for gambling is Tunica County. Located in the cotton fields of the Mississippi Delta, Tunica is two-thirds black and desperately poor—on some lists, the poorest county in America. At least it was until the casinos got in.

Most of the traffic into Tunica comes by way of Memphis, a mere 30 minutes' drive. I came the other direction from Jackson, following straight, narrow highways. I don't remember seeing a new building on the entire drive. I didn't see many old buildings, either—this part of the country is relatively unpopulated. The cotton was coming in, so all along the roads, head high bricks of cotton waited to be ginned. Unpicked cotton laced the fields like an early snow. Then, through the hazy November afternoon I saw, from far off, the gleaming 30-story tower of the Lucky Strike Hotel, under construction.

There is no town nearby. Really, there is nothing nearby. The Tunica casinos don't sit on water but starkly alone on the river side of the Mississippi levee. The large, gaudy buildings are mostly built on a theme—Irish castle, Mardi Gras, Country, Hollywood, Wild West. Gamblers come from nearby Tennessee and Arkansas, though new golf courses and a 30-story hotel suggest that the casinos plan to reach out to a wider region. Already, the casinos offer more jobs than there are residents in the entire county. Welfare rolls are down, way down. Tax dollars have poured in faster than the local authorities know how to spend them. It's a stunning change for a place that hasn't seen much.

Yet the change is not uniform. I stopped in at the Baptist building in Clarksdale to talk to W. C. Johnson, the 70-year-old director of missions for Baptists in the North Delta. His threadbare office gives supplementary relief to people short on money, and they are having a banner year—more people showing up looking for help than ever before. Funds are short, Johnson said, since local Baptist offerings are down, as is church attendance. There are three pawnshops in Clarksdale where there used to be one, and two clothing stores recently went under. Johnson wanted to be fair, and he made a point to tell me that the casino money did a lot to improve roads and build new schools. The casinos, from what he hears, treat their employees with dignity and fairness. But, "These people who live in the Delta can't afford to gamble. Losing $50 for them is like $1,000 for someone else."

I asked him how pastors in the area feel about the casinos. He said that, black or white, local pastors oppose gambling, seeing the damage it does in families. They feel helpless to say much, though. "Most of them have decided that preaching is not going to work." One Baptist pastor wanted to take out an ad in the local paper, stating that his church would have nothing to do with the casinos. When he went to calculate how many families kept completely clear, however, he could come up with only a handful. He pulled the ad. Even people who don't gamble like to get a cheap meal at the casinos. "My son and his wife go a lot," Johnson said. "I asked him if he would grow a beard for my sake."

I ended my trip just over the state line in Memphis, where I visited relatives. My niece, a recent college graduate, told me that she frequently accompanies friends to Tunica for an evening of gambling. The rest of the family goes less often but consider it a lot of fun when they do. My brother-in-law, a doctor in a medical research lab, told me that his working group planned to take a bus to Tunica instead of holding a Christmas party. They had done it once before, and the feeling is strong that it was the best Christmas celebration they ever had. He theorized that people from very different social strata—doctors and lab technicians and secretaries—feel more comfortable together in a casino than they would at a party.

I thought I detected a slight uneasiness in the way they talked to me about it—as if to say, "Who would have ever imagined me enjoying a casino?" Yet it was evident that gambling had become a quite normal way for an educated, civic-minded family to have fun.

Memphis magazine reports that people in Memphis lose about $450 million annually to the Tunica casinos. According to a 1997 poll, they are split right down the middle—half visiting the casinos and half staying home, half thinking the casinos have made a positive impact and the other half considering it negative. Is there a debate going on, however? Not in the least. It's a free market, and if you don't like gambling, you don't have to go.

Most Americans don't have any moral language to talk about whether gambling is a good thing for us as a community. Commerce is the only language we hold in common, and it speaks of choice. I didn't know what to say, therefore, when my relatives told me how much they enjoyed gambling. What language could convince them that gambling is a sin?

How to Fight Gambling

Thomas Grey was pastor of a rural Methodist church in northwest Illinois when he read in the paper that a casino was applying for a boat-docking license in his county. "I naively believed," he says, "that if I went to the county board with the truth—that gambling is not economic development, that it's not a painless revenue stream, and that it's not good for the quality of life—the political leadership would agree." Instead, the board reacted defensively. Grey, in turn, reacted by starting the National Coalition Against Legalized Gambling in May 1994. CHRISTIANITY TODAY's Kevin D. Miller spoke with him about the coalition's strategy against legalized gambling.

Why do communities invite in gambling?

They don't! There is no popular grass-roots movement toward more gambling in America. It all happens through promoters meeting with politicians that are cash starved and can no longer ask the people to pay more taxes. So the government says, "Here's a painless way we can get the revenues we need." It sounds painless, but it's not. We argue that taxpayers pay even more when you bring in gambling because of the social cost. Who, after all, pays for the bankruptcies, the addictions, the crime and corruption? Where is that factored into the cost analysis?

How do your opponents answer these assertions?

They dismiss the studies we cite as anecdotal or skewed. But the statistics come from independent, nonpartisan studies. We have a whole section on our Web page documenting and summarizing these studies (<http://www.ncalg.org>). For example, there are 298 counties that have casinos, and in those counties the bankruptcy rate is on average 18.6 percent higher than in counties without casinos. A study that was just released shows that in cities like San Diego, Atlantic City, and Las Vegas, the suicide rate is four times higher than in other cities of comparable size. Other studies show that child-abuse cases, police costs, burglaries, rapes—the list goes on and on—increase dramatically when gambling enters a community. But the lure of alternative tax dollars seems to deafen the ears of our leaders to the facts. The government gets benefits while the gambling industry even gives money to churches and charities. Their goal is to silence you by compromising you.

It sounds like cigarette-industry tactics.

Absolutely, except with one major difference: With gambling, the government has compromised itself. The government can't do with gambling what it's doing to tobacco, because it's promoting gambling. Mississippi's government, for example, is tied in with gambling, which makes it very hard for people to assess the impact of gambling on their community, much less challenge it.

You're a minister. Why do you think pastors and church members haven't taken up this issue with more vigor?

I should say first that some have, to an extent. Among evangelicals, the Christian Coalition, Donald Wildmon, and Focus on the Family have jumped into the fray on the basis of "Here's a problem that's impacting families." Occasionally a denomination will pass a resolution against gambling. But politicians don't care what we say. If we want to put the fear of God in them, then we'd better begin fighting for the truth at the ballot box.

Also, many Christians are involved in gambling. Eight out of ten people gamble in some form or another, whether in a state lottery, during the Super Bowl, or on the golf course. Even many Christians who wouldn't gamble patronize casino restaurants because of the cheap meals, not realizing that by doing so they are participating in a culture that sacrifices their neighbors and their communities.

What should be the church's message on gambling?

In a pluralistic nation, the church is not in a position to dictate, "Thou shalt not gamble." But we can ask the right questions: What is social morality? What is just economics? What is good, uncorrupted government?

In a democracy, you love your neighbor by having good, uncorrupted government. So it's up to you and me to educate and to help the communities know on election day, here's the choice: good and evil! The church is missing its prophetic role on this issue. The truth is on our side, and we ought to march to the truth.

Let me add that a lot of clergy don't want to preach on this subject because they know some people in their congregation gamble. The point is, you don't have to attack them. They're already losing. Attack the casinos. Attack the public policy that's undermining them. We aren't going to win this in the sanctuary. We have to win this in the streets and in the state house.

What, besides voting against it, can individuals do to combat gambling?

In one word, organize. A fuller answer to your question, though, depends on the state and the community where gambling is being fought. That's why we began the National Coalition Against Legalized Gambling—to help local groups find the resources they need. We invite people who want to fight gambling in their community to call our number (1-800-664-2680). We will first give you a package of general information. Then, if you are calling from Tennessee, for example, we'll inform you about what's happening there and connect you with the key fighters in Tennessee.

Once it's in, can you uproot it?

Sure. A boat came into my community. Five years later, it closed. Another example: just several dedicated individuals in Arlington Heights, Illinois, took out two politicians in recent elections who were progambling. And since then, the renowned horserace track in Arlington Heights has been closed down.

Since 1994, when our coalition was formed, 35 states have said no to gambling expansion, and only five have gone further. We're witnessing a backlash against gambling, so this is not the time to stop fighting. I know our fight is a tough one, but it's ultimately about whether or not we are going to become a casino economy where we unjustly let the poor, through gambling, pay our taxes. I believe the Spirit is moving us. I believe that the waters have parted, and all we're to do is to keep moving. This is the Lord's doing at this moment in history. God has caught the bad guys out in the open, and we're Gideon's army. CT

Colombia's Bleeding Church

Despite the murders of 120 church leaders, Christians are fighting for peace in one of the world's most violent nations.

DAVID L. MILLER
in Bogotá and Medellín

This is an election month in Colombia and megachurch pastor César Castellanos is mixing religion and politics. Castellanos leads the huge International Charismatic Mission in Bogotá, an independent, Pentecostal congregation he founded in 1983 with eight people that has grown to more than 100,000 today. But Castellanos is not content merely to be pastor at Bogotá's largest evangelical church. On March 8, he became an elected member of the Colombia House of Representatives.

Public service carries considerable risk for Castellanos. Media will closely scrutinize his integrity. In a country where drug trafficking is a major industry, corruption scandals have tainted the reputations of numerous government officials, including that of President Ernesto Samper, who will relinquish the office following presidential elections on May 31. Forecasters expect 60 percent of the nation's voters to stay away from the polls that day because Colombians have come to believe that politics is powerless to solve the country's enormous problems.

Powerless or not, politics in Colombia is incredibly bloody. As happens every election year, numerous candidates campaigning for office have been assassinated. Just as the March congressional race wound down, a pitched battle ignited between the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia guerrillas (FARC) and the Colombian army for control of the southern Caquetá Province. The first three days of combat claimed the lives of 80 soldiers and a like number of guerrillas. The rebels seem to have two objectives: sabotage the electoral process and protect Caquetá's cocaine industry, which helps finance their army.

Why would César Castellanos, one of Colombia's pre-eminent religious leaders, want to get mixed up in a business so violent as Colombian politics? Precisely because of the violence. In May 1997, unidentified assailants tried to kill Castellanos and his wife, Claudia Rodríguez Castellanos, as they drove home from Sunday worship services. Castellanos suffered four bullet wounds in the chest, throat, and left arm. He spent two weeks unconscious in intensive care clinging to life. Three bullets struck Claudia Castellanos in the arm and thigh. Miraculously, their four daughters and two of their nephews traveling in the car with them escaped injury. The would-be killers escaped without a trace.

Investigators initially thought the terrorists' primary target had been Claudia Castellanos, who served in the Colombian Senate from 1992 to 1994

MAP BY JUNE GUNAWAN

Ongoing violence: Relatives and friends weep while lowering the coffin of former town council member Genaro Saenz into a grave in Puerto Asis in Putumayo Province in February. Right-wing paramilitary gangs are blamed for the killing and hundreds like it.

and had announced her intention to run again. They later concluded that the attack had no political overtones. It did, however, motivate César Castellanos to seek election himself.

"The assassination attempt led me to do some reflection, and I decided to enter government," Castellanos told CHRISTIANITY TODAY in Bogotá. "Despite the violence in Colombia, we know God has raised up the Christian faith to stop these invisible, almost demonic forces. For that reason we are working on all fronts—the spiritual, social, and political—to influence the coming of peace to our nation."

FACELESS VIOLENCE: Like César Castellanos, every Christian minister in Colombia faces risk. Since 1995, at least 21 evangelical pastors and more than 100 congregational leaders have been murdered. The homicide rate in this nation of 36 million is 15 times greater than that of the United States. Murder is so common it seldom makes the news. Crime studies reveal that more than half of the homicides go unreported, and only 3 percent are ever prosecuted. Eighty percent of the population, in fact, have no proper police protection or access to courts of law.

A comparison between Colombia and neighboring Peru, which suffered through the Shining Path terrorist war a decade ago, reveals a dramatic picture. The Shining Path uprising, one of the bloodiest in South America in this century, claimed an estimated 30,000 lives during a 15-year period. However, nearly that many people—28,000—died violently in Colombia last year alone.

Political violence has increased markedly during the Samper administration, which began in August 1994. Insurgents have exploited the president's low approval rating, the product of allegations that Samper is in the pay of the drug cartels, to escalate their war against the state. In turn, wealthy ranchers and industrialists have countered the leftist challenge by financing paramilitary units, which are private militias to protect their land and commercial interests.

REFUGEES FLEE: The undeclared civil war has engulfed large areas of the country, from Caquetá and Putumayo in the south, to Urabá and Medio Magdalena in the north. The U.S. Committee for Refugees and Amnesty International report that 1 million refugees have fled their homes.

Refugees include two large, U.S.-based evangelical missions. A rash of abductions and the tragic deaths of two missionaries in 1995 (CT, July 17, 1995, p. 60) forced New Tribes Mission (NTM) to withdraw all personnel and mission school students from its base in Villavicencio. FARC guerrillas in Colombia are believed to have abducted three NTM missionaries more than five years ago (CT, March 8, 1993, p. 68) who have not been found. In 1996, because of increased kidnapping and bomb threats (CT, July 15, 1996, p. 65), directors of Wycliffe Bible Translators made the agonizing decision to close its linguistic center in Loma Linda, where missionaries had labored since 1964 to provide the New Testament in tribal languages.

The vast majority of the exiles are peasant farmers or unskilled workers caught between the warring factions. To battle clandestine armies such as the FARC, the government's military strategists employ the practice of territorial "cleansing." Field commanders order civilian populations to abandon areas where guerrillas are known to operate, destroying the homes and crops of those who fail to comply. The tactic aims to deprive the rebels of foodstuffs, hiding places, and recruits.

Bold faith: Claudia and César Castellanos.

However, the heavy-handed abuse has turned many Colombians against the armed forces. Some become guerrilla collaborators out of self-defense. But joining a rebel movement is an unsatisfactory option. FARC cadres use peasants as political shock troops, obligating them to march in public demonstrations, stage squatter invasions of private lands, and otherwise place themselves in harm's way. Defectors from rebel ranks typically end up dead.

As the ruthless conflict escalates, so do the activities of paramilitary "death squads," which have taken up the task of controlling civilian populations through intimidation. Their signature tactic is making guerrilla sympathizers vanish, later dumping the victim's mutilated body to be discovered by family or neighbors. The message is clear: to avoid a similar fate, clear out now. Samper has repeatedly condemned paramilitary squads and ordered army commanders to dismantle them. According to Amnesty International, however, their numbers have increased markedly during his administration.

Although they tend to grab headlines, direct clashes involving the army, paramilitaries, and guerrillas account for only 5 percent of violent deaths each year in Colombia, according to research by the independent Ser Institute. The warring factions seldom attack one another directly, preferring instead to inflict harm on civilian surrogates.

The drug war also grabs headlines, especially in the international press. Yet cartel mischief accounts for only 10 percent of homicides in Colombia—which is more than 90 percent Catholic—according to researchers. About 85 percent of murders fall under the category of crimes committed by unknown assassins for indiscernible reasons.

PASTORS MURDERED: Many victims of faceless violence die of mere suspicion.

That is the case in Urabá, a region of vast banana plantations and peasant farms where guerrilla bands and paramilitary groups vie for power. It is also an area where Protestant churches are experiencing rapid growth. But the social upheaval puts innocent Christians at mortal risk.

In recent years, the Association of Evangelical Churches of the Caribbean (AIEC), a denomination affiliated with the Latin America Mission, has lost pastors and lay leaders in Urabá. One evening in March 1995, a paramilitary band gunned down Hugo Rangell at his dinner table. They suspected Rangell, a member of the Nuevo Damasco AIEC church, of being a guerrilla sympathizer because they tracked a stolen cow to his pasture field. On another night, a death squad entered the home of Moisés Aleán, pastor of the AIEC congregation in Volcancito, and murdered Aleán, his wife, and four children. The family apparently died because they, too, had been suspected of collaborating with guerrillas. Following the massacre, Aleán's entire congregation fled Volcancito, concluding that their pastor's assassins soon would be coming after the rest of them.

SUCCESS CAN BE FATAL: In other cases, a church leader's success, not suspicions of collaboration, places him at grave risk. Manuel Amador resigned as pastor of the Foursquare Gospel Church in Chigorodo to devote himself to itinerant evangelism. An energetic preacher, Amador attracted large audiences. He also attracted the attention of an armed faction that decided Amador commanded so large a following that it threatened their control. In May 1996, guerrillas or paramilitaries—it is still unclear—assassinated him.

Seeking peace: Clockwise from top left, Tirana, Esquivia, Payares, and Gregory are working for a safer Colombia.

One Sunday afternoon in June 1995, Jesús Argelio prepared for the evening service at the Foursquare Church in Apartado when two men appeared at his front door. Argelio answered the knock, and the duo shot him in the head, killing him instantly. The assailants had heard about Argelio's bold preaching and concluded he was an enemy of the people who must be eliminated.

The same fate nearly overcame Carlos Payares, a friend and fellow pastor of Argelio's, who served eight years in Urabá as district superintendent of the Inter-

American Church, a denomination pioneered by the missions agency OMS International. Parishioners urged Payares to flee Apartado because they learned he was the target of an assassination plot. Meanwhile, they contacted the group planning his murder and convinced them Payares should be allowed to live.

"The problem is the armed groups think the church is an opponent that could upset their plans," Payares says. "They attack the church because they see it as a dangerous enemy."

When church members do not participate in the violence, they are persecuted because they appear to be on the opposing side, Payares says. "But the church is not on the side of either the rich or the insurgents," he says. "It's only practicing the principles of the Lord."

"The spirit that operates in the 'paras' and the guerrillas is the same," Bible college student Alexander Puerta told CT. "We never ask favors of either of them. It's like asking a favor of the Devil." Puerta is nearly blind as a result of an attack by guerrillas at a banana plantation in 1995. The massacre left 25 dead. Only Puerta, an elderly woman, and a teenage girl survived.

AWAKENING TO NEEDS: Faceless violence has created the 1 million internal exiles who have fled their homes and farms for safer havens. These families face a dismal future. More than half of displaced households are headed by single mothers whose husbands have been murdered or disappeared. Poor to begin with, they abandon all property and possessions. Often they must leave behind even their personal identities so that enemies cannot trace their whereabouts. This makes the task of settling in new communities and securing new jobs especially difficult.

In mid-1996, Jana Gregory, an attorney from Portland, Oregon, who works in Colombia with the Mennonite Central Committee, heard a prayer request at church for 250 refugees living in vacant Bogotá office buildings and went to visit them.

"Half were kids," she recalls. "They were sleeping on bare floors, most of them were sick. Some of the adults had gone back home and were killed, so the rest were afraid to return. We decided to see what kind of services we could offer."

Gregory and other volunteers from the Teu Saquillo Mennonite Church organized twice-weekly visits to play with the children and tutor them. Hairdressers gave free haircuts, dentists worked on teeth. The whole population received free treatments for intestinal parasites. After seven months in the office buildings, the government resettled the refugees in another part of the country. Gregory's Presbyterian congregation in Portland and the Mennonite Central Committee of Colombia supplied the refugees with seed money for livestock and farm implements.

This is but one example of the evangelical community in Colombia awakening to needs of violence victims. Guillermo Tirana, pastor of the Trinity Baptist Church in Bogotá and president of the Evangelical Confederation of Colombia (CEDECOL), told CT that the crisis has prompted unprecedented, interdenominational cooperation.

"Heavy blows make us sensitive," he says. "Everywhere that people are caught in the violence, they are asking for help. That has motivated us to take action."

Since assuming leadership of CEDECOL in 1995, Tirana has involved the organization in relief efforts on behalf of displaced persons. Bogotá churches have donated food, clothing, and money as never before. "The evangelical community in its totality is agreed that we must do this for displaced persons," Tirana says.

CEDECOL also formed the Commission on Human Rights and Peace in 1995 to aid persons suffering from violence, naming Bogotá attorney Ricardo Esquivia as director.

"Thirty pastors from every part of the country are serving on the commission," Esquivia says. "People are beginning to give attention to the suffering church."

The commission sponsors training events such as the workshop on community peacemaking and conflict resolution conducted in February in Medellín. Instructors from a wide denominational spectrum led discussions on a variety of topics. Harold Segura, rector of the Baptist Seminary in Cali, presented a biblical theology of peace. Pablo Moreno, also from the Cali faculty, sketched the historical experience of the church in violent contexts.

"The object [of the training] is for commission members to reproduce themselves in their respective regions," Esquivia says. "All of these churches have suffered blows. What we are trying to do is to help people who are suffering see God moving through the churches."

TRAUMA RECOVERY: The CEDECOL commission noticed the deep psychological scars that violence inflicts upon displaced persons and is busy equipping the volunteers in its network to conduct what is called community-based, trauma recovery therapy. With a $30,000 grant from UNICEF, the commission has launched a pilot program in Urabá that it hopes to replicate in other areas of the country.

"These people have left everything—farms, animals, all their personal property, and maybe some dead family members—behind," says Gregory, who helped design the program. "We work with groups of children and women to get them to talk about the pain they've suffered, and to do that in the context of the Christian faith. When a mother sees there's value in talking through fears with her kids and offering them reassurance, then she can spread that through the family and, hopefully, beyond."

Tensions in Colombia have reached such a pitch that even the CEDECOL project, altruistic as it is, faces risk. UNICEF officials coach evangelical volunteers to alert local army commanders about their activities, lest they be mistaken for leftist organizers. The term displaced person does not appear in the commission's public announcements, because it arouses political passions. Volunteers must carefully monitor who attends their meetings and not allow photographs, because death squad operatives infiltrate such groups to identify future victims. And every Christian who works with the Commission for Peace faces the sobering reality that, every year, scores of relief workers and human-rights defenders are slain in Colombia.

Esquivia is aware of the risk and accepts it as part of the task. "There are cases in which we might be helping somebody who's from the guerrillas or the paramilitaries, but we don't do background checks on anybody before we help them," he says. "It's enough that they are suffering. Everyone is a human being, and God asks us to work with everyone."

Tirana agrees. "Most things are risky, especially if we're talking about doing things that are really worthwhile," he says.

FRONTLINE OUTREACH: Besides risk, evangelicals have faced criticism for their peacemaking effort. The most oft-repeated is that their initiative is too little, too late. The Protestant church, estimated at between 3.5 million and 7 million, is now a sizable segment of Colombia's 37 million people.

Jack Voelkel, chair of the Missions Department of Biblical Seminary of Colombia in Medellín, does not share that assessment. "It's always difficult for evangelicals to develop efficient organizations, even in the States, where we have so many resources," he says. "This is difficult in any situation, but particularly in Colombia where the institutions are young and pastors struggle to survive."

Rising violence has prompted Colombian Protestants to respond to another challenge: assuming responsibility for evangelizing the country's native Amerindian peoples, many of whom live in areas under guerrilla control. Three years ago, a consortium of evangelical churches formed a national mission society known as Misincol. Wycliffe missionary Fernando Larzabal has been working with the agency to develop a corps of Colombian Bible translators. Wycliffe Bible Translators hopes to equip them with the linguistic skills necessary to carry on the daunting task of translating the New Testament into the 80 native dialects found within the country.

According to Larzabal, that objective acquired new urgency in 1996, when Wycliffe pulled its missionaries out of their base in Loma Linda. "The fact that we were forced out of Loma Linda placed us in greater contact with the Colombia church," he says. "At the same time, Colombian nationals were saying, 'We cannot avoid our responsibility in reaching the indigenous peoples, but we need you to teach us.'"

The cooperative spirit emerging in the evangelical community poses a poignant question: Would the Protestant churches have forged this interdenominational harmony in a more peaceful climate? Probably not. Some church leaders speculate that violence has even played a part in the phenomenal growth the Colombian church is experiencing.

The first missionary came to the Aburrá valley, which includes Medellín and outlying communities, in 1889. "By 1970, there were only 500 baptized evangelicals in this whole valley, out of about 3 million people," Voelkel says. "Now there are 15,000 to 20,000 evangelicals here. Violence has undoubtedly stimulated people to be concerned about eternal things and, therefore, more open to the gospel of hope."

For his part, Guillermo Tirana sees an open door for effective work in Colombia. "This is the moment the Lord is using for people to find his way," he says. "There is a very real commitment to spread the gospel. Secondly, in moments of affliction, people are thirsty for God."

Leaders such as Tirana, Esquivia, and Castellanos persevere on multiple fronts—political, social, and spiritual—to bring their compatriots to Jesus. They do it because, in the final analysis, they know that this is the only real hope for bringing peace to their troubled nation. CT

Character Matters!

You know it. We know it.

We are the Conservative Book Club and for over thirty years we have been bringing you the books that affirm your beliefs, your principles, your core values. We invite you to join today by taking advantage of this no-risk offer of 3 books for just $1 each and a 4th for only $4.95.

Radical Son

The moral corruption of the Left is a fact most conservatives are aware of. But few of us understand the depths of the deceit. Because of his background as a radical leader of the 1960s, Horowitz knows where all the bodies are buried — and he tells all in his powerful memoir.

Item #4538

Retail $27.50

National Best Seller

Slouching Towards Gomorrah

Robert Bork, one of the nation's most distinguished conservative scholars, assails the unprecedented decline of morality in America, and points a finger at the culprit — modern liberalism.

Item #4427

Retail $25.00

Our Sacred Honor

Bestselling author William J. Bennett finds in the words and deeds of our nation's Founders inspiring lessons in the virtues that many of us long to see restored to our public and private lives.

Item #4729 Retail $25.00

The Secret Life of Bill Clinton

From the reporter the White House most fears — and with good reason — comes an assiduously documented exposé of the crimes that have characterized the Clinton presidency as the most corrupt in history.

Item #4756

Retail $24.95

#1 Best Seller

Unlimited Access

Former FBI Special Agent Gary Aldrich takes you inside a counter-culture White House and shows how Clinton and his cronies dismantled security protocols to allow drug users, drug dealers, gun runners and foreign campaign donors full access.

Item #4368

Retail $24.95

Women in the Military: Flirting With Disaster

Army veteran Brian Mitchell shatters stock Pentagon assurances to reveal that women have had a profoundly disruptive and negative effect on U.S. fighting capabilities.

Item #4805 Retail 24.95

Boy Clinton

Blockbuster exposé by the publisher of The American Spectator. R. Emmett Tyrell has unearthed the truth about the real Bill Clinton — including facts that have never been revealed before.

Item #4367

Retail $24.95

#1 National Best Seller

Will

#1 national bestseller now in hardcover for the first time in 15 years. The autobiography of a man who preferred prison walls to betraying his principles.

"Destined to become a classic... This is one you've absolutely got to read."
— Denver Post

Item #4589

Retail $26.95

The Theory of Moral Sentiments

This book, Adam Smith's first, is proof to skeptics of the importance of morality; and an antidote to those who think that free-market economics can be divorced from a moral society.

Item #4778

Club Exclusive $27.95

Darwin's Black Box

Biologist Michael Behe demonstrates that the complexity of even the lowest forms of life proves that life was created according to an intelligent design.

Item #4387

Retail $25.00

Nearer, My God

Explore conservatism's Christian soul in William F. Buckley's moving autobiography of faith. "The greatest conservative figure of our age relentlessly probes the ultimate question: God. And gives us a stirring, at times deeply personal defense of his Catholic faith." — Charles Colson

Item #4780

Retail $24.95

Spirit Wars

Peter Jones, professor at Westminster Seminary, ties the apparently disparate movements of feminism, homosexuality, multiculturalism, civil rights, abortion, euthanasia, mystical spirituality, and moral relativism. His basic thesis: Judeo-Christian America has become an incubator for revived paganism.

Item #4740 Retail $18.95

Vision of the Anointed

What are the consequences of a nation coerced into a mind set? Leading black conservative Thomas Sowell explains how America was brainwashed with the myth that liberals are always right and conservatives are always wrong.

Item #4215 Retail $25.00

America in Black & White

Two liberal heretics rock the civil rights establishment with "the most important book on race this decade." An unanswerable study that refutes traditional civil rights strategies and rhetoric and exposes the well-kept secrets of the liberal media.

Item #4821 Retail $32.50

The End of Sanity

Even if you're already convinced about America's moral decay, Martin Gross will open your eyes to the litany of leftist evils that now dominate American institutions, from medicine to the military, from education to the workplace.

Item #4823 Retail $24.00

In Defense of Miracles

14 distinguished evangelical scholars "...undertake the arduous task of philosophically justifying rational belief in miracles...an impressive display of the best sort of intellectual work now emerging in the evangelical world." — Brad Stetson, First Things.

Item #4764 Retail $17.99

Burden of Truth

Charles Colson shows how to confront the deceptions of the world with God's Word on topics as diverse as medical ethics, education, crime, science, pop culture, family, art, and government.

Item #4796 Retail $19.99

Character is Destiny

Russell Gough, associate professor of philosophy and ethics at Pepperdine University, "...reminds us that the hard part of morality is not knowing what is right, but doing what is right." — William Kilpatrick, the Foreword

Item #4719 Retail $18.00

The Character of Nations

The Character of Nations supplies the ammunition to discredit and defeat America's well-entrenched defenders of big government and to make the case for the liberties and values that once made us great, and can do so again.

Item #4822 Retail $27.00

The Children's Book of Heroes

Bestselling author, William Bennett captivates us with 21 stories of heroic deeds, both real and fictional, to inspire your children.

Item #4836 Retail $21.00

To Be A Man

In this enriching collection of true family values, Charlton Heston offers words of guidance and sage wisdom applicable not only to his grandson, Jack, but to all men.

Item #4718 Retail $17.95

The Book of Virtues

In a time where smut, violence, and immorality pervade the media, this inspiring collection of fables, poetry, stories, and other readings is a lesson in morality, and a must-read for our nation's families! This #1 bestseller by Ronald Reagan's Secretary of Education will provide a solid foundation of morality for you and your children!

Item #3884 Retail $30.00

The New Absolutes

William D. Watkins leads the counter-attack against the liberals by showing how the traditional absolutes on which American society was built are being supplanted by new absolutes that are personally and socially destructive.

Item #4591 Retail $19.99

Pop Culture Wars

"Pop Culture Wars is historically solid, biblically insightful and exciting to read. Romanowski gives a sharp Christian vision for understanding popular art and entertainment today without oversimplifying their seductive complexity."

— Calvin Seerveld, Institute for Christian Studies (Toronto)

Item #4766 Retail $19.99

SEND NO MONEY NOW!

YES! Please enroll me as a Preferred Member of the Conservative Book Club under the terms outlined in this ad. Send me the three books I've indicated and bill me just $3, plus shipping and handling. I then need to buy only four additional books at regularly discounted Club prices (20%-50% off retail) during the next two years. Please list book numbers in area provided on the right.

☐ YES! I WANT TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THE NEW MEMBER BONUS! Please send me a 4th selection. I understand I will be billed an additional $4.95, plus shipping and handling. I then need to buy only three more books at regular Club prices during the next two years. Please list book number under "Bonus Selection" area provided on the right.

Mr./Mrs. _____
Miss/Ms. _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip Code _____

Signature _____

Prices slightly higher in Canada. Membership subject to approval by Conservative Book Club. Allow 2-4 weeks for delivery

Fill this coupon out and mail to:

CONSERVATIVE BOOK CLUB

P.O. BOX 97196 • WASHINGTON, DC 20090-7196

Benefits of Membership and How the Club Works

INSTANT SAVINGS! Join today and get any 3 of the books pictured in this ad just $3 plus shipping and handling. Then take up to two years to buy four more books at regular low club prices (20-50% below retail) or three books over two years, if you've selected the New Member Bonus. After you have paid for your books your Membership can be ended by you or the Club. Plus you will also get opportunities to buy from our list of Superbargain books that the Club regularly offers. These books are offered at 70-90% discounts! Sorry, Superbargain books do not count toward your book commitment.

BULLETIN! Up to 15 times a year you will receive the Club Bulletin filled with the kind of books you will want to read and own. Each Bulletin will also feature a Featured Selection chosen just for Members. Also included are a number of alternate selections about politics, religion, history, home schooling, investment and other areas of interest to conservatives.

OP AT HOME CONVENIENCE! When you receive your Bulletin you will have the chance to examine many books of interest and read reviews for each. If you want to receive the Featured Selection, do nothing and it will be sent to you. If you don't want the Featured Selection or you would like an alternate selection, simply indicate your wishes on the handy card enclosed with your Bulletin and mail it before the deadline date. CBC is an easy way to build your conservative library from the comfort of your own home.

100% SATISFACTION GUARANTEED! If you are not completely satisfied with a book, return it and receive a complete credit. Plus, you will always have at least ten days to make your decision to receive the Featured Selection. If you ever have less than ten days, you simply return the book at Club price for a full credit.

membership per household please.

BOOK 1
BOOK 2
BOOK 3
BOOK 4

The Day We Were Left Behind

BARBARA BROWN TAYLOR

When Jesus had said this, as they were watching, he was lifted up, and a cloud took him out of their sight. —Acts 1:9, NRSV

On Sunday mornings, a great division takes place among American people as some go to church and most stay home. Those who stay home are not taking a week off; church is simply not part of their lives. As far as they are concerned, houses of worship are little more than pretty antiques, fussed over by wishful thinkers who do not know when to admit they are wrong and go home. It is one of the most peculiar things twentieth-century human beings can do—to come together week after week with no intention of being useful or productive, but only of facing an ornate wall to declare things they cannot prove about a God they cannot see.

Our word for it is worship, and it is hard to justify in this day and age; but those of us who do it over and over again begin to count on it. This is how we learn where we fit. This is how we locate ourselves between the past and the future, between our hopes and our fears, between the earth and the stars. This is how we learn who we are and what we are supposed to be doing: by coming together to sing and to pray, to be silent and to be still, by peering into the darkness together and telling each other what we see when we do.

We may baffle our unbelieving friends and neighbors, but it cannot be helped. Half the time we baffle ourselves, proclaiming good news when the news is so bad, trusting the light when the sky is so dark, continuing to wait on the Savior in our midst when all the evidence suggests that he packed up and left a long, long time ago.

To be theologically correct, we have been waiting on the Savior ever since the first Ascension Day, when Jesus led his disciples to a mount called Olivet just outside of Jerusalem, spoke to them for the last time, and disappeared inside a cloud for good. You can read in Acts 1:6–11 how one moment he was there with them and the next moment he was gone, his well-known hand raised in final blessing, his face grown bright and indistinct, his familiar shape vanishing into the fog like the end of a dream too good to be true—all of it slipping out of their reach until he was no longer there for them, no longer present but past, a memory that would haunt them to the end of their days.

Where he went was to heaven—which may not be up, exactly, as much as it is beyond—and what he went there to do was to finish what he had begun with us. It was not enough that through him God was born into the body of the world; that was just his Christmas gift to us. His ascension gift was that through him the body of the world was borne back to God. By presenting his own ruined, risen body to be seated at the right hand of God, Jesus imported flesh and blood into those holy precincts for the first time. He paved the way for us, so that when we arrive there later everyone will not be quite so shocked by us. He restored the goodness of creation, and ours in particular. By ascending bodily into heaven, he showed us that flesh and blood are good, not bad; that they are good enough for Jesus, good enough for heaven, good enough for God. By putting them on and keeping them on, Jesus has not only brought God to us; he has also brought us to God.

I tried all of that out on a friend last week. "Isn't that incredible?" I said. "Doesn't that make the Ascension come alive for you?"

"Interesting," he said, "but not compelling."

*You cannot miss what you have never known, which makes our sense of absence—and especially our sense of God's absence—
the very best proof that we knew God once, and that we may know God again.*

What he meant, I think, is that it is still an abstract idea—an explanation that has very little to do with our day-to-day experience. Almost everything else that happened to Jesus makes sense in terms of my own life. He was born to a human mother; so was I. He ate and drank and slept at night; so do I. He loved people and got angry with people and forgave people; so have I. He wept; me too. He died; I will die too. He rose from the dead; I even know something about that. I have had some Easterlike mornings of my own—joy found in the midst of sorrow, life in the midst of death.

But ascending into heaven to be seated at the right hand of God? That is where Jesus and I part company. That is where he leaves me in the dust. My only experience of the Ascension is from the ground, my neck cranked back as far as it will go, my mouth wide open, my face shielded from the sun by the cloud that is bearing my Lord away.

Luke ends his gospel by telling us that the disciples returned to Jerusalem with great joy. But you have to remember that it had just happened for them, that they had just been with him, and the memory was fresh. They were still running on adrenaline; you can see it in the pictures. Almost every church with stained-glass windows has an ascension window tucked away somewhere. In it, Christ generally hovers in the air, his hands upraised in blessing, while the disciples look up at him with something between awe and delight. But he is there with them—he is in the window—and if they went away joyful, then I cannot help thinking that it was because they thought he would be back in a day or two, next week at the latest.

Two thousand years later, we tend to see the whole thing a little differently. We need a new window to describe our own situation: a window with just us in it—no angels, no Jesus, no heavenly light—just us, still waiting, still watching the sky, our faces turned up like empty cups that only one presence can fill. But he is not present anymore, not the way he used to be.

Ascension Day is the day the present Lord became absent, which may be why it is the most forgotten feast day of the church year. Who wants to celebrate being left behind? Who wants to mark the day that Jesus went out of this world, never to be seen again? Hungry as we are for the presence of God, the one thing we do not need is a day to remind us of God's absence.

Or is that really the one reason, underneath all the other reasons, we are here? Because we have sensed God's absence—in our hollow nights, our pounding hearts, our unanswered prayers—and because those things have not discouraged us from coming here but have in fact brought us here, to seek the presence we have been missing?

Sometimes I think absence is underrated. It is not nothing, after all. It is something: a heightened awareness, a sharpened appetite, a finer perception. When someone important to me is absent from me, it becomes clearer than ever what that person means to me. Details that got lost in our togetherness are recalled in our apartness, and their sudden clarity has the power to pry my heart right open. I see the virtues I have overlooked, the opportunities I have missed. The quirks that drove me crazy at close range become endearing at a distance. From that enlarged perspective, I can see that they are the very things that make my someone someone and not just anyone.

There is something else that happens during an absence. If the relationship is strong and true, the absent one has a way of becoming present—if not in body, then in mind and spirit.

My husband, Edward, is devoted to hawks and especially to the golden eagles that are coming back to our part of Georgia. Driving down the highway with him can become a test of nerve as he cranes over the steering wheel to peer at the wing feathers of a particularly large bird. Is it an eagle? Or just a turkey vulture? He has to know, even if it means weaving down the road for a while, or running off it from time to time.

"Keep your eyes on the road!" I yell at him. "Who cares what it is? I'll buy you a bird book; I'll buy you a bird. Just watch where you're going." Then a couple of summers ago we spent two months apart and I thought I would get a break from hawks, but instead I began to see them everywhere—looping through the air, spiraling in rising thermals, hunkered down in the tops of trees. Seeing them, really seeing them for the first time in my life, I understood that I was not seeing them with my own eyes but with Edward's eyes. He was not there, so I was seeing them for him. He was absent—or was he? He was present in me.

One thing is for sure: there is no sense of absence where there has been no sense of presence. What makes absence hurt, what makes it ache, is the memory of what used to be there but is no longer. Absence is the arm flung across the bed in the middle of the night, the empty space where a beloved sleeper once lay. Absence is the child's room now empty and hung with silence and dust. Absence is the overgrown lot where the old house once stood, the house in which people laughed and thought their happiness would last forever.

You cannot miss what you have never known, which makes our sense of absence—and especially our sense of God's absence—the very best proof that we knew God once, and that we may know God again. There is loss in absence, but there is also hope, because what happened once can happen again, and only an empty cup can be filled. It is only when we pull that cup out of hiding, when we own up to the emptiness, the absence, the longing inside—it is only then that things can begin to change.

It is our sense of God's absence, after all, that brings us to church in search of God's presence. Like a band of forlorn disciples, we return to this hillside again and again. It is the place we lost track of him; it is the last place we saw him, so of course it is the first place anybody thinks to look for him to come again. We have been coming here a long time now, but even in his absence it is a good place to remember him—to recall best moments and argue about the details, to swap all the old stories until they begin to revive again, the life flowing back into them like feeling into a numb limb. It hurts at first, but then it is fine, and the joy of remembering makes the pain seem a small price to pay.

"Men of Galilee, why do you stand looking up toward heaven?" That is what the two men in white robes said to the disciples on the mount called Olivet just outside of Jerusalem. Luke calls them men in white robes, anyway, so as not to scare anyone, but you can bet your last nickel that they were angels—angels sent to remind God's friends that if they wanted to see him again, it was no use looking up. Better they should look around instead, at each other, at the world, at the ordinary people in their ordinary lives, because that was where they were most likely to find him—not the way they used to know him, but the new way, not in his own body but in their bodies, the risen, the ascended Lord who was no longer anywhere on earth so that he could be everywhere instead.

No one standing around watching them that day could have guessed what an astounding thing happened when they all stopped looking into the sky and looked at each other instead. On the surface, it was not a great moment: 11 abandoned disciples with nothing to show for all their following. But in the days and years to come it would become very apparent what had happened to them. With nothing but a promise and a prayer, those 11 people consented to become the church, and nothing was ever the same again, beginning with them.

The followers became leaders, the listeners became preachers, the converts became missionaries, the healed became healers. The disciples became apostles, witnesses of the risen Lord by the power of the Holy Spirit, and nothing was ever the same again.

That probably was not the way they would have planned it. If they had had it their way, they would probably have tied Jesus up so that he could not have gotten away from them, so that they would have known where to find him and rely on him forever. Only that is not how it happened. He went away—he was taken away—and they stood looking up toward heaven. Then they stopped looking up toward heaven, looked at each other instead, and got on with the business of being the church.

And once they did that, surprising things began to happen. They began to say things that sounded like him, and they began to do things they had never seen anyone but him do before. They became brave and capable and wise.

Whenever two or three of them got together it was always as if there were someone else in the room with them whom they could not see—the strong, abiding presence of the absent one, as available to them as bread and wine, as familiar to them as each other's faces. It was almost as if he had not ascended but exploded, so that all the holiness that was once concentrated in him alone flew everywhere, flew far and wide, so that the seeds of heaven were sown in all the fields of the earth.

We go to church to worship, to acknowledge the Lord's absence and to seek the Lord's presence, to sing and to pray, to be silent and to be still, to hold out the empty cups of our hands and to be filled with bread, with wine, with the abiding presence of the absent Lord until he comes again. Do you miss him sometimes? Do you long for assurance that you have not been left behind? Then why do you stand looking up toward heaven? Look around you, look around.

Barbara Brown Taylor, author of God in Pain (Abingdon), teaches at Piedmont College, Demorest, Georgia.

FEAR HOLDS YOU WITH AN IRON GRIP.

THE FEAR OF THE LORD HOLDS YOU WITH LOVING ARMS.

F E A R. It can be negative. Even destructive. And it has the ability to keep you from living life to the fullest. But there is one kind of fear that's positive and life-giving: The fear of the Lord.

In The Joy of Fearing God, trusted author Jerry Bridges takes a revealing look at what the Bible says about fearing God. He examines God's awesome greatness. His incredible holiness. His infinite wisdom. And His inspiring love.

As a result, you'll gain a deeper understanding of who God is, who you are, and how to have a truly intimate relationship with Him. And you'll come to the startling discovery that the fear of the Lord is the key to joyful, fulfilling, and genuine intimacy with God.

The Joy of Fearing God. It's more than just a feeling. It's a truth that can transform your life.

WATERBROOK PRESS
Spiritual Refreshment

Under the Streets

Lifting manhole covers and crawling inside is a first step in a Romanian ministry's gritty outreach.

As another cold night falls on the East European city of Bucharest, Marshall McKenna prepares to visit the hidden homes of the hundreds of Romanian street children.

Heading for a manhole on a side street, Marshall easily pulls away the heavy lid and quickly disappears down the ladder. Four yards below street level, the inky darkness closes in around him. But the young South African knows his way and walks on confidently.

Like most street kids in Bucharest, he is a glue addict. It's the cheapest drug available, but its impact on the human brain can cause devastating neural damage. Despite his bleak situation, Ionel draws strength and encouragement from Marshall, who turns the conversation in a different direction. "Anybody can give you food and clothes," Marshall says. "But we want to give Jesus to you." Ionel listens intently, yet remains noncommittal. All too soon, the visit is over, and Marshall makes his way back to the surface, only to move on to another of his evening appointments.

Bent on bread

It's 7 P.M., and Marshall makes one of his regular stops at the Bucharest train station. Street kids swarm around him, pushing, pulling, swearing, shouting—a sooty, shabby, drugged, and desperate crowd bent on bread.

For a moment, Marshall seems overwhelmed, but then he pulls himself together. "You behave now!" he says, shouting at the top of his voice. "Stand still and say thank-you!" Amazingly, instead of laughing him off, the kids obey. The uproar dies down, and in short order Marshall hands out one sandwich after another.

To more than 200 street kids around the Bucharest train station, Marshall and the others at the rescue center are family.

The young teams strive to reintroduce normalcy to orphans whose lives have been stunted by neglect and false freedom. Later that night over a cola and a hamburger, Marshall says, "People often ask us if we mind doing what we're doing, [with] the kids being dirty, rude, and possibly full of lice.

"They don't understand that it is such a privilege to be out in the streets like this! We tell the kids over and over again that if they really want change, they need to come to Jesus. And some do."

Orasul Sperantei operates two shelters, one called the Villa of Hope, for young boys, and the House of Hope for girls. But the total capacity for 50 children is far short of the need. The shelters offer long-term care, where the children will grow up, receive an education, and be prepared for adult life.

Cristian Soimaru, 25, Romanian cofounder and field director of Orasul Sperantei, points to Cornel, 13, as an example of how children commonly become homeless. In the mid-1990s, the boy had sought sanctuary in the streets of Bucharest to escape severe physical abuse at home. His stepfather's preferred meth-

TOMAS DIXON

It's a hard-knock life: In Bucharest, street children often live near underground steam pipes to keep warm.

After several minutes, someone ahead strikes a match and lights a candle. It's Ionel in his winter nest, which is nothing more than a large, filthy blanket on the concrete floor. Ionel and countless other abandoned Romanian children seek shelter under the streets of Bucharest, keeping warm near the underground steam pipes that crisscross the city.

More than one problem

As candlelight flickers across the huge pipes along the ceiling, Marshall and Ionel talk. Marshall, as a team member with Orasul Sperantei (City of Hope) Rescue Center, works to help Bucharest's street children obtain housing, education, or employment. In Ionel's case, he urgently needs a job. As they discuss the options, Marshall says the rescue center, founded by Christians, will pay for Ionel to travel to his hometown so that he can obtain the identification papers necessary for legal employment.

But being jobless is perhaps not Ionel's biggest problem. As they talk, Ionel regularly grabs for a dirty plastic bag and takes a quick sniff.

od of discipline was to turn Cornel upside down and bang his head against the floor. If he failed at school, his mother punished him with an iron rod. After his escape, Cornel lived on the streets for several months. "When we found him, he was like a frightened chicken," Cristian recalls.

Cornel, who has blossomed at Orasul Sperantei, says with conviction, "I will stay here with my family after I have married. I want to work here, like Cristian." In spite of his bitter life experience, Cornel is more willing than most to talk about his parents. "I want to play the drums like my real father," he says eagerly. "I want Mom and Dad to become Christians!" With a sly smile, Cornel adds: "I would lie if I said that I read the Bible much. But I do read it!"

Bitter legacy

The estimated 2,000 or so street children are just a part of the overall problem. There are an additional 100,000 children in substandard orphanages. The number of orphaned and abandoned children is a bitter legacy from the era of communist dictator Nicolae Ceaucescu, who was executed, together with his wife, on Christmas Day, 1989, as communism was collapsing throughout Eastern Europe.

"Ceaucescu had the megalomaniacal idea that Romania should be the second-largest people in Eastern Europe by the year 2010," Cristian explains. "In the eighties, he forbade not only abortions but also contraceptives, and introduced punitive taxes for the childless. At the same time, he emptied the shops in order to pay off the country's foreign debts. So there were more and more unwanted children, and less and less food. Many, many children were disposed of by their parents."

In 1990, television reports from the Romanian state orphanages shocked the world. Some 250,000 children were living under unspeakable conditions; many were mentally retarded from lack of care. As the system broke down, thousands ran away and started living in the streets.

"Romania's biggest problem today," Cristian points out, "is not bad economy but the attitude that people still hold toward children. Ceaucescu is still alive in people's minds. They view children as a liability."

To the boys in the villa, Cristian is both father and pal. They show their affection constantly—and rather wildly. "It may

Villa of Hope:
Cristian Soimaru,
cofounder of Orasul Sperantei, draws smiles from orphaned boys.

sound stupid," Cristian says, "but I personally believe that many of these kids will play an important role in the future Romanian community."

Orasul Sperantei was founded in 1992 by two individuals who hardly knew each other. At the time, Cristian, a student of law in Bucharest, sensed God urging him to speak to a couple of street kids one night as he was in a cafe after church. In the ensuing weeks, he started walking the streets on his own.

Angie Thomson, an American living in Brussels, escorted an aid transport to a Romanian orphanage for mentally disabled children—and was overcome at what she saw.

Later, a Baptist pastor helped the two launch the ministry. Their first orphanage opened in August 1994. The staff counts 45 full-timers: 40 Romanians and five foreigners. Volunteers from the local churches help out regularly. Angie stresses that Orasul Sperantei ministers to physical and spiritual needs. "All children in our homes know the Lord Jesus as their personal Savior," she exclaims. In the orphanages, there is a Bible study and worship time every night. Angie admits that ministering to the street kids is "excruciatingly draining." She says that "the worst feeling in the world is to walk away from a small child who is hungry and shivering and has no home to go to, knowing that you have no more beds left."

But in spite of the strain, Angie plans for expansion: "We are praying for a Village of Hope outside Bucharest with homes for 200 kids." While Cristian focuses on work in Romania, Angie attends to raising financial support, even though that means spending time away from her "small ones." But she is confident that their ministry is "one step closer to taking in another little shivering boy or girl."

By Tomas Dixon in Bucharest.

Smithton, Missouri Outpouring "Cornfield Revival"

Pastor Steve & Kathy Gray

Outpouring Service

Friday & Saturday, 7 p.m.

Sunday, 10 a.m.

Corporate Prayer & Training

Wednesday Revival Prayer, 7 p.m.

Thursday Revival Training, 7 p.m.

"God is on the Move"
Original Revival Praise
Music CD & Cassette

How can a church sustain revival for two years?
Get our Revival
Training Manual
and Teaching Tapes

To bring Pastor Steve & Kathy Gray to your church, or for information, products catalog, area motel:

(660) 343-5437

"God Is On the Move" For CD ($15) or cassette ($10) Revival Training Manual with 9 tapes: $55; Manual only: $15; Tapes only: $40.

Enclose payment PLUS $3 S/H

Name _____

Address _____

City _____

State _____

Zip _____

Complete and mail to:

CT59

Revival in the Land
A/V Resources
P.O. Box 430
Smithton, MO 65350

Lulu Brimley's Last-Chance Christian Books

Rob Suggs

Lulu Brimley's store, Bound for Glory, deals in remaindered and second-hand sacred literature and trinkets. Stop by for a sale item:

• FICTION: This Predestined Passion (Volume 23 of The Prudence Trilogy). In this romantic epic, set against the shattering tumult of the Swiss Reformation, Prudence sails to Geneva and finds the grace of John Calvin to be irresistible. It's the romance that was meant to be—a love that reforms their worlds. Was ~~$8.95~~, now $0.99.

• TOYS: Mighty Minor Prophets™ Action Figures: Nahum. Marked down again. Originally ~~$9.95~~, now only $0.49. Still available: Obadiah.

• INSPIRATIONAL: Angels Unpretentious. Here's a refreshing slant on angel sightings. In these ten true accounts, angels are observed performing such mundane tasks as grouting bathroom tile, rotating tires, and finding missing sock mates. This book will convince you that not all angels hang out at dangerous intersections and burning houses. Was ~~$18.95~~, now $0.99.

• BIBLE PRODUCTS: The ProofText Bible. A big decision looms. As always, you open the Good Book at random, shut your eyes, put your finger down somewhere, and grab some quick revelation. Now the Proof Text Bible gives you every verse of Scripture—randomly rearranged! Why not spread those wonderful nuggets from Proverbs or Philipians throughout Scripture? Kiss confusing contextual issues goodbye. Was ~~$39~~, now $2.95.

• FICTION: Love's Great Awakening (Volume 37 of The Prudence Trilogy). Having regained inner peace after her heart-quaking Pennsylvania sojourn (Volume 36, Love Among Friends), Prudence finds herself romantically torn between the two Wesley brothers. Can true love be lost? Or was it ever really love in the first place? Was ~~$8.95~~, now $0.99.

• SELF-HELP: Life's Little Book of Vague Anxieties. Have you thanked Aunt Edna for the Christmas gift? Are you certain you turned off the oven before you left? What's really in your drinking water? Who is talking behind your back? A vague anxiety each day to keep alert, concerned believers on their toes while they're on their knees. Was ~~$9.95~~, now $0.99.

• REFERENCE: The Collected Blurbs of J. I. Packer.

Any book worth reading has a short dust-jacket recommendation from J. I. Here are hundreds of the best cover endorsements from the "King of Blurbs." "Outstanding. Every Christian should own it!" —J. I. Packer. Was ~~$18.50~~, now $0.45.

• TOYS: Talking C. S. Lewis Doll for Thinking Children. With a special child like yours, not just any toy will do. Her relationship with Barney is an intellectual dead end. Why not give her a plush, platonic companion who isn't purple, jolly, and overbearing—but wry and pensive? It's C. S. Lewis himself! Not particularly huggable, but a doll your child will respect. Pull the ring and hear a sound bite from The Problem of Pain or The Abolition of Man. Oxford gown not included. Was ~~$29.95~~, any offer accepted.

• ON TAPE AND CD: Fiddlin' and Chantin'. It's the Next Big Thing in gospel music. What happens when classic Gregorian chants meet down-home bluegrass? It's a medieval hootenanny! All those great hits from the seventh century really come to life on banjo and harmonica. "Outstanding. Every Christian should own it!" —J. I. Packer. Was ~~$15.99~~, now $0.95.

• EDUCATIONAL PRODUCTS: The Complete Prenatal Scripture Memory System. Studies indicate the womb is life's best learning environment. Why shouldn't your child enter the world with a pretty good grasp of key Scripture verses? Was ~~$9.99~~, now $0.99.

• BIBLES: The Dysfunctional Disciple's™ Bible. It's comforting to know that Bible heroes were neurotic folk like you and me. This edition identifies the syndromes or disorders afflicting various Scriptural characters. Did you know the nation of Israel suffered from Attention Deficit Disorder during the Book of Judges? What made those disciples keep falling asleep in the garden? Buy the book and see. Was ~~$24.99~~, now whatever price won't upset you.

• ALSO CLOSED OUT. FIRST COME, FIRST SERVED:

The Canadian Application Bible

Brimstone! The Game of Rebuke for Adults

Love's Augustinian Confessions (Volume 13 in The Prudence Trilogy)

Eusebius! The Musical (on tape and cd)

Rappin' with the Gaither Trio

Fat Chants (Those lovable Benedictine monks are back with a full Gregorian fitness workout!) CL

Rob Suggs is a senior editor at Walk Thru the Bible Ministries.

Church Chair Industries, Inc.

Cathedral Stacker

Free Chair Test Compare
(100+)

Plush, tall backs over 1/2" plywood.

Free Lumbar Back Support

Now Only
$24.25
100+

Royal Stacker

Now Only
$25.75
100+

Design Stacker #1

Plush 4 & 5" deep foam
seats over 1/2" plywood.

Call 1-800-331-5411
For Free Catalog & Steel
Frame Sample Chair

GREAT PEW LIKE CHAIRS OAK OR STEEL FRAMES
LOCKS TOGETHER TO FORM A CONTINUOUS BENCH

Oak Pew Chair

OPTIONS

Arms

Kneelers

Book & Card Pockets

DESIGN PATENT NO.
DES. 333,7333

I Didn't Mean to Be Rude

Many faiths,
not just ours,
hold quite specific doctrines and stand at firm disagreement with one another.

Twenty-four years ago this month I learned something specific. The specificity of what I learned is what makes it, to many, offensive.

Twenty-four years ago a hitchhiking jaunt around Europe brought me one afternoon to a church in Dublin. I was intrigued by Eastern religions at the time, particularly Hinduism, but was theologically open-minded enough to appreciate Christian art and architecture.

The light in the church was dim, and I blinked to adjust my eyes. Wandering toward the back, I encountered a statue of Jesus, who stood marble-white with arms held low, palms open. On his chest the sculptor had depicted his heart, twined with thorns and springing with flames. The base of the statue was inscribed: "Behold the heart that so loved mankind."

Here's the part I can't explain. I remember looking at the statue, but I don't remember falling to my knees. Then I felt an interior presence forming the words, "I am your life."

Twenty-four years ago I learned that Jesus is my Lord. But that's not the offensive part. Soon thereafter, reading Scriptures and learning from other Christians, I discovered that Jesus is everybody's Lord, whether they know it or not.

As I write those words, I think of how rude they sound. It's a hard thing to say; as soon as the idea of objective religious truth is proposed, touchy offense rises up in alarm.

But I keep trying. Not long ago I was one of a dozen speakers invited, in a secular context, to talk about what we find spiritually nurturing. I told the story of my conversion, then invited my listeners to learn more for themselves. If the Christian faith is your heritage, I said, explore it—there's always more to discover. If the Christian faith is not your heritage, I went on, explore it—Christianity is not exclusive; the welcome offered here transcends all earthly bounds.

As I sat down, the emcee looked at me like I was a naughty kindergartener. What Frederica was trying to say, he explained to the audience, was that there are many wonderful spiritual paths, and all should be honored in the spirit of multiculturalism.

Wow, I thought. I had no idea that was what I was trying to say.

I had just run into the modern mental cloverleaf that shunts Christ's claims to the service road: all religious beliefs are equally valid, all are fundamentally the same, and thinking yours is better is rude. Worse, you're probably one of those kooks who kills those who disagree; people with specific beliefs are dangerous. Christianity is very nice, as nice as the other religions, and all of them can be blended together in a tasty, open-minded stew.

But this theory doesn't stand up to even fleeting examination. Many faiths, not just ours, hold quite specific doctrines and stand at firm disagreement with one another. They blend in with each other about as well as a tire iron in a consommé. "All religious beliefs are equally valid" turns out to be just another religious belief, one that hasn't been proved valid. In fact, it's a kind of cultural imperialism—all the world's religions get reduced to a sentimental lowest common denominator that seems self-evident only to the privileged Westerners who came up with it.

The idea that all religions are one can be accepted only by a leap of faith. To make this leap, believers have to squint past varieties of religious experience that make even the resolutely open-minded squirm. Can we blandly include the "cargo cults" that sprouted among remote islanders who had received airlifted relief supplies? How about the Aztecs whom Cortez encountered in sixteenth-century Mexico City, burning human hearts before fat, jewel-encrusted idols?

It's hard being thought rude. Soft evangelical Christians may bypass the problem by putting the emphasis on the comfort that Jesus can give: faith will make you happy. Social strategists may highlight the utility of religious belief: faith will make you good.

But the real purpose of Jesus' work is more intimate and more deep: faith will make you his. It turns out that when Christians say "faith," we don't mean merely acknowledging certain facts about God: "Even the demons believe—and shudder." It's faith as in having faith in someone, being faithful to him, following faithfully wherever he leads. Faith doesn't just enlighten us, it transforms us. It does this because it is faith in one true Person, striding over the tumult of lesser gods.

In the heart of New Orleans's leering and grimy French Quarter there stands a church, and in front of the church there is a statue like the one I saw in Dublin, Jesus with his hands spread in welcome and thorn-pierced heart aflame. My husband used to say as we passed it, "That's the only genuine offer in the French Quarter." It's an offer I accepted 24 years ago this month, a specific offer, shocking and saving and impossible to conceal. C

Equality is Biblical Christians for Biblical Equality

$29.99

Sale price $15 plus S&H

More than 50 women scholars provide introductions to the books of the New Testament and commentary on other pertinent passages.

Christians for Biblical Equality believes that the Bible, properly interpreted, teaches the fundamental equality of men and women of all racial groups, all economic classes, and all age groups.

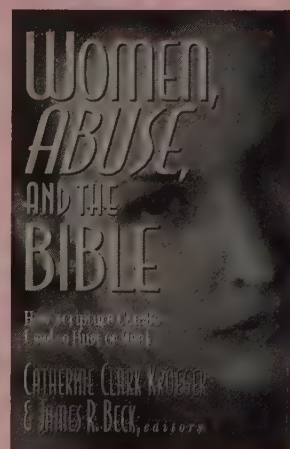

CBE is a member of the National Association of Evangelicals and the Evangelical Council for Financial Accountability.

$14.99

Sale price $9 plus S&H

"This book constitutes a challenge that cannot be dismissed or ignored . . ." Gilbert Bilezikian.

$14.99

Sale price $11.50 plus S&H

Challenges the church to address the issues of abuse and offers practical help and pathways to Christ-centered healing.

BAKER BOOK HOUSE
<http://www.bakerbooks.com>

"There is neither Jew nor Greek, slave nor free, male nor female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus." Gal. 3:28

We believe that women and men are to diligently develop and use their God-given gifts for the good of the church, home, and society. Our mission is to make known the biblical teachings of equality and to further the gospel message around the world.

To order books or to receive a free packet of information about CBE:

e-mail us at CBE@minn.net

Phone (612) 872-6898 or Fax (612) 872-6891

Check the CBE web site at www.ChrBibEq.org

Sale prices expire July 15th, 1998. Be sure to mention this ad.

CBE's 6th International Conference will be held in San Diego, California July 15th-18th, 1999.

BOOKS

Crafting a Class: College Admissions and Financial Aid, 1955-1994

By Elizabeth A. Duffy and Idana Goldberg

The Bible In Greek Christian Antiquity

Edited and translated by Paul M. Blowers

Inside the Vatican

The pope's chief doctrinal officer has always been in dialogue with the Reformation traditions. Now he reveals his vision for Christianity in the new millennium.

Salt of the Earth: The Church at the End of the Millennium, by Joseph Cardinal Ratzinger (Ignatius, 283 pp.; $12.95, paper). Reviewed by Richard John Neuhaus, president of Religion and Public Life and editor-in-chief of First Things.

In 1988, Religion and Public Life, a research and education institute in New York, invited Cardinal Ratzinger to give the annual Erasmus Lecture, followed by two days of conversation with theologians, including Protestants of the old-line and evangelical communities. The subject then was the authority and interpretation of Scripture, and everybody came away from those days profoundly impressed by the learning, candor, and gentle civility of this man who is the prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith. Readers of the present book are in for a similarly scintillating engagement with one of the great Christian minds and spirits of our time.

Salt of the Earth is an interview extending over several days with the noted German journalist Peter Seewald, a self-described skeptic. Comparison is inevitably made with another book-length Ratzinger interview that was published in 1985 as The Ratzinger Report, which caused an enormous stir in Catholic circles. At that time the cardinal had not been long in the post of chief doctrinal officer, next to the pope, of the Catholic church, and his relentless critique of the "crisis of faith" at the root of the church's problems startled many readers. More than a decade later, the tone of Salt of the Earth is more tranquil, even autumnal at points, but the critique is no less incisive, and there is no doubt about Ratzinger's continuing belief that all crises are rooted in a crisis of faith, of whether we say yes or no to the love of God in Jesus Christ.

Almost everything a reader might want to discuss with the cardinal is engaged in these pages: his theological formation, how doctrinal development happens in Catholic teaching, the great moral controversies over abortion and euthanasia, whether women can be ordained, the meaning of celibacy, the changing role of the papacy, where and why the church made mistakes, the prospects for Christian unity, and what the church and the world should expect in the next millennium.

Seewald's questions are aggressive and usually incisive; Ratzinger's answers are invariably patient, pastoral, and reflective of his immense learning. Many have observed that, had he not been chosen as prefect by John Paul II, Ratzinger would have made a theological mark comparable to that made by Karl Rahner or, in Protestant circles, Karl Barth. To which others respond that he has achieved greater theological fulfillment and influence as prefect. Salt of the Earth may be submitted as evidence for the second position.

Ratzinger has also written numerous scholarly works, and it is a credit to his scholarship that he is able to turn his thought into prose completely accessible to the nonspecialist. He is not above addressing the issues that preoccupy the popular press. He refers, for instance, to "the canon of criticism"—women's ordination, contraception, celibacy, and the remarriage of divorced persons. On these issues, liberal reformers insist, the Catholic church must change if it is to reach the people of our time effectively. Here the cardinal becomes the skeptic. He notes an obvious factor that is often overlooked: "On these points Protestantism has taken the other path, and it is quite plain that it hasn't thereby solved the problem of being a Christian in today's world and that the problem of Christianity, the effort of being a Christian, remains just as dramatic as before." He sympathetically cites another theologian, Johannes Metz, who says that it was actually a good thing the Protestant experiment was made. Ratzinger observes, "It shows that being a Christian today does not stand or fall on these questions."

In conversations with evangelical thinkers, I am impressed by how many have been influenced by Ratzinger's much earlier book, Introduction to Christianity, published in English in 1970. For some, that encounter was the first dawning of an awareness that Catholics and evangelicals can affirm core beliefs about "the gift of salvation," to employ the title of the recent statement issuing from the project of Evangelicals and Catholics Together. As off-putting as it is to Protestants, for many Catholic theologians the Reformation is not a formative event. In the worlds of Catholic faith and life, they believe, other things of equal or greater importance were happening in the sixteenth century. That is not the case with Cardinal Ratzinger. In part, no doubt, because he was born and reared in Germany, his theology has always been in intense conversation with the Reformation traditions.

He is not, of course, a "minimalist" theologian who is inclined to tailor Catholic teaching to fit Protestant tastes. But he has intimate understanding and appreciation of the religious and theological genius of figures such as Luther. He believes that what is true in the Protestant critique can and should be embraced by what he calls "the structure of faith." At the same time, he does not seem to expect too much in the healing of the breach between Rome and the Reformation. Speaking of the prospects for Christian unity, he says at one point that perhaps the most we should hope for is that there will be no new schisms. At another point, however, he speaks of Catholic "responsibility for the unity of the Church, her faith, and her morals," and he envisions the ways in which the exercise of the office of the papacy will change "when hitherto separated communities enter into unity with the Pope."

As might be expected, Salt of the Earth pays extensive attention to the office of the papacy. It is assumed that the New Testament intends a continuing "Petrine Ministry" in the church. The question is the relationship, if any, between that ministry and the ministry of the bishop of Rome, who, it is claimed, is the successor of Peter. Some Protestants, Ratzinger notes, "are ready to acknowledge providential guidance in tying the tradition of primacy to Rome, without wanting to refer the promise to Peter directly to the Pope." Many others, he says, recognize that Christianity ought to have a spokesman who can personally and authoritatively articulate the faith both to the world and to the Christian community.

In 1995, John Paul II issued the encyclical letter Ut Unum Sint (That They May Be One). In an unprecedented way that astonished many (including many Catholics), he invited non-Catholics to join in rethinking the exercise of the

"PLATITUDES UNDONE": A FACSIMILE EDITION OF PLATITUDES IN
THE MAKING,
By Holbrook Jackson, with the original handwritten responses

of G. K. Chesterton.

Ignatius Press

92 pp.; $14.95, hardcover

Reviewed by Carol R. Thiessen.

Gilbert Keith Chesterton's fans are many, both in Britain—where that prolific writer reigned early in this century—and in the U.S. One of those fans, Albert Kessler by name and a Chesterton collector, came across a rare gem one day in a used bookstore: Chesterton's personal autographed copy of a slim 1911 volume by Holbrook Jackson entitled Platitudes in the Making, subtitled "Precepts and Advices for Gentlefolk." After each of Jackson's platitudes in 12 brief sections, Chesterton has added his personal commentary on Jackson's platitudinous observations.

Ignatius Press has now reproduced the original book, including the additions made by Chesterton. For example: "The god of theology: a power that creates to destroy. No: that is obviously the god of modern science." Or: "Every custom was once an eccentricity; every idea was once an absurdity. No, no, no. Some ideas were always absurdities. This is one of them." In a short section entitled "Between Ourselves," Jackson wrote, "A man's spiritual kin are his nearest relations." Chesterton comments, "See parallel passage in the Gospels more paradoxically put."

Some of GKC's retorts are profound, others just fun. But if you enjoy Chesterton as I do, this little jewel will make your day. CI

We're re-creating the way Godly leaders train for their future ~

Scholarship with a Shepherd's Heart

- A balance to academic excellence and practical training
- A mentoring relationship with our students in both character and life development by faculty and local church pastors
- A partnering with the local church in training men and women for ministry

When you are making your plans for seminary, give us a call.

1-888-443-1020 • 602-443-1020 mail@phoenixseminary.edu

Phoenix Seminary

THE DIGITAL HYMNAL

NEW VERSION CP

Now With Acoustic Grand Piano Plus Over
650 New Titles Previously Unavailable

- Instantly plays thousands of new praise and worship music, contemporary selections, traditional hymns, gospel favorites, kid's titles plus wedding, graduation and memorial selections - already stored inside - and indexed to page numbers of popular hymn books
- Acoustic grand piano, pipe organs, choir, strings and brass plus other exciting instruments already stored inside for instant use
- You choose the key, number of verses and style
- Completely self contained - no costly keyboard or disks needed
- Includes remote control and built-in speakers, or use PA system - CD quality sound
- Rechargeable NiCad battery available
- Pre-program an entire service in memory mode

Ask for cassette demo, master list of song titles and color brochure

 Gulbrandsen, Inc.
800-677-7374

2102 Hancock Street, San Diego, CA 92110 • FAX: 619-296-7157

- CONGREGATIONAL SINGING
- OUTDOOR MEETINGS
- HOME USE
- SOLOS AND CHOIR REHEARSAL

BOOKS

papal office so that it might become an instrument of, rather than an obstacle to, Christian unity. As Ratzinger notes, the invitation is addressed first of all to the Orthodox East, but it also has large ramifications for the separated communities of the West. It is a source of considerable disappointment in Rome, a disappointment reflected in this book, that other Christians have not taken up that invitation. But, as it is said, Rome thinks in terms of centuries—and, as is evident in this book, in terms of millennia.

When the cardinal turns his attention to the next millennium, now only months away, the tone is sober, even somber. He envisions a largely post-Christian world in which the church will be on the defensive, smaller in numbers, but, he hopes, more coherent and committed in its faith. This is in contrast with John Paul II's frequently expressed vision of the third millennium as a "springtime"—a springtime of world evangelization, a springtime of Christian unity, a springtime of the renewal of human dignity.

The difference in expectations is undoubtedly related in part to personal disposition and experience. Ratzinger's world is chiefly that of a dimly secularized Western Europe. The pope's experience is that of Central and Eastern Europe, where a vibrant, if often contentious, Christianity has risen from beneath the rubble of Nazism and communism's evil empire. In addition, the pope's unceasing travels have established close ties with Africa, Asia, and Latin America, where anticipation of Christianity's future is frequently exuberant.

Not too much should be made of these differences, since it is obvious that God alone knows what the third millennium holds. What comes through in Salt of the Earth is the unshakable confidence that, no matter what happens, Christ is Lord. In his first sermon as pope, John Paul chose the theme "Be not afraid!" That theme has been repeated like a trip-hammer throughout this pontificate, and it is powerfully sounded in the present book. Salt of the Earth is an invitation to engage the mind and soul of a Christian made wise by life and learning, one who has had an inestimable influence in directing the church that embraces more than half the Christians in the world today and reaches out to all. Some readers, whether Protestant or Catholic, may not be persuaded by all that Cardinal Ratzinger has to say, but the book is an invitation that should not be declined. CT

Dealing with family issues isn't what it used to be.

That's why we've created two new programs that will strengthen your ability to minister to today's families: Master of Divinity with a Concentration in Marriage and Family Studies and Master of Arts in Marriage and Family Therapy. Call (800) 255-8706 ext. 6288 today to learn about one of our upcoming information sessions.

What you hear could affect your vision.

Marriage, Family and Child Counseling Program available in San Diego, Fall 1997

BETHEL SEMINARY

SAINT PAUL • SAN DIEGO

The Bottom Line

How colleges—not excluding Christian schools—have been shaped by market forces.

Crafting a Class: College Admissions and Financial Aid, 1955-1994, by Elizabeth A. Duffy and Idana Goldberg (Princeton University Press, 336 pp.; $ 29.95, hardcover). Reviewed by Lauren F. Winner, Kellett Scholar at Clare College, University of Cambridge.

Moms, I am convinced, all attend a class sometime during pregnancy where they learn a few authoritative tales to tell their children. Growing up, all of my friends and I heard slight variations on a small canon of stories, and each of our mothers sought to authenticate the tales by swearing to know the people involved. The story that most frequently passed my mother's lips was the one about the girl who wore a foot-high beehive and never washed her hair until one day when, in the middle of English class, great black bugs started crawling out.

When I was young, My mother also liked to tell a story about my grandmother, the first woman in my family to go to college—she had attended Woman's College, a normal school now known as the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. She had, the story went, written Woman's College a letter saying, "I want to come," and they had written back saying, "Fine, come Tuesday." All of my friends heard similar stories growing up, with grandmothers attending institutions ranging from Radcliffe to Brooklyn College; I seem to recall that a version of the same tale even made its way into one of the ubiquitous how-to-apply-to-college-and-get-in guides. Whether my grandmother indeed ever received such a letter from Woman's College, I do not know. What is clear, however, is that college admissions have changed radically since my grandmother matriculated in 1925.

Elizabeth A. Duffy and Idana Goldberg's recent book, which was funded by the Mellon Foundation, does not pick up the story of college admissions and financial aid until 1955. In the last four decades, Duffy and Goldberg argue, admissions have been transformed. Most obviously, a vast majority of single-sex schools became coed, and colleges began active minority recruitment. The central change Duffy and Goldberg pinpoint, however, is one of selectivity: at midcentury, few colleges denied admission to more than a handful of students. In the 1960s, the college-age population exploded, and financial-aid resources expanded. This resulted in a deluge of applicants, far

Dallas Seminary's graduate programs are designed to give you the tools you need to communicate God's Word clearly and effectively.

Call (800) 992-0998 for a free brochure.

DALLAS
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

MESSIAH COLLEGE
Grantham • Pennsylvania 17027 • USA

Call 1.800.233.4220
1.800.382.1349 in PA

RIGOROUSLY ACADEMIC.
UNAPOLOGETICALLY CHRISTIAN.
www.messiah.edu

A CHRISTIAN COLLEGE OF THE
LIBERAL & APPLIED ARTS AND SCIENCES

"Covenant means a great deal to me personally. I am thankful for its existence in this day of confusion."
—Francis Schaeffer
1912-1984

COVENANT
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY
and the FRANCIS SCHAEFFER INSTITUTE
Saint Louis, Missouri

Degree Programs:
M.A. / Th.M. / M.A.C. / D.Min. / M.Div.

800-264-8064
Correspondence Study available

Put your heart and SOUL into easing
MINDS

A troubled mind is often the product of a troubled soul. That's why, at Rosemead School of Psychology, we provide you with the knowledge and skill to treat both. By combining proven psychological methods with sound theological principles, you'll be able to identify and treat the source of the problem — not just its symptoms.

If you're considering obtaining a Ph.D. or Psy.D. in Clinical Psychology, consider what Rosemead has to offer:

- Integration of Psychology and Theology
- Variety of Training Modalities:
 - Psychodynamic Therapy
 - Marriage and Family Therapy
 - Brief Therapies
 - Gestalt Therapy
 - Cognitive Behavior Therapy
 - Couples Therapy
 - Group Therapy
- APA Accredited
- Training Therapy for All Students
- Practitioner Model of Training
- 20+ Psychology Faculty
- On-Campus Training and Service Clinic
- Publisher of
Journal of Psychology & Theology
- Multicultural Urban Setting

For more information on Rosemead's doctoral programs, please call 800-992-4652

Call Today 800-992-4652

ROSEMEAD
SCHOOL OF PSYCHOLOGY

13800 Biola Avenue

La Mirada

CA 90639-0001

<http://www.biola.edu>

CHRISTIAN PRAYER CONFERENCES IN EUROPE

The Continuous Flame invites you to attend prayer conferences and enjoy worshipping the Lord and fellowshiping with other prayer warriors from Europe.

Austria
Alps of Salzburg
June 10-15

Germany
Stuttgart
June 22-27

Switzerland
Colony-Geneva
July 15-20

Italy
Florence
Jul. 27-Aug. 1

Cost: $100-250 for full pension for 5 days of the conference. Speakers: well known European Christian evangelicals. There will be interpretation into English. For more information, contact us through:

fax: (773) 478-8902, Email: conflame@flash.net. See also our home page at <http://www.flash.net/~conflame>

The Continuous Flame is a Christian Prayer and Evangelistic organization that promotes prayer conferences in various countries of the world, calling Christians to life of a prayer and intercession for a perishing world. Keep looking on our home page for future conferences and interesting topics of prayer

Change your Job...
Change your Life!!!
We'll show you how --TODAY!

www.jobleads.org

800-426-1342

www.jobleads.org

Inter Cristo knows about thousands of jobs with hundreds of Christian organizations. Jobs for teachers, managers, accountants, and many more!

Our personalized computer job matching system searches out all the job possibilities fitting your unique qualifications!

Inter Cristo - The Christian Career Specialists for 30 years

Say "I Do"
to
MARRIAGE PARTNERSHIP

Marriage Partnership is designed for couples that want Christ at the center of their marriages. Its fresh, relevant, and insightful features help you make "I do" an ongoing reality.

RISK-FREE TRIAL ISSUE

☐ "I Do" want a risk-free trial issue of Marriage Partnership. Bill me $17.95 for a one-year subscription, and if I decide to keep Marriage Partnership coming, I'll return the bill with my payment to receive 3 more quarterly issues—a full year including my trial issue. If not, I'll write "cancel" on the bill and send it back to you. I keep the trial issue at no cost, regardless.

E8E14

Name _____
Address _____
City, State, Zip _____
E-mail _____

Clip and mail to:
Marriage Partnership
P.O. Box 37060,
Boone, IA 50037-0060

Please allow 4-6 weeks for delivery. Outside U.S. orders add $3/year for postage (U.S. funds only).

Books

more than the colleges could admit, even when they expanded their class size: For the first time, colleges were faced with the task of "crafting a class."

The flaw with this book's focus on selectivity lies in Duffy and Goldberg's sample. Their findings are based almost entirely on a study of 16 private liberal arts colleges in Massachusetts and Ohio, which include two Little Ivies (Williams and Amherst), three Seven Sisters (Smith, Wellesley, and Mount Holyoke), and one Christian college: Gordon. These are among the most selective colleges in the country, and one cannot generalize from their experiences to a Mars Hill or a Sweet Briar. Today many American colleges are worried about filling a class, not crafting a class.

This is particularly true of Christian colleges, many of which do not even manage to enroll their full capacity of students, much less achieve any measure of selectivity. The majority of Christian colleges, for instance, do not require a Christian commitment for admission; some see enrolling non-Christians as an opportunity for evangelism; others claim that the presence of non-Christians imbues the campus with an otherwise unavailable atmosphere. But many Christian colleges simply need the numbers and do not have the luxury of turning away non-Christian applicants.

As any parent with children of college age could attest, financial aid is a crucial part of the admissions picture. Financial aid has been the subject of tremendous controversy in recent years as several elite private universities have contemplated abolishing need-blind admissions. The question of aid is debated endlessly on the floors of state legislatures, where state aid to students attending private colleges is increasingly challenged as a diversion of funds away from the public universities. And the question is not limited to the American higher-education landscape: If federal tax breaks for college tuition has been a topic of some prominence recently in America, the question of government grants to college students has aroused rather more ire and passion in England, as New Labor launches tremendous cuts in aid to students.

Duffy and Goldberg chart the development of financial aid from 1955—when there was no federal aid program—to 1994, when federal aid amounted to more than $35 billion, and the 16 Massachusetts and Ohio institutions studied in Crafting a Class spent on average approximately $10.3 million on financial aid. Although Duffy and Goldberg do not touch on the issue of financial aid to religious colleges, it is worth noting that Christian colleges rely on federal financial-aid dollars no less than their secular counterparts, but several recent court cases have challenged the constitutionality of these allocations. If government aid is found to violate the separation of church and state—and a good argument can be made that it does—many Christian colleges would have difficulty replacing this money. In a 1996 survey of 13 Christian colleges, the average revenue from federal grants—not including federal loans or state grants—was $900,000.

Need-based aid constitutes only part of financial aid in contemporary America. In recent years, some colleges have increased their merit-based scholarships, designed to lure top-notch students away from competitors. When they began their research, Duffy and Goldberg were disdainful of merit-based aid programs, assuming that merit scholarships diverted funds away from need-based aid. The most interesting finding of their book is that, in fact, "merit aid seems to have had at most a marginal impact on need-based allocations. Although none of the colleges that award merit aid guarantee that they will meet the need of all admitted students, all except one have continued to increase their spending on need-based aid, even as they have expanded their merit programs."

The mentality of the university is increasingly one of customer satisfaction.

But for all their analysis of increased selectivity and the development of financial aid, Duffy and Goldberg fail to focus on the most important change in higher education during the last half-century: colleges have crawled into bed with the market, and their cozy relationship seems only to solidify each year. This has dramatic consequences for all areas of university life, not least admissions and financial aid. The mentality of the university is increasingly one of customer satisfaction, and the cultivating of customers—students—begins at the admissions office.

Admissions offices now devote an inordinate amount of their resources to selling their school and recruiting students. As Mark Edmundson pointed out in a recent essay in Harper's, the marketing of a school to prospective consumers begins most aggressively in the junior year of high school, when kids are bombarded with videotapes, CD-ROMs, and glossy picturebooks portraying university life. "Colleges don't have admissions offices anymore," Edmundson quotes one financial aid officer as saying; "they have marketing departments."

One admissions officer at a small Christian college told me that his school had recently debated changing its admis-

Study in Israel

it can make all the difference!

• MASTER OF ARTS DEGREES • GRADUATE OR UNDERGRADUATE SEMESTER ABROAD
• SHORT-TERM ACADEMIC STUDY TOURS • CREDITS TRANSFERABLE

Jerusalem University College

an evangelical Christian institution of higher learning celebrating 40 years in Jerusalem

formerly: INSTITUTE OF HOLY LAND STUDIES

For literature and free video: 1-800-891-9408
or (815)229-5900 in North America, all others 972-2-718628

THE REPRODUCTION REVOLUTION

A Christian Appraisal of Reproductive Technologies, Sexuality, & the Family

July 16-18, 1998

A conference on the campus of Trinity International University,
Deerfield, Illinois

Presented by

The Center for Bioethics and Human Dignity, Christian Medical & Dental Society, together with
Christian Legal Society,
Nurses Christian Fellowship,
Trinity Evangelical Divinity School,
The Center for Family Life

FEATURING:

Joni Eareckson Tada
JAF Ministries

Tom Elkins, M.D.
Johns Hopkins School of Medicine

C. Christopher Hook, M.D.
Mayo Clinic

Teresa Iglesias, Ph.D.
University of Dublin, Ireland

Gilbert Meilaender, Ph.D.
Valparaiso University

Gracie Hsu, M.A.
Family Research Council

Nigel Cameron, Ph.D.
Trinity International University

and many other plenary and session leaders

BIOETHICS INSTITUTES:

Intensive, Advanced, and Institutes on Abortion taught by Christian leaders in bioethics will meet July 13-18.
Pre-Med Institute on July 15-18

POST-CONFERENCE

BIOETHICS SEMINARS:

The Changing Face of Health Care, and Genetic Ethics will meet July 20-24

ONE PAGE ABSTRACTS

of proposed papers with one-page biographical profiles due May 1, 1998 to The Center for Bioethics and Human Dignity, 2065 Half Day Road,
Bannockburn, Illinois 60015 USA

Continuing Education and Academic credit available

FOR INFORMATION

800.417.9999 or
<http://www.bioethix.org>

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Web Site Directory

Calvin College (Alumni)

www.calvin.edu

George Fox University

www.georgefox.edu

Gordon Conwell Theo. Seminary

www.gcts.edu

Jack Van Impe Ministries

www.jvim.com

Promise Checks

www.promisechecks.com

To list your Web address in a Computing Today Web directory
phone (630) 260-6202 x239.

Check Us Out Online!

Keyword: CO
on AMERICA ONLINE

One of the top
50 sites on
America Online

• Community Interactivity.

Constantly packed chat rooms, dozens of weekly events, hundreds of message board topics to meet any interest.

• Current News & Magazines.

Including: Christianity Today,
Today's Christian Woman, Computing Today,
plus daily news updates.

• Music & Media • Resource Center • Church, Bible & Reference • Marketplace • & More

Use AOL's integrated Web browser to access
Christianity.Net, Christianity Today, Inc.'s exciting new Web site.

www.christianity.net

A member of Christian Community Network
www.christcom.net

• NET/SEARCH.

One of the most comprehensive Christian Internet directories on the Web with nearly 5,000 links to Christian Web sites.

• Church Locator.

A searchable database of over 4,000 links to church Web sites from around the world.
Add a FREE link to your church's Web site.

• Newsstand • Message Boards • & More

Get unlimited access to America Online
and the Internet for $19.95 a month.
Call 1-800-633-8888 for a free start-up kit.

To advertise online call (630) 260-6202 x 239

sion policy to admit only Christian students. "That would be truly in keeping with the mission of the school," he said, "but we can't do it, any more than we can limit our student body to the kind of high academic achievers we'd like to see. We have to remember the mission of the college, but the main concern is the bottom line."

It seems to me that my friend has his priorities reversed. In fact, while we must always remember the bottom line, the main concern must be the mission of the university—which is not to turn a profit.

Duffy and Goldberg suggest that, during the last 40 years, the central change in college admissions has been the transformation of admissions officers from mere gatekeepers to administrators-cum-artisans who cull their students like so many gourmards hunting for the finest ingredients. Perhaps this is the case at elite institutions like Amherst, but things are much different outside that charmed circle. As one administrator at a small college in the South recently told me, "We used to be able to think about what students the college wants. Now we think instead about what college the students want, and our job has become for us to convince them they want us, not the other way around. And then we take whoever we can get. And if we have any real room for choice, we take whoever can pay."

Another admissions officer echoed the sentiment: "We have a need-blind admissions policy, but people pretty much look the other way. We're urged to be selective, of course, but at the end of the day, all the extracurricular and personal statements and letters of recommendation are more or less irrelevant—we select on the basis of bank accounts, and if we don't happen to have that information handy, we go by the zip code."

Crafting a Class clearly is not intended to serve as a guide for students and their parents—how to get in, how to get your kids in—but the advice implicit in Duffy and Goldberg will mislead unwary readers who try to use the book for that purpose. Field hockey and the Junior Classical League and violin lessons may be prerequisites for Smith and Williams. If, however, your child is aiming at a less prestigious institution, you may want to do no more or less than move to a tonier neighborhood. Then, you will have to worry not about whether your child will be admitted to said institution, but only what type of experience he will have once he gets there. CT

Truth

that is heart-deep

from pastors who can preach

Ralph Waldo Beeson, the founding benefactor of our school, was a man of few words. On one occasion he summed up his idea of the kind of students we are seeking to prepare for the service of the church. "They ought to be," he said, "pastors who can preach." At Beeson, we believe that the recovery of preaching is essential to the renewal of the church. What does the preacher have to say that the psychologist, politician, stock broker, or social commentator has not already said?

THE MAIN PART. The answer is with a preacher in whom the Word of God burns as a fire in the bones, one who preaches with fierce humility, yet also with unstinted audacity. In the tradition of the Reformation, preaching stands as the central sacramental moment of worship. As Luther put it, "The preaching and teaching of God's Word is the main part of all divine service."

HE MUST INCREASE. In my office there hangs over my desk a famous painting by Matthias Grünewald. It is a depiction of the crucifixion with the hands of Jesus reaching into the dark sky. At his side stands John the Baptist with an open Bible in one hand while, with the other, he points with his long, bony finger to the figure of Christ on the cross. Barely visible in Latin are these words, "He must increase, but I must decrease." This is the task of all true evangelical preaching. We say, "Don't believe in me, believe in Him; don't follow me, follow Him; I am not the way; He is the way, the truth, and the life."

SERVANT SHEPHERDS. There is a big difference between "pastors who can preach" and preachers who may also be pastors. A pastor who can preach is not a philosopher dispensing wisdom, nor a lawyer arguing a case, nor a general barking orders. A pastor is a shepherd, a servant leader, a fellow pilgrim who, like the prophet Ezekiel, walks alongside and sits down together with those to whom he has been sent to preach. Such preachers will speak the truth in love "dipping and seasoning all our words and sentences in our hearts before they come into our mouths...so that our auditors may plainly perceive that every word is heart-deep"—

George Herbert. To hear such a preacher is not merely to be inspired, challenged, or motivated. It is an occasion for divine epiphany.

Soli Deo Gloria!

Timothy George

Dean

Timothy George

SAMFORD UNIVERSITY
Birmingham, Alabama

FOR INFORMATION ABOUT BEESON DIVINITY SCHOOL, CALL 1-800-888-8266

Beeson is affiliated with the National Association of Evangelicals and is accredited by The Association of Theological Schools in the United States and Canada. Samford University is an Equal Opportunity Institution and welcomes applications for employment and educational programs from all individuals regardless of race, color, sex, disability, or national or ethnic origin.

"Augustine Who?"

A window on the Greek Christian world—and a model for contemporary theology and biblical study.

The Bible in Greek Christian Antiquity,

*edited and translated by Paul M. Blowers
(University of Notre Dame Press, 464 pp.; $60, hardcover; $40, paper). Reviewed by Christopher A. Hall, associate professor of biblical and theological studies at Eastern College, Saint Davids, Pennsylvania.*

The collision of worlds can be a rather jarring affair. My first intense exposure to Eastern Christianity took place in a graduate seminar entitled "Russian Orthodox Spirituality." The seminar was taught by Thomas Hopko, a well-known Orthodox theologian and gifted teacher. The seminar was an eye-opening experience. Orthodox understandings of the centrality of worship were fascinating. Theological explorations of the Trinity were challenging. Eastern hermeneutical approaches to reading and interpreting the Scripture intrigued me.

I recall offering the interpretive perspective of Augustine on a specific biblical text and receiving the surprisingly abrupt response of Professor Hopko: "Augustine who?" Rest assured that Hopko was familiar with Augustine. Why, then, the somewhat harsh comment? Perhaps Hopko spotted in me an inability or unwillingness to open myself to his world, a world inhabited by teachers who spoke and wrote in Greek, not Latin, and who had read the Bible in the context of Alexandria, Antioch, and Constantinople rather than Rome, Hippo, Wittenburg, or Geneva. He was convinced that pastors and teachers such as Irenaeus, Clement of Alexandria, Origen, Athanasius, Basil, Gregory of Nazianzus, and John Chrysostom had much to offer me, if only I was willing to listen.

Hopko was right. The hermeneutical lens of Greek Christian antiquity magnified concepts, characters, and themes that the evangelical tradition occasionally overlooked or blurred. This is not to say that early Greek interpreters did not have their own blind spots. It is to argue, however, that perspective regarding our own strengths and weaknesses is difficult to attain if we refuse to look beyond our theological and hermeneutical noses.

Readers interested in exploring the hermeneutical world of Greek Christian antiquity will discover a wealth of information and insight in The Bible in Greek Christian Antiquity. Respected scholars of early Greek Christianity such as Ronald Heine, Frederick Norris, Charles Kannengieser, and Douglas Burton-Christie offer analyses of a variety of topics related to how early Greek Christians read and interpreted the Bible.

Interested in how the Bible influenced the devotional practices of early Greek Christian communities? Five different essays explore this topic, with subjects ranging from the influence of the Bible on early Christian martyrologies to the Bible as a guide for early Christian travelers to the Holy Land. How about the use of the Bible in early doctrinal controversies? Charles Kannengieser walks the reader through the use of the Bible in the Arian controversy of the fourth century, while Alain Le Boulluec studies the use of the Bible among marginally orthodox groups in the second and third centuries. Readers interested in early Christian art, the use of the Bible in Greek inscriptions, and the use of the Bible by opponents of early Christianity will find essays discussing these topics.

Students representing the burgeoning interest among evangelicals in the writings and lives of the church fathers will not be disappointed. Ronald Heine, for instance, helps his readers understand how and why Origen, one of the most controversial of the Greek Fathers, read the Bible the way he did. Origen has been frequently viewed as an example of biblical hermeneutics gone bad, particularly because of his extensive use

Complete your degree... from home!

Learn more about Western's on-line bachelor's degree program in Management and Communications with a Christian world-view.

1-800-764-1383

Mention this ad and the $100 class reservation fee will be waived at the time of enrollment!

WESTERN
A CHRISTIAN LIBERAL ARTS COLLEGE

Adult Studies Office
Western Baptist College
5000 Deer Park Dr. SE
Salem, Oregon 97301

E-mail:
rtaylor@wbc.edu
or visit our site:
www.wbc.edu

Accredited by the Northwest
Association of Schools and Colleges of allegory in interpreting the Bible.

Heine guides the reader into Origen's interpretive world, explaining that Origen based his use of allegory, questionable though it may be for evangelical interpreters, on his firm belief that the same Spirit was speaking throughout the Bible, creating an underlying unity in the Scripture's various themes and narratives. Because Origen was absolutely convinced of the Bible's divine origin, he was confident that his search for a deeper symbolic or allegorical meaning in the biblical text was not a hermeneutical free fall in which hidden meanings are created out of thin air. No, the biblical narrative itself—from Genesis to Revelation—filled Origen's symbolic reservoir.

Origen would insist that his biblical interpretation, fanciful though it might appear to the modern reader, resulted from the prayerful detection of symbolic clues revealed through a comparison of text with text. As Origen read the entire biblical narrative in light of God's act to redeem humanity in Christ, he created a symbolic web of key "persons, places, and events in the Bible" that served as hermeneutical keys for understanding the deeper meaning the Holy Spirit had implanted in the biblical text.

Other Fathers would disagree with Origen's allegorizing penchant, as would most evangelical interpreters of the Bible. Unanimity reigns among the Fathers, though, regarding the qualifications of the person who would read Scripture well. For the Fathers, the Bible was to be studied, pondered, and exegeted within the context of prayer, worship, reverence, and holiness. The Fathers considered the Bible a holy book that opened its riches to those who themselves were progressing in holiness through the grace and power of the Spirit. The character of the exegete would determine in many ways what was seen or heard in the text itself. Character and exegesis were intimately related. As the Greek Father Athanasius put it, "Anyone who wants to look at sunlight naturally wipes his eye clear first, in order to make, at any rate, some approximation to the purity of that on which he looks."

Neither Athanasius nor other Greek Fathers such as Gregory of Nazianzus envisioned exegesis or theology as the academic activity of theological professors divorced from the life of the church or personal spiritual formation. Rather, the best exegesis took place within the community of the church. Surely this holistic, communal approach warrants a closer examination in our own time. CT

Real Ministry for REAL LIFE

Dr. John J. Davis, Professor of Old Testament

Grace Theological Seminary offers
M.A. and M.Div. programs in four tracks:
*Pastoral Ministries • Intercultural Ministries
Counseling • Youth and Family Ministries*

D.Min. programs are offered in two tracks:
Pastoral Ministries • Intercultural Ministries

Call Don Julian today for more information.

1-800-54-GRACE

200 Seminary Drive • Winona Lake, IN 46590
www.grace.edu • julianw@grace.edu

At Grace Theological Seminary, we place a high value on ministry. Whether you're planning to pastor a local church, counsel troubled families, minister to inner-city youth, or plant churches in the Middle East, we have the programs and the faculty to help make your calling a reality.

Dr. Ronald T. Clutter's History of Doctrine Class

GRACE
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

You want God's blessing on everything you do. And your business career is no exception. Whether you're an entrepreneur, corporate executive, retail merchant or sales representative, exposure to Judeo-Christian ideals at Regent will impact your future in a positive way. We offer fully accredited graduate business degrees and the guidance of a seasoned faculty committed to faith and scholarship. You may enroll in day or evening classes or pursue your M.B. A. or M.A. in management from your home or office through our Distance Education

CALL TODAY!
1-800-477-3642

REGENT
UNIVERSITY
SCHOOL OF BUSINESS

Program. A degree from Regent University's School of Business will help ensure that your business and God's business are the same business.

1000 Regent University Drive, Virginia Beach, VA 23464-9800 • World Wide Web: <http://www.regent.edu>
Regent University admits students of any disability, race, color, gender, and national or ethnic origin.

REFLECTIONS

Classic and contemporary excerpts

Hildegard of Bingen is increasingly recognized as one of the most remarkable women of the Middle Ages. She possessed a prodigious talent and has attracted the attention of musicians, historians, literary critics, scientists, and theologians. Her music has undergone a recent revival, as has interest in her writings and pictures. Born in 1098, Hildegard became a Benedictine nun at the age of 15, an abbess at 38, and in 1150 founded a new community near Bingen, in Germany's wooded Rhine valley. During her life, her reputation as visionary and healer grew, and she corresponded with kings and queens, monks and nuns, and laypeople. She died in 1179. This issue's Reflections page is devoted to some of her work to mark the 900th anniversary of her birth.

God's Word in Creation

No creature has meaning without the Word of God.

God's Word is in all creation, visible and invisible.

The Word is living, being, spirit, all verdant greening, all creativity.

This Word flashes out in every creature.

This is how the spirit is in the flesh—the Word is indivisible from God.

—Taken from Teachings of the Christian Mystics

Overcoming Evil

Man . . . does not rule over evil except when he refuses to do it. When he has truly done evil, he is its servant.

—Taken from The Book of the Rewards of Life, tr. Bruce W. Hozeski

The Soul As a Tree

The soul is in the body as the sap is in the tree; and the powers of the soul are like the figure of the tree. How is this so? Understanding in the soul is like the green vigour of the branches and the leaves of the tree. Will is like the flowers on the tree; mind like the first fruit bursting forth. But reason is like the fruit in the fullness of maturity; while sense is like the height and spread of the tree. And in the same way, the human body is strengthened and supported by the soul.

—Scivias (SC 14, 26), in Hildegard of Bingen, ed.

Fiona Bowie and Oliver Davies

A Call for Renewal

Those who willingly endure poverty in my name are truly worthy of my love; while those who through their greed would gladly have worldly riches, but are not able to have them, lose the profit of their labour. Yet he who seeks riches to satisfy in them my will and not his greed, will have in my house the reward of glory for his good will.

So too, he who seeks the power of

Praise to the Trinity

*Praise to the Trinity
Who is sound and life.
Creator and sustainer*

*Of all beings.
The angels praise You,
Who in the splendour
Of your hidden mysteries
Pour out life abundant.*

—Symphonia Armonie
Celestium Revelationum

glory because of his bragging arrogance and not for the glory of my name—seems to me like a stinking corpse. But he who seeks glory for the sake not of his own arrogance but of my renown, will appear full of glory in my Kingdom.

—Scivias (SC II 6, 92) in Hildegard of Bingen, ed.

Fiona Bowie and Oliver Davies

The Will

The will is like a fire, baking each deed as if in a furnace. Bread is baked so that people may be nourished by it and be able to live. So too the will is the strength of the whole work, for it starts by kneading it and when it is firm adds the yeast and pounds it severely; and, thus preparing the work in contemplation as if it were bread, it bakes it to perfection by the full action of its ardour, and so makes a greater food for humans in the work they do than in the bread they eat. A person stops eating from time to time, but the work of the will goes on until the soul leaves the body.

—Scivias, Book One, taken from The Wisdom of Hildegard of Bingen, comp. by Fiona Bowie

God's Work

Everything that God has effected has been perfected in Love, Humility and Peace. Human beings, therefore, should esteem Love, embrace Humility and grasp Peace.

—De Operatione Dei, taken from The Wisdom of Hildegard of Bingen, comp. by Fiona Bowie

"Hello. We'd like to talk to you about Jesus."

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

Carolina University of Theology

EARN YOUR DEGREE AT HOME

YOU ALREADY LIVE ON CAMPUS!

Going to seminary or graduate school once meant packing up the family station wagon and the rental truck so you could move to a strange city, get a minimum wage job, and go in debt. Those days are over! Through Carolina University you can complete and accredited Bachelors of arts, Masters, or Doctorate degree without leaving your home, your ministry, or your job.

TUITION FINANCING AVAILABLE

AREAS OF STUDY INCLUDE:

*Biblical StudiesMinistryChristian Education
TheologyChristian Counseling Psychology*

FOR MORE INFORMATION WRITE OR CALL

Carolina University of Theology
113 South Oak Street
Lincolnton, NC 28092

(704) 736-9901 (704) 736-9903 FAX
E-Mail CUT@TNTIE.COM

Now you don't need to choose between your ministry and an MA degree

At Simpson Graduate School, you can earn an MA degree through intensive one-week sessions spaced over three years. Or simply enroll in individual sessions that suit your needs.

MA in Missiology

MA in Christian Ministry:

- Church Education
- Diversified Ministry
- Pastoral Ministry
- Church Planting & Growth
- Preaching
- Youth Ministry

SIMPSON GRADUATE SCHOOL

530-224-5606 800-598-2493

2211 College View Dr.

Redding, CA 96003

www.simpsonca.edu

Columbia Evangelical Seminary

Formerly Faraston Theological Seminary

offers Distance Learning
Programs through
Mentorship Studies
Earn your degree at home

1-800-768-3997

To request information 24 hours a day

- ▶ Majors in Apologetics, Bible, Theology, Philosophy, Ministry, more.
- ▶ Work one-on-one with one of our more than 80 scholars throughout your entire degree program.
- ▶ You may bring an outside Mentor to your program.

To talk, call 1-360-577-8039

Faraston@tdn.com
http://www.Faraston.edu

Columbia Evangelical Seminary
P.O. Box 847, Longview, WA 98632

I have been challenged to do better research and
be a better student of the Word of God.

TOM STANCZAK

a '96 MA graduate from the Bible/Theology department is from Poland. He and his wife Ann plan to return to Poland this summer to begin a church-planting ministry in Wroclaw. The Stanczaks will also help to produce the Polish Theological Journal. They are being sent by their home church in Wheaton, Bethany Chapel, and by Christian Missions in Many Lands.

Admissions Director

Wheaton College Graduate School

Wheaton, Illinois 60187-5593 • Phone: 1-800-888-0141

Wheaton College complies with federal and state requirements for nondiscrimination on the basis of handicap, sex, race, color, national or ethnic origin in admissions and access to its programs and activities

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

We're training servant leaders.

Interested?

1-800-467-AGTS

ASSEMBLIES OF GOD
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
1435 N. Glenstone Ave.
Springfield, MO 65803
417-268-1000 • www.agts.edu

The NEXT GREAT LEAP
for equipping church leaders is really
a STEP BACK.

Back to the way Jesus himself
equipped and trained the 12. At DENVER
SEMINARY, we're following the example of the Master Professor with an emphasis on hands-on learning directed by EXPERIENCED MENTORS. Learn more about the seminary education with an innovative approach to knowing, being and doing. We borrowed it from the best!

1-800-922-3040 Ext. 278
e-mail: admit@densem.edu
www.gospelcom.net/densem/

DENVER SEMINARY

P.O. Box 10,000 • Denver, CO 80250

NOW IS THE
TIME !
PURSUE YOUR MINISTRY EDUCATION WITH

Graduate School
HOUSTON
Of Theology

"Making Ministry Meaningful"

Doctor of Ministry
Master of Divinity
Master of Arts

1311 HOLMAN STREET
HOUSTON, TEXAS 77004

713.942.9505

Visit our web site :

<http://www.flash.net/~hgst>
email: hgst@flash.net

Two Distinctives
That Characterize
Our Masters Degree
In Organizational Leadership.

Some leaders lead like lions, focusing on efficiency and productivity. Some lead like lambs, focusing on compassion and community. The Organizational Leadership program at PCB Graduate School emphasizes the development of professionally effective and relationally healthy Christian leaders and organizations in church, parachurch and business settings. This values-driven program provides Christian professionals with a flexible learning environment that merges organizational theory and practice. If you desire training in balanced Christian leadership, contact Jay R. Desko, Ph.D. at jdesko@pcb.edu or 800.5.PCB.GRAD.

Philadelphia College Of Bible
Graduate School

Luther Seminary, the largest of the eight seminaries of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA), has 45 teaching faculty and a student body of almost 800, including about 100 men and women from churches
other than the ELCA.

Degree Programs

- Master of Divinity
- Master of Arts
- Master of Religious Education
- Master of Sacred Music
- Master of Theology
- Doctor of Philosophy
- Doctor of Ministry

Special Programs

- youth and family ministry
- ministry with the aging
- cross-cultural ministry
- Islamic studies

The 40-acre, wooded, rolling campus is half way between the downtown areas of Minneapolis and St. Paul.

For More Information

Check out Luther Seminary's home page, www.luthersem.edu, or call the Admissions Office: (612) 641-3521;
e-mail: jsaarine@luthersem.edu

LUTHER SEMINARY
2481 Como Ave. + St. Paul, MN 55108

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

AFLBS

Just the Bible. Just $4,500. Just 160 young believers. And you!

- A two-year evangelical school of the Bible
- *College transfers*Growing enrollment
- *Lakeside campus in the western suburbs of Minneapolis*Seminary adjoining
- *Room, board, tuition and fees — $4,470

Association Free Lutheran Bible School

3120 E. Medicine Lake Blvd.

Plymouth, MN 55441

1-612-544-9501

www.aflc.org • biblesch@aflc.org

CRANMER THEOLOGICAL HOUSE

P.O. Box 52591
Shreveport, La. 71135

An Anglican School of Ministry in the Tradition of the English Reformation

FOR INFORMATION CALL:

1-800-REC-0910

(1-800-732-0910)

An outstanding opportunity for residence study with leading Christian Scholars. An EARLY WHILE YOU LEARN program is available for incoming students in the 1996-1998 academic year.

IN CENTRAL CALIFORNIA & BRITISH COLUMBIA:

Training Men and Women in Kingdom Mission and Ministry since 1955.

- 188 credit students and 263 auditors from 29 denominations and 13 countries.
 - Evangelical/Anabaptist Theological Orientation.
 - Degree Programs: M.Div. (90 units); MA (60 units) in Theology, NT, OT, Church Ministry or Marriage, Family and Child Counseling.
- Also Diploma in Christian Studies or Diploma in Integration: Psychology and Theology (27 units); or Certificates (15 units).

- Fully Accredited by ATS and WASC.

Mennonite Brethren Biblical Seminary

4824 E. Butler Ave. • Fresno, California 93727

Call Jim Holm at 1-800-251-MBBS or (209) 452-1702

http://www.fresno.edu/mbseminary

E-mail: MBSeminary@aol.com

Also ask about our BC Centre in Abbotsford, British Columbia

27 years of training leaders in Christian Counseling

MS in Professional Counseling from Georgia State University

The PSI/GSU program offers extensive training in counseling, theology, and the integration of psychology and Christian faith.

PSI/Institute of Clinical Theology

Post-Master's/Doctoral professional integration program (weekend format)

2505 Mount Paran Rd., NW Bldg. 2

Atlanta, Georgia 30327

Telephone: 404-233-3949

Internet: www.psi-atl.edu

Global Connection

Off Campus and On Line

Without disrupting your family or leaving your present Ministry, you can complete your degree program. With Bethany, you can study off campus and on line via the World Wide Web. At your computer, in your home or office, or whether you use the mail, you can have a dialogue with Bethany's faculty, students, or alumni. Bethany will not take second place when it comes to providing nontraditional education. Bethany... A Seminary of Distinction.

The Bethany Degree Program... Bachelor's, Master's and Doctorate Degrees in the following areas:

- Biblical Studies
- Theology, Missions
- Pastoral Ministry
- Religious Education
- Christlike Counseling

Bethany is an independent, Christian institution with a trans-denominational student body. Bethany is designed for equipping Pastors, Missionaries, and Evangelists. Bethany accepts the sovereignty and infallibility of the Word of God.

Advanced standing, credit for college transfer credits, portfolio Learning Assessment for life experience, and credit arrangements are possible.

Bethany Worldwide

BETHANY WORLDWIDE COLLEGE AND THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

2573 Hodgesville Road / P.O. Box 1944 / Dothan, AL 36302

Ph: (334) 793-3189 • Fax: (334) 793-4344

E-mail: bethanybc@ala.net

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

Dallas Theological Seminary

offers solid biblical and theological preparation in several degree programs, including:

- Master of Theology
- Evangelism and Discipleship track
- Cross-cultural Ministries track
- Master of Arts in Cross-cultural Ministries
- Master of Arts in Biblical Exegesis and Linguistics
- TESOL Certificate

"America is more culturally diverse than ever before. We'll train you for ministry in this multicultural reality and in the world at large."

Dr. Michael Posovik
Chairman of World Missions and Intercultural Studies

3909 Swiss Avenue
Dallas, TX 75204
For information call
(800) 992-0998

Within the context of its theological convictions and mission, Dallas Theological Seminary does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, sex, disability, or national and ethnic origin.

The Christian in the Modern World

- Listening to the Word
- And to the World
- With John Stott
- For internationals
- For lay men and women
- For ten weeks
- In London, In the Fall
- Sept. 21-Nov. 27

The Institute for Contemporary Christianity

Vere St, London W1 UK
Ph 0171 629 3615
Fax 0171 629 1284
Contemporary_Christianity_Edu
@msn.com

Study in Israel

Jerusalem Campus

Biblical History • New Testament Backgrounds • Middle Eastern Studies • Hebrew Language

- M.A. programs
- graduate & undergraduate semester abroad
- 2 and 3 week programs
- credits transferable

JERUSALEM UNIVERSITY COLLEGE

1-800-891-9408

formerly: Institute of Holy Land Studies
4249 East State St., Suite 203, Rockford, IL 61108

PASTORAL MINISTRIES

Educating leaders who are Authentically Christian and Culturally Sensitive

- Degree programs:
Doctor of Ministry
Master of Divinity
Master of Arts
Master of Theological Studies
Master of Religious Education

- Features:
Biblical/Theological Foundation
Skill Development
Church-based philosophy
External Studies

GRAND RAPIDS BAPTIST SEMINARY

1001 E. Beltline NE • Grand Rapids, MI 49525

Call today
1-800-697-1133

MAMFT, MAC

Family Counseling

It's amazing how many marriages break up because of money. Yet that's just one of the problems that plague the modern American family. Which is why RTS offers programs in Marriage and Family Therapy and in Counseling. With 66 hours of classwork and 500 hours of clinical supervision, they're firmly rooted in practical experience and biblical principles. So you can help hurting people see that in Christ they have all the riches they need.

In Jackson 800-543-2703
In Orlando 800-752-4382
In Charlotte 800-755-2429
RTS@rts.edu

REFORMED THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
Make It Count

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

Why choose between academic rigor and a loving, supportive Christ-centered community?

You can have both at ABSW

- evangelical and ecumenical
- low student-to-professor ratio
- situated in the beautiful SF Bay area

David L. Schlerr, Recruitment Director
American Baptist Seminary of the West
2606 Dwight Way
Berkeley, California 94704-3029
510-841-1905

The World Is
Our Campus

Luther Rice Seminary

*The Most Recognized
Name in Christian Distance Education*

- Bachelor
- Master
- Doctor of Ministry

Luther Rice Seminary
3038 Evans Mill Road
Lithonia, GA 30038
1-770-484-1204
1-800-442-1577

E-mail: lrs@lrs.edu

Web Page: www.lrs.edu

Serving Since 1962

*Beginning a third century
of service*

SINCE 1794

Preparing men and women for pastoral ministry and lay leadership in all phases of the Church's outreach

Pittsburgh
Theological Seminary

www.pts.edu
1-800-451-4194
616 N. Highland Ave.
Pittsburgh, PA 15213

TRAINING LEADERS for the HARVEST

Accredited

MASTER of MINISTRY Degree
Emphasis:

- Church Revitalization/
Planting
- Urban Ministries/Missions

Featuring:

- One-Week Modules
- Renown Guest Professors
from Leading Seminaries
- Spiritual • Practical
- Affordable
- Pentecostal/Charismatic

CLASSES IN OKLAHOMA AND GEORGIA

Dr. Garnet E. Pike, Dean
7210 Northwest 39th Expressway
Bethany, Oklahoma 73008
Phone: 405-789-7661, Ext. 3447

Multnomah Biblical Seminary

MISSION: Ministry

DR. BRUCE FONG: MBS faculty; Promise Keeper's keynote speaker and co-founder of Clear Creek Community Church.

DR. PAMELA REEVE: MBS Women's Ministry program adviser; pioneered the first women's ministry program in the U.S. at Multnomah.

MULTNOMAH BIBLICAL SEMINARY is the perfect "mission headquarters" for you, with experienced instructors, tested programs, agency partners (Mission Portland Networking; International Renewal Ministries), and an urban mission field at your doorstep. If you want to join a faith-building community and put solid Biblical training to work in a vital ministry internship, then you must explore Multnomah Biblical Seminary. There may be no better place to prepare for the mission God has for you.

KEVIN MOUNT:

MBS Grad Class of '93; Director of Education and Career Services at the Portland Rescue Mission.

MULTNOMAH BIBLICAL SEMINARY
"Where Ministry is the Word"

Mail: 8435 N.E. Glisan St.
Portland, Oregon 97220
Toll Free: 1-800-275-4672
Internet: www.multnomah.edu
Email: admiss@multnomah.edu

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

MASTER OF ARTS IN PROFESSIONAL PSYCHOLOGY

Designed especially for those seeking to:

- Prepare for Ph.D. studies
- Improve counseling skills
- Prepare for service in professional psychology

Marriage and Family emphasis provides academic, practical, and clinical experience in marital and family therapy.

All courses integrate psychological theory and practice within a Christian worldview. Join a community of learners to develop as a Christian professional.

GENEVA COLLEGE
PRO CHRISTO ET PATRIA

For Information:
Geneva College
Beaver Falls, PA 15010
1-800-847-8255
LOCAL 412-847-6542

CHAFER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Orange, CA
Dr. George Meisinger, Dean

Free Grace

Sufficiency of Scripture
Literal in Hermeneutics
Emphasis on Greek
& Hebrew Exegesis
Correspondence Courses
1(800)68-GRACE

"A superior education without the towering costs"

E-mail us at cts@school.com
www.bible.org, "other sites"

1 9 9 8 National Institute for New Church Development

Sponsored by Duke Divinity School
September 13-18, 1998
Leesburg, Florida
(near Orlando, Florida)

Leaders:

Donald E. Miller
author of *Reinventing American*¹ Protestantism: Christianity in the Next Millennium and Stephen C. Compton author of *Growing New Churches:

A Manual for New Congregational
Development* with G. Steven Sallee

For information call
Duke Divinity School's Center for Continuing Theological Education,
toll-free (888) 845-4216
or (919) 660-3448.

Wheaton Graduate School's Biggest Classroom

Professional training in camp ministry, wilderness programming, & adventure education
since 1951.

Masters & Certificate in Camp Ministry.

Honey Rock ■ Wheaton College ■ Wheaton, IL 60187
1 - 8 0 0 - 3 2 5 - 8 7 1

Knox is there!

Knox is there with solid orthodox, reformed
theology to equip you to change the world,
one life at a time.

Join us

by the sea in Fort Lauderdale or in the mountains of Colorado Springs.

• Doctor of Ministry
• Master of Divinity
• Christian Ministry
• Biblical and
Theological Studies
• Pastoral Counseling
• Religion and Society

KNOX
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Fort Lauderdale: 1-800-344-5669
Colorado Springs: 1-800-554-5669
D. James Kennedy, Chancellor

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

PREPARE FOR IMPACT.

If you want to have an impact on the world, choose the seminary that can have the greatest impact on you. At Columbia, we focus first and foremost on your spiritual life, then challenge you to academic excellence and give you practical ministry skills. Our customized degree programs offer the flexibility you need to build on your past as you prepare for the future.

Become a world Christian who serves God with excellence. Call Columbia today at 1-800-777-2227.

Columbia Biblical Seminary
& Graduate School of Missions

A division of Columbia International University
7415 Monticello Rd. • P.O. Box 3122 • Columbia, SC 29230-3122
803.754.4100 • Toll Free 1.800.777.2227 • www.ciu.edu

Preparing World Christians To Know Him And To Make Him Known
CALL FOR OUR EXTENSION CATALOG

A Graduate School with
M. Phil. F. and Ph. D. 's
in these areas:

*Philosophical Theology
History of Philosophy
Philosophy of Science
Aesthetics
Political Theory
Systematic Theology
Biblical Studies
Systematic Philosophy
One-year master's in Worldview/Education.*

For more info contact

Institute for Christian Studies

229 College Street
Toronto, Ontario, Canada M5T 1R4
(416)979-2331

TRULY A BIBLICAL ALTERNATIVE

THE REFORMED EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Church Growth Office
211 Byrne, Houston, TX 77009

For over 122 years, the Reformed Episcopal Church has remained faithful to the inerrant word of God, powerfully proclaiming the unchanging Gospel of Jesus Christ and worshipping Him in Spirit and Truth using the biblical and time-honored Book of Common Prayer, The Reformed Episcopal Church is rapidly expanding her witness throughout the United States and the whole world.

FOR INFORMATION CALL:
1-800-REC-3433

SERVE YOUR COUNTRY WHILE STILL IN SEMINARY.

The Army needs ministers and seminary students to meet the spiritual needs of America's soldiers and their families.

The Army and Army Reserve have even developed a special program for seminary students that won't interfere with your studies. It's called the Army Chaplain Candidate program. And it enables you to use your summer vacation to minister to the diverse needs of America's troops here in the U.S. or overseas.

The need is great, but the rewards are even greater. For specific information call 1 800 USA ARMY or visit the Army Chaplain website at www.goarmy.com

ARMY CHAPLAIN CORPS
BE ALL YOU CAN BE

S U M M E R • P R O G R A M S

Extremists

Well, so they don't look like extremists. But learning can be an extreme risk, especially when it's life-transforming.

Join us this summer in an international community of fellowship and worship for extreme study and play. Learn during our Postmodernity Seminar (May 25-June 5) with Larry Crabb and Stan Grenz. Study during our Summer School (June 29-July 31) with Craig Barnes, Marva Dawn, Colin Gunton, James Houston, Tremper Longman III, Eugene Peterson, Alvin Plantinga and Luci Shaw, and more.

This summer, come to Regent. And enter the world of the extremists.

Regent
College

AN INTERNATIONAL
GRADUATE SCHOOL
OF CHRISTIAN STUDIES

Admissions Dept C058
5800 University Blvd., Vancouver, BC Canada V6T 2E4
☎ (604) 224-3245 Fax 224-3097
Toll free 1-800-663-8664
Website: www.regent-college.edu
Admissions e-mail: RegentCollege@compuserve.com

*Real
Students.*

Real Stories.

I'm not looking for a short-cut to ministry.
I want a place where I have to dig deep.

Todd and Elizabeth (Th.M. '98) sang at the 1997 graduation.
They were married July 12.

TODD SHIVELY was walking across Purdue's campus during his days as an undergraduate when another student casually called herself a born again pagan. Todd countered, identifying himself as a born again Christian.

"She was shocked," recalls Todd. "She thought I was too smart to be a Christian."

The incident instilled in Todd a desire to be able to present the gospel in terms that are intellectually respectable. And that's why he's at Gordon-Conwell.

"I want to dig deep into the basics. I appreciate Gordon-Conwell's high regard for serious study in languages, theology, and church history.

"It's almost funny—if you see a student with a ring of Hebrew or Greek vocabulary cards, you're pretty sure they are from Gordon-Conwell!"

Todd has also been able to participate in the Boston Theological Institute (BTI), a group of nine seminaries that includes Gordon-Conwell.

"I took Studies in Religion and Culture at Harvard University Divinity School. It was both challenging and enriching," says Todd.

"We shouldn't avoid honest questions from intelligent people just because we're too lazy to do our theological homework. I think that hard study makes it easier to share the gospel!"

SOUTH
HAMILTON
Massachusetts

BOSTON
Massachusetts

CHARLOTTE
North Carolina
(800) 600-1212

Gordon-Conwell
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

(800) 428-7329

www.gcts.edu

THE MARKETPLACE

Cost: 46 cents per character (each space & punctuation counts as a character); avg. 45 characters per line. Min. $39.10 (85 characters). CT blind box number available at $6 each insertion; checkmark box $14 each insertion. Supply permanent street address and phone number. Ads set display style: $276/column inch. Combination package available for CHRISTIANITY TODAY, CHRISTIAN READER, & YOUR CHURCH: 2 magazines—44 cents per character per insertion; 3 magazines—42 cents per character per insertion. Display style: 2 magazines—$263 per insertion; 3 magazines—$252 per insertion. All classified ads will now be automatically placed on CHRISTIANITY ONLINE at no additional charge. IMPORTANT: Prepayment & written confirmation required to process ads. Visa, MasterCard, or personal check accepted; fax (630) 260-0114. Employment ads are given priority. All other ads will be placed in first available issue. Deadline for reservation or cancellation is seven weeks prior to actual issue date. Address correspondence to: Classified Advertising, Christianity Today, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

KOREAN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH of Metro Detroit is seeking a full-time assoc. pastor for EM. Responsibilities: plan/conduct English worship services, direct/coordinate programs for the English Ministry, including recruiting/training leaders. Qualifications: can be ordained in PCUSA or credentials transferable to PCUSA, fluent in English, working knowledge of Korean language/culture preferred. Required documents: PCUSA Personal Information Form, audiotape of sermon/video preferred, submit by 6/30/98. Submit to: Thomas Park, 4727 Rolling Ridge, W. Bloomfield, MI 48323; (313) 832-0011 10 A.M.—3 P.M. EST; (248) 626-0249 after 8 P.M. EST. Please see: www.kpcmd.org for information about the church and the English Ministry.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR CHILDREN'S CURRICULUM

Group Publishing, a leading Christian publisher, is in search of an associate editor for children's curriculum. This position will be responsible for assigning and editing preschool and early elementary children's curriculum and will participate in the development of book and curriculum products. Candidates should have two or more years experience working with children in a school or church ministry setting, and demonstrate strong verbal and written skills. Prior writing or editing experience, church ministry experience, week-day club, or children's church experience would be helpful. Apply in person or send résumé to: Group Publishing, Inc., 1515 Cascade Ave., Loveland, CO 80538, Attn: HR. For additional information, call Katie Sherick at (800) 635-0404. EOE.

DIRECTOR OF MUSIC & WORSHIP

135-year-old church with 3 different styles of services every Sunday (formal, "blended," and seeker) seeks person who can lead entire music program. Seeking person with musical breadth & heart for ministry. Contact: Russ Ritchel, First Presbyterian Church, 300 N. Cherry, Winston-Salem, NC 27101; phone: (336) 723-1621.

DIRECTOR OF DEVELOPMENT for Pioneer Clubs, dedicated to Christian education of children. Need experienced professional to manage total development program. Must have experience with various acquisition techniques and planned giving. Experience with Pioneer Clubs a plus! Salaried with benefits. Send résumé to Mary Hackman, Pioneer Clubs, Box 788, Wheaton, IL 60189.

400 SMILING YOUNG FACES are searching for a children's director at First Presbyterian Church. This fast-growing dynamic church of 1,500 members is in a loving community of enthusiastic Christians. F/T pos.; full benefits, excellent salary. Consider becoming part of these precious lives. Write us sharing your vision for children's ministries, 1001 S. Rankin, Edmond, OK 73034. Attn: Sandy Arnold; phone: (405) 341-3602.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

SENIOR PASTOR

10-year old Presbyterian Church in America located in Dayton, Ohio, is seeking candidates for position of senior pastor. Unique opportunity, a diverse and dynamic congregation, with both traditional and contemporary services. Over 150 members and weekly attendance of about 250. Music is one of the many outstanding qualities of the church. Please send a résumé package and sermon tape to Bryan Erdmann, 440 Windsor Park Dr., Dayton, Ohio 45459.

MINISTER OF MUSIC & WORSHIP

Growing 500+ congregation in greater SF Bay Area seeks full-time minister of music to conduct adult choir and develop music ministry to and with all ages. Looking for demonstrated commitment to Christ, a sense of call, and versatile musical ability. Lead worship with energy, skill, creativity, and love for diverse artistic styles. Write Music Search Committee, First Presbyterian Church, 1965 Colfax Street, Concord, CA 94520.

TEACHER: $26,000; Christian college prep school. Opening in Elementary, Science, Math, English, History, coaching opportunities. Tel: (954) 966-7995; fax: (954) 961-1359.

PASTOR OF WORSHIP AND MUSIC

Paradise Alliance Church, 1,200 attendance, with 90-voice choir, orchestra, drama team, youth choir, ensembles, blended styles. Candidate must have contagious faith, strong relational and pastoral skills, be a team player, with excellent musical skills. Please send résumé to Paradise Alliance Church. Attn: Search Committee, 6491 Clark Road, Paradise, CA 95969; phone (530) 877-7069.

EXPERIENCED YOUTH PASTOR

Do you have a team approach to ministry? Can you build a team of lay and pro staff to minister to teens? Do you have at least 7 years exp. with a group of 100 or more? We are a 3,000-attende EFCA, looking for a leader for our youth min. Send résumé to Pastor Kevin Dixon, Ev. Free Church of Hershey, P.O. Box 648, Hershey, PA 17033 or e-mail: 102036.2147@compuserv.com

DIRECTOR OF CHILDREN'S MINISTRY

Christ Episcopal Church, a dynamic, growing church of 2,000 in metro Kansas City, is seeking a full-time director of children's ministry. The church's vision is to "make disciples who make disciples for Jesus Christ." Working on a staff team of 13, the director's ministry will be to raise up leaders to provide an exceptional, innovative, and creative evangelistic and discipleship ministry for children. Committed Christians (from any tradition) with energy, vision, and proven experience in children's ministry leadership are invited to apply. For more information or to apply, fax, e-mail, or send résumé to: Alison Barfoot, Christ Church, 5500 W. 91st Street, Overland Park, KS 66207. Fax: (913) 648-0854; e-mail: AlisonBar@aol.com

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

SENIOR PASTOR/HEAD OF STAFF

Palm Desert Community Presbyterian Church is a vital, 1,000-member, debt-free congregation in the southern California desert, 120 mi. southeast of Los Angeles. Our Christ-centered mission-statement church seeks an experienced preacher-leader to inspire us through passionate biblical preaching and teaching. The varied interests, goals, and ages of our involved congregation require a leader with strong organizational and interpersonal skills. President Eisenhower and his friends played a central role in the building and growth of our church. We believe we are poised on the cusp of new church growth as we look to the new century. Our growing valley population of 270,000 includes young professionals, college students, retirees, snowbirds, agricultural and tourism leaders, and a growing Hispanic community. Competitive compensation package. Send PIF to Armond Deane, PNC Chairman, P.O. Box 1896, Palm Desert, CA 92261; fax: (760) 345-8173.

SEVEN RIVERS PRESBYTERIAN (PCA), a growing church of 1,200 in sunny central Florida, seeks a director of music and worship; (352) 746-6200 or www.xtalwind.net/~srpc

BECOME AN INTERNATIONAL PARTNER WITH HABITAT FOR HUMANITY. Habitat for Humanity is a nonprofit, ecumenical, Christian housing ministry. Habitat for Humanity International has international partner positions available in our Africa/Middle East, Asia/Pacific, Latin America/Caribbean, and Europe/CIS affiliates. International partners are described as persons or married couples who work in countries overseas, serving in many capacities, such as construction generalists, affiliate developers, financial supporters, international program developers, and fund-raisers. IPs must have demonstrated experience in group leadership, working independently with minimal direct supervision, problem-solving, and cultural sensitivity in diverse areas, as well as have the willingness to communicate Habitat's Christian roots and principles. International partners must be able to serve overseas for a commitment of three years. A three-week orientation will be held at the international headquarters during the fall and spring, prior to host country training. Benefits include: a monthly living allowance, housing, re-entry escrow, educational allowance for dependents, and health insurance. International partners must be at least 21 years of age. International experience, with university degree, and second language preferred. If interested in applying, please mail, fax, or e-mail résumé to Habitat for Humanity International, 121 Habitat Street, Americus, GA 31709. Our e-mail address is: IPP@habitat.org; visit our Web site at: www.habitat.org; and the fax number is (912) 924-0641, Attn. IPPS. Please state if your country of choice is Africa/Middle East, Latin America/Caribbean, Asia/Pacific and Europe/CIS.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

ELEMENTARY TEACHER opening with library science degree or ability to teach Latin in a Christian school of Reformed heritage. Please send inquiries to Covenant Christian School, a ministry of Covenant Presbyterian Church, PCA, 2801 Stepp Drive, Columbia, SC 29204; fax: (803) 782-7309, or e-mail: leeferg@scsn.net

CALVIN COLLEGE

VICE PRESIDENT FOR DEVELOPMENT

Calvin College seeks applicants for the position of Vice President for Development. This position gives leadership to the development operations of the college, including vision, yearly and strategic planning, management, and oversight of all fundraising efforts. This position also provides leadership and administration skills for the management of personnel and budgets relating to fundraising activities. This person will serve as the senior professional for planned giving and be responsible for a limited number of major donors. This person will serve on the president's cabinet and as staff to the board of trustees. Calvin College is an independent, comprehensive liberal arts college which is closely affiliated with the Christian Reformed Church of North America and dedicated to Christ-centered education, scholarship, and service. The successful candidate must have and display a Christian commitment compatible with the mission of the college and an eagerness to build financial support for the current and future needs of the college through fundraising. Qualifications include management experience and/or training; accounting/fiscal management knowledge; excellent interpersonal and organizational skills; effective writing and speaking ability; willingness to travel; a minimum B.A. degree, with graduate degree preferred; previous demonstrated success in fundraising; knowledge of Calvin alumni and the Christian Reformed Church. Résumés with the names of three references should be submitted by May 20, 1998, to Human Resources, Calvin College, 3201 Burton SE, Grand Rapids, MI 49546, or fax to (616) 957-6832.

SR.PASTOR, AMSTERDAM

We are Crossroads International Church in Amsterdam, Netherlands, a seeker-sensitive, interdenominational, contemporary English-speaking, small-group based church of 500+ people. We are committed to reach the international community and the Dutch with the gospel in one of the most spiritually needy corners of Europe. You are a skillful leader and inspirational communicator with international, cross-cultural experience and a pastor in a seeker-sensitive ministry. We seek a team builder as well as a team player to provide leadership, motivation, and vision to our growing and dynamic ministry. For more information and guidelines on how to apply, write to bruce@dingman.com <mailto:bruce@dingman.com> or fax: (805) 778-9288.

DUE TO GROWTH AND EXPANSION, Belhaven College seeks those faculty who are excited to serve in the following areas at a college that prepares students to serve Christ Jesus in their occupation, relationships, and in the world of ideas.

- Director of the Library (Librarian master's required)
- Sports Science Faculty (Ph.D. & Athletic Training Certification required)
- Theater Department Chair (MFA required)
- English Department Chair (Ph.D. required)
- Business Administration Faculty in Memphis (DBA or Ph.D. required)

Send vita to Daniel C. Fredericks, Provost, 1500 Peachtree St., Jackson, MS 39202. Minorities are encouraged to apply.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

PHILOSOPHY POSITION at Talbot School of Theology, Biola University. Full-time, tenure-track, assistant- or associate-level faculty position in philosophy. Ph.D. required. Open now, with likelihood of beginning in Fall 1999. Competence sought in two of the following three areas: metaphysics, epistemology, and philosophy of religion. Additional area of competence open. To receive application materials, qualified persons committed to the theological position of the school are encouraged to send a letter of interest accompanied by a CV to: Lisa Vasquez, Department Secretary, Talbot Department of Philosophy/Ethics, Biola University, 13800 Biola Ave., LaMirada, CA 90639; lisa_vasquez@peter.biola.edu; fax: (562) 903-4759.

ASSOCIATE PASTOR OF DISCIPLESHIP/EDUCATION

First Baptist of Cadillac, a Christ-honoring church 100 miles north of Grand Rapids, MI, seeks a full-time associate pastor of leadership development. Two other pastors desire a team-spirited, self-motivated, experienced, kingdom-minded individual who desires, and is developing, an intimate walk with Christ. This 400+, multiple-service congregation is preparing for a heaven-sent revival harvest and needs someone who will multiply himself by developing people in the area of outreach and nurturing/maturing new believers. Those who communicate well, are purpose driven, people minded, and Christ centered may send résumés to First Baptist Church, 125 Stimson St., Cadillac, MI 49601.

TYNDALE HOUSE PUBLISHERS, a Midwest Christian publisher, is seeking innovative, creative individuals to develop new book and Bible products. Work with teams to generate Focus on the Family book product ideas. Conceptualize and prototype new Bible and Dr. Dobson products. Assist with product strategy, analysis of product and product proposals. Must possess 3-5 years experience in publishing, preferably in product development. An English and/or Bible background. Excellent administrator, strong communicator, organized and flexible. An understanding of the CBA market is a plus. Join the Tyndale family and be a part of an energetic, growth-oriented, team environment. For immediate consideration, please send your résumé to: Tyndale House Publishers, Human Resources, P.O. Box 80, Wheaton, IL 60189-0080, or fax: (630) 668-9092. Visit our Web site at: www.tyndale.com.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES: Advent Group Ministries, a Christian social service agency located in San Jose, CA, seeks resident counselors, night counselors, summer interns for adolescent residential treatment programs. Competitive salary, benefits. Residential positions provide room & board. Contact Deborah Norris: (408) 281-0708; (1-800) 98ADVENT; fax: (408) 281-2658.

AMERICA'S FOREMOST INNER-CITY FREE children's camp. Lifeguards and camp recreational workers needed. Camp Penuel Ministry now leads 1,000 to Christ yearly. Write: Camp Penuel, Box 367, Ironton, MO 63650, or call: (573) 546-3020.

NATIVE-SPEAKING ENGLISH TEACHER for Hong Kong Christian schools: 2-year English-teaching experience required. U.S. $5,000/mo. Call: (630) 942-0000.

MAKE A CHANGE! Teach English, business, or computers in China, Russia, Muslim Asia, or C. Europe. Call ESI at: (1-800) 895-7955. All college majors/degrees welcome.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

MINISTRY PLACEMENT for pastors & associates or churches. Call (503) 357-7830 or Believer's Dynamics, POB 596, Forest Grove, OR 97116. Since 1977.

EXECUTIVE OPPORTUNITY

Trinity Western University invites fully qualified male or female candidates to apply for the following position. The successful candidate will have fully embraced the beliefs and lifestyle of an evangelical Christian, will be fully supportive of the university's mission, and will be able to contribute positively to the advancement of this evangelical Christian community.

VICE PRESIDENT FOR STUDENT LIFE

The vice president for student life reports to the president and will be generally responsible for mission, key processes, leadership team, assessment, fiscal management, university planning, and senior management of the division. He or she will be specifically responsible for setting direction and providing services conducive to positive growth and development of students, such as planning and evaluation, student development, student leadership, career planning, spiritual formation & faith affirmation, student retention, community values as well as various committee assignments. Minimum requirements include a doctorate in Higher Education, with a major in Administration, Social Sciences, Theology, or Biblical Studies; 10 to 15 years of significant educational leadership in student development at a university, ministry and administrative experience with a record of progressive growth in education, Christian ministry, or human services. Demonstrated leadership, supervision, administration, interpersonal, and communication skills at the highest level are also required. The successful candidate will be a warm-hearted, committed, dedicated, and mature evangelical Christian with a keen desire to serve in work, church, family, and community and will be firmly committed to the university's mission, community standards and statement of faith. An application package accompanied by detailed curriculum vitae may be sent to: Mr. Bill Norris, Director of Personnel, Trinity Western University, 7600 Glover Rd., Langley BC V2Y 1Y1 Canada; phone: (604) 888-7511; fax: (604) 513-2061; email: norris@twu.ca

DIRECTOR OF ACTIVITIES & VOLUNTEERS

Christian City is a nonprofit, multi-level healthcare/retirement community serving 1,000 seniors. Our facility enjoys an excellent reputation in care for our residents. We're currently seeking a campus-life coordinator to direct all aspects of our activities programming, management of activities staff, & coordination of 200+ volunteers. Candidates must possess a bachelor's degree in a related field, minimum, and 5+ years experience as an activity/volunteer director in a multi-level healthcare/retirement facility. Experience must include effective management of people and resources, demonstrated skills in leading activity programs, strong written & verbal communication skills, and demonstrated success in volunteer recruitment/retention. Must possess one of the following credentials: O.T.R., C.O.T.A., state-licensed recreational specialist, or NCCAP. Monday-Friday, but may require some evenings and weekends, dependent upon activities. We offer competitive pay and excellent benefits. Interested candidates should fax/mail a résumé, salary history, and salary expectations to: Director of Human Resources, Christian City, 7290 Lester Road, Union City, GA 30291-2317; (770) 964-7041. No phone calls, please!

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

FACULTY POSITIONS WAYNESBURG COLLEGE

- Communication—radio emphasis; teaching communication and advising student radio station. Master's required; practical experience desired; doctorate preferred.
- Computer Science—two positions (one may be combined with mathematics); teaching all levels of programming and/or applications. Master's required, varied computer experience desired; doctorate preferred.
- Criminal Justice—teaching forensic accounting and other courses (depending on expertise). Master's or JD required; experience desired.
- Mathematics—teaching range of mathematics, including algebra, pre-calculus, calculus, differential equations, college geometry, statistics, number theory, and numerical analysis; position possibly combined with computer science.

- Music, Instrumental—Director of band and other ensembles; teaching range of music courses; responsible for music program, including recruiting, programs, part-time faculty.

See home page at <http://waynesburg.edu>. All positions require commitment to Christian higher education and breadth of teaching skills, plus normal full-time faculty responsibilities. Send CV, copies of transcripts, letter addressing qualifications and philosophy of education, and three references to Richard Stanislaw, Vice President for Academic Affairs, Waynesburg College, Waynesburg, PA 15370 or rstanisl@waynesburg.edu.

USE MINISTRY AND LIFE SKILLS to reach the hurting, broken, and lost as a tentmaker in the 10/40 Window. HOW? contact: Mission to Unreached Peoples, toll free at (1-888) 847-6950, or E-mail: mupinfo@mup.org or HTTP://www.mup.org/mupinfo/

NATIONAL CHURCH PLACEMENT SERVICE Churches and Ministers are connecting with CMPN, P.O. Box 1132, Barre, VT 05641; (802) 476-8902.

CHRISTIANITY TODAY, INC. seeks to fill the following positions:

- Advertising Sales Manager: Degreed individual with 5-10 yrs. sales-management experience in the Christian market to provide day-to-day management of advertising account executive staff and departmental sales efforts.
- Associate Editor: LEADERSHIP Journal seeks editor with 3-5 years of experience and a thorough, broad-based understanding of the Protestant milieu/theology. Pastoral experience strongly preferred. Must be editor first, writer second. Send detailed information elaborating on interest in ministering through a magazine for church leaders, and qualifications to do so, plus writing samples.
- Market Research Analyst: Degreed analyst with 2-3 years exp. in market research analysis. Should be skilled in PC & Mac software, survey development for both qualitative and quantitative research, data analysis.
- Director of Marketing: Degreed individual with 8 years experience (preferably in magazine/book publishing) to provide strategic direction for ancillary product direct-mail marketing, supervise marketing managerial staff, and give input to new product R&D. Must have proven experience managing direct-mail marketing efforts.

To combine career with ministry, mail/fax résumé with cover letter detailing salary history to: Christianity Today, Inc., HR Dept.-CT, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188; fax: (630) 260-0114; E-mail: CTHRDept@aol.com.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

JUNIOR HIGH PASTOR position open at Wheaton Bible Church (attendance 2,000). Searching for someone with a passion and strong vision for Junior High ministry to lead our growing group of 130 students towards a closer walk with God and to empower them to impact the world around them. Desired start date is July 1998. Master's-level training preferred. Youth ministry experience a must. For more information about this great opportunity, please contact Rob Rienow (630) 260-1600. Main Street at Franklin, Wheaton, IL 60187; fax: (630) 260-1811.

SOUTHFIELD CHRISTIAN SCHOOL, a national exemplary, accredited college prep school with a K-12 enrollment of 800 students in the Detroit metro area, seeks in the secondary school an art teacher, an English teacher and a social studies teacher. Salaries range from $20,420 to $39,951 plus a fringe benefits package. Contact: Dr. Phil Ackley, SCS, 28650 Lahser Rd., Southfield, MI 48034; (248) 357-3660.

NEW MAJOR GIFTS PROGRAM

The Salvation Army offers a superb opportunity for the right mission-driven development professionals. We are looking for nine such candidates in the Southeastern United States. Candidates will have a record of successful major donor work, be responsible to develop an annual plan, have strong written and verbal skills, and be self-motivated. The focus of these positions is to develop long-term relationships with key individuals, foundations, and corporate donors while representing the mission of The Salvation Army. EOE. Please send a cover letter, résumé, and salary requirements to: Paul Curnow, The Salvation Army, 1424 Northeast Expressway, Atlanta, GA 30329-2088.

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

FROM AUGUSTINE TO C. S. LEWIS: LEGACIES OF THE FAITH, by Dr. Ed Ermy. Daily devotional readings collected from over 30 years, of great Christian literature. Subject index aids ministers, evangelists, and Christian workers. Order your copy/ies now for only $8 plus $1.25 (U.S.) P/H per copy from the OMS International Bookstore, P.O. Box A, Greenwood, IN 46142-6599.

BAKER BOOK HOUSE buys libraries, large & small. Phone: (616) 957-3110; fax: (888) 263-7310; E-mail: used.books@bakerbooks.com. Grand Rapids, MI 49546.

Authors Wanted

Successful, full service, subsidy publisher can transform your manuscript into an attractive, quality book — and promote it. Send your completed work for a no-cost, no obligation assessment — or request a free brochure.

Rutledge Books, Inc. • 1-800-278-8533
Dept. CT17 • P.O. Box 315 • Bethel, CT 06801

EVANGELISTIC MATERIAL IN ARABIC: books, tracts, cassettes. In English: The Bible and Islam ($4.95 U.S./$5.95 Canada). Write: Arabic Dept., Back to God Hour, 6555 W. College Dr., Palos Heights, IL 60463.

6,000 GOOD USED BOOKS FOR SALE. Get monthly free book list from Pastor Wayne, 3940 Winewood Ct. SE, Grand Rapids, MI 49508; E-mail: 73223.2010@compuserve.com

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

SHORT-RUN BOOK PUBLISHING! We can publish your book professionally in quantities as low as 250 books for less than $1,200 U.S.! Take advantage of the Canadian dollar: For free info contact: Essence Publishing, 103B Cannifton Rd., Belleville, ON, Canada K8N 4V2; (1-800) 238-6376; fax: (613) 962-3055; www.essence.on.ca

PUBLISH YOUR BOOK NOW! Your book can be produced and promoted by the leading subsidy book publisher. Send for free booklet P-53. Vantage Press, 516 W. 34th St., New York, NY 10001.

THE LIBRARY OF SPIRITUAL CLASSICS. The greatest literature on the deeper Christian life ever penned. Free catalog. Spiritual Classics, 1275 Hwy. 16 W, Newnan, GA 30263; (770) 254-9442.

THE HOUSE CHURCH MOVEMENT—a catalog of books and tapes available on this fresh, new, revolutionary movement. P.O. Box 285, Sargent, GA 30275; (1-800) 645-2342.

MANUSCRIPTS WANTED, ALL TYPES. Publisher w/ 75-year tradition. Author's Guide to Subsidy Publishing: (1-800) 695-9599.

200,000 USED BOOKS. Libraries purchased. Kregel Used Books, Box 2607, Grand Rapids, MI 49501; (616) 459-9444; fax: (1-888) USD-BOOK; Web: www.Kregel.com

FINANCE

MONEY TROUBLES? Overdue bills? Reduce interest, cut monthly credit card payments, restore credit. Nonprofit agency can help. Call (1-800) SAVE-ME-2.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

CHRISTIAN BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY. Call 1-800-585-5873 opt. 3 for free info pk. Leave my ID #8281 at end of message.

RETIRED PASTOR/ENTREPRENEUR/LAY LEADER type. Build a lucrative business with cutting-edge technology. My average managers earn $80K/yr. and other perks: cars, travel, profit sharing, & more! Investment required, 0 interest financing for credit-worthy candidates. Sales experience a plus. North America is your territory. If you're success minded, call Doug at Action Jackson Marketing, Inc. (1-888) 426-6826.

BECOME A PART of a health company that meets your vitamin and mineral needs. For information write: JED, P.O. Box 26343, Greenville, SC 29616-6343.

ASSEMBLE PRODUCTS at home for best companies. Great extra income idea! (1-800) 377-6000, ext. 8290.

MINISTRY OPPORTUNITIES

Preach Christ to nations via shortwave radio. (561) 697-4547; www.flinet.com/~grlmin

ATTENTION: ALL MISSIONARY GROUPS Camp Penuel, Ironton, MO, and Eldred, PA, provides a FREE camping program for inner-city and underprivileged children in America. We are looking for missionary groups who would be interested in helping us build a chapel, new cabins, lodge, nature trail, and recreational facility. Camp Penuel reaches 1,000s of youth, ages 7-12, for Christ. Write: Camp Penuel, Box 367, Ironton, MO 63650, or call: (573) 546-3020.

MINISTRY OPPORTUNITIES

MISSION NANNYS. Women 50+ travel and help missionaries with domestic duties. P.O. Box 609, Edgewater, MD 21037

VISIT PRISON IN AN ENVELOPE. By writing an inmate you can fulfill the Lord's command to remember those in prison. Contact Prison Fellowship Ministries (CT), P.O. Box 17500, Washington, DC 20041; (703) 478-0100, x590; <http://www.pfm.org>

COUPLES NEEDED. Boys averaging in age from 12 to 16 need you to create a loving, caring, nurturing home. Become a House Parent at the Omaha Home for Boys. You'll get training in our nationally recognized treatment program, enjoy full benefits, including health insurance, and know you're making a difference in young people's lives. Starting salary of $29,000 plus free housing, meals, and utilities. For information, call Kevin Orr (1-800) 408-4663 Monday-Friday or visit our Web site: www.omahahomeforboys.org. The Omaha Home for Boys, 4343 N. 52nd Street, Omaha, NE 68104, An Equal Opportunity Employer.

MINISTRY AIDS

LAMINATED CHRISTIAN LIVING SCRIPTURE CHART. Topical Quick Reference Guide, 70+ key verses NIV. Perfect for pastoral staff, volunteers, fundraisers & gifts. Reg. $3.49; your price $21 per dz., $1.75 ea. Free shipg. Money-back guarantee. Send check to: Interpud Heart Creations, 3613 NW 94 Ave., Sunrise, FL 33351-6406 or send $2 for sample.

☒ TROUBLED YOUTH: Starting an outreach? You can avoid major obstacles we survived starting our Camp/Community ministry in 1970. Save time & pain with our Survival Guide. Call Rich at Youth Investment (612) 449-0004.

FREE TRAINING MATERIALS are available on the Internet at www.hmc.psu.edu/copelink for teaching laity how to manage the care of seriously and chronically ill persons at home. A second program for home-visit volunteers teaches how to give support. Developed at Penn State College of Medicine with funding from the National Cancer Institute and the Pennsylvania Department of Health, the programs have been used extensively by churches in Pennsylvania with very positive responses from participants.

☒ SERMONHELP.COM, a great new preaching and worship resource for parish pastors, is now offering exceptional value subscriptions. www.sermonhelp.com

UNDERSTANDING YOUR TEENAGER parenting seminars. Find out how to schedule one at your church. Call (1-800) 561-9309 or visit our website at <http://www.uyt.com>

PRODUCTS

PRAYER CARDS printed on 12 pt. glossy stock: 1250 4"x6" cards only $245.00. Visa and MC accepted. Colorcards Plus, (1-800) 218-9171 or www.colorcards.com

FREE CATALOG. Blank audiotapes & supplies, sound eq., conf. recording, duplication. Call toll-free: (1-800) 817-0759

SERVICES

DIABETICS with Medicare or insurance, get your diabetic supplies at no cost. (Insulin dependent only.) Call (1-800) 337-4144.

SERVICES

ADOPTION. Adoption by Choice, Inc., a non-profit, interdenom. agency; (1-800) 421-2229.

Moving Interstate?

The Service and Thrift Relocation Service offers discounted rates and other benefits to reduce your moving cost on moves within the Continental U.S. For a free, no-obligation estimate call Lewis, CORD northAmerican:

1-800-873-2673

ICC# MC 167012

northAmerican.
VAN LINES/AGENT

ASPIRING WRITERS—Get fired, fired with enthusiasm for developing God-given writing talent. Send for FREE STARTER KIT. Christian Writers Guild, 260-H Fern Lane, Hume Lake, CA 93628; phone: (209) 335-2333; fax: (209) 335-2770; or: NVRohrer@Juno.com

INTERNATIONAL ADMINISTRATION OF COUNSELORS, Education & Registration, P.O. Box 2632 Stn. R, Kelowna, BC V1X 6A7.

ORDINATION. International Ministerial Fellowship, an association of evangelical churches and ministers, offers many services, including ordination, newsletters, networking, ecclesiastical endorsement, consultation in area of legal, accounting, church planting, biblical/theological training, Internet services (FREE Web site and E-mail address) and a missions sending agency. For free information, check out our Web site: www.i-m-f.org or write: P.O. Box 32366, Minneapolis, MN 55432; (612) 571-5967.

EDUCATION

FREE, 40-lesson Bible correspondence course. No private interpretations. Freedom Facts, P.O. Box 447, Long Key, FL 33001-0447.

DEGREE PROGRAM FOR PASTORS. Guided Distance Learning Mentor Programs. St. Martin's Seminary, P.O. Box 100410, Milwaukee, WI 53210. Send $5 for catalog.

COLLEGE/SEMINARY DEGREES off-campus. Christian Bible College, P.O. Box 8968, Rocky Mt., NC 27804.

FREE! Audio Bible courses by correspondence. Write P.O. Box 233, Washington, KY 41096. USA only.

INSURANCE

Missionaries Worldwide Health Plan

For Missionaries working overseas!

FHI Benefit Plans/Aetna Global Benefits
800-347-9547

www.rfdriver.com/fhigroup.htm

COMPUTER/VIDEO PROGRAMS

COMPUTER SOFTWARE for church membership, contributions, and accounting. PowerChurch Plus is the most widely used church-administration software package. Call or write today for free information. FI Software, Dept. CT, 208 Ridgefield Dr., Asheville, NC 28806; (1-800) 486-1800.

DRAMA

☒ CHRISTIAN DRAMA. Hundreds of plays for adults and youth. Free catalog. Eldridge Publishing; (1-800) 95-CHURCH, or <http://www.95church.com>.

FUNDRAISING

☒ FREE INFO. Your church etched on beveled glass suncatcher/ornaments. Low min. Wullbrandt Studio C, 1270 Hwy. 65, Hampton, IA 50441; (515) 456-3580.

Fund Raising Idea For 1998!

Commemorative Plates

Our fine Porcelain Fotoware® is prized throughout the USA for its heirloom quality. Perfect for anniversary celebrations. A gift your church or organization can cherish. Wonderful reunion gift!

Your choice: Full Color, Brown Tone, Black and White

For Free Brochure and Wholesale Price List Call:

1-800-872-1278

PRESTON-HOPKINSON—Since 1949
P.O. Drawer 341
Bedford, Virginia 24523
www.holidayfundraising.com

Call Toll Free: 800-872-1278 Ask for Dept. 2014

TRAVEL

☒ GOLDEN RULE TRAVEL is a Christian agency specializing in wholesale and bulk rate airline tickets for church and missionary travel. Our services are available to individuals as well as all mission and church organizations. We try extra hard to save you money! Mention this ad for a one-time, 2% discount. Call toll-free (1-888) 950-3273 FARE for pricing.

JOIN THE INTERNATIONAL Christian Bed & Breakfast Network. Call (1-800) 881-1940, or write to ICBBN, 550-777 Royal Oak Dr., Box 139, Victoria, BC V8X 4V1 Canada.

LONDON U.K. Foreign Missions Club, Christian guesthouse. Reductions for missionaries and full-time ministers. 26 Aberdeen Park, Highbury, London N52BJ Fax (011) 071-704-1853

NEAR GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, MONTANA. 3BR log cabin; secluded. Color brochure: (320) 384-7739.

VACATION/HONEYMOON HAWAII. Rooms and suites. Beautiful, peaceful Princeville Resort, Kauai, HI: (1-800) 826-6733.

REAL ESTATE

MOVING TO TUCSON? Let a Christian assist in finding a home. Margaret Arveson, Tucson Realty, 5151 E. Broadway, Tucson, AZ 85711; (520) 745-5151.

MOVING? Call us to find a full time, highly recommended Realtor® who:

- *Is committed to utmost integrity and service
- *If requested, will also introduce you to the Christian community, churches and schools

A totally FREE SERVICE (USA/Canada)

The EXODUS Network 1-800-395-8556

Congratulations Dr. Jack Van Impe

Jack Van Impe Ministries provides excellence in ministry, award-winning multi-media and renowned insight into Bible prophecy

Dr. Jack Van Impe's strong 50-year history of ministry and his memorization of 14,000 verses of Scripture have placed him as one of the most highly acclaimed experts in the field of Bible prophecy.

Dr. Van Impe and wife Rexella co-host the award-winning weekly television news magazine, Jack Van Impe Presents, which reveals how current events fit in with Bible prophecy — and the program leads the lost to faith in Christ! Look for it in your television listings. Dr. and Mrs. Van Impe are also accomplished authors, broadcasters and musicians. Their radio and television broadcasts blanket North America and reach into over 100 countries overseas.

This ministry has documented over 1 million decisions for Christ.

Well done, good and faithful servants!

www.jvim.com

ANDERSONVILLE BAPTIST SEMINARY

P.O. Box 545 • Camilla, GA 31730-0545
www.andersonvilleseminary.com

Established in 1981, Andersonville Baptist Seminary has hundreds of students presently enrolled. There were over 1,900 graduates in 1996. The seminary has students in all 50 states and 12 foreign countries. Conservative and fundamental, every course is Bible and students work at their own pace. Studies are by cassette tape based on King James Version. Preachers use these practical studies every week in their sermons.

Studies feature such exciting courses as BB794 (I John-Jude) which has over 1,080 Minutes of Lecture covering topics such as fellowship, sonship, eternal security, and election.

- Over 8,000 Graduates World Wide
- Completely Debt Free
- Excellent Accreditation
- Baptistic In Doctrine
- Excellent Faculty holding Master & Doctoral Degrees
- 18 Degree Programs Offered
- Credits Accepted at Over 200 Colleges
- Member of the National Christian Counselors Associations
- Open Book Examinations
- Work At Your Own Pace
- You Keep All Material for Your Library
- Over 2,500 students presently enrolled

Accredited by Accrediting Commission International

Payment Plans Available
Never Any Interest!
Spouse Education Free*
Main Textbook is the Bible

Associate - Doctorate!
Great Bible Education!
Great Prices!
Call for Payment Plans!

Offering Degrees
in the following Areas

Theology
Ministry
Divinity
Christian & Pastoral Counseling
Christian Education
Religious Education

*External studies!
Interactive Website!
No On-Campus work required!
Credit for lifetime experience!
Transfer credit accepted!
Call for evaluation!*

Practical Counseling Program designed for the Pastor. ABS is also a Certified Academic Institution for the National Christian Counselors
Association and offers a Licensed Pastoral Counselor Certified through the NCCA.

Excellent Master of Divinity program allows students to cover both Testaments. Excellent Ph. D. programs as well!

Information and Free Catalog:

1-800-525-1611 • Fax 912-336-7000

Recent high school graduates searching for a solid Bible foundation in a Christ-centered academic environment have an exciting new option.

Nyack College's Manhattan Center— located in the heart of the pulsing city – offers afternoon, evening and weekend courses to serve the needs of traditional students as well as working adults. Nyack College rewards life experiences with college credits and makes generous grants available.

Associate Degrees: Liberal Arts A.A., Christian Work A.S.
Bachelor Degrees: Bible B.A., Pastoral Ministries B.S., Youth Ministries B.S., Psychology B.A., Business Administration B.S.,
Elementary Education B.S.,
Interdisciplinary Studies
(Double Major degrees – B.A. & B.S. only)

Call 212-625-0500 now
for free information!

Contact President
David Schroeder
at (914) 358-1710
if you would like to aid Nyack College's ministry in
New York City.

335 Broadway/93 Worth Street, 10th Floor
New York, NY 10013-3904
<http://www.nyackcollege.edu>

S H O W C A S E

J. I. PACKERA Biography

by Alister McGrath
Baker Book House

In this first biography to trace the incredible life and ministry of J. I. Packer, Alister McGrath describes the significant people, writings, events, and controversies of Packer's life. He also considers the lasting influence Packer will have on evangelicalism. In the process, readers gain insight into evangelicalism's development in the twentieth century.

ISBN 0-8010-1157-4

Cloth, $19.99

FOR THE LOVE OF MY BROTHERS

by Brother Andrew
Bethany House Publishers

God's call to Brother Andrew in the 1950s drew him behind the Iron Curtain in a hair-raising, one-man mission. For the Love of My Brothers continues Brother Andrew's inspiring story—ministering to house churches in Iran, organizing the smuggling of a million Bibles into China, proclaiming his faith to Latin American guerrillas, and much more.

ISBN 0-7642-2074-8

Paper, $10.99

LEGISLATING MORALITY

by Dr. Norman Geisler and Frank Turek
Bethany House Publishers

Should morality be legislated? To this question, Norman Geisler and Frank Turek answer "Yes!" In fact, all laws already legislate morality. The heart of the matter is whose morality becomes law. Legislating Morality is a lay-oriented guide to the legality and practicality of passing laws that uphold historical and biblical values.

ISBN 0-7642-2094-2

Cloth, $15.99

PASTORAL GRIT—
The Strength to Stand and to Stay

by Craig Brian Larson
Bethany House Publishers

Every pastor has felt the desire to resign from a church. Many of the reasons pastors enter the ministry seem to lose their hold amid day-in, day-out care for people, pressures of a pastor's own humanness and feelings of inadequacy. Pastoral Grit is an honest look at the reasons pastors give up and offers realistic insights that will help them persevere.

ISBN 1-55661-969-3

Cloth, $15.99

HANDBOOK OF BIBLICAL CHRONOLOGY

Principles of Time Reckoning in the Ancient World and Problems of Chronology in the Bible

Revised Edition
by Jack Finegan
Hendrickson Publishers
800/358-3111

Have you been skipping over references to time in the Bible because they seem too confusing? Professor Jack Finegan's Handbook of Biblical Chronology clarifies those ancient systems of time reckoning and the biblical passages that use them. A detailed analytical table of contents and full subject and scripture indexes make it easy to find the details you need. This edition is updated, revised, and expanded from the classic 1964 version of the book.

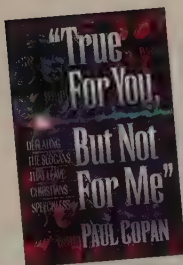

ISBN 1-56563-143-9

463 pages, cloth, $34.95

"TRUE FOR YOU, BUT NOT FOR ME"

by Paul Copan

Bethany House Publishers

C. S. LEWIS AND
FRANCIS SCHAEFFERby Scott R. Burson &
Jerry L. Walls

InterVarsity Press

630/887-2500

www.ivpress.com

EQUAL TO THE TASK

by Ruth Haley Barton

InterVarsity Press

630/887-2500

www.ivpress.com

GOD STORIESNew Narratives from Sacred Texts

by H. Stephen Shoemaker

Judson Press

800/485-3766

THE CHRISTIAN AND AMERICAN LAW

by H. Wayne House

Kregel Publications

800/733-2607

LEADERSHIP HANDBOOKS OF PRACTICAL THEOLOGY

Vol. 1: Word and Worship

James D. Berkley,

General Editor

Ordering Information:

800/806-7798

Well, that may be true for you, but it's not for me" is the rallying cry of our culture. It's one of many popular sayings thrown out as valid—so accepted that they need no evidence. "True for You, But Not for Me" is a reference handbook for answering the culture's latest objections to Christianity.

ISBN 0-7642-2091-8

Paper, $8.99

The writings of C. S. Lewis and Francis Schaeffer have influenced millions. For the first time, the apologetic approaches of these two men are compared and contrasted. Burson and Walls suggest strengths and weaknesses and consider how Lewis and Schaeffer's works still speak to today's postmodern landscape.

ISBN 0-8308-1935-5

308 pages, paper, $11.99

Ruth Haley Barton provides a balanced look at men and women in partnership, with practical models of gender equality in relationships, communication, work, and ministry. She shows how the disciplines of biblical community, partnership in marriage, good communication, and more can allow men and women to serve God together.

ISBN 0-8308-1357-8

228 pages, paper, $11.99

"Steve Shoemaker is a gifted preacher whose gift lies in narrative—telling the stories of the faith—which is the most powerful preaching of all. I once heard him tell the story of Job, and everyone walked out afterward with a full heart. May God bless this book to you likewise."

—Garrison Keillor

ISBN 1-8170-1265-6

Paper, $16.00

Most of us realize that the law of God and absolute ethics, which America was built upon, are eroding rapidly. What can we do about it? In this volume, several of America's leading Christian thinkers and writers examine the historical impact of Christianity on the law, and then focus on ways that Christians can work within the secular legal community to promote better laws and ensure greater opportunity for the preaching of the gospel within the public forum.

ISBN 0-8254-2875-0

320 pages, paper, $14.99

When you need practical guidance for everyday situations that are unique to Christian ministry, turn to the Leadership Handbooks of Practical Theology. The first reference volume, Word and Worship, is packed with 500 pages of practical ideas from the leading authorities on contemporary preaching. Whether you're fresh out of seminary or have been ministering for years, you'll find this handbook indispensable to your daily work.

Offer DE8E18, Product LBK01

Cloth, $19.95

Presents THE new wave IN THEOLOGICAL Education:

ExLSM

You sense the call to ministry, but you dread the thought of moving. Uprooting your family. Selling your home. Leaving your job. If only you could start your seminary education where you are. Well, with Asbury Seminary's Extending Learning Program, now you can.

Just imagine. You're only a computer, modem and telephone away from earning academic credit over the Internet and beginning your seminary studies. Experience powerful classroom lectures, insightful biblical commentary and stimulating theological discussion—all within the comfort of your own home or office.

As an online ExL student, you will be part of a community of learners stretched across the world. You will also engage in collaborative activities with others in your learning community. You can access your professor via e-mail.

But Asbury Seminary is more than classes and lectures. That's why we have created an extended learning program that will bring the heartbeat of the Asbury experience to you. You will experience chapel, chat with other students and register for classes on-line. You can even search our library's electronic catalog and borrow materials. In fact, you'll be able to do almost everything an on-campus student can do—all within the comfort of your own home or office.

So if you think starting your seminary education means relocating, think again. Asbury Seminary's ExL Program just might be the answer to your prayers. To learn more, call our admissions office today at 1-800-2-ASBURY. Or better yet, just surf on over to our web site at www.ats.wilmore.ky.us. Asbury Seminary: The New Wave in Theological Education.

ASBURY
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

204 N. Lexington Avenue • Wilmore, KY 40390-1199

A Stronger Commitment Through A Stronger Covenant

Above Bob Kloss, former CEO of Covenant Life Insurance Company, current CEO of Provident Mutual Life Insurance Company, with Steve Collinelli, Vice President of Field Development, and Reverend Bob Lindley, minister/Covenant marketing consultant.

David Yeaman, a second generation Provident Mutual/Covenant representative, with client Rev. Robert Shettler, Associate Pastor, Students, College Park Baptist Church, Orlando, Florida.

Covenant Life Insurance Company served those whose lives revolve around their faith since 1717. And now, because of its merger with Provident Mutual Life Insurance Company, the unbreakable covenant with members of all denominations is stronger.

It's stronger because we now can offer you and your family even more products and services to meet your insurance and financial needs. Our mission to help you reach your many goals comes from knowledgeable people who truly understand the special needs of those in the religious community.

You've served others, now let us serve you with more products, experience, and commitment.

The Covenant
A Marketing Division of Provident Mutual
Serving the Religious Community since 1717

America's first life insurance company.

The Covenant was formerly Covenant Life Insurance Company and its predecessor Presbyterian Ministers' Fund.

1-800-445-1717

www.providentmutual.com

PROVIDENT MUTUAL

And the Word Was... Debatable

All those who take up the daunting task of Bible translation step into a force field of tension.

Francis Schaeffer traced the decline of civilization through its art. Some readers protested when their favorites—Kierkegaard, Stravinsky, Camus—ended up on the wrong side of Schaeffer's "line of despair," which illustrates the danger of trying to impose absolute standards on art. Still, we all sense that something has changed in Western civilization, and probably not for the better. Merely listen to a Bach motet, a Beethoven symphony, a Shostakovich concerto, and a meditation by John Cage—in that order.

I once spent several leisurely hours in the manuscript room of the British Museum, grazing through the centuries from Shakespeare and Donne to Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Jane Austen, and Virginia Woolf. As I approached the twentieth-century displays, I could not avoid the sensation of sliding downhill. The handwriting, subject matter, and even the sentence structure seemed to deteriorate. Finally I reached the most recent manuscripts, featuring the scrawled original of a renowned Beatles' song: "Oh yeah, oh yeah, I wanna hold your hand." A long descent from John Donne.

I took a fascinating graduate course from the University of Chicago on "The History of the Structure of the English Sentence." Beginning with the very earliest writings, we analyzed representative sentences from different eras. By the end of the course, students could date an unidentified paragraph within a half-century simply by diagramming its sentences. Grammatical structure, it turns out, yields an important clue to overall culture.

In societies secure in truth, reason, and their role in the world, writers tend to produce balanced, confident sentences. Samuel Johnson did not mentally diagram his sentences before speaking, to ensure that each subordinate clause be symmetrically balanced by another. He spoke that way because he thought that way, in an era that had a stable view of the world.

Today, some writers dispense with capitalization and intentionally ignore hard-won rules of punctuation. The same author may follow up a sentence that sprawls over several pages with two- or three-word sentences possessing neither subject nor verb. Our sentences have lost the confidence of earlier eras, becoming cryptic, chaotic, disorganized—like the entire century.

Our class at the University of Chicago took a careful look at Bible translations, for these have had a powerful influence on language. As might be expected, most retain a traditional sentence structure. Yet despite recent discoveries of ancient manuscripts and improvements in translation skills, in some ways the newer versions have strayed from the original, especially in rendering the Old Testament.

Jacques Ellul once said, "The blessed uncertainty of language is the source of all its richness." That built-in uncertainty is evident in Hebrew, where one main connective word, usually translated "and" or "but," can perform many different functions. Consider the following literalistic translation from Genesis as rendered in the sixteenth-century Tyndale Bible:

And the woman saw that it was a good tree to eat of and lusty unto the eyes and a pleasant tree for to make wise; and took of the fruit of it, and ate, and gave unto her husband also with her, and he ate. And the eyes of both of them were opened.

The and creates a sense of movement, of narrative action, while leaving much open to interpretation. The Jewish tradition embodied in the Talmud capitalizes on this "blessed uncertainty" by printing rabbinical interpretations of Scripture.

We moderns like more direction. Consider the New English Bible (1970) rendering of the same passage:

When the woman saw that the fruit of the tree was good to eat, and that it was pleasing to the eye and tempting to contemplate, she took some and ate it. She also gave her husband some and he ate it. Then the eyes of both of them were opened.

The when and then—two possible meanings of the same word in the original Hebrew—move from translation toward interpretation, and subtly shift the force from narrative to didactic.

Changes such as these add irony to the recent discussion over gender usage in the NIV Bible. Indeed, the Bibles most "conservative" about gender issues apply an overlay of interpretation in far more subtle ways, such as in their use of conjunctions and adverbs.

While some draw lines in the sand and condemn opponents on the other side, I rejoice that the controversy is taking place. Both sides are arguing over the true meaning of the text—a worthy goal that many universities have long since abandoned. Christians still believe that words have ultimate meaning, and that the most noncoercive of all media, language, can convey truth about the universe.

All those who take up the daunting task of Bible translation step into a force field of tension. On the one hand, we must keep on arguing about proper meaning because we so highly value that meaning. On the other hand, we must recognize that all translation, indeed all language, contains an element of uncertainty. We dare not lessen the tension on either end. CT

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

JUNE 15, 1998

• 2080 267 million
expected

MORMONS on the RISE

June 1998

The Southern Baptist convention, sobered by the Mormon growth trend, meets in Salt Lake City

• 1997
10 Million

2020
15 million

2040
52 million

Christianity today
PROCESSED

GTU LIBRARY

US $2.95 CANADA $3.95

07

74470 84052 7

• 1957
1 Million

Our Gift is Developing God's Gift in Others.

PASTOR

MISSIONARIES

TEACHER

COUNSELOR

AUTHOR/SPEAKER

CHAPLAIN

We can help you discover what God wants you to be.

Charles R. Swindoll, President

- Students from all 50 states and over 40 nations study in 10 graduate degree programs.
- Faculty known for over 350 books, radio, TV, and global ministries
- A leading training ground for evangelical leaders
- Graduates serving in over 50 denominations worldwide

Call (800) 992-0998

for more information on our graduate degree programs.

Website: www.dts.edu

Admissions Office e-mail: fyi@dts.edu

DALLAS THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

The answers to life,

plus a mint on your pillow.

In life, God provides for all your needs. At The Cove, we'll attend to the details of your visit in the same spirit. From carefully chosen speakers like Cliff Barrows, Howard Hendricks and Anne Graham Lotz, to fresh flowers on your table.

The Cove

Billy Graham Training Center At The Cove • www.thecove.org • 1-800-950-2092

Launch Your Degree Program From This Pad!

Now, you can turn your dream of earning a degree into reality without leaving home. Through our accredited non-residency degree programs, you will receive a quality education which will enrich your life and enhance your ministry.

Don't put your family and ministry on hold while you complete your education. Study off campus or on-line, stay where you are, and use what you learn where you learn it...in the context of your ministry.

Talk to an Admissions Counselor and discuss the variety of educational options which are available to you at Trinity.

- B.A., M.A., M.Div., Ph.D., D.Min. in Various Disciplines
- Financial Grants are Available
- Off Campus and On-line Degree Programs
- Accelerated Study
- Regional Seminars Optional
- Accredited by the University of Liverpool, England

800-457-5510

International Academic and Administrative Offices
Newburgh, Indiana, USA

Phone: 800-457-5510

Fax: 812-858-3235

E-mail: 74777.245@compuserve.com

Visit our website! www.trinitysem.edu

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Volume 42, No. 7
June 15, 1998

A Magazine of Evangelical Conviction

24

FEATURES

24 Cover Story: Mormons on the Rise

Missionaries impossible? As Mormons are poised to become the next world religion, Southern Baptists are knocking on the doors of Utah's "saints." By John W. Kennedy

Plus: Sunday Among the Saints

38

32 God's Green Acres

How Calvin DeWitt is helping Dunn, Wisconsin, reflect the glory of God's good creation. By Tim Stafford

38 Bathsheba-Gate

What Bible heroes can teach us about leadership scandals. By Eugene Peterson

41 What I'd Like to Tell the Pope About the Church

Responding to the main criticism Catholics have against evangelicals: that we have no doctrine of the church. By Timothy George

45 In the Word: Can God Be Trusted?

What it means to abide safely under his wings. By Cornelius Plantinga, Jr.

49 Conversations: De-Seiple-ing World Vision

Retiring, but not shy, Bob Seiple talks about American myopia and the new realities facing international development. Interview by Kevin D. Miller

49

DEPARTMENTS

5 Inside CT: How Can a False Religion Be So Successful?

6 Letters

22 Editorial: Home Is Where the Parent Should Be

53 Directions: Doubling Thomas's Gospel

54 Highlights: The Early Church's Health Plan

55 Books: Why Calvin Was a Calvinist

59 Reflections

72 Charles Colson: The Oxford Prophet

NEWS

12 Germany: Theologians Riled Over Lutheran-Catholic Accord

13 Orthodox: Lay Leaders Urge Archbishop's Ouster

14 Graham Crusade: Recovery Evangelism Reaches Native Americans

15 Same-Sex Marriage: Creech Verdict Provokes Methodist Crisis

10 North American Scene

18 World Scene

God HATES
SIN!!
Don't condone same-sex unions

BANNER SAYS
Follow Scripture
DECIDE NOW

Banner Church, Goshenburg, NE

15

Church Chair Industries, Inc.

Cathedral Stacker

Free Chair Test Compare
(100+)

Royal Stacker

Plush, tall backs over 1/2" plywood.

Free Lumbar Back Support

Now Only
$24.25
100+

Now Only
$26.25
100+

Design Stacker #1

Plush 4 & 5" deep foam
seats over 1/2" plywood.

Oak Pew Chair

Call 1-800-331-5411

For Free Catalog & Steel
Frame Sample Chair

GREAT PEW LIKE CHAIRS OAK OR STEEL FRAMES
LOCKS TOGETHER TO FORM A CONTINUOUS BENCH

DESIGN PATENT NO.
DES. 333,7333

OPTIONS

Arms

Kneelers

Book & Card Pockets

Michael Maudlin,
Managing Editor

How Can a False Religion Be So Successful?

INSIDE CT

In 1980 I decided to visit my uncle in Oregon, and this worried my fiancée. She thought I was vulnerable. Having been a Christian less than a year, I would be visiting a Mormon relative who had already converted several family members, including my grandmother.

So Karen loaded me up with various articles and books. After reading up on Mormonism, I wondered, How could anyone take this religion seriously? Its theology is inconsistent and derivative; its historicity questionable; and its sociological dynamics easily explained. Then I went to Oregon.

Uncle Otto is a great guy. Two sons from his pre-Mormon marriage lived nearby, and with their pleasant wives and well-nurtured children they made perfect "Welcome to Mormonism" postcards. My uncle and his wife had adopted or birthed seven more children. Uncle Otto never pressured me about his faith but patiently answered my questions. When I was leaving he said, "Mick, as long as you continue searching for the truth, I think you will end up a Mormon."

A few years ago I visited the Mormon bookstore at Temple Square in Salt Lake City. What I found was eerily familiar. Every category we have in Christian bookstores had its counterpart here: surveys of South American archaeology that acted as "evidence that demands a verdict"; commentaries and apologetical texts; histories and biographies (including those of sports stars and other celebrities); fiction; and especially books on lifestyle evangelism.

On his recent flight to Salt Lake, our cover story's author, associate news editor John W. Kennedy, sat next to a returning Mormon missionary. John told him the kind of story he was doing, and the missionary didn't get upset; instead, he shared his faith. The same thing happened when John interviewed apostle M. Russell Ballard about the hordes of Southern Baptists due to descend on his town (see story beginning on p. 24): Ballard shared his faith. And when our photographer Steve Sonheim took pictures in Temple Square, four different, pleasant, eager young people started conversations about "spiritual things" with him.

What does it say about all our evangelical successes—growth statistics, vibrant publishing, dynamic parachurch ministries, solid educational institutions, and healthy, evangelizing congregations—when they are duplicated or outdone by this false religion? It means we cannot place our confidence in these markers, no matter how impressive they may be. It means that very little separates us from Mormons, except this: communion and truth. The living God has met us, made us his own, and revealed his truth to us through his Word. Everything else is only a prop.

CT

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Founded 1956

Senior Editors: George K. Brushaber, Chairman; James I. Packer, Visiting Scholar; Timothy George, Senior Adviser; Maxie D. Dunnam, Jesse Miranda, Earl F. Palmer, John D. Woodbridge

Editorial Director: Harold L. Myra
Executive Editor: David Neff
Managing Editor: Michael G. Maudlin
Art Director: Carla Sonheim
Associate Editors: Richard A. Kauffman, Timothy C. Morgan, Wendy Murray Zoba
Administrative Editor: Carol R. Thiessen
Associate News Editor: John W. Kennedy
Book Review Editor: John Wilson
Assistant Editor: Kevin D. Miller
Associate Designer: June M. Gunawan
Editorial Resident: Mary Cagney
Editor at Large: Philip Yancey
Senior Writer: Tim Stafford
Senior News Writer: Arthur D. Moore
Editorial Coordinator: Paulette DePaul
Administrative Assistant: Lara Badalamenti

Board of Directors: Billy Graham, Chairman; B. Clayton Bell, Sr., Executive Chairman; Harold L. Myra, President; Miriam Adeney, John N. Akers, Jill P. Briscoe, Stephen W. Brown, A. Kenneth Curtis, Susan S. Eames, Robert P. Evans, Eugene B. Habegger, Ben Haden, Pete Hammond, Michael E. Haynes, Oswald C. J. Hoffmann, C. B. Hogue, John A. Huffman, Jr., Edward L. Johnson, Jay L. Kesler, Dennis F. Kinlaw, Jack Modesett, Jr., William W. Pendleton, Robert E. Record, Paul D. Robbins, W. Fred Smith, Jr., Howard S. Williams

Billy Graham, Founder; Carl F. H. Henry, Editor 1956-68; L. Nelson Bell, Executive Editor 1966-73; Harold Lindsell, Editor 1968-78; Kenneth S. Kantzer, Editor 1978-82; V. Gilbert Beers, Editor 1982-85; George K. Brushaber, Executive Editor 1985-91; Terry C. Muck, Executive Editor 1985-90

Contributing Editors: Miriam Adeney, Nigel M. de S. Cameron, Charles W. Colson, James R. Edwards, Nathan O. Hatch, Kenneth A. Myers, Mark A. Noll, Thomas C. Oden, Ben Patterson, David Schiedemeyer, David A. Seamands, Howard A. Snyder, John R. W. Stott

Consulting Editors: Paul M. Bassett, Colin Brown, Harold O. J. Brown, Robert E. Cooley, David S. Dockery, William A. Dyrness, Stanley J. Grenz, Christopher A. Hall, Walter C. Kaiser, Jr., Kenneth S. Kantzer, Donald W. McCullough, Alister E. McGrath, Richard Mouw, Roger E. Olson, Haddon W. Robinson, Stephen A. Seamands, Aida Besançon Spencer, John G. Stackhouse, Jr., Donald A. D. Thorsen, Edwin M. Yamauchi

Corresponding Editors: Tokunboh Adeyemo, V. Elving Anderson, Donald G. Bloesch, Edith L. Blumhofer, Darrell L. Bock, Calvin B. DeWitt, Samuel Escobar, C. Stephen Evans, Ajith Fernando, Richard J. Foster, Vernon Grounds, Allen C. Guelzo, Christopher D. Hancock, Alan F. Harre, Roberta Hestenes, Arthur P. Johnston, Robert K. Johnston, David Livingstone, Paul L. Maier, George M. Marsden, David L. McKenna, Stephen V. Monsma, Leon Morris, Terry C. Muck, Nancy Murphy, Bradley Nassif, Armand M. Nicolai, Jr., Roger Nicole, C. René Padilla, William E. Pannell, Eugene H. Peterson, Richard V. Pierard, Robert C. Roberts, John Rodgers, Vinay Samuel, David P. Scaer, Bruce L. Shelley, Ronald J. Sider, Russell P. Spittler, Elmer L. Towns, Gerald Wacker, Robert L. Wilken, J. Rodman Williams

Advisory Editors: Leith Anderson, Myron S. Augsburger, William Bentley Ball, David B. Barrett, Paul W. Brand, Michael Cromarty, Edward G. Dobson, James Engel, George Gallup, Jr., Charles E. Hummel, Diane L. Knippers, Steven T. McFarland, Dean Merrill, Bryant L. Myers, Richard John Neuhaus, Will Norton, Jr., Michael Novak, Matthew Parker, James W. Reapsome, Beth Spring, Joseph M. Stowell, Warren W. Wiersbe

CHRISTIANITY TODAY, INC.

Harold L. Myra, President, C.E.O.
Paul D. Robbins, Executive Vice President, C.D.O.
Laurie Powell, Executive Assistant
Harry Genet, Executive Administrator
Keith Stonehocker, Senior Vice President
Harold B. Smith, Corporate Vice President
David Hemstreet, Vicki Howard, John C. LaRue, Jr., Kevin A. Miller, David Neff, Linda Schambach, John Selander, Marshall Shelley, Carol Thompson, Vice Presidents

Advertising: Joyce Bardin, Karen Booker, Joel Carlsen, Lee Cunningham, Heather Dale, Kevin Flanagan, John Grey, Carol Hayes, Daniel Poormon, Kathryn Stephens, Joel Stombres

Circulation/Marketing:
Production: Charlene Perez, Director
Fulfillment: Jo Ann Rosenbaum, Director
Norma Bormann, Bradley Dupuy, Heidi Hall, Julie Kaminski, Sherry Kyle, Dianne Lambert, Debra Lane, Jeremy Long, Nancy Nance, Louie P. Parker, Karen Raad, Carol Schaley, Jennifer Stenzel, Elizabeth Tolentino, Bonnie Willman, Joy Windes, Philip Woods

Financial Operations: Terumi Echols, Manager, Cheri Peterson, Credit Manager, Gary Johnson, Sandra Johnson, Judy Van Zanten

Human Resources: Susan Cronk, Manager, Kate Bryant, Bert Davidson, Joanna DeWolff, Philip DiCicco, Lew Radabaugh

Internet Online Services: Judy Gill, Manager, Clayton Anderson, Kathy DePue, Sky Findlay, Wendy Harley, Michelle Hayes, Michael Herman, Elesa Hodge, Todd Watermann, Aaron Welch

Market Research: Cynthia Solver, Manager, Grace Ferroni, Rachel Wetzler, Douglas Zimmerman

Production Services: Cynthia Cronk, Manager, Jeff DiNanno, Ted Gysan, Kelly Johnson, Theresa Phillips, Rebekah Santos, James Smeenge, Les Smith

Special Sales: Becki Bustin, Michael Fister, Rodney Heckler, Lynn Long, John Ramsell

Editorial/Advertising Offices: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, Ill. 60188 630-260-6200; FAX: 630-260-0114. Advertising in CHRISTIANITY TODAY does not necessarily imply editorial endorsement.

Subscription Services: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, P.O. Box 37080, Boone, Iowa 50037-0060. Customer service: 800-999-1704.

Manuscript Policy: Unsolicited manuscripts are not accepted. A query letter must be sent first, describing a proposed manuscript (poetry is not accepted). Unsolicited manuscripts sent without a self-addressed, postage-paid envelope will not be returned.

Permissions: CHRISTIANITY TODAY grants permission for any original article (not a reprint) to be photocopied for use in a local church or classroom, provided no more than 1,000 copies are made, are distributed free, and indicate the source is CHRISTIANITY TODAY.

Australian Agent: MEDIA/COM, 14 Eton Road, Keswick 5061, South Australia. United Kingdom Agent: MASTERPLAN PUBLISHING CO., 63-67 Kingston Road, New Malden, Surrey KT3 3PB, phone 0181-942-9442.

Indexes: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is indexed in Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature; Christian Periodical Index; Religion Index One: Periodicals; Religious and Theological Abstracts; Book Review Index; and Academic Abstracts and Magazine Article Summaries. ISSN 0009-5753. © 1998 CHRISTIANITY TODAY INC.

Christianity Today (ISSN 0009-5753) is published monthly (semi-monthly in April and October), 14 issues per year, by Christianity Today, Inc., 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, Ill. 60188. Periodicals postage paid at Carol Stream, Ill., and at additional mailing offices.

Postmaster: Send address changes to Christianity Today, P.O. Box 11618, Des Moines, IA 50344-01618; 1-800-999-1704. GST Registration Number R126028836. Canada Post Mail Product Sales Agreement #599636. Printed in U.S.A.
Subscription Rates: Regular subscription price: one year $24.95. Outside U.S. add $8.00 postage prepaid U.S. currency. $2.50 per copy.

Subscription Renewals? Gift Subscriptions? Address Changes? Call toll-free 1-800-999-1704.

E-mail: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is available electronically on America Online (keyword: CT); E-mail: CHRISTIANITY TODAY at CTedit@aol.com. CT is also on the Web at www.christianitytoday.net. For information on how to enroll in Christianity Online, call 1-800-633-8888.

God's Grace for Marriage

✉ I'm always amazed by God's grace when a marriage as broken as the McCartneys' experiences healing ["McCartney on the Rebound," May 18]. It's one of God's greatest miracles. However, when I read about their dating experiences in college, I was reminded of the urgency of communicating to my daughters how intelligent, capable, and valuable they are just by virtue of who God made them to be. God forbid they should ever feel compelled to date, let alone marry, a man who treated them so poorly.

Michelle Houston
Forsyth, Mont.

✉ McCartney's "God told me" this and "God told me" that is akin to spells of psychotic episodes that clearly say there are times when he is not in touch with reality. As an evangelical believer, I would be very cautious in setting him up as an example to follow. Bill Simpson

San Antonio, Tex.

Gambling: A Form of Bondage

✉ I am grateful for Tim Stafford's article on our nation's gambling craze ["None Dare Call It Sin," May 18]. During the past eight months, I have been an intern chaplain at an inpatient treatment center for compulsive gamblers. It did not take me long to realize how naïve I was about oppressive aspects of the industry. My experience has shown me that gambling is a very real form of bondage. Addictions often begin at a young age with games such as marbles and cards, or with innocent engagement in bingo, lotteries, or slot machines. Once the hook is set, destruction is fast, forceful, and often bears more collateral damage than other addictions.

Kristoffer Cox
Renville, Minn.

✉ I am deeply grieved over the gambling problem in Mississippi. I lived there in the '60s, and my life revolved around the church and Christ. I think the body of Christ there (as well as in my own state of Arizona) has compromised its values to the point of no longer being able to fight off moral evil. The pastors interviewed there seem to have no basis on which to oppose the sin of gambling. Who could possibly mistake the Satanic

Responding to Karla Faye

Readers' response to CT's April 6 editorial has been been greater than for any other editorial. In the last issue, we published excerpts from the first wave of letters, letters that overwhelmingly opposed our belief that "the death penalty has outlived its usefulness." However, more recent letters show that over half (53 percent) of our readers agreed with CT's stance. This issue remains important to a large number of Christians.

taunt in the remark, "We'll get the businessmen, and once we've got the businessmen, we'll silence the church?"

Ann Hughes
Phoenix, Ariz.

The Suffering Colombian Church

✉ Thank you for "Colombia's Bleeding Church," by David Miller, in your May 18 issue. While there is a growing awareness in the American church of Christian persecution worldwide, the suffering of the church in Colombia has not received sufficient exposure. Miller's article should help correct that.

Jeff Taylor
Santa Ana, Calif.

Where Is the Fiction?

✉ CT's '98 Book Awards [Apr. 27] reiterate the evangelical community's inability to write fiction. While we are amazingly prolific at turning out hordes of Bible dictionaries, commentaries, and ethical musings, we are hopeless with narrative. Perhaps we should consider placing a ban on narratives about the Antichrist and romances bearing titles like Softly Creeps the Spring. Where is the next Flannery O'Connor? Where is the next Walker Percy? Where is the next C. S. Lewis?

Christopher H. Bunn
Wheaton, Ill.

A Fine Writer

Oh blessed irony! Oh joyous and grateful reversal! I found Susan Wise Bauer's article on the struggles of prayer (expressed via the mountainous literature on the topic and our contemporary "how to" culture) excellent, refreshing, and helpful ["The Myth of a Better Prayer Life," Apr. 27]. Susan Wise Bauer is a fine writer and an honest, astute thinker. CT readers should be led to her recent novel, The Revolt.

John D. Morrison
Lynchburg, Va.

✉ Bauer's article seems to omit the most important book on prayer, the Bible. Her prayer attempts also seem to be self-centered. She says, "The theory of prayer is, in fact, intensely simple. Tell God your needs, thank him for his gifts, cry out to him in sorrow, praise him for his greatness, listen for his answers." That is all fine as far as it goes, but there is not one word said about interceding at the throne of grace for others.

Rodney Bonck
Verona, Va.

✉ I am grateful for Bauer's kind comments about my book, The Art of Prayer. I disagree, however, with the implicit assumption that her subjective responses to the books she reviewed should be taken as universal. She is troubled by our culture's self-helpism, yet she falls into the equally pervasive cultural bias of defining a book's value by "if it works for me." Bauer evidenced little awareness of the need for different literary approaches that speak to different kinds of people. Bauer says several of the books are "undoubtedly pitched to an audience accustomed to solving its problems with how-to books." It is hard to read this as anything but dismissive. But in a day of best-selling New Age author-gurus like Deepak Chopra, I felt called to write an approachable book that could point people to Christianity's wonderfully accessible God.

Timothy Jones
Nolensville, Tenn.

No Biblical View?

✉ It is common to find people making good arguments for absolutes, including a belief in an absolute God, being the problem in the world. What is not so common is to find a Christian reviewer doing more damage. In Volf's review of Jehovah on Trial [Apr. 27] I found not one attempt to provide a biblical answer. God's rejection of Cain is not set in the biblical context of his rejection of God as his God, but Volf sees it in God's "inverting the order of social inequalities." Rather than present a biblical view, Volf sees Schwartz's critique of monotheism as a prod "to give a richer and more faithful account of who God is." How better than from Scripture? Instead, we are given a picture of a God whose election of "us" (saints?) does not exclude "them" (sinners?). This God actually chooses some for the "ultimate purpose" of blessing all. In the same way? For eternity? Finally, even the Trinity becomes a model for a healthy society rather than a model of life specifically and exclusively for the church. I find the points made by the reviewer much more disturbing than anything in the book.

Scotty Karber
Benton, Ark.

■ I believe Volf would have served us better if he had ended by saying, "Now all good Christians can save their money, and forget about Schwartz and keep on following and obeying God's Holy Word."

C. C. Fowler
Colorado Springs, Colo.

Positive, Nonjudgmental

As a Roman Catholic, I was surprised and grateful to discover your article "A Pro-Woman Pope" [Apr. 27]. Thank you, Elizabeth Fox-Genovese! Her article was positive and nonjudgmental, something Christian media other than specific Catholic literature and broadcasts frequently fail at. The lack of understanding and ignorance of Catholic teaching further serves to prejudice and divide Christians. I pray daily for the union of all Christians, and positive truthful dialogue is a very important step to reaching that goal.

Pamela Weaver
Piedmont, S. Dak.

Having a pope who supports women's equality in all realms of society does not mean much when he denies women the opportunity to be ordained.

Barbara Hallenbaugh
Connellsville, Pa.

Throwing Stones at Clinton

■ Virtuecrat Charles Colson's decrying of President Clinton's approval ratings in the midst of "salacious charges" deserves scrutiny ["Why Fidelity Matters," Apr. 27]. The last president we had who indisputably slept only with his wife was Jimmy Carter, who was hounded from office by Religious Right types like Colson and Falwell. Although Carter was an evangelical himself (and still teaches Sunday school), most evangelicals opted to support his successor, who became our only president who was divorced and never went to church. The evangelicals who voted for Ronald Reagan should be the last people throwing stones at Clinton.

Paul R. Schlitz, Jr.
Baltimore, Md.

THE DIGITAL HYMNAL

NEW VERSION CP

Now With Acoustic Grand Piano Plus Over 650 New Titles Previously Unavailable

- Instantly plays thousands of new praise and worship music, contemporary selections, traditional hymns, gospel favorites, kid's titles plus wedding, graduation and memorial selections - already stored inside - and indexed to page numbers of popular hymn books
- Acoustic grand piano, pipe organs, choir, strings and brass plus other exciting instruments already stored inside for instant use
- You choose the key, number of verses and style
- Completely self contained - no costly keyboards or disks needed
- Includes remote control and built-in speakers, or use PA system - CD quality sound
- Rechargeable NiCad battery available
- Pre-program an entire service in memory mode

Ask for cassette demo, master list of song titles and color brochure

- CONGREGATIONAL SINGING
- OUTDOOR MEETINGS
- HOME USE
- SOLOS AND CHOIR REHEARSAL

Gulbrandsen, Inc.
800-677-7374

2102 Hancock Street, San Diego, CA 92110 • FAX: 619-296-7157

Master of Arts in Theology

The benefits of my Master's Program have manifested themselves in my public teaching ministry as well as improving my research skills.

Rev. Tim Newman, M.A., '92

I thank the Lord for the renewal, enlargement, and sharpening of my faith and ministry as a result of Wheaton's innovative Master's Program for Persons in Ministry (M.P.M.).

Rev. Edwin Henning, M.A., '94

The Masters Program for Persons in Ministry at Wheaton College Graduate School is especially designed for people in ministry or those considering a career change to ministry. The degree combines off-campus self-study with on-campus intensive courses and a final semester in residence.

- ◆ External study courses - 16 credit hours
- ◆ One-week intensives on-campus - 8 credit hours
- ◆ One semester on-campus - 12 credit hours

"This degree program will help develop the skills of those already in ministry through an experience that addresses the academic, spiritual, and personal dimension."

Dr. Walter Elwell
Program Coordinator

For more information call...
1-800-888-0141

Admissions Director
Wheaton College Graduate School
Wheaton, IL 60187-5593 Phone: (630)752-5195

If Wheaton College accepts credit for all and does not require on-site for transfer students on the basis of having any very rare, unique, national or international, or religious and/or social programs and activities.

A Ray of Divine Light

✍ A hearty "hoorah" for Mr. George, Mr. Oden, and Mr. Packer. It is about time someone speaks, and is heard, from the ranks of true ecumenism ["An Open Letter About 'The Gift of Salvation,'" Apr. 27]. For a long time, I have been disheartened by the ecclesiastical bickering between Protestants and Catholics. All it has ever served to accomplish is a widening of the gulf between us.

I applaud the spirit and the effort of ECT. It seemed I never saw a reflection of that spirit in real life. Now I have glimpsed a ray of divine light. I shall continue to encourage and pray for those who push forward this true ecumenical spirit.

Dennis Paul Meyer
Coopersburg, Pa.

✍ Many evangelicals are wondering where the evangelical signers of the ECT documents are headed. Anyone who studies carefully the latest "Catechism of the Catholic Church" (1994) can only come to one conclusion: They are on a one-way street leading to Rome. Glen R. Felty
Chicago, Ill.

Christians and the Holocaust

With regard to the Editorial in CHRISTIANITY TODAY, April 27, 1998: I sincerely appreciate your attempt to wrestle with Christian responsibility for the Holocaust. But the article does not come to grips with the precedents that Hitler found in official Christian policies toward Jews, the complicity of genuine Christians in the democratic processes that brought Hitler to power, and the refusal of many born-again Christians to take a stand against Hitler's activities. Hitler's racist philosophy may have owed much to social Darwinism and Nietzsche, but it could not have developed without a long tradition of Christian theology that treated Jews in equally racist modes. Indeed, your own quotation from Martin Luther fortuitously identifies Jews in racial terms.

Your recommendations about education in the history of Judaism and anti-Judaism already have been widely followed in secular and nonevangelical Christian institutions. But many reputable evangelical institutions do not offer even a single course in these areas. Evangelicals have produced a Bible translation (the NIV) that is arguably the most insensitive of all the major recent translations with respect to the manner in which Jews and Judaism are portrayed (e.g., the NIV resists using the word Messiah, even when the title is demanded by the context).

Perhaps rather than defending ourselves, we should apologize.

Prof. Allen Kerkeslager
Eastern College
St. Davids, Pa.

✍ The author quotes Christian leaders from Chrysostom to Luther, which should make us do more than squirm. Perhaps our delicate Christian audiences would not be so shocked at the Holocaust Museum if our church curricula included an historical analysis of these events. Most Christians can attend a full range of church-sponsored educational programming from the cradle to the grave and fail to hear one word about the need to heal the relationship between the modern disciples of Jesus and his original brothers and sisters.

JoAnn Muguson
Lakeville, Minn.

Safeguarding MKs

Thank you for your good article on abuse of missionary kids (MKs) at Mamou Alliance Academy ["From Trauma to Truth," Apr. 27]. My parents and Henry and Hazel Neudorf, whom your article mentions, served with the Gospel Missionary Union (GMU), not the Christian & Missionary Alliance (C&MA) as your article implies. However, both GMU and C&MA required their missionary kids to be sent off to Mamou Alliance Academy at age six.

Unfortunately, the abuse of MKs is not just something that occurred in the past. Over the last few years, the Mamou Steering Committee has received reports of recent abuse of MKs at boarding schools. When, if ever, will the member missions of the IFMA and EFMA form an independent, permanent committee of professionals to oversee the 120-some MK schools they now run? Mission boards desperately need to be held accountable to some form of independent commission that will rectify the sins of the past and safeguard the present and future generations of missionary kids.

Pastor Richard Darr
Libertyville, Ill.

✍ As a house parent/head of station of the Mamou school during the era in question, and as one who appeared before the mentioned "commission to investigate" (and was exonerated), I am appalled that CT would print this article without examining the facts more carefully. I arrived first on the scene early in the era in question, and by the following year confronted an abusive situation personally; that confrontation ultimately led to the termination of the services of the guilty couple. When I later became house parent/head of station, the principal of the school and I were also instrumental in terminating the services of the abusive teacher in question. It is regrettable that these things should occur, but to say that they were never addressed at that time is even more regrettable.

Rev. Andrew D. Gardner
Brockton, Mass.

The article implies inactivity and cover-up. In reality, when accusations were first made, names and specifics were sought. These were not given, precluding an investigation. Once details were revealed, a commission was appointed to address the issue.

The C&MA is committed to dealing with this past situation in a comprehensive and sensitive manner to bring healing and closure to those who suffered. It has enacted measures to avoid a repeat of the problem, while resisting a "baby with the bathwater" mentality by closing down all such overseas schools.

Robert L. Niklaus, Dir. of Communications
The Christian and Missionary Alliance
Colorado Springs, Colo.

Alarming Prospects

With regard to "Does 'The Gift of Salvation' Sell Out the Reformation?" [News Apr. 27], I don't know which prospect I find more alarming: that God, in the process of "infusing" us with righteousness, would withhold full assurance of salvation or that in "imputing" righteousness to us he would ever be content to let us actually continue in sin. While uncertainty regarding salvation can lead to bondage, so can spiritual complacency. Since there are potential pitfalls and definite strengths on both sides, maybe there is nothing wrong with continuing to hope and work for the unity of purpose that transcends longstanding differences.

Marilyn Kincaid Clines
Delray Beach, Fla.

Correction

The photo of Bill McCartney on page 27 of the May 18 issue should have credited photographer Wayne Armstrong of Promise Keepers. CT regrets the omission.

Brief letters are welcome. They may be edited for space and clarity and must include the writer's name and address if intended for publication. Due to the volume of mail, we cannot respond personally to individual letters. Write to Eutychus, CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188; fax: 630/260-0114. E-mail: cted-it@aol.com (✉).

Up Close and Personal...

From the moment you pick up a phone, send an e-mail, or visit the campus of Lancaster Bible College, you will experience what hundreds of students feel is the difference at LBC—A PERSONAL TOUCH. You will find UP CLOSE and PRACTICAL faculty interaction in programs of study that prepare you to lead ministry globally—from classrooms to counseling cubicles, pulpits to cockpits. If you're serious about having GOD'S FINGERPRINTS on your life and a few of ours to help along the way, then LBC may be just the place for you.

UNDERGRADUATE PROGRAMS OF STUDY

Aviation, Missions
Bible Education
Bible Studies (2 year associates degree)
Christian Education
Church Music
Church Planting
Computers in Ministry
Concentrated Bible Course (1 year certificate)
Counselor, Professional
Early Childhood Education
Elementary Education
General Ministry
Guidance Counseling/Bible Education
LBC Certificate (1 year certificate)
Missions
Music Education/Bible Education
Music Ministry
Pastoral Ministry
Physical Education/Bible Education
Pre-Seminary
Secretarial Studies (2 year associates degree)
Social Services
Vocational Technology
Women in Christian Ministries
Youth Ministry

Two-year B.S. track for college graduates including R.N.'s.

Lancaster Bible College and Graduate School

901 Eden Road • Lancaster, PA 17601 • 1-888-CALL-LBC • www.LBC.edu

LBC does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, national origin, gender, or disability.

Conspirator? Pro-Life Action League executive director Joseph Scheidler (right) leaves court in Chicago with his daughter Annie after the first day of the trial.

Pro-Lifers Hit with Treble Damages

Pro-life activists Joseph Scheidler, Andrew Scholberg, and Timothy Murphy, found guilty of racketeering in April in connection with their nationwide abortion protests, say the convictions violate their free-speech rights.

"I'm a racketeer because I don't think cutting babies' heads off is a good idea," Scheidler says. "If this goes through, almost anybody who talks to someone or does something that hurts someone's business, that could be extortion. That's not America."

The successful 12-year-old suit, brought by the National Organization for Women (NOW) and two abortion facilities, was the first against the pro-life movement filed under the Racketeer-Influenced Corrupt Organizations (RICO) Act, originally designed to target organized crime.

NOW attorney Sara Love says the First Amendment did not protect the protesters' activities because they were forcefully "depriving women of their constitutional right and depriving clinics of their right to do business."

The jury in NOW v. Scheidler awarded the two abortion facilities nearly $86,000 in damages. As a RICO conviction, the damage award will be tripled. Because of the suit's class-action status, abortion facilities nationwide can seek damages as well. Scheidler, executive director of the Pro-Life Action League, says they will pursue an appeal of the verdict.

Operation Rescue founder Randall Terry, originally named as a defendant in the suit but dropped because of a previous settlement with NOW, says he believes the pro-life movement will prevail in the end.

"If Joe Scheidler is a racketeer, then Martin Luther King is a racketeer," Terry says. "This verdict, if it's sustained at the Supreme Court, would spell the death of over 200 years of peaceful protest in America."

Despite the verdict and the potentially behemoth damages, Scheidler has no plans to retreat. "The more they try to stop it, the more they galvanize the movement," Scheidler says. "Jesus said to go out and teach. We have to take this truth out."

By Lincoln Brunner.

Smut Tax Raises Questions, but Not Revenue

Because pornography is cited as a cause of spouse and child abuse, Wisconsin State Rep. Dean Kaufert thought taxing smut might be a good way to raise up to $1.5 million per year to help its victims.

Legislative colleagues agreed, and Gov. Tommy Thompson signed a law that would add a 5 percent tax to sexual products and services that are "harmful to children." But state officials had no guidelines on how to implement the law.

"We had some difficulty coming up with language that is going to meet the constitutional test in the eyes of the Department of Revenue," says Kaufert, a Republican from Neenah. "It's the first in the nation and we want to do it right."

The law did not cover pornographic movies or magazines because of First Amendment issues. It specifically targeted cover charges at strip clubs, but those businesses quickly devised loopholes. Kaufert wanted to include sex toys sold at pornographic video outlets, but lingerie dealers convinced lawmakers to back off.

The law was supposed to take effect April 1. On April 30, the Wisconsin Legislature Joint Finance Committee voted 16 to 0 to repeal the porn tax, citing difficulty in determining a definition. For now at least, pornography remains unfettered as far as state coffers are concerned.

Marvin Munyon of the Wisconsin Family Research Institute doubts that the legislature will resurrect the issue. "It will probably fizzle out because they can't figure out what is pornography and what isn't," Munyon says.

By Gordon Govier in Madison, Wisconsin.

CONGRESS

Homosexual Job-Protection Bill Back

Legislation that would prevent employers from discriminating against workers based on sexual preference has been reintroduced into Congress after sustaining a narrow defeat two years ago. Pro-family groups oppose the Employment Nondiscrimination Act (ENDA), calling it a threat to religious freedom.

The bill lost in the Senate in September 1996 by a vote of 50 to 49 (CT, Oct. 28, 1996, p. 80). But now homosexual activists believe support from moderate Republicans in the Senate makes ENDA's passage possible. Although the bill has 158 cosponsors in the House, support there remains too shallow to ensure its passage.

Kim Mills of the Human Rights Campaign says, "We need a federal law to make a level playing field," even though more and more companies are offering "gay-friendly policies."

"It's not about civil rights,

it's about crushing dissent," says Robert Knight of the Family Research Council. He says the most worrisome part of the bill is the religious organization exemption. The current wording exempts religious organizations except for their commercial or for-profit activity. Knight says the wording is too weak to protect churches and Christian businesses from being forced to hire individuals in violation of their beliefs.

Currently, ten states have laws similar to ENDA.

By Walter R. Ratliff in Washington, D.C.

210 Groups Join Outreach Campaign

Mission America, a coalition of 150 parachurch groups and 60 denominations representing more than 40 million people, aims to "pray for and share Christ with every person in America by 2000" through its evangelism initiative Celebrate Jesus 2000.

The outreach, based in Minneapolis, has a budget of $1.2 million financed by donors, foundations, and members. The program encourages churches to collaborate in communitywide evangelism.

Participating churches and ministries are carrying out Celebrate Jesus 2000 in four stages: last year was devoted to prayer; this year is for door-to-door evangelism; next year will feature public events where the gospel is proclaimed; and 2000 will involve follow-up and discipleship of new believers.

Mission America is distributing resource packets to churches that include guidelines on how to present the gospel by telephone and direct mail. Guidelines for initiating evangelism partnerships among local churches are also included. Celebrate Jesus 2000 has been endorsed by the Southern Baptist Convention, Assemblies of God, and the National Association of Evangelicals. Paul Cedar is Mission America chair. [CT]

HOME SCHOOLING

Student Banned from Tournament

The North Dakota High School Activities Association (NDHSAA) banned 12-year-old Joshua Lawrence from competing in a regional speech tournament in April because he is being taught at home.

In North Dakota, home schoolers can participate in public-school activities without enrolling. However, last August the NDHSAA adopted a policy preventing home schoolers from participating in private-school activities without enrolling first. Lawrence was ejected from competition as part of the Shiloh Christian private school team when his home schooling became known.

"The policy is discriminatory toward home schoolers," says

Jim Hofman, administrator of Shiloh Christian School. Children educated at home have competed on teams from Shiloh Christian School since 1991.

Nationally, home schooling is growing at an annual rate of 15 percent (CT, July 14, 1997, p. 68), and an estimated 1.5 million children are now taught at home. Public schools in some states can receive additional funds because of home schoolers who participate in activities. [CT]

HOME SCHOOLING DOUBLES IN SIX YEARS

News Briefs

Winchell

Stearns

◆ The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit ruled on April 13 that Crystal Evangelical Free Church in New Hope, Minnesota, may keep $13,450 donated by Bruce and Nancy Young before they declared bankruptcy in 1992. Initially, the church pegged its hopes of retaining the tithes on 1993's federal Religious Freedom Restoration Act, but the Supreme Court ruled RFRA unconstitutional last year. In April, however, the appeals court decided that religiously motivated donations to churches and charities before a donor files for bankruptcy are protected.

◆ Richard Winchell, general director with The Evangelical Alliance Mission (TEAM) from 1975 to 1994, died April 13 in Stuart, Florida, after a long battle with cancer. Winchell, 69, had also been board president of the Interdenominational Foreign Mission Association of North America.

◆ Richard Edmund Stearns, 47, becomes the head of U.S. operations of World Vision in Federal Way, Washington, on June 15, succeeding Robert Seiple, who is retiring after 11 years of leading the largest privately funded Christian relief-and-development organization (see p. 49). Stearns has been president of Lenox, Inc., a New Jersey-based company that manufactures fine china.

◆ Michael English, 35, has announced his return to Christian music. In 1996, English released his secular debut album Freedom after confessing to adultery with a Christian singer (CT, June 20, 1994, p. 115). English won six Dove awards in 1994.

◆ Church historian Jaroslav Pelikan, a lifelong Lutheran, became a member of the Orthodox Church of America March 25 at Saint Vladimir's Seminary in Crestwood, New York. Pelikan, a 75-year-old former Yale University professor, is best known for his five-volume work The Christian Tradition.

◆ Ontario Bible College/Ontario Theological Seminary in Toronto has changed its name to Tyndale College and Seminary. The school, founded in 1894, has a combined enrollment of more than 1,000.

◆ Daniel Aleshire, 50, has been elected executive director of the Pittsburgh-based Association of Theological Schools in the United States and Canada (ATS). Aleshire, a Southern Baptist Theological Seminary faculty member from 1978 to 1990, will succeed 62-year-old James L. Waits, who leaves the post on June 30 to become president of the ATS fund for theological education. ATS is the accrediting and program agency for graduate theological education in North America, with 229 Protestant, Catholic, and Orthodox schools as members.

◆ Simon Greenleaf Law School in Anaheim, California, has merged with Trinity International University and changed its name to Trinity Law School. The new law school has 100 graduate students. Trinity International University, which includes Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, now has three campuses, in Illinois, Florida, and California.

◆ Charles Dokmo, 46, is the new president of Oak Brook, Illinois-based Opportunity International/U.S. Dokmo has been World Vision field director for Romania, Bulgaria, and Moldova. He replaces 51-year-old Eric Thurman, who has become a consultant for nonprofit organizations.

◆ Judy Mills Reimer is the new executive director of the Elgin, Illinois-based Church of the Brethren's 24-member general board. The denomination has 142,000 members.

◆ Construction has started on a 40-acre site for a $5.2 million headquarters for Orlando, Florida-based Pioneers, a 19-year-old organization with 10,000 missionaries in 40 countries. [CT]

Are you prepared to minister in a consumerist culture?

"Toward a Free and Virtuous Society" conferences, sponsored by the Acton Institute, introduce students to a theologically-informed understanding of economic life and its promotion of a just society. The conferences, open to seminarians and future Christian lay leaders, are free of charge. Travel scholarships are available to accepted applicants.

Upcoming conferences are being held July 30-August 2 in North Bend, WA; August 20-23 in West Cornwall, CT; and October 8-11 in Marble Falls, TX.

Contact Lisa Prentice at Acton Institute for the Study of Religion & Liberty
161 Ottawa NW, Suite 301
Grand Rapids, MI 49503
phone 1-800-345-2286
prentice@acton.org

INSTITUTE FOR BLACK FAMILY RENEWAL

- Tapes • Books • Seminars
- Literature • Family Counseling

CALL: 888-428-3761

FAX: 214-428-3765

OR WRITE

P.O. Box 150217
Dallas, Texas 75315

Protestant Theologians Object to Lutheran-Catholic Accord

More than 165 of Germany's top Protestant theologians, including Jürgen Moltmann, are criticizing a new Lutheran-Catholic statement that attempts to resolve historic differences on the doctrine of justification.

The theologians' protest comes in response to the proposed Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification (JDDJ) devised by the Lutheran World Federation (LWF) and the Vatican.

The LWF, which is made up of 124 member churches and 61 million members, is voting this month on whether to approve or reject the document.

The JDDJ proposal declares that Lutherans and Catholics have a "consensus in the basic truths" of justification, a doctrine that became "the crux" of all ensuing disputes, including mutual condemnations by and against both churches that remain valid today. The statement says there are remaining doctrinal differences but they "are no longer the occasion for doctrinal condemnations."

Germany's debate over the JDDJ has been characterized by cautious elation, serious reservations, partial rejection, and a great deal of confusion about what the document will mean at the practical level.

"The joint declaration shows that since there has been such great agreement [on justification], existing doctrinal differences should no longer warrant church divisions," says Bishop Horst Hirschler of Hannover, president of the United Evangelical Lutheran Church. Luther, he told CT, would have been "filled with joy" over the current debate and the JDDJ's emphasis on faith alone bringing "true freedom for the Christian."

Evangelicals have added their voices to the debate. "Theological discussions between different denominational confessions are helpful and necessary for mutual understanding," says Rolf Hille, chair of the German Evangelical Alliance. But Hille, who also chairs the Theological Commission of the World Evangelical Fellowship, notes that the JDDJ falls short in that it does not stipulate that faith includes the assurance of salvation. "What is, then, grace? What is faith? All of this remains unclear."

Most of Germany's regional Lutheran church bodies that have acted so far are approving the accord, but with reservations—praising the effort as an important ecumenical step forward but agreeing in principle that they have not achieved full consensus on the basic truths of justification.

THEOLOGIANS OPPOSED: The largest and most critical opposition to the declaration has come from more than 165 Lutheran scholars who have signed a letter of protest initiated by theologians Gerhard Ebeling and Eberhard Jüngel. The professors argue, among other points, that there has been no consensus reached on justification by faith alone and the "importance of good works for salvation." They urged churches to reject the document completely, or at least deny that an overall consensus has been reached on justification.

One of the signatories, Bonn University New Testament professor Michael Wolter, says key differences between Catholic and Lutheran tradition and understanding of ecclesiology and church authority are being "pushed in the background and handled as if these differences do not exist or as if they have no significance." He also questions how the LWF, which is not a church, could be authorized to enter into official talks on doctrinal issues with the Vatican.

Criticism of the Protestant professors' letter has come from several quarters. Presiding Catholic bishop Karl Lehmann, a JDDJ advocate, says formal protests against the document are cause for "serious concern." He warns that a 30-year ecumenical process leading up to the declaration could be derailed because of several "painful allegations and incomprehensible misinterpretations."

Scholars who support the declaration have not issued a position paper with a similarly large number of signatories to counter the JDDJ's academic critics.

Munich pastor Otto Kietzig told CT the protesting scholars have been unable to see the broad picture because of theological "nitpicking." Wolter's colleague in Bonn, church history professor Karl-Heinz von Mühlen, rejects Kietzig's view as "nonsense," arguing that justification by faith alone for the Lutheran is the central, indispensable Christian doctrine, which cannot be compromised.

By Richard Nyberg in Bonn.

Calmer times: Spyridon (center) leaves the Cathedral of the Holy Spirit in New York after being enthroned as the fifth leader—and first U.S.-born prelate—of the Greek Orthodox Church in America.

Lay Coalition Demands Removal of U.S. Archbishop Spyridon

A group of dissatisfied Orthodox lay leaders have demanded the removal of the head of the U.S. church in a growing dispute that has involved the Istanbul-based head of the worldwide Greek church. The unprecedented clash in the mystical, ancient faith pits clergy and lay leaders in a struggle over decision-making authority.

More than 400 lay leaders have called for the resignation or reassignment of Archbishop Spyridon, the spiritual head of the one million-member Greek Orthodox Archdiocese in the United States. The church's internal dispute over the role of their highest leader in America has reached a new pitch, as Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew declined to respond to their demands by May 1 as requested.

Members of the coalition Greek Orthodox American Leaders (GOAL) came from 28 states and met March 20–21 in Chicago to voice concerns and to devise resolutions. GOAL formed last November to address the crisis, maintaining that Spyridon has diminished the role of free lay participation in church life and accusing him of heavy-handed decisions and cover-ups since his appointment in 1996.

Bartholomew, the "first among equals" of the heads of the 15 autocephalous Orthodox churches, appointed Spyridon, who has his share of supporters. GOAL members have been careful to voice their support for the patriarch while disapproving of the actions of his appointee. The patriarch heard complaints on his 16-city U.S. tour in November (CT, Dec. 8, 1997, p. 75).

OBJECTIONS PROLIFERATE: GOAL's concerns stem from the firing of three priests at the Hellenic College/Holy Cross Seminary in Brookline, Massachusetts, in June 1997. Many members believe the archbishop fired the clergy to cover up a sexual harassment incident at the seminary.

Members of GOAL also complain that Spyridon has enforced what they call a "pay and obey" mentality and has removed lay oversight of archdiocesan funds. Also, they charge that he frequently reassigns priests who question diocesan decisions.

In meetings, the group has called on Spyridon to help reinstitute support for a unified Orthodox Church in America, a move supported by his predecessor, Archbishop Iakovos.

George Stephens, a lifetime member of the Greek Orthodox Church who has held several leadership positions and is a faculty member at Tufts University, is one of the most vocal critics of Spyridon. "I've served the church for 15 years and have never spoken out before, but these are strange times," Stephens claims that the Holy Cross incident "created a reign of terror" because the three fired priests were very well known.

"Priests think that if they can get to them, then they can get to anybody," Stephens says. "Therefore, the clergy have been silent."

Furthermore, Stephens charges that "the archbishop has gone against the charter and stacked the deck with appointees instead of elected members. And if the people vote against him, then after the vote he simply replaces them." Stephens says Spyridon replaced him after he served on the Orthodox Christian Missions Board for 14 years.

GOAL TACTICS: Not everyone agrees with GOAL. In a February statement signed by Spyridon and all five bishops, the Greek Archdiocese criticized unnamed groups for "attempting to establish themselves as separate and self-proclaiming arbiters of church governance."

The larger issue to some Orthodox is not the alleged imperfections of Spyridon, but the way in which GOAL members have acted on their concerns.

Jim Jatras, an Orthodox Christian from Arlington, Virginia, who is a U.S. Senate Republican policy analyst, disagrees with Bartholomew on some issues but believes obedience to the bishop is a cornerstone of Orthodoxy.

"There are problems, but that doesn't justify a Protestant-style revolt in the church," Jatras says. "A friend called me and said, 'the revolution has begun,' and I told him I didn't agree with him."

MINORITY DISSENTS? Others, such as author Frank Schaeffer, who converted to Orthodox Christianity in 1990, believe GOAL does not represent the sentiments of most Greek Orthodox laity.

"I travel all over the country visiting churches, and from what I've seen, the concerns of GOAL are the concerns of a small minority, amplified by the Internet," says Schaeffer, of Newburyport, Massachusetts. "There have always been dissident groups, especially in the Greek community, which tends to thrive in factional disputes."

However, John Collis, a neurosurgeon and executive director of GOAL, says that Spyridon is not living up to the charter, which governs the American church. He says the charter clearly gives lay leaders a voice in governing the church and that Spyridon has acted autocratically without proper consultation.

"Our charter is clear. The laity has a voice in all matters. Neither laity nor clergy can back out of an agreement without the agreement of the other," Collis says. But George Passias, chancellor for the archdiocese, says, "The real issue here is that these people, a few disgruntled people of means, don't agree with the direction of the church."

By Shelly Houston, with RNS reports.

Caught Between Cultures

Recovery evangelism is used to spread the gospel to Native Americans at a joint Graham festival.

Garbed in full Native American head-dress with a bead medallion around his neck that read "Jesus Loves Me," the great-grandson of Apache chief Geronimo told a crowd of more than 14,000 New Mexicans that the words of an old Bible he was about to toss into a wood stove brought him new life.

Reynard Faber, a recovering alcoholic, left his life as a tribal medicine man to become one of the few Native American evangelists to 150,000 New Mexican Native Americans. He says, "I'm seeing Native people come to Jesus like never before."

Faber shared his testimony on "Native American night" at the beginning of the five-night Festival '98, May 6-10 at the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque.

The event marked the first time that Billy Graham and his son Franklin shared preaching responsibilities at a U.S. crusade. Franklin preached the first three nights, Billy the two weekend services, to a total of 103,369 people. Franklin had preached in Farmington, New Mexico, in 1996. The elder Graham held crusades in Albuquerque in 1952 and 1975.

RELIGIOUS DISCRIMINATION: Native Americans find themselves torn between two cultures when they become Christians. "We want to be part of our community, but sometimes we just don't fit in," says Lorraine Galegos of the Santa Ana pueblo, one of 19 in the state. "We're kind of outcasts in our village, because we belong to another church." Only Roman Catholics have a church on the Native American land.

Christianity is viewed as an Anglo religion and a threat to Native American traditions. Darren Vicenti, a member of the Jicarilla Apache tribe, is the only Christian in his family. "There is a lot of pressure among those that have accepted the Lord." He says other tribe members say, " 'You're just trying to be a white man.' "

Faber agrees that animosities toward whites persist, but he thinks it is an excuse for a "defeatist" lifestyle. Instead, Faber promotes Christianity while affirming Native American cultural heritage. "I tell them, 'You are Apache and you need to be proud of it.' But then I tell them about Christ and how he changed my life."

Native Americans in New Mexico have reason to think twice before joining a Protestant church because of the dire consequences. Faber says those in a pueblo who convert may be banished by the leaders. He says similar action is taken by the two Apache tribes and Navajo nation within the state.

Galegos is thrilled that her brother-in-law and seven-year-old son accepted Christ at the crusade, but she acknowledges the challenges they will face. Galegos says that three years ago the Santa Ana pueblo revoked her family's burial rites because of their Christian faith. She says there is a high number of "underground Christians" who, in fear of being discovered, sneak over mountains to attend church. "We live like in a glass fishbowl. Everything we do or say, people are watching."

BUILDING BRIDGES: Fifteen area tribal leaders were invited to join Franklin Graham on the platform for Native American night. Christian country singer Dennis Agajanian sang in Apache. "He might not have the perfect pronunciation, but people love that," says Skip Heitzig, Tag team match: Billy and Franklin Graham take turns at the pulpit in New Mexico.

Cultural transition: Faber tells of his new life in Christ.

vice chair of the local crusade committee and pastor of the 10,000-member Calvary Chapel in Albuquerque. "It's like you're saying, 'You're important to me and your culture is important to me.' "

The neutral university location of Festival '98 and ecumenical appeal of the Grahams attracted an ethnic cross section that churches in New Mexico struggle to achieve.

The crusade also helped break down barriers between Protestant and Catholic churches, which historically have not worked together. "The Catholic diocese here has been very much in favor of what we are doing and even wrote a letter to every one of their parishes recommending they get involved," says festival director Herb McCarthy. "If we're really honest, the things that divide us are small in comparison to the things we hold in common."

RECOVERY EVANGELISM: The diverse audience responded to Franklin Graham's messages of sin and God's forgiveness, as well as God's power to stop addiction. Many of the testimonies each night included accounts of recovery from substance abuse. Heitzig, who became a Christian in 1973 while watching a Billy Graham crusade on television, admitted to dealing drugs in a church choir loft during his pre-Christian days.

Alcoholism is a significant social problem in New Mexico. "Alcoholism is to the Indian nation what AIDS is to the African nations," says Terence Kelshaw, ministerial vice chair for the crusade committee and bishop of the Rio Grande diocese of the Episcopal Church. The state is regularly among the leaders in per capita deaths related to drunken driving.

PASSING THE TORCH: In 1995, the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association tabbed Franklin as his father's successor. While the historic joint appearance of father and son evangelists in Albuquerque may symbolize a transition of leadership, Billy Graham is not done preaching, even though he has Parkinson's disease.

"The doctors said 'slow down.' They didn't say 'stop,'" Graham, now 79, told reporters. "I'm going to retire when the Lord retires me." He has solo crusades scheduled this month in Ottawa and in October in Tampa. No further joint appearances are scheduled.

"Franklin and I preach the same gospel," says Billy Graham. "We approach it a little bit differently. He's not a clone of me." Stalwarts Cliff Barrows and George Beverly Shea joined the elder Graham at the crusade.

The message may be the same, but the men and the methods are different. Franklin, at 45, appeals to a younger generation with his "rebel with a cause" testimony. "Kids can relate to someone that rides a motorcycle and started out rough," says Pamela Faux, a counselor supervisor. "He wasn't an angel."

Of the 5,719 who made decisions for Christ during the crusade, 55 percent were under 18 years of age.

They may relate to Franklin, but they revere Billy. On the weekend, when the elder Graham preached, the Pit arena filled to its 18,000-seat capacity within minutes, forcing thousands of people into an outdoor overflow area.

On the final night, Graham's international stature drew Curtis Onco, 44, who is Kiowa-Cheyenne. Six months ago, Onco found himself homeless when his house burned down. The Bible that a friend had given him was among the few items not consumed. Yet, instead of turning to the Scriptures, Onco returned to alcohol.

He says, "Temptations are out there all over the place—people saying, 'Let's go drink, I'm buying. Let's go party.'"

Onco, who stopped drinking four months ago, says belief in God presents no problem for most Native Americans, but joining a church is a step few, including himself, are willing to risk. In the meantime, his Bible has become a steady companion. "I always like to come back to it," he says. "Now I'm trying to go ahead."

By Christine J. Gardner in Albuquerque.

Upset with denomination: Protesters let their sentiments be known outside a gathering of bishops in Nebraska.

Verdict Aftershocks

Bishops reject call for a special session, but protests lead to removal of minister Creech.

Despite a groundswell of protest, the United Methodist Church (UMC) council of bishops has rejected a request to hold a special session of the denomination's top legislative body to deal with the issue of same-sex "marriage."

The bishops, however, may already be taking a stronger stance. Bishop Joel Martinez of Nebraska announced on May 6 that he will not reappoint Jimmy Creech as pastor of First United Methodist Church in Omaha. Creech had been acquitted by a jury of UMC pastors in March for performing a same-sex marriage (CT, April 27, 1998, p. 14).

Martinez indicated Creech has lost support from his congregation in the aftermath of performing the lesbian ceremony. Last month's announcement pleased conservatives in the denomination, including Patricia Miller, executive director of the Confessing Movement (CM), an evangelical organization representing 1,100 UMC churches and 500,000 members. "It says that there will be repercussions if the United Methodist doctrine is not upheld."

Creech told CT he is extremely disappointed with Martinez's decision. "I will continue to celebrate covenant ceremonies," Creech says. He does not believe that removal will stop the UMC from becoming "a more inclusive and open church."

SPECIAL SESSION SOUGHT: The only special session of the general conference, the denomination's highest legislative body, took place in 1970, when Methodists considered issues relating to the union with the Evangelical United Brethren. General conferences consist of 1,000 delegates, half laity and half clergy, elected by the annual conferences. The general conference meets every four years, with the next session scheduled for 2000 in Cleveland.

Nevertheless, there has been pressure for a special session to consider the Creech verdict and the issue of same-sex marriages. Those advocating such a move include Asbury Theological Seminary president Maxie Dunnam (a theological adviser to CT), North Carolina bishop Marion Edwards, Georgia bishop Lindsey Davis, the evangelical magazine Good News, and the CM.

In addition, the south-central College of Bishops, one of five such groups in the UMC, has requested that the judicial council, the denomination's top court, consider whether a statement in the denomination's Book of Discipline prohibiting same-sex unions is a punishable offense. The judicial council will consider the issue August 7-8 in Dallas.

Among all the objections, the most serious came from the evangelical CM, which met in Tulsa, Oklahoma, in April. At the conference, about 1,000 CM members unanimously adopted a statement to be sent to all UMC bishops "to hold each other accountable in teaching and defending the doctrinal and ethical standards of the Book of Discipline."

In a separate statement to the UMC on homosexual rites, the movement warned, "If there is any weakening of these biblical and disciplinary standards, we will be forced to reconsider our commitments to the existing structures of the United Methodist Church."

The bishops, however, indicated calling a special session would be unwise in light of the imminent judicial council meeting. The bishops also vowed to proclaim and defend the doctrine, order, and mission of the church, including the statements on homosexuality in the denomination's Book of Discipline that prohibit homosexual-union ceremonies. Despite requests from prominent denominational leaders, bishops made no reference to the Creech trial.

PULLOUT RUMBLINGS: Even with reassurances that the denomination's views on homosexuality have not changed, the CM warned that unless the church's stance on same-sex marriages is clarified during the judicial council meeting, then "we are fearful that there will be a radical hemorrhage of members leaving the denomination."

"We're disappointed that they did not deal with the Creech issue," Good News editor Steve Beard told CT. "The church needed something far more decisive on Creech." Beard also wonders why at least three bishops who are outspoken supporters of homosexuality agreed to abide by the Book of Discipline. He notes that one of these bishops, Melvin Talbert of California, allowed same-sex marriages to be performed by pastor Karen Oliveto of Bethany United Methodist Church in San Francisco.

Beard is also concerned about 184 UMC clergy who had signed a declaration in support of conducting same-sex marriages.

SEISMIC SHIFTS? The denomination is likely to grapple with fallout from the Creech affair. Some United Methodists call the recent events an unprecedented crisis. Others are leaving the denomination, organizing protests, or withholding funds.

Looking for work: Creech can no longer preach, at least as a Methodist in Omaha.

"The failure of our judicial system on this one case has spread life-threatening frustration and confusion in our church," Georgia bishop Lindsey Davies says. "Our people deserve to have this issue clarified as soon as possible. To wait until 2000 would only result in spiritual damage to our church."

At least 300 demonstrators met UMC bishops as they left a service at Saint Paul United Methodist Church in Lincoln, Nebraska, on April 26. The demonstrators urged the bishops to uphold the Book of Discipline and carried placards reading, "God's law, not man's law." Bishop council president Emerito Nacpil of Manila indicated that the demonstration was the first he had witnessed in 18 years of attending council meetings.

The May/June issue of Good News displays a cover picture of a sinking Titanic with the headline, "Will homosexuality sink United Methodism?" Editor Jim Heidinger says United Methodism is reeling amid unprecedented waves of distress and turmoil because of the Creech trial.

DENOMINATIONAL DEPARTURES: The fallout from the Creech issue is also leading to an exodus of committed evangelicals who believe they can no longer remain in the denomination. While some former members of Creech's congregation are attending other United Methodist churches, 300 former members are holding an alternative service in an Omaha high school.

Another 22 evangelical UMC ministers in California and Nevada have asked to separate from the denomination, stating they are "beyond reconciliation" after some of the conference's leaders expressed support for Creech.

Two congregations in Georgia are withholding monies to "churchwide" causes while waiting for further developments in the case. Churchwide causes include supporting the work of bodies such as the National Council of Churches and the World Council of Churches. A third Georgia congregation approved a similar move due to problems with the denomination's "doctrinal integrity," not merely because of the Creech verdict.

WAKE-UP CALL? William Abraham, professor of Wesley Studies at the Perkins School of Theology in Dallas sees the verdict as a wake-up call to UMC moderates and conservatives. "They realize for the first time what their church will look like if those committed to theological and moral revisionism get their way," Abraham says.

According to Abraham, the Creech trial "triggered awareness of a network of differences concerning revelation, mission, and theology. For the first time these differences are being squarely identified and faced."

Abraham does not know how—or if—such vital divisions will be resolved. "Many believe that the differences can be contained within the one body over time," he says. "This consensus is now being challenged by liberals and conservative incompatibilists who argue that it is impractical. Only time will tell how the debate will play itself out."

By Mary Cagney.

WE PRACTICE WHAT WE TEACH

FULLER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

An unchanging focus for an ever-changing world

135 NORTH OAKLAND AVENUE, PASADENA, CA 91182

1-800-AFULLER HTTP://WWW.FULLER.EDU

Pasadena Seattle Sacramento Menlo Park Irvine Phoenix Colorado Springs

From the day Fuller Theological Seminary opened its doors half a century ago, our faculty and students have shared a dual commitment: to outstanding biblical scholarship and to the ministry of Christ.

That same focus remains central to the Fuller mission today. Our professors not only excel in the classroom, but they are out in the world, pastoring churches, engaging in mission, practicing psychology. Just as founding faculty member Carl F. H. Henry used to witness between theology classes, so New Testament scholar Isaac Canales serves as minister of a 1,300-member church and volunteer chaplain to a high school football team. Judith Tiersma Watson lives and works among the poor in Los Angeles as part of InnerChange, when she's not teaching classes in urban mission. And they are joined by scores of Fuller colleagues who are equally active on-campus and in the community.

The reason for their dedication is simple: Teaching and preaching are the best ways we know to nurture keen minds and compassionate hearts.

Still faithful.
Still Fuller.

PERSECUTION

Pakistani Bishop's Death Sparks Riots

Rioting and turmoil have followed the death of Roman Catholic bishop and human-rights activist John Joseph, who killed himself in protest of a death sentence imposed on another Christian under Pakistan's blasphemy law.

On May 6, Joseph, 66, bishop of Faisalabad and chair of the human-rights group National Justice and Peace Commission, shot himself in the head.

Joseph's suicide protested the death sentence pronounced on Ayub Masih, 25, by a local judge. Masih had been convicted April 27 of slandering Islam by speaking favorably about Salman Rushdie, author of Satanic Verses. On May 12, the two-judge Lahore High Court suspended the death sentence of Masih, a Catholic.

Preaching at a mass on May 6, Joseph declared that the difficulties facing the Christian community in Pakistan would continue until someone made a large sacrifice.

Under the blasphemy law, introduced in 1986, "anyone who directly or indirectly by word, gesture, innuendo, or otherwise defiles the name of the holy prophet Muhammad will be punished with death or life imprisonment." More than a dozen Christians have been jailed under the law. Three had been condemned to death but were acquitted on appeal.

Karachi protest: Christians protest Pakistan's blasphemy law on May 8.

Thousands of Christian mourners protested against the blasphemy laws at Joseph's funeral on May 8 in Faisalabad. Police fired tear gas into the crowd, and bullets injured three people. Christians also marched and rioted in Karachi.

A mob of Muslim extremists burned homes and shops in Faisalabad on May 10 in reaction to the protests by the Christian community. About 500 Muslims rampaged through the town screaming in favor of the blasphemy laws. Joseph was buried on the grounds of Saints Peter and Paul Cathedral in Faisalabad.

Thousands of Christians took to the streets May 15 to protest the laws. About 600 were arrested after they set fire to vehicles and shops. About 2 million of Pakistan's 140 million people are Christians.

Bishop's funeral: La'azarus Joseph kisses the coffin of his brother in Faisalabad.

GREAT BRITAIN

Is Millennium's Meaning Missing?

The millennium is receiving major media attention in Britain, but only one in six Britons realizes the year 2000 signifies the anniversary of the birth of Jesus, according to a Gallup poll.

British evangelicals are reminding the public of the importance of Christianity in their culture and are bringing a Christian dimension to the many secular celebrations being planned for the millennium.

The Evangelical Alliance (EA), representing more than one million Christians in 30 denominations, is making certain that when the new millennium arrives, no one in Britain will be unaware of whose birth is being celebrated. EA has established Anno Domini (AD) as a coordinating group for evangelical millennium activities.

AD facilitates networking for the various millennium projects, including a 1,000-day prayer project. AD is also organizing quarterly meetings for project coordinators and is providing ideas for churches to celebrate the birth of Christ.

"Followers of Jesus Christ are in the best position to remind a lost and hurting world of the significance of the year 2000," says AD director Brian Clews.

Among the secular projects planned is a $1 billion, 20-acre millennium dome being built in Greenwich near London. The dome will have nine zones, including a "spirit zone" celebrating the influence of Christianity and other faiths.

However, EA general director Joel Edwards believes the government is using the dome to celebrate Britain's secular achievements. "Let's not get diverted by the politicizing of the dome," he says. "Let's respond practically to this unique period in history to present Christ creatively and convincingly."

Edwards is a member of a group of faith representatives that includes Muslims and Hindus who are advising the government and the New Millennium Experience Company, builders of the dome.

Dome: A $1 billion tribute to merrymaking?

Meanwhile, the interdenominational Fanfare for a New Generation (FNG), led by Baptist minister Steve Chalke and singer Cliff Richard, plans to make churches in Britain "more relevant, welcoming, and challenging" in the new millennium. FNG is urging congregations to implement ten practical goals by January 2000.

Centennial of Protestantism Marked

About one million believers representing the major streams of Christianity in the Philippines are expected to gather in Manila in August to celebrate the centennial of Protestant missionaries arriving in the country.

Bishop Efraim Tendero, general secretary of the Philippine Council of Evangelical Churches, says the first Protestant service took place August 14, 1898, the day after Filipino and American troops seized control of Manila from Spanish forces. Even though the service was led by American YMCA laity for U.S. soldiers, a centennial coordinating committee considers it "the first open gospel proclamation in the country."

Many historians believe that when the Americans came in 1898 in the wake of the Spanish-American War, they stole the freedom already won by Filipino revolutionaries after 350 years of Spanish rule. The United States annexed the Philippines instead of allowing independence, as happened in Cuba the same year. Filipinos finally gained independence in 1946.

Evangelical leaders, however, assert that God's greater purpose for the Philippines transcended America's imperialistic design: Americans brought Bible-based Christianity; allowed religious freedom, which paved the way for vigorous evangelization and indigenous church planting; and taught English, which today is a major reason Filipinos are considered ideal ambassadors for Christ.

After centuries of Spanish rule, the country remains two-thirds Catholic. But today, there are 32,000 Protestant and evangelical churches, compared to only 10,500 in 1980, according to World Evangelical Fellowship international director Jun Vencer, a Filipino. Although evangelicals account for only 7 percent of the population, the annual growth rate is 7 percent, and higher among Pentecostals, Vencer says.

By Jovie Galaraga in Manila.

NEW ZEALAND

Virgin in a Condom Provokes Outcry

When New Zealanders opened a $250 million national museum in the capital, Wellington, in February, much was made of the museum's name Te Papa, Maori for "Our Place."

But one of the museum's first exhibits, Virgin in a Condom, a three-inch statue of the Virgin Mary sheathed in a transparent condom, has stretched the credibility of "Our Place" and caused a furor among Christians.

The outcry saw daily protests outside the museum, an attack on the statue itself, a national television debate, and a 33,000-signature petition demanding the exhibit's removal. Te Papa officials refused to budge, and the exhibit remained on display until April 26 as planned. Another museum exhibit, a picture of The Last Supper with a bare-breasted, female Jesus, sparked further outrage. Catholics, joined by evangelical Christians and Muslims, led the outcry.

Christian Heritage Party leader Graham Capill says the museum took great care to observe Maori spiritual mores but ran roughshod over Christian values. "It's increasingly clear that any faith or belief is acceptable in New Zealand, except for the Christian faith," Capill says. "Te Papa needs to be not only culturally sensitive, but also spiritually sensitive."

By Vic Francis in Auckland, New Zealand.

New Testament site? Flour-grinding implements have been unearthed at Bethsaida.

Disciples' Village Opens to Tourists

Bethsaida, the third most frequently mentioned city in the New Testament and home of five of Jesus' disciples, has rolled out the welcome mat for visitors. It had been known as one apex of the triangle where Jesus targeted much of his ministry, along with Capernaum and Chorazin. But the location of Bethsaida was still unconfirmed as recently as a decade ago.

In 1987, Israeli archaeologist Rami Arav began a joint excavation with professor Richard Freund and the University of Nebraska-Omaha. They chose some likely looking ruins along the Jordan River about a mile north of the Galilee shore and struck pay dirt.

Not only are they uncovering a first-century city—with-out the many later levels of occupation found at Capernaum and Chorazin—but underneath are the ruins of an Iron Age city. Arav believes it earlier had been the capital of the kingdom of Geshur, home of King David's father-in-law.

One area has been dubbed the "Fisherman's House" after excavation of anchors, fishing hooks, and a needle for mending nets. At "Salome's House," a wine cellar, an oven, and two basalt slabs for grinding grain have been unearthed.

The Israeli Tourism Ministry helped finance the excavation, and the grand opening this year is in recognition of the millennial celebration.

By Gordon Govier.

News Briefs

◆ Archbishop Seraphim, 84, the head of the Orthodox Church in Greece since 1974, died April 10 in Athens of a viral infection. Seraphim opposed Greece's military government between 1967 and 1974 and was a resistance fighter when that country was under Nazi occupation. Seraphim's replacement, broadminded reformer Metropolitan Christodoulos, 59, was elected on April 28 by a group of senior clerics. One of his first challenges will be to heal a rift between the Greek Orthodox Church and ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew, symbolic head of the world's 350 million Orthodox Christians.

◆ Bent Moeller Nielsen, 56, director of the Adventist Development and Relief Agency in Burundi, was shot to death by bandits April 22 as he drove through Bujumbura.

◆ Southern Baptist missionary Charles Hood, Jr., 44, was shot to death at his Bogotá, Colombia, home on April 21. Two unknown assailants sped away on a motorcycle. Colombia has the world's highest murder rate, with 2,700 people murdered in Bogotá last year (CT, May 18, 1998, p. 40).

Nielsen

Nurture your family's

BEST SELLER
JUST AS I AM
BILLY GRAHAM
6171 $28.50 $17.95

WOMEN'S DEVOTIONAL BIBLE
2626 $24.99 $16.95

IN THE ARMS OF GOD
DR. JAMES DOBSON
1263 $14.99 $10.95

When God Weeps
When Our Longings
Melt in the Embrace of God's Love
Steven Estes
3301 $19.99 $13.95

POWER OF THE CROSS
STANLEY
5330 $12.99 $9.95

EWEN SHAMBLIN'S
Transformational Way to Lose Weight, Stay Slim and Find a New You
BEST SELLER
WITCH
DOWN
DIT
6106 $21.00 $14.95

THE BOOK OF GOD
Walter Wangerin Jr.
5652 $27.99 $19.95

IN TOUCH WITH GOD
STANLEY
6965 $12.99 $9.95

BEST SELLER
JANETTE OKE
The Waterbaker
1719 $12.99 $9.95

BEST SELLER
DARE TO DISCIPLINE
Dr. James Dobson
1123 $16.99 $12.75

STANLEY
4 VOLUME SET
4408 $27.96 $17.95

THE INSPIRATIONAL STUDY BIBLE
MAX LUCADO
1958 $34.99 $26.95

Chicken Soup for the Christian Soul
101 Stories to Open the Heart and Rekindle the Spirit
#1 New York Times
Bestselling Author
1511 $24.00 $14.95

BEST SELLER
NICOLAE
TIM LAHAYE
JERRY B. JENKINS
2196 $19.99 $12.95

PRAYER
5413 Spec. Ed. $10.95

BEST SELLER
A GENTLE THUNDER
MAX LUCADO
0489 $19.99 $13.95

THE HANDWRITING OF GOD
GRANT & JEFFREY
4861 Spec. Ed. $13.95

Life Lessons
MAX LUCADO
0083 $27.96 $16.95

BODIE & BROCK THOENE
5942 $21.99 $12.95

DAVID
A Man of Action & Prayer
CHARLES R. SWANSON
3467 $19.99 $13.95

THE GREAT HOUSE OF GOD
MAX LUCADO
0893 $19.99 $13.95

The FINANCIALLY CONFIDENT WOMAN
MARY JUNT
1818 Spec. Ed. $10.95

WOMEN'S DEVOTIONAL BIBLE
0638 $19.99 $14.95

Life Edge
A Daily Plan for the Life of the Heart and Soul
DR. JAMES DOBSON
0356 $19.99 $14.95

JIMMY CARTER
SOURCES OF STRENGTH
4853 $23.00 $13.20

Charles R. Swanson
HOPE AGAIN
1727 $19.99 $14.95

FRANK PERETTI
THE OATH
5009 $23.99 $17.95

BARBARA JOHNSON
DANCING SOMEWHERE BETWEEN HEAVEN AND DEATH
2279 Spec. Ed. $11.95

Not I but Christ
GORDON T. BOBB
5157 $12.99 $9.95

The Complete Book of Bible Answers
Answering the Tough Questions
Ron Rhodes
0349 Spec. Ed. $11.95

Eerdmans Handbook to the Bible
2139 $25.00 $18.75

101 WAYS TO MAKE MONEY at HOME
5694 Spec. Ed. $10.95

BEST SELLER
ESTHER
2766 $19.99 $13.95

THE WORLD'S BEST-KEPT BEAUTY SECRETS
0679 Spec. Ed. $9.95

Ruth Bell Graham's Collected Poems
4234 $16.99 $11.95

LORI WICK
Beyond the Picket Fence
2360 $12.99 $9.95

WHAT MATTERS MOST
LOUIE EVANS
6510 $18.99 $12.95

DECORATING Hints & Tips
More than 2000
practical solutions to help you improve your home
2576 $19.95 $11.95

American Century Cookbook
The Most Popular
Recipes of the 20th Century
JEAN ANDERSON
2410 $35.00 $13.75

DOWNLOAD PRAYER COLLECTION
5397 $22.00 $13.20

Join CROSSINGS today! • Take 4 books for 99¢, plus shipping and handling, billed later, upon membership approval. • Buy just 4 more books within 2 years, after which you may resign. • SAVE money. SAVE time! Order your first book now for just $4.99, (plus shipping and handling). And buy only 3 books in the next 2 years. • We give you our word—If you're not happy, cancel membership. Return the intro books within 10 days at our expense. You'll owe nothing. • The FREE GIFT is yours to keep! • We're committed to value—Members' editions, sometimes altered to fit special presses, SAVE you up to 40% off publishers' edition prices. • FREE Club magazines up to 18 times a year. Current members may order books on our Web site: www.Crossings.com • Choose only the books you want. The Main Selections come automatically if we don't hear from you. So if you want another book, or none at all, send back the Member Reply Form by the specified date. You always have 10 days to reply. But, if the magazine came late and you get unwanted books, return them at our expense. A shipping and handling charge (and sales tax, where applicable) is added to each order. If coupon is missing, write: CROSSINGS, Member Service Center, 6550 East 30th Street, P.O. Box 6375, Indianapolis, IN 46206-6375. Prices were current when we went to press. Publishers' edition prices—regular type. Members' edition prices—bold type. B120

Christian values

©PhotoDisc

Start
with 4 books for

99¢

Discover CROSSINGS®
THE BOOK CLUB FOR TODAY'S CHRISTIAN FAMILY
www.Crossings.com

Plus a

FREE

Tote

or a

FREE

Book

with membership

or

2865 $29.99 $22.95

3277 $21.99 $15.95

4309 $19.99 $12.95

1107 $19.99 $14.95

3483 Spec. Ed. $11.95

1545 $17.99 $11.95

4077 $19.99 $13.95

4457 $19.99 $14.95

5389 $19.95 $13.95

5355 $19.99 $12.95

6635 $25.00 $15.95

0448 $23.00 $13.75

0695 Spec. Ed. $10.95

4804 Spec. Ed. $12.95

2618 $17.99 $12.95

3087 $19.99 $13.95

2170 $14.99 $9.95

4622 Spec. Ed. $13.95

6882 $12.99 $9.95

5165 Spec. Ed. $12.95

4812 $15.99 $10.95

1495 Spec. Ed. $10.95

3954 $19.99 $13.95

3996 Spec. Ed. $10.95

3848 $18.99 $14.25

4283 $16.99 $11.95

Home Is Where the Parent Should Be

How to resist a society that pulls parents in every direction but home.

It's 4:00 P.M. Do You Know Where Your Children Are?" asked Newsweek in its April 27 issue. Late afternoon—not late night—is when kids are most likely to get into trouble or be victimized by others, said the magazine as it tried to provoke concern for kids who are home alone after school with little or no adult supervision. "Three out of four mothers of school-age children work outside the home. So it's not so surprising that by the time they are 12 years old, nearly 35 percent of American children are regularly left on their own," the report said.

Many kids fill this time alone by watching TV—1,500 hours a year, on average, compared to 900 hours a year spent in school. Good parenting includes passing on our faith and values, but where is support for biblical values on TV? The entertainment media teach our youth that sex outside marriage is routine, and homosexual relationships are normal. In films and news shows our children see violence used to resolve conflicts or to get one's own way—and senseless violence is glamorized. They learn from advertising that happiness can be found through acquiring material things. These messages eat away at the foundations of our culture like termites, and our young seem to be especially vulnerable to the appetites of these voracious insects. Media critic Michael Medved goes further, arguing that TV as a medium (never mind the content) inculcates short attention spans, encourages a gloomy outlook on life, and teaches self-gratification by projecting fun as the highest goal of human existence. There is good reason for the uneasy conscience of American parents.

Lack of adult supervision is just one deprivation that plagues our children today. Just as frightening is a lack of moral guidance. Chicago Tribune columnist Eric Zorn, who usually champions liberal causes by scorning conservatives, now lauds social conservatives for "leading the current renaissance in character education—those [school] programs . . . that emphasize the development of virtue, ethical thinking and moral behavior. Children don't magically acquire such things any more than they magically learn long division." Writes Zorn, "A kid who grows up without a good moral education is disadvantaged, too, just like a kid who grows up poor, who gets lousy medical care, who attends shabby schools."

Tough job assignment

There never has been a Golden Age of Parenting. Yet our culture seems particularly unfriendly to families and children. "One of the best-kept secrets of the last thirty years is that big business, government, and the wider culture have waged a silent war against parents, undermining the work that they do," Sylvia Ann Hewlett and Cornel West argue in their recent book, The War Against Parents. This is especially true because our society measures everything by the bottom line. Children don't earn their keep as they did in an agrarian society. Instead, they cost money and threaten personal liberties and career goals in an age of individualism. As a result, Hewlett and West conclude, parenting has become a countercultural activity.

It would help, of course, if the culture supported our values. We wish for government leaders to emulate biblical virtues, for schools to teach our children right from wrong, and for mass media to portray positive role models of people who really do work hard and play by the rules. But we haven't time for that kind of cultural turnaround. It will take a generation or more, waiting and working, for that to happen. Christian parents must do something for their children now.

Should we even expect our culture to prop up our values and serve as moral nanny for our kids? The biblical way, from Israel to the church, runs in the opposite direction—the people of God are a light to the world, salt and yeast in the dough of our culture. We are to influence the world and its structures positively, not clamor for government or the public schools or the dollar-driven media industry to be a light to us. Ironically, this disparity of values is an opportunity, as Rodney Clapp put it, for “the Christian family to be Christian, to live freely and unabashedly out of its particular story.”

Job description posted

Christian parents who want to swim against the tide need to be especially intentional in several areas:

Time in. Values are like viruses: they are caught in the environment in which they reside. But how are children “catching” Christian values if the significant adults in their lives have so little time for them and with them—after school or any other time?

Newsweek's interest in the kids who are home alone after school seems aimed at creating public interest in after-school programs that engage children in wholesome, safe activities. But Newsweek did not ask the more radical questions that Christian families should be asking themselves: Is it really necessary in all cases that both parents work outside the home? And if so, is it because we are chasing the American dream of a big home in the suburbs with two late-model cars in the driveway?

This is not to argue that a woman's place is only in the home. In a child's earlier years, Mother usually has to be the primary nurturer; but many couples find creative ways of sharing responsibility after their children's infant years. While some couples must have dual incomes just to put bread on the table and a roof over their heads, Christian parents who are willing and able to live on less than two full salaries are to be commended for putting family ahead of career or lifestyle.

Preach what we practice. Besides spending time with their children, Christian parents also need to teach them to discern right from wrong and the biblical reasons behind the differences. Our children need more than injunctions; “Just do it” is not sufficient motivation for doing the right thing. As they grow older, children must have explained to them the biblical logic of the commands to love God, neighbor and enemy, the common sense of the Golden Rule, and the sanctity and sanity of sex within a lifelong, monogamous, heterosexual relationship. The commands of God are not just law; they are also grace, for when we live within the ways of God we grow and thrive, personally and together. No wonder David said that God has placed the boundary lines at pleasant places (Ps. 16:6). He should have known since he transgressed them numerous times (see “Bathsheba-Gate,” p. 38).

Extend the family. Aristotle believed that the good society was one in which the moral education of the young was shared by the whole society through its laws, practices, and mores. It was a task too important and too encompassing to be left to schools or families alone. If it doesn't take a village to raise a child, it at least takes a church.

In the absence of a supportive society, Christian families need this communal effort in the corporate life of the church. Parenting cannot be left to two adults, much less to one in the case of single parents. Children need the mentoring of other adults in their lives, while parents, too, need the support of older adults who can pass on their wisdom about parenting or give them respite from the strains of child care.

Most evangelicals do not name godparents—sponsors who take a special interest in the growth and development of those being baptized. Yet something like that is happening with congregational mentoring programs that match children with adults who commit themselves to relating one on one to a particular child, giving him or her another adult model to emulate, someone to whom the child can turn when communication breaks down between parent and child. Perhaps churches also need to consider “godgrandparents”—senior adults who can provide support and relief to parents.

In our mobile society, when so many nuclear families are removed from their extended, biological families, the community of faith must function as an extended family. Through this family of God—through its corporate worship and service and nurture—children take on an identity and choose a God-oriented way of life.

Time spent well

“Child rearing is not some mysterious process,” write Hewlett and West. “At the heart of the matter is time, huge amounts of it, freely given.” Based on national research they conducted, they claim that a majority of parents realize that most of what their children need, such as love and character development, cannot be delegated to others.

Lamin Sanneh, professor of missions and world Christianity at Yale University, understands this well. As an African living in Western culture, he senses very keenly the tension between child rearing and professional involvement. In a recent dinner-table conversation, he told CT what “family values” have meant for him and his wife: “We believed two things were necessary in raising our children: showing them unconditional love, no matter what. And being there for them. One of us always arranged to be home after school, not just to look out for them, but also to talk with them about their day, to process what went on at school.”

That is parenting worth emulating. And it's an investment of time that no government or private funding can buy.

Parents realize that what their children need most cannot be delegated to others.

Southern Baptists Take Up the MORMON Challenge

JOHN W. KENNEDY
in Salt Lake City and Provo

Michael B. Bennett has heard the accusations many times: Mormons are not Christians. But to Bennett, who converted at age 18, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (LDS) has provided answers he did not find as a Southern Baptist.

Bennett grew up in the heavily Baptist region of Baton Rouge, Louisiana. His parents and grandparents had been active Baptists and he was baptized at age 12. He attended youth rallies and Billy Graham crusades. "I was about as active a Baptist as you can be," recalls Bennett, now 39.

Yet he found the behavior of some churchgoers inconsistent. His friends at youth group fervently testified about Christ one week, then smoked dope the next. An adulterous deacon continued to hold office after a hasty confession. Gossip and backbiting preoccupied many churchgoers.

Bennett was ripe for a change. When a high-school friend told him that his church had unpaid leaders, it sparked Bennett's interest. After attending several weekly LDS sacrament meetings and seeing a community that seemed genuinely to care and love, Bennett, now a lawyer in Salt Lake City, felt "compelled by the spirit" to be rebaptized as a Mormon. As a counselor to his congregation's bishop, Bennett devotes 20 hours a week to church activities.

While LDS theology is what separates Mormonism from orthodox Christianity, it had little to do with Bennett's attraction to America's most successful home-grown religion.

Sandra Tanner, 57, codirector of Utah Lighthouse Ministry in Salt Lake City, Evangelism explosion: Utah Southern Baptists Gray (left) and Harding at Salt Lake City's Temple Square expect pointed, but courteous, interactions with Mormons.

The Vision thing: Baptist convert Mike Bennett, with wife Nikki and son Nathan, is comfortable with LDS doctrine, including the "first vision" of Joseph Smith, who reported that God and Jesus appeared to him in bodily form.

says, "You join Mormonism because of friendship ties, a sense of belonging, a hope for your deceased family. It is a religion that gives the best of both worlds."

Though evangelicals generally concede that Mormons are good neighbors who promote family values, the theological chasm is wide. Mormons profoundly distance themselves from orthodox Christianity in that they:

- Do not interpret canonical Scripture as being solely the Old Testament and New Testament. They add the Book of Mormon and founder Joseph Smith's other works, The Pearl of Great Price and Doctrine and Covenants.

- Do not believe in the Trinity. Mormons believe God the Father and God the Son have fleshly bodies and that the Holy Ghost is a spirit man.

- Teach that God was once a finite being who achieved his exalted rank by "progressing."

Based on supernatural visitations in the 1820s, Smith believed he was called to restore the true Christian church that had been lost 16 centuries earlier. According to this great apostasy, God told Smith that all churches—with specific reference to Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians—were wrong, and to join none.

While evangelical and Catholic theologians have been able to agree on such unofficial initiatives as "The Gift of Salvation" (CT, Dec. 8, 1997, p. 34), it is unlikely there will be an equivalent Mormon-evangelical document anytime soon. "Their theology has declared us to be an abomination," says Mike Gray, 47, pastor of Salt Lake City's Southeast Baptist Church. "It's hard to do joint projects when they claim to be the only true church."

"On every major doctrine, the fundamental teachings of evangelical Christianity and Mormon doctrine are diametrically opposed," says Norman Geisler, dean of Southern Evangelical Seminary.

Protestant leaders have limited official contact with the LDS church. The Presbyterian Church U.S.A. is typical, calling for openness to interfaith dialogue with Mormons and telling members they "should not hesitate to share the gospel with people of Mormon background."

In February in Salt Lake City, the first formal discussions on theology, polity, and sacramental practice occurred between Mormons and United Methodists. "The two have historically looked upon each other with suspicion, or at best disinterest," says Doug Slaughter, a United Methodist minister in Ogden. "With the growth of the LDS community into a world religious influence there has come more interest to understand this faith."

Tanner, who left Mormonism at age 19 and has written more than 40 books on the religion, says, "All Christians should be concerned about the growth of Mormonism. The Jesus of the Bible is different from the Jesus of the Mormons."

THE BAPTISTS ARE COMING: Few denominations are eager to hold a national convention outside the comfort zone of their membership. But Southern Baptists—who have one of the largest career missionary forces with 5,000 workers in 147 countries—are gathering June 9–11 for an annual convention on the Mormons' home turf of Salt Lake City. The state of Utah is about 2 percent Baptist and nearly 70 percent Mormon.

In Utah, the SBC will be using pages out of the LDS playbook for mass evangelism. Around 2,500 Baptists—including 1,000 college and seminary students—are expected to knock on 150,000 doors. Starting for a week on June 3, Southern Baptists will run 500 radio commercials, 150 television spots, a dozen newspaper advertisements, and six billboard advertisements urging residents to rethink their commitment to Mormonism.

"In the end, salvation is not a marketing issue," says SBC president Tom Elliff. "It depends on a personal relationship with Jesus Christ."

Direct mailings containing testimonies of local Southern Baptists are also being sent to 390,000 households in the region. All the media and mail efforts carry a toll-free number offering a hand-delivered free copy of the Jesus video produced by Campus Crusade for Christ. The total cost of the one-week blitz is $260,000.

An estimated 9,500 messengers, or delegates, are expected to attend the convention. With spouses and children in tow, there could be more than 30,000 Southern Baptists visiting the state where only 6,000 Baptists live.

Every four or five years the convention meets in a pioneer area where the membership is comparatively small. The purpose is to encourage SBC churches in such areas and to let others in the region know the SBC is not just a Southern phenomenon. For example, in Las Vegas, several hundred Southern Baptists marched down the city's strip of casinos and hotels handing out Bibles and tracts (CT, July 14, 1989, p. 50).

Utah Baptists have had significant success with Mormon-focused outreach. At least once a year, Southeast's pastor Gray hosts a local conference on understanding Mormonism. Southeast's membership has grown from 120 to 1,000 in Gray's 14 years there, making it the largest Southern Baptist church in the state. About one in five members is a former Mormon.

READY TO TANGLE: However, Southern Baptists are not likely to win converts simply by knocking on doors and leaving tracts in Salt Lake City. "It's like going to minister among Muslims," says Tanner, now a member of the Christian and Missionary Alliance. She says former Mormons are often isolated from their cultural heritage and families.

Southern Baptists have prepared their pastors and lay leaders for outreach to Mormons with a 75-minute video, The Mormon Puzzle. In all, more than 50,000 videos and accompanying study guides have been distributed. In addition, during the week of June 1 the six SBC seminaries are jointly sponsoring workshops on Mormon theology and effective witnessing to Mormons. Jim Harding, the top SBC executive in Utah, sees the convention visit as a "divine appointment."

"For Southern Baptists, Utah is a mission field," Harding says. He is recommending that messengers not engage in a doctrinal shouting match, but simply "share the truth of Jesus Christ."

R. Philip Roberts, 47, director of the SBC North American Mission Board's interfaith witness evangelism team, says, "Accountability before God is the most important issue. Before you have a harvest you need to plant the seed of the biblical gospel. It's our duty to do all that we can to share the good news of Jesus Christ with them."

If the SBC evangelism blitz becomes too overwhelming, LDS headquarters may issue advice to local church leaders, according to M. Russell Ballard, 69, a member since 1985 of the Council of the Twelve, the church's ruling body. Ballard says, "We won't get into bashing over doctrine."

Likewise, SBC president Elliff is gracious. "There's no reason for any of us to be caustic and uncharitable in our speech," Elliff says. "But we won't compromise our beliefs." Ballard, a car dealer before being called as a full-time ecclesiastical leader, says The Mormon Puzzle is "relatively positive" because it introduces essential LDS teachings such as restoration of priesthood authority. Ballard says he traces his authority as an ordained apostle directly to Christ: Jesus ordained Peter, James, and John, who, Mormons believe, transferred authority directly to Joseph Smith by laying hands on his head in an 1830 appearance. The authority has been transferred in an earthly manner to LDS apostles since then.

NEXT WORLD RELIGION? Mormons, who were much maligned and persecuted in nineteenth-century America, are in some ways unrivaled in spiritual seed-

Sunday Among the Suburban Salt Lake Saints

Wherever there is a growing number of Latter-day Saints, church headquarters authorizes construction of a new meeting house for a ward, or a local congregation. In the burgeoning suburbs between Ogden and Provo, where there are nearly 3,500 wards, buildings are erected often. The unadorned buildings typically have a spire, but no crosses or stained-glass windows.

Mormons attend a three-hour block of Sunday gatherings: the sacrament meeting, Sunday school, and finally, a gender-segregated "gospel doctrine" Priesthood meeting for men and Relief Society meeting for women. The starting time is decided by headquarters, which also selects the bishop, the presiding leader, from within the local ward. The bishop's role is largely administrative. While he does not preach, he will counsel parishioners and perform weddings. The bishop may earn his livelihood in a career such as a lawyer, banker, or department store manager, while devoting up to 40 hours a week in unpaid church duties. A bishop's term typically runs between three and five years.

A recent sacrament meeting in the Salt Lake City suburb of Draper has the appearance of a Baptist worship service in many respects. There is an organ prelude, a choir on the platform, an opening hymn and prayer followed by announcements, leather-bound Scriptures carried by attendees, three church leaders seated on stage. But differences are soon noticeable.

The Scriptures that members tote include three additional LDS canonical books. The opening hymn, "Families Can Be Together Forever," is a confirmation of the LDS belief in eternal marriage. Babies are blessed according to the Melchizedek priesthood, with petitions that the boys will one day be worthy to go on a church mission, then find a faithful wife to marry in a temple for time and eternity. Boys age 12 and older who are ordained to the Aaronic priesthood distribute the sacraments of bread and water; Joseph Smith wrote in Doctrines and Covenants 27:2 that substituting another drink for wine is permissible.

Because of the strong belief in family, children are not taken to a nursery during the service. Many mothers are preoccupied with trying to keep jabbering toddlers quiet.

One Sunday a month, instead of a teaching session, LDS wards have a fast and testimony meeting (money that would have been spent on two meals of the day are given to the needy). Any member of the ward may testify. The faith-building talks frequently reinforce the worth of the LDS system: thankfulness for the prophets and their closeness to God, appreciation for the power of the priesthood, declarations that "I know this church is true."

The closing hymn, "Home Can Be a Heaven of Earth," reiterates the idea of church as family and family as eternal. The most significant difference that Protestant visitors are likely to spot is hanging in the foyer: a painting depicting Joseph Smith's first vision. Two nearly indistinguishable bearded personages are portrayed: one Jesus and one God—in the flesh—appearing to a 14-year-old farm boy who has just uttered his first vocal prayer.

By John W. Kennedy in Draper, Utah.

Resurrection appearance: Latter-day Saints believe Jesus Christ made himself known in a visit to the American continent nearly 2,000 years ago.

planting. Worldwide, there are 56,530 LDS missionaries, three-fourths of them young males, knocking on doors in 162 countries. Last year, 318,000 people converted to Mormonism, primarily from Christian groups.

The LDS church is experiencing rapid growth, with 10,070,500 Mormons worldwide. Seven out of ten Mormons live in North, Central, or South America. "At any given moment, the majority of Mormons are first-generation converts," says Rodney Stark, author and University of Washington sociologist. Most have significant attachments to non-Mormon relatives and friends, who then are ripe for conversion themselves. Stark projects that Mormonism will become the next world religion, with a membership of 267 million by 2080.

This month, the fifty-second LDS temple in the world will open. Another 46 are under construction or on the drawing board, including one in Nashville, headquarters of the SBC.

LDS missionaries have had the greatest success in countries with sizable Christian populations, where Christian missionaries have blazed the trail. The key LDS doctrine of restoration of the church is more easily grasped by people who have already been introduced to Christianity.

LDS missions efforts are well-financed, in part because all but 85 top church leaders are volunteers. Also, Mormons are the most generous donors of all American church members, giving on average nearly 7.5 percent of income.

While 95 percent of Mormons in the United States are white, the church is growing elsewhere by appealing to a multitude of racial and ethnic groups, aided by the acceptance of blacks into the priesthood in 1978. Latin America is the fastest-growing region, with 3.4 million members, 2 million more than a decade ago.

The Book of Mormon has a strong American appeal with its narrative about an early American civilization and the appearance of the risen Christ to the ancient Americans. Stark predicts there will be 60 million Mormons in Latin America alone by 2010.

Tanner notes that LDS membership does not necessarily translate into lifelong commitment. Weekly sacrament meeting attendance is between 40 and 50 percent in the United States, and only around 25 percent in Latin America. Infants are counted as members as soon as they start attending, and adults who stop attending may still be counted.

SHEEP-STEALING? Mormons live in a subculture immersed in their own books, magazines, hymns, organizations, and conferences.

New releases at the 34 LDS Deseret bookstores include Isaiah in the Book of Mormon; Joseph Smith: Martyr, Prophet of God; and The Genealogist's Handbook: Plain and Precious Truths Restored. There are "Mormon fiction" sections that appeal to women, with titles such as Sunset Across the Rockies and Hannah: Mormon Midwife. They even have their own board games such as Missionary Impossible.

Yet Mormons have increased their numbers largely by slowly exporting their subculture around the globe.

"Members of our church are constantly looking for opportunities to share the message of the restored gospel with friends, family members, neighbors, and anyone else who will listen," LDS leader Ballard writes in Our Search for Happiness (Deseret Book Company, 1993).

While Mormons unapologetically see themselves fulfilling their purpose, the SBC's Roberts sees it as sheep-stealing. "Mormons shamelessly proselytize members of Christian churches, encouraging them to leave their own denomination and renounce the validity of their former group," Roberts writes in Mormonism Unmasked, released last month by Broadman & Holman.

John L. Smith, a 78-year-old Southern Baptist who has written 10 books on Mormonism and is the founder of Utah Missions, warns Christians not to let door-knocking Mormons enter the house. Smith, who served as a pastor for 17 years, says Baptists are especially susceptible because they are eager to engage in theological discussions.

INTENSE MISSIONS FOCUS: From the moment of their children's birth, many LDS parents hope to send them out as missionaries. In a world of shifting values, a fresh-faced, well-attired, neatly groomed, smiling, confident teenager can be a persuasive advertisement for the church.

Two years ago, Matthew R. Tate, then

19, reached the age where tens of thousands of Mormons radically alter their lives. Although raised in an LDS family in Salt Lake City, he did not fully commit to the church's teachings until just before his mission trip. "I had to decide whether this church was real or not," Tate explains. "Deep in my heart I felt it was true." Mormons cite Moroni 10:3-5 in the Book of Mormon as evidence. In that passage, a resurrected angel, Moroni, exhorts seekers to ponder in their hearts and ask God whether the claims are true; then the power of the Holy Ghost will make it clear.

LDS prophet and president Gordon B. Hinckley and his two counselors pray about where to send each missionary. For Tate, the two-year assignment was New York City. Beforehand, he spent a month in preparation in Provo, site of the largest of 15 LDS missionary-training centers. Recruits live in a cloistered, dormlike atmosphere, where they learn LDS doctrine. Many learn a foreign language.

While the church paid Tate's airfares to New York and back, his family had to provide daily living expenses. Once on assignment, the schedule is arduous. Tate spent 12 hours a day, six days a week, trying to proselytize. Another two hours each day he prayed and studied the Book of Mormon and the Bible. Tate lived in an apartment with three to seven other missionaries, and he could telephone home only on Christmas and Mother's Day.

"All I've done for two years is eat, drink, and sleep religion," Tate says. "You don't worry about yourself. You worry about other people."

A WIDE DIVIDE: As LDS church growth has accelerated, orthodox Christian scholars have refocused on Mormon teaching and practice.

Last year's publication of How Wide The Divide: A Mormon and an Evangelical in Conversation (InterVarsity Press) has done more to raise the profile of Mormonism among evangelical leaders than any other effort in the past decade.

In the book, Stephen E. Robinson, Brigham Young University (BYU) professor of ancient Scripture, and Craig L. Blomberg, professor of New Testament at Denver Seminary and also an ordained Baptist pastor, concluded the divide is not as wide as they once believed. But it still is significant. How Wide the Divide? did not attempt to discuss irreconcilable differences such as baptism for the dead, the premortal existence of souls, or the early history of the Americas. Rather, the book provides a forum to measure potential common ground.

Evangelical critics contend Blomberg showed too much respect for LDS beliefs, and that he should not have written a book with "the enemy." They also say Robinson is not representative of true LDS doctrine.

"Robinson mops up on Blomberg," says John L. Smith, whose ministry in Marlow, Oklahoma, was under the auspices of the SBC North American Mission Board until last year. "The book is a great evangelism tool—for Mormons."

Tyndale College and Seminary professor James Beverley says How Wide the Divide? provides a necessary first step for dialogue. But he says Blomberg failed adequately to rebut some of Robinson's charges. "The book suffers from a dialogue that doesn't lay all the cards on the table," Beverley says.

At an April conference, "Mormonism and Christianity: How Great the Divide!" Southern Evangelical Seminary's Geisler asserted, "Robinson said things that were definitely contrary to historic Mormon teaching."

Blomberg notes, however, that LDS authorities often lack academic theological training, so the church often turns to BYU leaders such as Robinson for official theological comment. Robinson and Robert L. Millet, 50, dean of religious education at BYU, are key LDS spokespersons in The Mormon Puzzle.

Blomberg concedes he could have asked several more specific questions and that more articulate wording could have deflected some criticism, but he says overall he is pleased with the effort.

EMBRACING THE MAINSTREAM: Although Mormons have moved toward the cultural mainstream of American Christianity, they continue to insist the LDS faith represents the purified and true church. At the LDS semiannual general conference in April, LDS president Hinckley said, "There are some of other faiths who do not regard us as Christians. How we regard ourselves is what is important."

Mormons believe that spiritual darkness covered the earth for 16 centuries after the death of Jesus' apostles until the restoration through Joseph Smith. At the conference, Hinckley also stressed there would be no compromise on the idea that the LDS church is true—and others are not. "This is a restoration of that which was instituted by the Savior of the world," Hinckley proclaimed. "It is not a reformation of perceived false practice and doctrine that may have developed through the centuries."

Mormons are gaining respectability from some unlikely sources. Last November, former President Jimmy Carter, who still teaches Sunday school at his SBC church in Georgia, said Mormons do not need to be evangelized. He criticized Southern Baptists for "trying to act as the Pharisees did" in defining who is "considered an acceptable person in the eyes of God."

The SBC's Roberts says, "Mormons want to be fully Mormon and fully Christian, but they can't be both." Ex-Mormon Tanner agrees. "Its theology is as close to Christianity as Hinduism," she says. "It's a totally different view of man and God and Creation."

LDS apostle Ballard told CT, "We believe God, the eternal Father, is literally our father. He's a man glorified, exalted, perfected, resurrected."

Millet says, "Human spirits were born sons and daughters of God before this life, and if they will be born again now, they can be empowered and transformed by Jesus Christ, becoming eventually as he is. We believe in the ultimate deification of man."

WHERE ARE THE ARTIFACTS? One of the most persistent critiques of doctrine focuses on the teaching that ancient Hebrews immigrated to the Americas.

LDS doctrine says that in 1827 Moroni, a resurrected angel, instructed Smith to unearth golden plates buried in New York. For two years, Smith translated the "reformed Egyptian," which told of the migration of Israelites to this continent. Their descendants divided into Lamanites, the ancestors of today's Native Americans, and Nephites. Mormon, the last surviving Nephite leader, inscribed the race's history before their demise. Moroni, Mormon's son, whisked the plates back to heaven after Smith's translation.

Faith plays a large role in believing the accounts in the Book of Mormon, because Smith's version is the only written record of Israeli immigrants living in the Americas between 600 B.C. and A.D. 400. Tanner says no archaeological evidence supports the existence of such a culture.

"There may be some things we'll never find simply because the vast majority of human artifacts disappear," says Daniel C. Peterson, 45, chair of the Foundation for Ancient Research and Mormon Studies at BYU, which, at 29,000 full-time students, is the largest privately owned campus in the United States.

While Smith's Book of Mormon is considered infallible, the Bible is not. "We accept the Bible as the Word of God as far as it is translated correctly," Ballard told CT.

"The Bible has been through countless translations from the time its chapters were originally penned to the present," Ballard writes in Our Search for Happiness. "Along the way there have been changes and alterations that have diminished the purity of the doctrine." On the other hand, "the Book of Mormon offers pure, concise doctrine that hasn't been tampered with by religious philosophers, councils, panels, and kings."

But LDS scriptures are not so pristine, Tanner says. She cites Smith providing different versions of his visions in 1833 and 1835. "Revelations are suddenly twice as long as before, bringing in new concepts such as the priesthood," says Tanner. "Why would he have to rewrite it after only two years?"

ONGOING REVELATION: Among Mormons, the restoration of the true church means that their top leader is a living prophet, able to clarify, modify, or enhance existing doctrine.

And new revelations can reverse earlier LDS teaching, the most famous example being the 1890 discontinuance of polygamy, which 47 years earlier Joseph Smith declared had been commanded by the Lord. "Latter-day Saints believe the canon of Scripture is open, flexible, and expanding," Millet says.

"What God has said to apostles and prophets in the past is always secondary to what God is saying directly to his apostles and prophets now," Robinson writes in How Wide the Divide?

Subsequently, LDS revere their president as God's mouthpiece on earth, the "prophet, seer, and revelator." When the president of the church dies, the member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles who has served the longest automatically succeeds him, usually leaving an aged leader to head the religion founded by a 24-year-old prophet. The last three presidents have started service at the average age of 86. Hinckley turns 88 this month.

In the LDS church, males confer everything required for a family to gain eternal exaltation. At 12, boys begin through the Aaronic priesthood offices of deacon, teacher, and priest. Males in the higher Melchizedek priesthood can advance through the offices of elder, high priest, patriarch, seventy, and apostle.

"The patriarchy—the loss of the priesthood—is one of the fears of people leaving Mormonism," Tanner says. "For instance, the husband is the one who can pray for a child if he gets sick. Men are the connection to make sure that, at whatever level, things are done the way God wants them to be done."

Advancement in church leadership is dependent on individual accomplishment, Tanner contends. "To reach the celestial kingdom you must go to the temple," she says. "In order to go to the temple, you have to be a full tithe payer and do everything the church asks you to do. There is control to get to that end reward."

Not only are there earthly incentives for faithful Mormons, but more important, there are many eternal bonuses, based on individual merit.

"We don't believe in a heaven and a hell," Ballard told CT. "We believe in degrees of glory. People are not going to live into the eternities in misery."

The LDS doctrine that husbands and wives are married "for time and eternity" allows some high-achieving Mormon couples to have eternal offspring and create and populate their own world.

Those Mormons who aspire to the top of three tiers of heavenly paradise must be baptized according to the LDS priesthood and live a worthy life.

Among Mormon leaders, temple activities are focused in part on the controversial practice of vicarious baptisms and marriage in which living members stand in proxy for the deceased.

"How do we know whether or not your great-great-grandfather, who never heard the gospel as it was restored, nor ever had the opportunity to be baptized by the priesthood, is going to accept?" Ballard asks. "We don't. But we do the work anyway." Under LDS doctrine, not just baptism, but salvation itself is available to the dead.

"The person may have heard the gospel a hundred times, but it never really clicked," Peterson says. "So maybe that hundredth time is the chance. That can happen in this life or the next."

LDS doctrines about baptism, salvation, and the afterlife place them at odds with centuries of Christian teaching in the Catholic, Orthodox, and Protestant traditions.

BEFRIEND, NOT ATTACK? Despite vastly different theology, Mormon and evangelical leaders at times work together against common foes such as gambling, pornography, and abortion. A Baptist and a Mormon are congressional sponsors of legislation to protect churches from creditors seeking to confiscate donations made by members who went bankrupt (CT, April 27, p. 14.)

The works of C. S. Lewis have emerged as another area of religious common ground. "He is so well received by Latter-day Saints because of his broad and inclusive vision of Christianity," says BYU dean Millet, who spoke about Lewis at an April theology conference at Wheaton (Ill.) College.

Blomberg, among others, holds out hope that projects such as How Wide the Divide? can be an initial step in Mormons moving to orthodoxy, as happened when the Worldwide Church of God founded by Herbert W. Armstrong altered its unique teachings (CT, July 15, 1996, p. 16). "I still believe in respectful, courteous dialogue," Blomberg says. "As LDS church membership continues to increase, and friends and relatives convert to Mormonism, it will behoove evangelicals to befriend rather than attack."

Yet deep disagreements remain over bedrock truth. "We have a prophet that receives direction from the Lord Jesus Christ," Ballard says. "We simply say to the world, 'Keep everything you have that is true and add to it the fullness of the everlasting gospel as it's been restored.'"

Roberts counters, "The gospel does have a cutting edge. It can be offensive when you explain there's no such thing as celestial heaven." Roberts and Tanner are coauthors of the new Harvest House book The Counterfeit Gospel of Mormonism.

Recent rhetoric from Baptist leaders referring to Utah as a "stronghold of Satan" and a "spiritual cloud of oppressiveness" may motivate Baptists, but alienate Mormons.

In the meantime, Mormons persist in their own media outreach. In April, the LDS church bought a commercial on the Gospel Music Association's nationally televised Dove Awards program.

For Bennett, the former Southern Baptist, there is great eagerness to share his new faith. "I feel more dedicated and closer to the Lord than I've ever felt," Bennett says. "The confluence of cultures and religions will be good for both the Mormons and the Baptists."

But for evangelicals, a faithful follower of LDS doctrine is at eternal peril. "Mormonism is either totally true or totally false," Utah Mission's leader John L. Smith says. "If it's true, every other religion in America is false." [CT]

THE EVANGELISM CONFERENCE

AT WILLOW CREEK, OCTOBER 19-21, 1998

What does it take to be the light of the world in a world such as ours?

THE EVANGELISM CONFERENCE

For those who believe that lost people matter to God. And that reaching those people is the most important job on earth.

THIS IS THE WAY HOME.

BECOMING BRIGHTER LIGHT

Because Lost People Matter to God

Monday-Wednesday, October 19-21, 1998

The task is huge. The need is urgent. We all want to lead lost people home. But where can we go to expand our hearts — and vision — for reaching them? The Evangelism Conference at Willow Creek. A first-ever event designed to energize and equip you and your team of ministry leaders for reaching more and more people for Christ.

Bill Hybels,
Senior pastor,
Willow Creek
Community
Church

Franklin Graham,
Billy Graham's rebel-turnedevangelist son

Mark Mittelberg,
Evangelism strategist;
author, *Contagious
Christian* course

Lee Strobel,
Former atheist, now committed to reaching spiritual seekers

Featuring Special Guest Dr. E.V. Hill, plus Dieter Zander & Tim Ceek on reaching Gen X.

Willow Creek Association 847-765-0070 or www.willowcreek.org

FOR A COMPLETE BROCHURE OR TO REGISTER...

Call us at 847-765-0070, contact us via the web at www.willowcreek.org, fax us at 847-765-5046, or complete this coupon and mail it to: Willow Creek Association,
P.O. Box 3188, Barrington, IL 60011

Name:

Organization:

Organization Phone:

Organization Street Address:

City/State/Zip:

Conferences at Willow Creek are becoming sell-out events, so please register your team soon.

God's Green

Acres

How Calvin DeWitt is helping Dunn, Wisconsin, reflect the glory of God's good creation.

TIM STAFFORD

I met Cal DeWitt, the environmentalist, some years ago at a conference on world population. He was expounding eloquently on the need for living in harmony with God's creation when I asked him, in an offhand way, whether he had seen any place that would serve as a model.

My question was not, I admit, entirely innocent. In my experience, environmentalists can be very clear on what aspects of modern life they are against, but when asked what kind of society they admire, they may refer to the way Native Americans once lived on the land, or to some remote tribe in Central Africa. I am looking for an environmental vision that applies to modern America, suburbs and cities and all.

So DeWitt's answer surprised me. "Yes," he said cheerfully, "Dunn, Wisconsin."

"Dunn? Where's that?" I asked, suspecting a commune in the northern woods that raised organic vegetables for the farmer's market.

"Just south of Madison," he told me. "It's my town."

Dunn, the un-town

I visited Dunn in late spring last year. Leaving the freeway behind me, I took a meandering road through Wisconsin farm country, cornfields covering easygoing hills patched with black and brown oak woods. I was looking for a town to appear, but it never did. The first thing I learned about the town of Dunn, Wisconsin, is that it's not a town. In Wisconsin, the place where you find stores and schools and inevitable taverns—what I call a town—is a village. A town in Wisconsin is a subset of the county, a square of open country six miles on a side.

That doesn't imply, however, that there is no "there" to Dunn. At one time few residents thought much about the locale. They lived in the country "just south of Madison." That has changed quite dramatically over the 25 years since DeWitt came to live there. Now the 4,000 citizens say proudly what town they live in. They note the difference (perhaps not so visible to others) when they cross over the town line into other towns. DeWitt says that one of the most notable developments of recent years is the expansion of the town cemetery, previously overgrown and almost forgotten. People in Dunn feel they belong to the place and plan to plant their bones there.

Eyes to see

Calvin DeWitt is a wetlands ecologist who teaches in the University of Wisconsin's interdisciplinary Institute for Environmental Studies. He's also director for the Au Sable Institute, a Christian study center in the Michigan woods that offers summer field courses for Christian college students. He is a formidable scholar, recognized by the university as one of its best teachers. Ron Sider says he is "Mr. Evangelical" regarding the environment—the person with the scholarly credentials, the outspoken faith, the long track record.

What he is best at, though, is field trips. He has a way of taking students into the most ordinary landscapes and showing them a creation they hadn't seen. He is good at explaining complex features of the terrain and its living creatures, and he conveys a sense of wondering joy as he does it. DeWitt sees the world as a scientist and as a Christian, and he puts remarkably little space between those two. He is committed to preserving nature, but it isn't humanity against nature for him. Rather, he sees nature serving humanity by offering testimony to the glory of God.

PHOTOS BY BILL BILSEY

It is one thing to proclaim God's glory on field trips. It is quite another in the vexed and politicized subject of land-use planning. Dunn's north boundary runs a mere stone's throw from Madison, a city that is spreading fast into the dairy, corn, and soybean farmland all around. When the DeWitts bought their home in 1972, the familiar process of turning farmland to suburb was well under way. Small subdivisions and five-acre "farmettes" were spreading across the landscape. Farmers whose children showed no interest in farming could foresee selling out to home builders for a bundle.

DeWitt was studying rural land-use decisions and, as part of his research, went to observe a meeting of the Dunn town board, an elected council of three. The discussion was over a new hot-mix and rock-crushing plant that the town council had approved. Some of the neighbors were upset at the prospect of the plant polluting their environment, but the supervisors were in no mood to listen. One of them rudely told the dozen attendees that they were wasting time trying to argue the issue; if they didn't like the decision they should elect somebody else, but in the meantime, just go home.

DeWitt had come to observe, but these comments drove him to his feet. He spoke passionately to the small gathering on the nature of democracy. He spoke of an active, involved citizenry, not a passive electorate that votes every few years on who should make decisions for them.

The talk made an impression, and shortly thereafter he was invited to a meeting in a local farmer's living room. The purpose was to recruit a slate to run for the town board, to throw out the old, unresponsive supervisors. DeWitt was new to Dunn, but he was asked to stand for election.

DeWitt the politician

It is not easy to imagine Cal DeWitt running for elected office. He seems too idealistic for the grit of governance. "I often use Rembrandt for an illustration," he says. "Is it conceivable that we could give acclaim to the artist but not to his masterpieces? Is there anyone who honors Picasso without any reference to his paintings?" Our proper relation to God's creation is awe and wonder, DeWitt says. This does not sound like a land-use stump speech.

Once, he told me, he stopped his car on the Interstate freeway near Gary, Indiana, and tried to read Psalm 19 aloud. "I looked up into the night sky and couldn't see any stars because of all the lights and pollution. The noise of traffic was deafening. Semitrailers slammed by, literally sucking at my car. The psalm made no sense at all there. I thought, 'Here is a community that has been deprived, and has deprived itself, of nature's testimony.'"

DeWitt worries when human creation entirely supplants God's, when the natural world is so blotted out by city as to be unknown. He worries, too, about mental deprivation. "For some of my students, Star Trek is more real than the biosphere.

Calvin DeWitt sees the world as a scientist and as a Christian, and he puts remarkably little space between the two.

They can tell you more about the starship Enterprise but don't know the boundaries of the town they live in. We even abstract nature in science, so it doesn't provide for awe and wonder."

In the world of politics, the Dunn town board sat very near the bottom of the food chain. Most planning decisions rested with the county. The town government was responsible for plowing snow and repairing local roads, and little else. Furthermore, many Dunn residents were vague on whether they lived within Dunn's boundaries, as their mail was addressed through one of the local villages. There was no cafe or post office where the people of Dunn gathered. Few paid attention to town elections.

Nevertheless, DeWitt approached his campaign with all the verve of a military assault. He helped mobilize a large pool of volunteers and dedicated himself to visiting every home in the town personally. He is an affable, easygoing conversationalist who treats even his enemies like old friends. His style of campaigning is perhaps best captured by his conversation with pike fishermen.

Some of Dunn's constituents, DeWitt explains, have settled in the area strictly for the pike. So, as DeWitt tells the story, he greets one such fisherman outside his home and asks cheerily, "How are things going with the pike nursery?"

The man looks confused, so DeWitt repeats the question.

"What's a pike nursery?" the fisherman asks.

"You like to catch pike?" DeWitt says. "I understand they get pretty big in this lake."

"Yeah, they do. Real big."

"Well," says DeWitt easily, "they don't start out that big. They start out as little ones. The place the little pike come from is what you call the pike nursery. I figured if you were a pike fisherman you would be able to tell me how things are going in the pike nursery."

The guy summons his neighbor, also a fisherman, and asks if he knows where pike come from. His neighbor doesn't know. DeWitt suggests they ask some more of their buddies. By now they're curious. Eventually there are eight pike fishermen standing around in the yard, none of whom knows where pike come from. So DeWitt explains that mature pike go into the marshes to spawn, and the little pike live in the shallow safety of the marshlands until they're big enough to venture out into the lake. That's one of the reasons DeWitt is running for town council, because the marshes are getting spoiled. If there isn't a marsh, there isn't a pike nursery; and without a pike nursery, there soon won't be any pike.

Needless to say, DeWitt won the pike-fisherman vote. He believes firmly that "when people really know their world, they will take care of it." A lot of his neighbors love the country—that's why they live in it—but they didn't really understand it. For DeWitt, loving the country and understanding its ecology go naturally together. His goal was not merely to win an election but to build a broad understanding of and involvement in town decisions.

The moratorium on development

DeWitt won his election and was able to scuttle the hot-mix plant. ("He did it with a filibuster," says supervisor Eleanor White. "Cal kept talking and talking. . . . He wore them down.")

Two years later, DeWitt was elected town chairman, and an ally, Ed Minihan, became a supervisor with him. Their two votes controlled the board, but it took some clever work for them to figure out how to use their power effectively. They learned that every new construction site needed town permission for access off the town roads. They used that as the choke point to control development.

There was a certain "last-one-in-close-the-door" quality to these restraints, as most of DeWitt's allies were recent arrivals from the city who wanted the countryside preserved as they had found it. Rosalind Gausman, who married into an old farm family, told me that DeWitt and his group were seen as "new people coming in and taking over our town. I had [Cal] pegged as an outsider and a troublemaker." Old-time farmers felt their property rights slipping away.

Their alarm grew when the town board slapped a two-year moratorium on all property subdivisions. Dunn had never had a land-use plan, and the continuing surge of applications for land divisions meant the council couldn't get its head above water. The debate was often framed in terms of development: Are you for or against it? But DeWitt noted that when people said "development," they only meant housing tracts. "We said,

'We're for development. We want to develop farms.' " They wanted Dunn to grow in a way that would make sense to its citizens and preserve the qualities that they loved. A moratorium would give them time to think through a plan.

Housing developers sued the town, which managed to survive through some good legal counsel and a $100,000 surplus built up by not building any roads for a year. Gausman says, "Cal is so amazing—how he could have a room full of hostile people, and he could calm the crowd. He would let them talk, would really try to understand them. Then he would start explaining his side. He would just calm things down. He always listens to people."

Prairie fire

DeWitt also likes to talk, and when he talks, his love for nature and his awe toward its splendors always comes through. When I first arrived in Dunn, Cal and Ruth DeWitt welcomed me to their home, set on a drumlin nearly surrounded by marsh. Cal was busy at his computer, manipulating images from a digital camera he had just acquired. He enthusiastically showed me how the software could be used to extract environmental data from a photograph of daffodils blooming on his lawn. Then, while Ruth prepared dinner, he walked me around the drumlin.

A drumlin, as DeWitt explained to me, is a cigar-shaped pile of rock and soil left by an ancient glacier. DeWitt pointed out the glacier's path, from Lake Waubesa just out of sight to the north, down the silver marsh at his front door, and on to Lake Kegonsa south and east. A mile away, on the other side of the marsh, ran a thin strip of black. "That's prairie," Cal said. "It's just been burned a few days ago." Fires are set in the marshlands at regular intervals, he explained, one section at a time, for both prairie and marsh depend on wildfire to sustain their balance.

Over dinner, we talked more about fire. "People ask me why I have a lawn around the house instead of prairie," Cal said. "I used to want to bring the prairie in a lot closer, but I learned that's not the most practical thing to do." He told how, lighting backfires to burn the grasslands on his property, he underestimated the power of wildfire. The fire department arrived just in time to save the house.

Suddenly Cal got up out of his seat, a look of excitement on his square, Dutch features. By his porch light, he pointed out the characteristic features of a burr oak tree growing near the door. A burr oak has thick, fire-resistant cork bark, which expresses itself in knife-edged ridges running up and down the trunk and along all but the thinnest branches. DeWitt took some time explaining this to me, telling me the relation of this oak tree to the cork trees of Spain, making me punch my fingers into the firm resiliency of the bark. I was not sure why he was excited until he began to talk about fire again.

"An oak savanna like this one is an island in the fire," he said, his voice full of awe. "When the marsh and prairie burn, the fire will usually peter out in the oak savanna, because the tall grasses don't grow in the shade of the trees. Occasionally, though, a fire will get into the crowns of the trees. The oak savanna would be destroyed except for the burr oak, which won't burn through. These cork ridges will light, and glow, but the heat won't pene-

"We're for development," says DeWitt.
"We want to develop farms."

trate to the life of the tree. If you see a burr oak after a wildfire you see every branch outlined in red, glowing with fire."

The budding naturalist

DeWitt grew up in Grand Rapids, Michigan, the child of devout Christian Reformed parents. His father was a house painter who encouraged his son to pursue whatever he loved. What Calvin loved was studying God's creatures. He had a pond in his back yard where he kept all nine species of Michigan turtles. He maintained a zoo with other wild creatures, including an extensive aquarium in the basement. Their home was on an ordinary 40-foot-wide city lot, but DeWitt used his bicycle to explore nearby fields and forests.

Educated in Christian Reformed schools, including nearby Calvin College, DeWitt never conceived of science as opposed to God. The book of nature was God's other book, a revelation of his nature.

When DeWitt went for doctoral studies at the University of Michigan, he expected a rigorous challenge to his faith, but he found that if his professors were materialists, they weren't dogmatically so. He was surprised to find a secular university such a congenial place for a Christian.

That's characteristic. Where others see sharp divisions, he finds it easy to unite his faith and his science. When it was popular in his field of ecology to blame Christianity for the degradation of the natural world, he established the Au Sable Institute with its explicitly Christian basis. He enthusiastically speaks of the Christian faculty and graduate students that he works with at the University of Wisconsin, a place hardly known as a bastion of faith.

DeWitt is reticent when asked his thoughts on evolution. He finds the whole discussion of origins very bookish, quite removed from the actual observation of God's handiwork. "Whatever God did is what God did. Whatever means he is using to create is okay with me," he says. Evolution has never been a cutting issue for him, he says. "Sometimes [it is] for two or three days, when I'm with people who think it is very important. Then I'm out in the field, singing psalms, enjoying God's marvelous work, and the discussion doesn't seem so significant."

Land-use

The plan for Dunn, Wisconsin, began with taking inventory. That's a natural approach for DeWitt. He hoped that when people got a firm understanding of their land, they would find that they mostly agreed on how to treat it. Taking inventory gave time to defuse the winners-and-losers mentality that land-use decisions often create.

A newly formed plan commission compiled a detailed description of their town's geology, water resources (including lakes, rivers, and streams), woodlands, wetlands, wildlife, fisheries, historic and cultural resources. They mapped bird flight patterns and assessed pollution in all surface water. They studied how locations for homes and businesses affect their surroundings. The University of Wisconsin and governmental authorities provided all kinds of expert testimony. Eventually, the town published their study so that every citizen could become familiar with the town's natural resources.

"Coming to know their place, they liked what they found and decided to care for it and keep it." That is DeWitt's published summary. The land-use plan the town wrote into law essentially tried to keep Dunn the way it is by severely limiting new subdivisions and businesses. It enabled property taxes for farms to be set on a basis that assumed agricultural use (rather than on a higher basis assuming the land's use for housing). Plans for parks and trails were made. Roadsides were replanted to prairie. Preserves were plotted out. And every detail of the plan assumed the active involvement of its citizens.

For example, community parks are planned and developed by the neighborhood they are in, not by a town parks department. Someone building a new home can live in a trailer on the property while he builds—to encourage families on a limited budget—but only if they personally get the okay from all their neighbors.

The plan, in fact, was adopted by a referendum, even though the town board had legal authority in itself. The idea was to involve as many citizens as possible in discussions about the plan.

You can certainly argue over the plan. By limiting building, the planners have made Dunn a kind of park land for Madison. Housing in Dunn is bound to grow expensive, simply by the law of supply and demand. Other locales will have to carry the burden of providing housing and jobs for a growing population. (Nearby villages will continue to expand, and Madison itself will push in other directions.) Dunn isn't everybody's solution.

Clearly, though, it's the favored plan of the people of Dunn. In the early days there were lawsuits and meetings where people shouted, and one election where the reformers were voted out of office. (Two years later they were voted back in.) In recent elections, there hasn't even been opposition. Most of the old-time farmers have come to see that, as town clerk Rosalind Gausman says, "these guys are not out for their own good." In fact, one of the clearest objectives of the Dunn plan is to create conditions where farming can be a viable way of life forever.

In a 1996 referendum, Dunn voted to raise its taxes, the money to be used to purchase development rights for crucial parcels of land. The idea is to lock in the land-use plan permanently. It helped that a frugal approach to town government had kept their taxes lower than anywhere else in the area.

User-friendly environment

I concluded a day-long tour of Dunn standing with DeWitt in a small oak grove overlooking the northwest corner of the town. Looking north, we could just make out a ribbon of cars and trucks moving on the Madison beltway. Otherwise, the scene was an American pastoral, now preserved permanently as farmland and park. Through complicated negotiations, Dunn officials had succeeded in using their new tax dollars to buy a large tract of the land there, then reselling it, stripped of its development rights, to a local farmer. DeWitt told me about the pig farmer who had increased his farm's economic viability, about the heirs of a large tract who had agreed to sell to the town for a reduced price, and about others involved in delicate financial negotiations. Just a few days before, the town had celebrated with a picnic on the grounds where we stood.

I noticed a stand of small conifers, aliens in the landscape, growing on the northern edge of the oak grove. I asked

DeWitt whether they would be removed.

"No," he said. "If we were the Nature Conservancy [an environmental preservation group, which has bought land for preservation in nearby marshes] the conifers would go, because they aren't indigenous. But they make a good wind screen for picnickers, so we'll leave them."

In a small way, that captures DeWitt's philosophy. He's not such a purist that human concerns have to get out of nature's way. Rather, he seeks ways for the natural world and the human world to live as neighbors. That's good for the natural creation, because when humans live with it and get to know it, they love it and want to take care of it. And it's good for humans, because through the natural world they get a dose of the reality of God's reign. Community is a natural result. Picnics—an expression of community—are a result. DeWitt takes a serious interest in picnics.

Lessons learned

DeWitt really thinks we can find common ground between environmental concerns and humanity's needs when we experience the creation (as distinct from arguing about it). That's why, in his university classroom, his chief objectives are "awe and wonder" and "developing community." He takes his students on field trips to develop both. He believes, in fact, that the natural world offers the best resource for saving the university from its factionalism, its rigidity, its inhumanity.

It's the same with Dunn. People scattered in a country setting, commuting elsewhere, often live isolated lives. Dunn has no gathering place where they bump into neighbors—not even a school. (Dunn's children go to school in nearby villages.) Yet Dunn's environment brought its citizens together. Through the long, ongoing process of figuring out how to care for Dunn and to keep it, they came to know and value each other.

Does Dunn offer anything to the rest of America, cities and suburbs and all? Two things, I believe. First, it reminds us that God's beautiful creation can exist harmoniously on the very border of a large city. Madison will have Wisconsin marsh and farm a bike ride away, perpetually.

Second, it suggests that the beauty around us really can help us find common ground. Not, of course, that decisions about the land are easy to make. Differing political and economic ideas, applied to the environment, can make for heated combat. Yet when people take a break from arguing and actually look at the world God has made, they generally want to keep it and care for it. It's a rare person who doesn't value parks, whether they are as grand as Yellowstone or as ordinary as a prairie path reclaimed from an old railroad. It's a rare person who feels no sense of loss in seeing condos line the Gulf Coast, or hearing of the extinction of any species. Dunn, Wisconsin, is one small example of how people can come together around such deep, instinctive responses. It is an example not just of preserving nature. It is also people and community who are being preserved.

CI

Study in Israel

it can make all the difference!

• MASTER OF ARTS DEGREES • GRADUATE OR UNDERGRADUATE SEMESTER ABROAD
• SHORT-TERM ACADEMIC STUDY TOURS • CREDITS TRANSFERABLE

Jerusalem University College

an evangelical Christian institution of higher learning celebrating 40 years in Jerusalem

formerly: INSTITUTE OF HOLY LAND STUDIES

For literature and free video: 1-800-891-9408
or (815)229-5900 in North America, all others 972-2-718628

What Bible heroes can teach us about scandals.

EUGENE H. PETERSON

The allegations against President Clinton have unsettled many American Christians. He holds a position we honor and uphold in prayer; and he professes to be a Christian. But the trial by mass media—all the talk of moral impropriety and criminality—has led many to believe he betrays the very values and office for which we pray.

We Christians should be accustomed to leaders whose private behavior and public words and actions appear to be at odds. We've been dealing with them for a long time now.

We want our leaders to be above reproach. We project our fantasies onto them, and soon they loom larger than life. David is our premier biblical instance. Michelangelo sculpted in marble what many Jews and Christians have carved in their imaginations—a flawless David, the spirited human body in perfection. But the biblical text does not give us a flawless David. Putting people on pedestals is a way of not having to deal with who they really are (and who the God working in them really is).

The biblical narrator insists on telling us everything bad about David: he married many women, kept a harem of concubines, was an indifferent father, and capped his moral dossier ingloriously with adultery and murder. The narrator refuses to idealize or glamorize him to show that God's sovereignty works through just such a mixed bag of human failure and sin.

We Christians should be well trained through our Bible reading to see how God's sovereignty is worked out through the lives of frail, willful, disobedient—sometimes repentant and sometimes not—men and women who are created to live to God's glory. That is what keeps us reading this story over and over again and finding it "good news."

In the moral maelstrom of our age, people ask, "How do we keep our moral equilibrium with a story like this in the middle of our Bibles?" and the answer is this: "By keeping it in the middle of our Bibles."

In an age of diminishing respect for life, accelerating violence on all fronts, and widespread moral mayhem, we accept the seemingly unembarrassed inclusion of David as part of the salvation story. What then happens is that we give our glamorizing, celebrity-glossed concepts of leadership a thorough biblical chastening. Our flawed ideas of leadership need chastening quite as much as our flawed leaders.

The Bible is not a story of moral uplift. We would much prefer Abraham without his self-serving lies, Jacob open and above board, Moses without his impulsive anger, Samson without his Philistine whore, Samuel with a better track record in child-raising, Solomon without all those women, and Peter without his cussing. There is a long history in the church of pious readings of the Bible that overlook or suppress behaviors in our honored ancestors that don't match our best ethical norms.

But there is no hint of that in the narrative itself. This is unlauded history: unholy men and women with whom God works to fashion his holy work in history. They turn out to be no better nor worse than the people with whom he works still, the very ones we meet in daily newspapers and on television screens, and whom we face in the mirror each morning.

The age of the Bible was not a moral golden age that we are now trying to reproduce; it is rather a presentation of the conditions and people that God in Christ uses to work salvation. The biblical story, from beginning to end, is told in the terms of the social, cultural, political, and ethical world as it is, not as it should be.

God's holy kingdom is not a moral or spiritual utopia that descends into our midst in which Christians are put to work as moral policemen, arresting and jailing anyone who violates the holiness. God works from the inside, taking whatever the world hands him as stuff to be worked on by his kingdom presence and saving will. That he used David is a continuing source of wonder. Morality, it seems, is not a precondition for salvation.

Charles Williams, in a brilliant exposition of the coming into being of the first Christian community (The Descent of the Dove), wrote that Jesus was born under three conditions: Roman power, Greek culture, and human sin. Williams insisted that the Holy Spirit is always at work in these conditions. These conditions don't limit the Spirit's work; instead, our Lord chooses to work within the limits. Nor does the Spirit baptize the conditions; not many of us look on first-century Palestine, for example, as an ideal we seek. What we understand here is twofold: there are virtually no conditions that preclude the Spirit's work, and the Spirit never works apart from conditions. God can use any conditions at hand in the making of his kingdom.

The conditions out of which David's life was lived and narrated were made up in large part of Philistine culture and Canaanite morality, which is to say, violence and sex. The Philistine beer mugs and Canaanite fertility goddesses that archaeologists dig up from old Iron Age ruins symbolize the two cultures. It is hard to imagine a more uncongenial time or more unlikely conditions for living to the glory of God than tenth century B.C. Canaan—except, perhaps, twentieth-century America.

And yet, here it is: David—born, living, and dying in Iron Age violence and sex, not exempt from their influence but not confined to it either—in quite incredible ways transcending them so that it is possible, and common, for us to read the story and hardly notice the conditions. But we must notice them, for we live under conditions that are equally and similarly unfavorable.

The cultural embodiments of violence and sex, war and promiscuity don't seem to have changed much. And because they are human conditions, they're the only conditions in which a holy life can be lived by the men and women who continue to pray as Jesus taught us, "Thy kingdom come."

The entire biblical story never lets us forget that it is a God story of our salvation, not a collection of moral achievements for use as a moral handbook. This is the narrative of what God does to save us, not what we do to please him. We are always wanting to take over this story, finding ways to do it on our own so that God becomes a pleased spectator to our finely wrought lives.

This doesn't mean that there is nothing we can do to please him; there is much—our human believing and obedience is insistently and constantly worked into the story of what God is doing; and our unbelieving and disobedience is forever introducing needless pain and difficulties for others. Still, it is clear enough that what the Bible reveals is a world of God's sovereignty and salvation, not a showcase for displaying human achievement in politics or art or religion.

As we read these narratives, we learn not to "take sides" too quickly but rather discern God's presence coming into view and his will being worked out all over the place, often in persons and places we least expect.

We Christians cultivate skill in understanding the Putting people on pedestals is a way of not having to deal with who they really are (and who the God working in them really is).

Real Ministry for REAL LIFE

BATHSHEBA • GATE

Dr. John J. Davis, Professor of Old Testament

Grace Theological Seminary offers M.A. and M.Div. programs in four tracks:
Pastoral Ministries • Intercultural Ministries
Counseling • Youth and Family Ministries

D.Min. programs are offered in two tracks:
Pastoral Ministries • Intercultural Ministries

Call Don Julian today for more information.

At Grace Theological Seminary, we place a high value on ministry. Whether you're planning to pastor a local church, counsel troubled families, minister to inner-city youth, or plant churches in the Middle East, we have the programs and the faculty to help make your calling a reality.

Dr. Ronald T. Clutter's History of Doctrine Class

GRACE
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

1-800-54-GRACE

200 Seminary Drive • Winona Lake, IN 46590
www.grace.edu • julian@grace.edu

Buying? Selling? Refinancing?

Let the Christian Purchasing Network Help You Realize Your Dream of Home Ownership

We are a nationally recognized provider of goods and services for the Christian Community, serving more than 400,000 churches. Our church partners value our integrity as well as our business acumen.

Now you can use our reputation for honesty, quality and exemplary service to help you realize your goal of buying a home. The Christian Purchasing Network has formed an alliance to provide a full array of real estate and mortgage services tailored to meet your needs. And we're so confident about our mortgage program, that we'll guarantee your mortgage...twice. We'll provide you with same-day decision or pay you $250! And if we don't close your loan on the date you select, we'll reduce your interest rate by 1/8 of one percent for the life of your loan. Excellent pricing and tremendous service...all from people you can trust.

Let us help you achieve your dream....

Call us now!!

Christian Purchasing Network
Home Ownership Services Program®
1-800-372-1791

CPN+

Christian Purchasing Network
Home Ownership Services Program®

Financing provided by PHH Mortgage Services Corporation, 6000 Atrium Way, Mt. Laurel, NJ 08054. Arizona Residential Mortgage Licensee #BK10039; Georgia Residential Mortgage Licensee; Illinois Residential Mortgage Lender; Massachusetts Licensed Lender #ML0060; Licensed Mortgage Banker - N.J. Department of Banking; Licensed Mortgage Banker - NYS Banking Department; Rhode Island Licensed Lender, Minnesota - This is not an offer to enter an interest rate lock-in agreement.

ways of the world within the far larger context of God's sovereignty, depending on our biblical writers to give us the "sovereignty" perspective. If we get our theology—that is, our understanding of what is really and eternally God-important—from the journalists, we get a few facts, almost no truth, and nothing at all of God. But a biblically trained imagination accustomed to dealing with flawed leaders, discerns our sovereign God working out his salvation purposes in our history. This counters cynicism and even despair as we are handed daily bulletins documenting the failures of our leaders in government and church.

That's what Israel did. Israel developed a most impressive theology of God as king, God alive and present in sovereign justice and mercy during the very five-hundred-year period (from 1000 to 500 B.C.) when their daily experience of kings was most unsatisfactory. "The Lord reigns!" was the key motif in their theology (Pss. 93:1; 97:1; 99:1). Also, the early church cultivated a habit of intercession for the rulers of the day (1 Tim. 2:1-2), most of whom were either ignorant or defiant of the God revealed in Jesus Christ. Neither Israel's God-anointed kings nor Rome's pagan emperors ever gave evidence of a moral life that was much to write home about. One of our ancestors put it so graphically: "God rides the lame horse and draws straight lines with a crooked stick."

The way a leader lives, of course, has enormous effects on a society and culture. Sin cannot be contained in the sinner—it spills out of the self into society, making a mess. And when that happens the rest of us have the job of mopping up, and we are understandably angry. But mopping up is honorable work, this moral cleanup that Christians are called to engage in generation after generation.

Christians have a long history of passionate concern for God's rule that gets expressed in the social and political world in which we live. But we have never gotten much help from our leaders, whether ecclesiastical or political. And so we are not especially upset or dismayed when they turn out to be less than advertised. CT

Eugene H. Peterson is the James M. Houston Professor of Spiritual Theology at Regent College, Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada, and author of Leap over a Wall: Earthly Spirituality for Everyday Christians (Harper San Francisco, 1997).

What I'd Like to Tell the Pope About the Church

Responding to the main criticism Catholics have against evangelicals: that we have no doctrine of the church.

TIMOTHY GEORGE

When Catholics debate evangelicals, the most common question they have is, Do evangelicals have a doctrine of the church? If so, what is it? Timothy George, dean of Beeson Divinity School at Samford University and a senior adviser for CHRISTIANITY TODAY, found himself answering just those questions last year before a group of Catholic theologians, including representatives from the Vatican. His talk at this meeting of Evangelicals and Catholics Together addressed what many consider an oxymoron—evangelical ecclesiology. Here is a radically condensed version of that talk, which shows that evangelicals have good answers to these questions.

On July 29, 1928, a young evangelical pastor began his sermon on Paul's teaching on the body of Christ in 1 Corinthians with these words: "There is a word that, when a Catholic hears it, kindles all his feeling of love and bliss; that stirs all the depths of his religious sensibility, from dread and awe of the Last Judgment to the sweetness of God's presence; and that certainly awakens in him the feeling of home; the feeling that only a child has in relation to its mother, made up of gratitude, reverence, and devoted love. . . .

"And there is a word that to Protestants has the sound of something infinitely commonplace, more or less indifferent and superfluous, that does not make their heart beat faster; something with which a sense of boredom is so often associated. . . . And yet our fate is sealed, if we are unable again to attach a new, or perhaps a very old, meaning to it. Woe to us if that word does not become important to us soon again. . . . Yes, the word to which I am referring is Church."

So spoke Dietrich Bonhoeffer to a small German congregation in Barcelona. These words present both a diagnosis and a challenge for evangelicals today who are called to set forth a clear, compelling doctrine of the church in their new conversations with their Roman Catholic brothers and sisters, and who need it to help them sort out their loyalties in a bewildering bazaar of denominations, parachurch ministries, and independent congregations.

As a global, transdenominational fellowship of one-half billion believers, evangelicalism is an amazing ecumenical fact. As a theological movement, however, evangelicalism has been slow to develop a distinctive understanding of the church. There are several reasons for this:

First, evangelical scholars have been preoccupied with other theological themes such as biblical revelation, religious epistemology, and apologetics. For example, Carl F. H. Henry's six-volume magnum opus, God, Revelation and Authority, extends to more than 3,000 pages with little ink spent on the doctrine of the church.

Second, as an activist movement committed to evangelism and missions, evangelicalism has not made reflective ecclesiology a high priority. As some might say, "We are too busy winning people to Christ to engage in navel gazing." This objection should not be quickly dismissed, for as missiologist J. C. Hoekendijk observed, "In history a keen ecclesiological interest has, almost without exception, been a sign of spiritual decadence."

Third, evangelicalism is a splintering movement representing a bewildering diversity of congregations, denominations, and parachurch movements. Their shared identity is not tied to a particular view of church polity or ministerial orders.

Amidst such variety, is it even possible to describe one single, or even central, evangelical ecclesiology? The evangelical witness emerged not only as a protest against abuses in the church but also as a testimony for the truth of the gospel (we are protestants). How evangelicalism maintains the centrality of gospel truth within ostensibly weak structures of church authority is perhaps its greatest challenge today. However, within the evangelical tradition—in its confessions and hymns no less than its formal theological reflections—there exists a rich reservoir for articulating a strong doctrine of the church. One resource we share with the broader Christian tradition is the Nicene Creed. I would like to explore here what evangelicals mean when we affirm our belief in the church as "one, holy, catholic, and apostolic."

The church is one

In his letter to the Ephesians, the Magna Carta of the church, Paul urges, "Make every effort to keep the unity of the Spirit through the bond of peace. There is one body and one spirit—just as you were called to one hope when you were called—one Lord, one faith, one baptism; one God and Father of all, who is over all and through all and in all" (4:3-6; all references taken from the NIV). Thus the unity of the church is based on the fact that we worship one God.

Neither Luther nor Calvin intended to start a new church, but to reform the church. As Calvin put it, "To leave the church is nothing less than a denial of God and Christ." By contrast, Continental Anabaptists, English Separatists, and biblical restorationists sought not so much to purify the church as to restore it to its original New Testament condition. Thus by gathering new congregations of "visible saints," these radical reformers believed they could restore, as one of them put it, "the old glorious face of primitive Christianity."

The result was the proliferation of numerous denominations and sects, "separated brethren," who were often more separated than brotherly in their relations! This little ditty from the early nineteenth century describes the resulting confusion:

*Ten thousand reformers like so many moles,
Have plowed all the Bible and cut it in holes;
And each has his church at the end of his trace,
Built up as he thinks of the subjects of grace.*

At the same time, we must realize that the restorationist impulse was itself motivated by a concern for Christian unity. In the early nineteenth century, Alexander Campbell wanted his followers to be called simply "Christians" or "disciples of Christ" as a way of overcoming denominational disharmony, even if in the end his movement too added still another competing note to the Protestant chorus.

Evangelicals today are heirs of both reformational and restorational models of ecclesiology. Their approach to church order, ministry, and ecumenism often depends on which of these two paradigms they more identify with.

The fact that most evangelicals are less than enthusiastic about the modern ecumenical movement in its liberal Protestant modality does not mean that they have no concern for the unity of the church. It does mean, however, that the question of the church's unity cannot be divorced from the question of the church's integrity. The call to be one in Christ rings hollow when it comes from church leaders who either themselves deny, or wink at others who do, the most basic Christological affirmations of the faith, including the virgin birth, bodily resurrection, and actual return of Christ himself.

Thomas Oden speaks for many evangelicals when he declares: "Too many pretentious pseudoeccumenical efforts have been themselves divisive, intolerant, ultra-political, misconceived, utopian, abusive, nationalistic, and culturally imperialistic. . . . Hence modern ecumenical movements are themselves called to repentance on behalf of the unity of the Church."

But evangelicals too are called to repentance. We too have sinned against the body of Christ by confusing loyalty to the truth with party spirit, and kingdom advancement with self-aggrandizement. We need the wisdom of the Holy Spirit to know when, like the Confessing Church in Nazi Germany, it is necessary to stand against schemes of false church unity and compromised theology to declare, "Jesus Christ, as he is testified to us in the Holy Scripture, is the one Word of God, whom we are to hear, whom we are to trust and obey in life and in death."

The church is holy

Of the four classic attributes of the church, holiness is the one best attested in the most primitive versions of the baptismal creed: "I believe in the holy church."

The church on earth is holy not because it is set apart in its external organization, as though it were a sanitarium in the midst of contagion. It is holy only because it is animated by the Holy Spirit and joined with its heavenly Head, Jesus Christ.

Evangelicals insist, however, that the holiness of God be clearly distinguished from the holiness of the church. The holiness of the church on Earth is entirely derived, emergent, and incomplete. God's is eternal and unbroken by imperfection and finitude. Thus we take exception to the statement of Yves Congar that "there is no more sin in the church than in Christ, of whom she is the body; and she is his mystical personality."

Luther, though insisting that the one crucial mark of the church was and remained the gospel, also said much about good works and growth in holiness as the fruit of having been declared righteous by God through faith alone. Later Reformers placed more emphasis on the "marks of the true church" (Word and sacrament for Luther and Calvin, discipline as well for later Reformed confessions, English Separatists, and Anabaptists). Calvin, in particular, is clear about the function of the marks: "For, in order that the title 'church' may not deceive us, every congregation that claims the name 'church' must be tested by this standard as by a touchstone."

The evangelical marks—proclamation, worship, and discipline—are thus distinguished from the Nicene attributes because they are not merely descriptive, but dynamic: they call into question the unity, catholicity, apostolicity, and holiness of every congregation that claims to be a church. In this way, as Calvin says, “the face of the church” emerges into visibility before our eyes.

By elevating discipline as a distinguishing mark of the church, Puritans, Pietists, and the early Methodists defined the true visible church as a covenanted company of gathered saints. It is separated from the world in its organization and through its congregational discipline of erring members.

Such disciplinary measures weren’t meant as punitive. They were intended to underscore the imperatives of life and growth within the church. The church, in turn, was understood as an intentional community of mutual service and mutual obligation by which “the whole body, bonded and knit together by every constituent joint . . . grows through the due activity of each part, and builds itself up” (Eph. 4:16). The strenuous use of church discipline sometimes degenerated into petty legalism. But at its best, it provided a context for Christian catechesis, nurture, and outreach that stands in marked contrast to the kind of casual Christianity so prevalent in our own day.

The church is catholic

Most evangelicals are happy to confess that the church is one, holy, and apostolic. These are, after all, not only biblical concepts but also New Testament terms. But in what sense can evangelicals affirm “We believe in the catholic church”? Many contemporary evangelical churches have long abandoned the word catholic. Some have gone so far as to alter the traditional wording of the creeds to avoid even pronouncing the word! But none of this changes the fact that evangelicals are catholics. They believe that in its essence the Christian community is in all places and in all ages the one, holy, universal church.

The Reformers of the sixteenth century and the Puritans of the seventeenth, not excluding Baptists, were happy for their churches to be called catholic. Indeed, they opposed the Church of Rome not because it was too catholic, but because it was not catholic enough. They spoke of the evidence for catholicity in three ways: in its geographical extent (the church is spread over the whole world); in its inclusive membership (the church is gathered from all ranks of society); and in its indefectibility (the church is built on the promise of the risen Christ: “I will be with you always, to the very end of the age”).

Evangelical expositors, however, were careful to point out that historical continuity, numerical quantity, and cultural variety do not themselves constitute true catholicity. The true church may be quite small: Where two or three of you are gathered together in my name, Jesus said, there I am in your midst. This “I” is the only basis of true catholicity. As Barth wrote, “The Real Church is the assembly which is called, united, held together and governed by the Word of her Lord, or she is not the Real Church.”

Perhaps evangelical catholicity today is best seen in its worldwide missionary vision. Indeed, what ecumenism is to post-Vatican II Catholicism, world evangelization is for evangelicalism: not an added appendix, but an organic part of its life and work. The effort to share the gospel with those who have never heard was at the heart of William Carey’s mission to India in 1793, an event that launched what Kenneth Scott Latourette called “the great century” of Protestant missions. This witness continues today through the mission boards of evangelical denominations and a vast network of international parachurch ministries such as the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association, Campus Crusade for Christ, World Vision, and Prison Fellowship.

The church is apostolic

Because the church is one, holy, and catholic, it is also apostolic. This word was added to the Nicene description of the church in 381, but it was clearly expressed already in Paul’s metaphor of the church as God’s house, “built on the foundation of the apostles and the prophets” (Eph. 2:20). That church is apostolic which stands under the authority of the apostles, whom Jesus chose and sent forth in his name.

Evangelicals, no less than Roman Catholics, claim to be apostolic in this sense. But the two traditions differ sharply in understanding the transmission of the apostolic witness from the first century until now. Catholics believe that the church continues to be “taught, sanctified, and guided by the apostles . . . through their successors in pastoral office: the college of bishops, assisted by priests, in union with the successor of Peter, the church’s supreme pastor.” As heirs of the Reformation, evangelicals do not define apostolicity in terms of a literal, linear succession of duly ordained bishops. They point instead to the primordial character of the gospel, the inscripturated witness of the apostles, and the succession of apostolic proclamation.

While the church is indeed built on the foundation of the apostles and the prophets, there is something even more basic: the message they proclaimed—Jesus Christ and him crucified. This is a constant note throughout the ministry of Paul, who wrote to the Corinthians, “For we do not preach ourselves, but Jesus Christ as Lord, and ourselves as your servants for Jesus’ sake” (2 Cor. 4:5).

As the authorized representatives of Jesus Christ, the apostles have faithfully and accurately transmitted their authoritative witness to their Lord in the divinely inspired writings of Holy Scripture. The teaching authority of the apostles, evangelicals believe, thus resides in the Old and New Testaments, the self-authenticating Word of God.

Evangelicals and Catholics differ about which books are included in the canon of Scripture and also about the role of the early church in its formation: Was the canon the creation of the church, or was the church the place of reception for the canon? Both, nonetheless, share a common commitment to the Scriptures as the divinely inspired Word of God. (Indeed, documents in both traditions appeal to the Bible as “inerrant.”)

For evangelicals, the principle of sola Scriptura means that all the teachings, interpretations, and traditions of the church must be subjected to the divine touchstone of Holy Scripture itself. But sola Scriptura is not nuda Scriptura. While evangelicals cannot accept the idea of tradition as a coequal or supplementary source of revelation, neither can we ignore the rich

Perhaps evangelical catholicity today is best seen in its worldwide missionary vision.

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Web Site Directory

Arab World Ministries

www.gospelcom.net/awm

Calvin College (Alumni)

www.calvin.edu

Gordon Conwell Theo. Seminary

www.gcts.edu

New Tribes Mission/Destination Summit

www.ntm.org/summit

Pioneer Clubs

www.pioneerclubs.org

To list your Web address in a Computing Today Web directory
phone (630) 260-6202 x239.

Check Us Out Online!

Keyword: CO
on AMERICA ONLINE

One of the top
50 sites on
America Online

• Community Interactivity.

Constantly packed chat rooms, dozens of weekly events, hundreds of message board topics to meet any interest.

• Current News & Magazines.

Including: Christianity Today, Today's Christian Woman, Computing Today, plus daily news updates.

• Music & Media • Resource Center • Church, Bible & Reference • Marketplace • & More

Use AOL's integrated Web browser to access Christianity.Net, Christianity Today, Inc.'s exciting new Web site.

www.christianity.net

A member of Christian Community Network
www.christcom.net

• NET/SEARCH.

One of the most comprehensive Christian Internet directories on the Web with nearly 5,000 links to Christian Web sites.

• Church Locator.

A searchable database of over 4,000 links to church Web sites from around the world. Add a FREE link to your church's Web site.

• Newsstand • Message Boards • & More

Get unlimited access to America Online
and the Internet for $19.95 a month.
Call 1-800-633-8888 for a free start-up kit.

To advertise online call (630) 260-6202 x 239

est word from today's guilded scholars. The consensus of thoughtful Christian interpretation of the Word through the ages—and on central issues of faith there is such a thing—is not likely to be wrong. Evangelicals have much to learn from the way the Bible was read in ages past.

For evangelicals, public preaching of the Word of God is a sign of apostolicity. Through the words of the preacher, the living voice of the gospel is heard. The church, Luther said, is not a "pen house" but a "mouth house." The Second Helvetic Confession (1566) goes so far as to say that "the preaching of the Word of God is the Word of God." But evangelicals should not let the almost sacramental quality of preaching in our tradition obscure the importance of the "visible words" of God in baptism and the Lord's Supper. Evangelicals, no less than Catholics, should strive for a proper balance among these constituent acts of worship. In doing so, of course, evangelicals must not compromise the priority of proclamation, for as in the time of the apostles, "God was pleased through the foolishness of what is preached to save those who believe" (1 Cor. 1:21).

A worthy maid

"I believe in one, holy, catholic and apostolic church," Archbishop William Temple once remarked, "but regret that it doesn't exist." To which the evangelical responds: If by exist we mean perfect, complete, unbroken, infallibly secure, verifiably visible in its external structures, then it is clear that such a church does not exist in this world. In this world the true church is always in a state of becoming. It is buffeted by struggles and beset by the eschatological "groanings" that mark those "on whom the fulfillment of the ages has come" (Rom. 8:18-25; 1 Cor. 10:11).

In 1525, Luther wrote a lyrical hymn praising the church:

*To me she's dear, the worthy maid,
and I cannot forget her;
Praise, honor, virtue of her are said;
then all I love her better.*

*On earth, all mad with murder,
the mother now alone is she,
But God will watchful guard her,
and the right Father be.*

To the eyes of faith, the church is a "worthy maid," the Bride of Christ. But by the standards of the world, she is a poor Cinderella surrounded by many foes. Wrote Luther: "If, then, a person desires to draw the church as he sees her, he will picture her as a deformed and poor girl sitting in an unsafe forest in the midst of hungry lions . . . in the midst of infuriated men who set sword, fire, and water in motion in order to kill her and wipe her from the face of the earth." In God's sight, the church is pure, holy, unspotted, the Bridegroom, Christ: "hacked to pieces, marked with scratches, despised, crucified, mocked."

As evangelicals and Catholics pursue theological dialogue, moved by our love for the truth and for one another, we must not forget this ecclesiology by opting for an easy armchair ecumenism, heady and aloof. All our plans will ring hollow unless we stand in solidarity with our brothers and sisters in Christ, who live under the shadow of the cross and whose faithful witness is leading many of them to the shedding of their blood for the gospel.

Several months ago on a visit to Germany, I was taken to what remains of the concentration camp at Buchenwald near Weimar. Here more than 65,000 people were put to death by a totalitarian regime which saw in the Christian faith, in both its Catholic and Protestant expressions, a threat to the ideology of death. At Buchenwald there was one block of cells reserved for especially "dangerous" prisoners.

In cell 27 they placed Paul Schneider, a Lutheran pastor, who came to be called "the Preacher of Buchenwald." From the small window in his cell he loudly proclaimed Jesus Christ in defiance of the orders of the Gestapo guards. In cell 23 they placed Otto Neururer, a Catholic priest, whose work on behalf of the Jews and other so-called undesirables had made him a threat to the Nazi war lords. He too ministered to the prisoners in Jesus' name.

Together, a son of Rome and a son of the Reformation, separated no longer by four centuries but only by four cells, walked the way of the cross and together bore witness to their Lord. Their common witness does not remove all the differences between their respective communities of faith. But we remember them and thank God for them as well as for the countless others who have and will share a fellowship in the sufferings of Jesus. For today, as in ages past, the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church—the one, holy, catholic, and apostolic church.

Can God Be Trusted?

Cornelius Plantinga, Jr.

Many adults can recall a certain childhood feeling that has now pretty much faded away. Unhappily, one of the things that fades away is a childlike feeling of security in the nest. It's a sense that you are loved, protected, and perfectly safe. It's a sense, above all, that somebody else is in charge. In properly functioning homes, children often have this feeling. Adults do not, and they miss it.

Years ago, on the old Candid Camera television program, a very large and dangerous-looking truck driver—a man of about 50—was asked in an interview what age he would be if he could be any age he wanted. There was a silence for a while as the trucker contemplated the question. What was he thinking? Was he hankering for age 65 and retirement so he could trade his Kenworth four-and-a-quarter semi down to a John Deere riding lawn mower? Or was he yearning for age 18 and the chance to go back and take some turn he had missed?

Finally he turned to the interviewer and said that if it was up to him he'd like to be three. Three? Why three? the interviewer wanted to know. "Well," said the trucker, "when you're three you don't have any responsibilities."

When I first heard the interview I thought this man was trying to be cute. I now think he said something wistful. What he knew was that when you are a child, and if your family is running the right way, your burdens are usually small. You can go to bed without worrying about ice backup under your shingles. You don't wonder if the tingling in your leg might be a symptom of some exotic nerve disease. You don't wrestle half the night with a tax deduction you claimed, wondering whether a federal investigator might find it a little too creative. No, you squirm deliciously in your bed, drowsily aware of the murmur of adult conversations elsewhere in the house. You hover wonderfully at the edge of slumber. Then you let go and fall away.

You dare to do this not only because you fully expect that in the morning you shall be resurrected. You also dare to do it because you are sleeping under your parents' wings. If parents take proper care of you, you can give yourself up to sleep, secure in the knowledge that somebody else is in charge; somebody big and strong and experienced. As far as children know, parents stay up all night, checking doors and windows, adjusting temperature controls, fearlessly driving away marauders. They never go off duty. If a shadow falls over the house, or demons begin to stir, or a storm rises, parents will handle it. That's one reason children sleep so well. Their nest is sheltered and feathered.

I think children might be alarmed to discover how much adults crave this same sense of security. Adults need to be sheltered, warmed, embraced. Some of us have been betrayed. Some of us have grown old and are not happy about it.

People get betrayed, or they get old or sick. Some are deeply disappointed that their lives have not turned out as they had hoped. Others have been staggered by a report that has just come back from a pathology lab. Still others are unspeakably ignored

*He will cover you with his pinions, and under his wings
you will find refuge.*

(Ps. 91:4, NRSV)

by people they treasure. Some are simply high-tension human beings, strung tight as piano wire.

To all such folk, the psalmist speaks a word of comfort. It is one of the great themes of the Scriptures: God is our shelter. He will cover you with his pinions, and under his wings you will find refuge.

The image here is that of an eagle, or maybe a hen; in any case, it's a picture of a bird that senses danger and then protectively spreads its wings over its young. An expert on birds once told me that this move is very common. A bird senses the approach of a predator, or the threat of something falling from above, and instinctively spreads out its wings like a canopy. Then the fledglings scuttle underneath for shelter. The move is so deeply instinctive that an adult bird will spread those wings even when no fledglings are around!

And the psalmist—who has almost surely seen this lovely thing happen—the psalmist thinks of God. He will cover you with his pinions, and under his wings you will find refuge. The point is that God is our shelter when the winds begin to howl; under God's providence we are defended, protected, perfectly safe—someone else is in charge—someone big, strong, and experienced, who never goes off duty.

In one of his books, John Timmer, my former pastor, tells of his experience as a boy in the Netherlands at the start of World War II. German troops had invaded Holland a few days before, but nobody knew just what to expect. Then, on the second Sunday of May 1940, as the Timmer family was sitting around the dinner table in their home in Haarlem, suddenly they heard the eerie whining of an air-raid siren and then the droning of German bombers.

Of course, all of them were scared out of their minds. "Let's go stand in the hallway," John's father said. "They say it's the safest place in the house." In the hall, John's father said, "Why don't we pray? There's nothing else we can do."

John says he has long ago forgotten the exact wording of his father's prayer—all except for one phrase. Somewhere in that prayer to God to protect his family from Hitler's Luftwaffe, Mr. Timmer said, "O God, in the shadow of your wings we take refuge."

God spreads his wings over us. Here is a picture that all the Jewish and Christian generations have cherished, in part because it invites us to recover our childhood feeling of security in the nest. Or, to discover it for the first time if we have had a terrorized childhood. It's a picture that offers sublime comfort, and

*How true is the picture of a sheltering God?
How secure are we in the nest?*

only a pretty numb Christian would fail to be touched by it.

Still, a disturbing question pricks us. How true is the picture of a sheltering God? How secure are we in the nest? I wonder whether in 1940, on the second Sunday of May, some other Dutch family begged God to spread his wings over their house. I wonder if the bombs of the German air force pierced those wings and blew that house and its people to rubble.

You read Psalm 91 and you begin to wonder. It offers such comprehensive coverage. He will cover you with his pinions, and under his wings you will find refuge. . . . You will not fear the terror of the night, or the arrow that flies by day, or the pestilence that stalks in darkness, or the destruction that wastes at noonday.

Really? I need not fear any of these things? I can sleep in a dangerous neighborhood with my windows open? I shall not fear the terror of the night? My child's temperature soars and his white blood count plummets: I shall not fear the pestilence that stalks in darkness? I can plunge into my work at an AIDS clinic: I shall not fear the destruction that wastes at midday? Really? Is there a level of faith that can honestly say such things even after all allowance has been made for poetic exaggeration?

In his book From Beirut to Jerusalem, Thomas L. Friedman writes of his years in the Middle East. One of the terrors of life in Beirut during the civil war there was the prospect of dying a random death. Long-distance sniping and shelling made it hard to tell where bullets or shells might land, and the people who launched them often didn't care. You never knew whether the car you walked past might explode into a fireball, stripping trees of their leaves so that in the terrible silence that followed, scores of leaves would come fluttering down in a soft shower on top of the dead and the maimed.

No one kept score. Police would even lose track of the names of the dead. "Death in Beirut had no echo," says Friedman.

I shall not fear the grenade that flies by day. Could a believer say this in Beirut?

Let us face the truth. Faith in the sheltering wings of God does not remove physical danger or the need for precaution against it. We cannot ignore Beirut tourist advisories, or feed wild animals on our camping trips, or jump a hot motorcycle over a row of parked cars and trust God to keep us safe. We cannot smoke cigarettes like the Marlboro man and then claim the promises of Psalm 91 as our protection against lung cancer. A person who did these things would be a foolish believer and a foolish reader of Psalm 91.

You may recall that in Matthew's gospel Satan quotes this psalm to Jesus in the temptation at the pinnacle of the temple. "Throw yourself down," says Satan. After all, it says right in Psalm 91 that "God will give his angels charge over you." And Jesus replies that it is not right to put God to the test. God's protection is good only for certain events, and restrictions may apply. Jesus was teaching us that we cannot act like a fool and then count on God to bail us out. God may do it—and some of us can recall times when we acted like fools and God bailed us out. But we may not count on it.

But, of course, some believers get hurt, terribly hurt, by no folly of their own. Suppose a drunk driver smashes into your family car. Suppose an I-beam falls on you in a storm. What if you make the mistake of visiting a great city during tourist-hunting season?

Or suppose you are a devout middle-aged Christian woman who lives in Grand Rapids, Michigan. One June you start to feel sick. So you visit your primary-care physician, who sends you for tests, and then a visit to a specialist, and then more tests. Finally you go back to your own physician, and she says, "Ma'am, I'm sorry to say that you had better get your affairs in order." She says more, far more, about treatments and research and making you as comfortable as possible—on and on with all kinds of stuff that is well-meant. But you have grown deaf. All you can think is that you are 46 years old and you are going to die before your parents do and before your children get married.

Whatever happened to the wings of God? Can you get brain cancer under those wings? Get molested by a family member? Get knifed by some emotionless teenager in a subway in New York? Can you find, suddenly one summer, that your own 17-year-old has become a stranger and that everything in your family seems to be cascading out of control?

Where are those wings?

What troubles us is not so much the sheer fact that believers suffer along with everybody else. C. S. Lewis once pondered this. If the children of God were always saved from floods like believing Noah and his family; if every time somebody pointed a gun at a Christian, the gun just turned to salami; if we really had a money-back guarantee against hatred, disease, and the acts of terrorists, then of course we wouldn't have to worry about church growth. Our churches would fill with people attracted to the faith for secondary reasons. These are people who want an insurance agent, not a church. For security they want Colin Powell, not God. We already have people becoming Christians because they want to get rich or get happy. What would happen to people's integrity if becoming a believer really did give you blanket protection against poverty, accident, and the wages of sin?

No, it's not the fact that we have to take our share of the world's suffering that surprises us. After all, our experience and the rest of Scripture have taught us to expect hardship. What worries us is that Psalm 91 tells us not to worry. It says "a thousand may fall at your side, ten thousand at your right hand, but it will not come near you." This is advertising that sounds too good to be true. In fact, the psalmist says, "Because you have made the Lord your refuge . . . no evil shall befall you." And the statement troubles us. What about Paul? What about Stephen? What about our Lord himself? He wanted to gather the citizens of Jerusalem as a hen gathers her chicks. What some of those citizens did was to take him outside of town one day and nail his wings to some two-by-fours.

So what is going on in Psalm 91? How are its extravagant promises God's Word to us?

What Psalm 91 does is express one—one of the loveliest, one of the most treasured—but just one of the moods of faith. It's a mood of exuberant confidence in the sheltering providence of God. Probably the psalmist has been protected by God in some dangerous incident, and he is celebrating.

On other days, and in other moods—in

NEW Workshops for Pastors!

BEESON DIVINITY SCHOOL presents

THE ELEVENTH ANNUAL

Samford Pastors School

JULY 27 - 31, 1998

FEATURING

Clayton Bell

J. W. Hunt

Calvin Miller

Haddon Robinson

Robert Smith

Heather Whimestone McCallum

"FOR WOMEN ONLY"

Luncheon Featuring

AND THE FACULTY OF BEESON DIVINITY SCHOOL

SAMFORD UNIVERSITY

Birmingham, Alabama 35292-2252

SAMPLE WORKSHOPS: Feeding Your Spirit Resources for Spiritual Nurture; The Scope of Worship Renewal; The Baptist Heritage Concerning Church and State Relations; Easy Steps to Using Greek in Preaching; The Book of Joshua; The Genesis of Our Message; A Counselor's Look at the Impact of Technology and Secularism on the Church; God's Mission, Your Church and the World; Revisiting Rhetoric; Preaching with the Head and the Heart; The Pastor and the Theology of the New Testament; Ministry to the Deaf: Understanding the Distinctive Deaf Community for the Purpose of Evangelism and Ministry; Apologetics in Preaching; and many more!

REGISTRATION FEE of $120 includes workshops, food and lodging for the entire week. Located on the campus of SAMFORD UNIVERSITY, Birmingham, Alabama. Call 1-800-888-8266 for more information.

Samford University is affiliated with the National Association of Evangelicals and is accredited by The Association of Theological Schools in the United States and Canada. Samford University is an Equal Opportunity Institution and welcomes applications for employment and educational programs from all individuals regardless of race, color, sex, disability, national or ethnic origin.

other and darker seasons of his life—this same psalmist might have called to God out of despair and a sense of abandonment. Remember that when our Lord was crucified, when our Lord shouted at our God, “My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?”—when Jesus shouted this in astonishment, and with maybe even a note of accusation, remember that he was quoting another psalm (22). Despair or astonishment at what can happen to us under God’s providence—that too is natural and biblical.

Psalm 91 gives us only part of the picture and only one of the moods of faith. With a kind of quiet amazement, the psalmist bears witness that under the wings of God good things happen to bad people. You need another psalm or two to fill in the picture, to cry out that under those same wings bad things sometimes happen to good people.

Psalm 91 says no evil shall befall us. When we have cashed out some of the poetry and then added in the witness of the rest of Scripture, what we get, I believe, is the conclusion that no final evil shall befall us. We know that we can believe God with all our heart and yet have our heart broken by the loss of a child or the treachery of a spouse or the menace of a fatal disease. We know this is true—everyone in the church knows it. And yet, generation after generation of bruised saints have known something else and spoken of it. In the mystery of faith, we find a hand on us in the darkness, a voice that calls our name, and the sheer certainty that nothing can ever separate us from the love of God—not for this life and not for the life to come. We may be scarred and shaken, but, as Lewis Smedes says in one of his luminous sermons, we come to know that it’s all right, even when everything is all wrong.

We are like fledglings who scuttle under the wings of their parent. The forces of evil beat on those wings with everything they have. The pitchforks of the Evil One, falling tree limbs in the storm, merciless rain and hail—everything beats on those wings. When it is finished, when evil has done its worst, those wings are all bloodied and busted and hanging at wrong angles. And, to tell you the truth, in all the commotion we too get roughed up quite a lot.

But we are all right, because those wings have never folded. They are spread out to be wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities. And when the feathers quit flying, we peep out and discover that we have been in the only place that was not leveled. Yes, we have been bumped and bruised and hurt. Sometimes badly hurt. But the other choice was to be dead—the other choice was to break out of the embrace of God. If we had not stayed under those wings we could never have felt the body shudders and heard the groans of the one who loved us so much that those wings stayed out there no matter what came whistling in. This is the one who protects us from final evil, now and in the life to come—the life in which, at last, it is safe for God to fold his wings.

He will cover you with his pinions, and under his wings you will find refuge. It’s not a simple truth, but it is the truth. And we ought to believe it with everything that is in us.

CT

Cornelius Plantinga, Jr., is dean of the chapel at Calvin Theological Seminary and author of Not the Way It’s Supposed to Be: A Breviary of Sin (Eerdmans).

BIBLES for China

“For $4.00 you can place a Bible into the hands of a Chinese House Church Christian.

These Bibles are full Bibles — both Old and New Testaments. They are hard bound and printed LEGALLY in China.

Because these Bibles are printed and distributed legally, there is not the associated risk to the Chinese believers as with smuggled Bibles.”

Billy Graham

For more information contact

EAST GATES MINISTRIES

P. O. Box 2010, Sumner
Washington 98390
1-800-959-3464
www.egmi.org

Billy & Ruth Graham

Ned Graham – President

De-Seiple-ing World Vision

Straight talk from Bob Seiple on myopic Americans and the new realities facing international development.

Bob Seiple:
"People die in this world not simply because they don't have food or water, but because they don't have hope."

After serving more than a decade at World Vision, Robert Seiple is stepping down this month as president of the largest privately funded Christian relief-and-development organization in the world. During his tenure, Seiple doubled the funding for relief work and moved WV's headquarters from California to Federal Way, Washington (south of Seattle). His most lasting contribution, however, may prove to be his pushing the organization beyond the first two steps of relief and development into effective engagement of the deep-seated nationalistic conflicts that have erupted around the globe in recent years. World Vision, which was founded in 1950 when Seiple was eight years old, today operates in 100 countries worldwide. Before coming to World Vision, Seiple served as a United States Marine captain during the Vietnam War and was president of Eastern College and Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary.

BILL YOUNGBLOOD

INTERVIEW BY KEVIN D. MILLER

How has the landscape of relief and development changed since you came to World Vision in 1987?

I began during the last two years of the Cold War, which was followed by the chaotic, dysfunctional, transitional era we're still in. Without the balance caused by having two world superpowers, we've seen virulent identity wars break out that are difficult to stop and that continue to burn like fires in the back 40. Relief-and-development agencies need to bring a new emphasis to conflict analysis and reconciliation that relief agencies have never had.

For instance, you can go to the border of [the former] Zaire and Rwanda and feed refugees in the camp, but if you stay long enough, the refugees not only recover physically but begin to monetize the food they're getting so they can buy guns and go back over the border and continue the carnage. Bringing reconciliation in these circumstances requires a new level of geopolitical sophistication, for which we have precious few models.

Do faith-based organizations receive more respect now in the international community than when you began?

Absolutely. We are invited to sit at tables we have never sat at before. We are listened to in ways that we've never been listened to before. I don't know how long this window of opportunity will stay open for faith-based organizations, but the world realizes it doesn't have answers for the Bosnias and the Rwandas of our time.

How does the modifier "Christian" distinguish the work of Christian development agencies?

Where others see intractability, Christians see possibility because of the reality of a sovereign God. Our hope is not just an abstract theological concept, but a hope made tangible by the resurrection of Christ and the reality of his second coming. This gives us a sustainable hope, which is a very important commodity in development work. People die in this world not simply because they don't have food or water, but because they don't have hope.

Some have criticized World Vision for losing its original Christ-centered focus. What is driving this criticism?

Some of it has been a perception problem. This is an organization that was founded in the heart of an evangelist, Bob Pierce. Those who followed him didn't keep all his methodologies. Pierce went to the pastors, for instance. Stan Mooneyham, who came second, went to the folks in the pews. When you bypass the pastors and go to the folks in the pews, you create a dynamic that might raise some questions.

Also, in 1978 World Vision began the process of internationalization. This means simply that we began to give the ministry away to other entities around the world on an equal basis, a process that's still going on. I think we failed to properly explain to churches what was happening.

Having said that, however, I don't think we ever lost that evangelistic heart. Admittedly, our job description is a little different than for people who do crusades or hand out Bibles or do translations. We are charged with undertaking relief-and-development work. But this work is a sign and an outworking of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I think some people feel that when you become more holistic, you have to give something else up. That's not true. It just might make the witness to the gospel a bit richer.

Does World Vision sometimes undertake relief work without mentioning the name of Jesus?

In terms of evangelism, you just mentioned one methodology: saying the name of Jesus. Whether we are in a restrictive context or not, our emphasis should always be to show the love of Jesus through our work and share his name where we can share it. But there are places where we'll be expelled from the country if we were to broadcast the name of Jesus. So we need to be wise as serpents and gentle as doves in those contexts. In a broad sense, our method of witnessing is incarnational. We walk the talk. People have to be drawn to the gospel, especially people who have been brought up with another story.

Does that mean replacing their religious stories with the gospel story?

Yes, over time. This is not only true with those in non-Christian nations, it's also true in so-called Christian nations. In America we have a lot of Christians talking about truth but demonstrating something less in their actions. This makes the gospel unattractive. In fact, when we're not careful about how we treat one another, we can inoculate the unconverted against the gospel we say we believe. That's one of Satan's great methodologies.

So, I think if we were going into a country where you can't speak openly the Word, that's probably not all bad. Saint Francis said to preach the gospel every chance you get—use words if necessary. That's very real and important in a restrictive country, but it's also increasingly important in the Western context, where we have the freedom to say anything.

Evangelical Politics

You've been president of Eastern College and of World Vision, and you understand the politics that operate in evangelical organizations. What message would you like to communicate to the leaders of our institutions?

I don't want to suggest that I have all the answers, but I think the church is very much in need of a way of doing business that brings back the purity of the faith. The saddest part of my 15 years of working with Christian ministries is how Christians treat Christians and the energy that's expended in trying to purify a denomination or in trying to create an ascendant organization, one that's better or bigger or takes in more money than the next one.

I think we've gotten away from the ethic of love and grace. All too often in the public square, our Christianity comes across as either triumphal or judgmental. The Great Commission gets short shrift because we have yet to figure out how to love in terms of the Great Commandment, which was given before the Great Commission.

I believe there's a need for repentance among visible Christians today in terms of the Great Commandment to love God and neighbor. I say that from the perspective of someone who was raised in the church, saved in the church, memorized his catechism and his King James Version of the Bible in the church, and who loves the church. I say it because I'm bothered by the amount of our energy being dissipated by answering questions that Christians ask of Christians. They're not questions about loving Jesus. They are theological nitpicking that border on the political and have an ideological bent. They are less than holistic and are designed as a litmus test for who will be included in the circle. As we balance the number of angels on the tip of a pin, we've not noticed the world is going to hell in a handbasket.

But aren't there questions of truth for which one should fight to the death?

There are questions of truth that one should be prepared to die for. There are questions that one should be prepared to discuss. And there are questions about which one should simply say, "That's a good question; after we stop seeing through the glass darkly, maybe we won't have to ask it again. Or maybe we don't need to ask what even Christ never chose to ask." Each case needs to be looked at individually.

But look at the enormous amounts of energy that go into these fights. At what expense? Do they strengthen our foreign missions efforts? Is the perception of Christian solutions to ecclesial problems in the eyes of the unconverted as good as it could be? Is there any possibility that in our internal catfights—which have become anything but internal—we have turned people off?

Mahatma Gandhi once was asked what it would take for India to become Christian. He answered that Christians would have to start acting as Christians. I think all of us who have platforms for speaking need to be very, very careful. This is where leaders are going to be held up and judged, not by one another, but by almighty God.

Do you see this infighting as unique to North American Christianity?

Yes, pretty much so. As I go around the world, I see people whose commitments to almighty God are much purer and a faith that's much richer than ours. We have insulated ourselves like we insulate our homes and have made faith less than necessary. We like a good argument, and we like to be heard in the public square. We don't care if folks are falling off the sides of the kingdom platform as long as we can make our points.

I find there are a lot of questions and definitions that only Americans talk about and divide over that are never thought about in other parts of the world. They don't have time to think about them. They're persecuted, they're less than whole physically, they're fighting for their families' lives, they're trying to hold onto the last shred of hope. Their faith—the subject of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen—is real.

Where the Money Goes

What percentage of World Vision revenue comes from government sources?

We are the largest privately funded relief-and-development agency in the world. Just under 18 percent of our funding comes from government sources, which means the great majority of our funds is from private sources.

What percent goes for administrative overhead?

Last year our administrative overhead was about 20 percent.

Is that considered an acceptable percentage for donor-based organizations?

In terms of the watchdog agencies, anything 35 percent or better is acceptable. I think most thinking people feel that it's a very good ratio, given how we raise money and how we use it. At the same time, we constantly try to get it lower when we can do so without destroying the effectiveness of the ministry. Some ministries cost money—and working in the developing world is not inexpensive in terms of its structure.

The Next Millennium

What do you think your legacy will be?

I tend to look forward and let other people figure that out. But I would hope my legacy would be one of keeping the faith of our forefathers. I would hope it would be one of courage in doing what was right, even when it was difficult or disruptive. By that I mean things like moving an organization 1,100 miles and putting everything on the line so that we could position that organization to be better able to work in the twenty-first century. I hope folks would see the work we've done with the reconciliation methodologies that we've been discussing. And I would also hope that we've become more reflective in working with the right agenda during the decade-plus that I've been here.

Then there would be other people who would look at the numbers and note that we went from a $145 million organization to a $350 million organization, plus or minus. That's fairly dramatic.

What will face your successor?

The world is changing at exponential rates, and organizations that are going to have an impact in the twenty-first century have to do two things right. They have to make the changes that will be necessary, and then they are going to have to pick their partners with wisdom and discernment. The humbling part of our world is that no one organization is going to operate by itself. We're going to be working alongside folks in the next century, I think, that we've never thought of working with before.

Leaving World Vision, how do you understand God in a world where 33,000 children die daily from hunger-related causes?

In my travels, I saw young children who had almost never experienced the human touch banging their heads against orphanage walls. As these kids died, their names were taken off the cribs and their bodies were carried out at night. Such tragedies are impossible to grasp, and we will always ponder the question of where God is. The concise answer, of course, is that God was the same place he was when his Son was hanging on the cross.

At the same time, we must be careful that we don't blame God for the fallenness of humanity. For instance, we still live in a world—albeit with 6 billion people—that can still feed itself and has the means to generate food stores to feed many more. The dominion God has given human beings over the earth is not just a gift, but also a challenge and a responsibility. If a two-year-old North Korean girl starves to death because we can't get food to her, I think we've failed in our responsibility. We are to use the tools God has given us to solve these problems.

I remember standing on a bridge over the Kagera River on the border of Tanzania and Rwanda about a month after the killing started there. Looking into that river swollen with dead bodies—old and young, boys and girls—I saw there the depth of evil in the world. At the same time, as the water sprayed down over the falls, a rainbow hovered over the entire scene. While there is much to despair over in this world, believers know this is a world God so loved. That's a good starting point as we go out into the world. We do not have to bring God with us when we go. He's there first, even before the foundations of the world. And that's tremendously comforting. CT

FREE BIBLE SOFTWARE

Try world class Bible software valued at $350 for 30 days.

It's FREE!

All you do is pay $5 shipping
and handling.

Includes 11
Bibles, Barclay's
and J. Vernon
Mc Gee's
commentaries,
more than 1
million cross
references, plus
30 more titles!
Available in 6 editions, from $15 to $350.

For your FREE 30 Day Trial Edition (plus $5 s/h)
call toll-free (888) 333-BIBLE

Preach With Power; Teach With Wisdom

We would like for you to join with over 4,000 students currently enrolled at Andersonville Baptist Seminary. Having an international student body with students from 5 different continents, we have preachers all over the world that proclaim that they have learned more from us than from the so-called "major theological institutions." Should you decide to enroll with us, you will receive approximately 80 to 120 hours of lecture on audio cassette tapes (in a typical 30 hour program). For example, 1 John - Jude has 18 hours of tape lecture, and like the great majority of our studies, it is done verse-by-verse! The main textbook is GOD'S HOLY WORD and we teach that IT IS WITHOUT ERROR OR CONTRADICTION! All of our graduate studies require GLA's (Graded Learning Activities) which are practical activities involving research by the student. Our 9,000 graduates have been taught to preach and teach the Word! The exciting part is that you keep all tapes for future use in your ministry. Don't you want the Word to come alive as you get fresh ideas and thoughts to share with your church? Remember, you do not have to leave home, for all work can be completed by correspondence, and when your work is completed, you will receive a beautiful DEGREE (not a certificate) by mail. God bless you as you LEARN THE BOOK and EARN YOUR DEGREE!

Dr. Jimmy L. Hayes, Th.D.
President, ABS

Associate - Doctorate
Monthly Payment Plans
Discounted Spouse Education

Accredited by Accrediting
Commission International and by American Association of
Theological Institutions

Degrees Offered in the Following Areas:

- * Theology
- * Ministry
- * Divinity
- * Christian Counseling
- * Christian Education
- * Religious Education
- * Biblical Studies

Credit for Lifetime Experience
Transfer Credit Accepted
No On Campus Work Required
Work at Your Own Pace

Excellent and Demanding
M. Div. and Ph.D. Programs

* * * *

Andersonville Baptist Seminary

P.O. Box 545
Camilla, GA 31730-0545

1-800-525-1611

Qualified and Certified Faculty!
Immediate Phone Evaluation.

International Academic & Administrative Offices
Camilla, GA, USA

Phone: 800-525-1611
Fax: 912-336-7000
Email: abskjv1611@aol.com
Internet:
www.andersonvilleseminary.com

Doubting Thomas's Gospel

Q: A friend of mine recently read The Five Gospels, which I understand was written by the "Jesus Seminar." She tells me that the fifth Gospel is the Gospel of Thomas and that it is as authentic and trustworthy as the Gospels in the Bible. Is this true? What is this Gospel of Thomas and where did it come from? Why isn't it part of the New Testament?

Norma Erickson Poling Scottsdale, Arizona

A: One hundred years ago, three Greek fragments of what is called the Gospel of Thomas were found in the dry sands of Egypt. They dated to the third century after Christ. Then, shortly after World War II, a complete manuscript of Thomas was found, also in Egypt. It was written in the Coptic language and dated to the middle of the fourth century. This complete Thomas is made up of 114 sayings with no narrative framework and no mention of Jesus' Passion or Resurrection.

Scholars have studied this text with great interest since its discovery. The Jesus Seminar places high value on the historical basis of the Gospel of Thomas—that it recovers for us words Jesus actually spoke that are not found in our four Gospels. But many other scholars, conservatives and liberals alike, view this document more cautiously. Most think that it is no more than a second-century collection of sayings loosely based on the canonical Gospels (Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John) and other writings, and that it offers nothing that is original or older.

So why does the Jesus Seminar interpret it differently? This group of scholars and pastors—which does not represent a broad cross section of biblical scholarship—continues to be in the news and popular media. On the basis of ten years of deliberations over the sayings of Jesus in the New Testament Gospels, they have color-coded the words of Jesus according to their reckoning of authenticity (red = Jesus really said it; pink = close to something Jesus said; gray = Jesus probably did not say it, or the members of the seminar were sharply divided; black = Jesus definitely did not say it). Their work is conveniently displayed in the book you mentioned, The Five Gospels (Macmillan, 1993).

Thus, the seminar claims to have deduced what Jesus actually said and didn't say. According to its thinking, however, the New Testament Gospels and the Gospel of Thomas contain a relatively small amount of authentic material. Virtually nothing in the Gospel of John is rated red or pink, while only about one-quarter of the Synoptic Gospels is favored with these colors. By minimizing the authenticity of the four Gospels and elevating the authenticity of at least some of the sayings in Thomas, the seminar not only calls into question the traditional understanding of the biblical canon but also how we should view the historical Jesus.

The Jesus that emerges in the writings of the Jesus Seminar is an itinerant philosopher who calls for justice and the implementation of egalitarian principles. In itself this is not objectionable. But it stops conspicuously short of answering why the earliest Christians claimed Jesus was God's Son and Israel's Messiah whose death on the cross fulfilled Scripture and whose resurrection from the grave vindicated his claims and gave humanity new hope.

This may explain the seminar's preoccupation with the Gospel of Thomas. As in the case of many of the authors of postcanonical writings (consider, for example, just those apocryphal pieces using Thomas's name: Acts of Thomas, Apocalypse of Thomas, Infancy Gospel of Thomas), the author or compiler of the Gospel of Thomas wished to present Jesus in a way that was compatible with his views. Jesus appears as a mysterious figure, strangely aloof from his world. He speaks in riddles, has anti-Semitic tendencies, has no positive interest in Israel or her Scriptures, and has embraced some aspects of early Gnosticism.

With the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls and other earlier writings from Palestine, scholars are recognizing, in the light of the Hebrew Scriptures, the complete Jewishness of Jesus, which makes the use of Thomas for understanding Jesus even less tenable. The Jesus of Thomas is indeed very different from the Jesus of the New Testament Gospels. And it is not surprising that the early church, guided by the Holy Spirit, passed over Thomas, just as it passed over many other writings, in the long process of deciding what belonged in the New Testament canon and what did not. Although serious scholars will continue to study Thomas, it is unlikely that they will ever embrace the eccentric views of it espoused by the Jesus Seminar. CT

By Craig Evans, professor of biblical studies at Trinity Western University in British Columbia.

WANTED: YOUR QUESTIONS. Send questions to be answered by evangelical scholars to "Directions" at CTedit@aol.com; or CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

"Jesus said,
'Damn the Pharisees, or they are like a dog sleeping in the cattle manger, for it neither eats nor [lets]
the cattle eat.'"
—Gospel of Thomas

The Early Church's Health Plan

The gods feel no love for humans, Aristotle taught. "God so loved the world," Christians answered. That response changed the standard of living in this world, says Rodney Stark, author of The Rise of Christianity: A Sociologist Reconsiders History (Princeton) and a professor at the University of Washington. His article is condensed from CT's sister magazine CHRISTIAN HISTORY.

Christians practiced neither abortion nor infanticide and thus attracted women.

A little-known fact is that Christians in the ancient world had longer life expectancies than did their pagan neighbors. In fact, many pagans were attracted to the Christian faith because the church produced tangible (not only "spiritual") blessings for its adherents. These benefits included:

Social services. In a world entirely lacking in social services, Christians were their brothers' keepers. At the end of the second century, Tertullian wrote that while pagan temples spent their donations "on feasts and drinking bouts," Christians spent theirs "to support and bury poor people, to supply the wants of boys and girls destitute of means and parents, and of old persons confined to the house."

Similarly, in a letter to the bishop of Antioch in 251, the bishop of Rome mentioned that "more than 1,500 widows and distressed persons" were in the care of his congregation. This charity was confirmed by pagan observers, too. "The impious Galileans support not only their poor," noted the emperor Julian, "but ours as well."

Health services. When two great plagues swept the empire in 165 and 251, mortality rates climbed higher than 30 percent. Pagans tried to avoid all contact with the afflicted, often casting the still living into the gutters. Christians nursed the sick, even though some believers died doing so. We now know that elementary nursing—simply giving victims food and water without any drugs—reduces mortality in epidemics by as much as two-thirds. Consequently, Christians were more likely than pagans to recover.

Women's rights. Women greatly outnumbered men among early converts. However, in the empire men vastly outnumbered women because of female infanticide. "If you are delivered of a child," wrote a man named Hilarion to his pregnant wife, "if it is a boy, keep it, if it is a girl, discard it." Frequent abortions "entailing great risk" (in the words of Celsus) killed many women and left even more barren. Christians, however, practiced neither abortion nor infanticide and thus attracted women.

Women also enjoyed higher status and security than they did among their pagan neighbors. Pagan women typically were married at a young age (often before puberty) to much older men. But Christian women were older when they married and had more choice in whom, and even if, they would marry. In addition, Christian men could not easily divorce their wives, and both genders were subject to strongly enforced rules against extramarital sex. The apostle Paul indicates that women held positions of leadership within the church, as was confirmed by Pliny the Younger, who reported to Emperor Trajan that he had tortured two young Christian women "who were called deaconesses."

Urban sanctuary. Greco-Roman cities were terribly overpopulated. Antioch in Syria, for example, had a population density of about 117 inhabitants per acre—more than three times that of New York City today. Tenement cubicles were smoky, dark, often damp, and always dirty. On the street, mud, open sewers, and manure lay everywhere. Newcomers and strangers, divided into many ethnic groups, harbored antagonism that often erupted into riots. For these ills, Christianity offered a unifying subculture, bridging divisions and providing a strong sense of common identity. To cities filled with the homeless and impoverished, Christianity offered charity and hope. To cities filled with newcomers and strangers, Christianity offered an immediate fellowship. To cities filled with orphans and widows, Christianity provided a new and expanded sense of family.

Close-knit community. Because the church asked much of its members, it followed that it gave much. Because Christians were expected to aid the less fortunate, they could expect to receive such aid, and all could feel greater security against bad times. Because they were asked to nurse the sick and dying, they too would receive such nursing. Because they were asked to love others, they in turn would be loved.

In similar fashion, Christianity mitigated relations among social classes, and at the very time when the gap between rich and poor was growing. It did not preach that everyone could or should be socially or politically equal, but that all were equal in the eyes of God, and that the more fortunate had a responsibility to help those in need.

Behind tangible motives Christians believe the Holy Spirit prodded and persuaded pagans to believe. Christian conversion, after all, is ultimately a spiritual affair. But it is not too much to think that God used the tangible to influence the spiritual. CT

To subscribe to CHRISTIAN HISTORY: 1-800-873-6986.

BOOKS

Why Christianity Must Change or Die:
A Bishop Speaks to Believers in Exile

By John Shelby Spong

Why Calvin Was a Calvinist

Rediscovering the Geneva Reformer in his long-lost catechism.

Calvin's First Catechism: A Commentary, by I. John Hesselink, featuring Ford Lewis Battles's translation of the 1538 Catechism (Westminster John Knox Press, 224 pp.; $19, hardcover). Reviewed by Michael Horton, associate professor of historical theology at Westminster Theological Seminary in California.

Why are we here? If God has planned everything, why pray? How do we know God's will for our lives? What is God like? How can I be sure that I'm forgiven? Hardly academic questions, these form the warp and woof of Christian experience. How one answers them makes all the difference.

Although the ancient church provided manuals of instruction for new believers and children, only in the Reformation was the practice of explicitly "catechizing" the laity restored as part of a program to raise up a new generation of Word-shaped people. Among these catechisms, some became official standards (e.g., Luther's Large and Small catechisms, the Heidelberg Catechism, and Westminster's Shorter and Larger Catechisms). Despite the popular impression that such formal statements of doctrinal belief cause division, they have actually bound together diverse church bodies across geographical, historical, linguistic, socioeconomic, and ethnic lines.

Some catechisms, however, did not fare so well, usually because they were replaced. Such is the case with the first catechism of the Genevan reformer, John Calvin (1509–64). Not even rediscovered until 1877, it was republished in Geneva, in Germany, and even in Italy, but no English translation of the Latin text existed until now. Before his death in 1979, the distinguished Calvin translator-scholar, Ford Lewis Battles, agreed to have his English translation bound together with a commentary by the Reformed theologian I. John Hesselink, and the result is in many ways superb. English translations of both the French edition of this first catechism

BILLY GRAHAM CENTER MUSEUM

(Fuhrmann, 1949) and of Calvin's later catechism, which has been in continuous circulation (the so-called Geneva Catechism [French 1541; Latin 1545]), make this joint effort something short of a landmark, but important nonetheless.

First, the catechism itself. Similar to his preface in the Institutes (1535), Calvin's preface to the catechism announces both pastoral and polemical objectives, instructing children and new believers in the gospel as well as refuting false charges. Friends and family members were being imprisoned, tortured, and even burned for their confidence in the gospel, while Geneva swelled with refugees. These were hardly moments of calm, ivory-tower, academic speculation. And ordinary Christians were willing to give up everything for the beliefs that Calvin here summarizes.

Organized in a topical format that Calvin would later abandon for the more practical question-and-answer approach, this first catechism reads like a select anthology of the Institutes, which was still evolving at this time. Like Luther's catechisms, it follows the pattern of Law (Ten Commandments) and Gospel (the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and the sacraments). And, like the catechisms influenced by Calvin (Heidelberg and Westminster), it begins with the claim that all people are created for God; though being preoccupied with the immediate and with our own demands, we engage in idolatry and selfish ambition, failing to attain that true and saving knowledge of God for which we were created.

So how do we know God? Is it by stealing into God's presence by speculation? "Now since God's majesty in itself far outstrips the capacity of human understanding and cannot even be comprehended by it at all, it is fitting for us to adore rather than to investigate its loftiness, lest we be utterly overwhelmed by such great splendor." Professor Hesselink marks Calvin's contempt for speculation and his insistence that truth was chiefly aimed at the affections, not merely to "flit about the brain." Thus, it is not by philosophizing but by actually paying attention to God's works in history, narrated and interpreted by Scripture, that one gains the sort of knowledge that is of eternal value. "This is not something that keeps our minds in suspense with vain and empty speculations, but something that is beneficial for us to know," says Calvin. And this knowledge has to do chiefly with two things: the depth of our misery and the depth of God's grace in Christ (which is also the division of the Heidelberg Catechism).

Sections 4-7 contrast the majesty of humanity made in God's image with the depravity of the fallen race. The will is in bondage to sin, but this does not mean that we sin involuntarily. On the contrary, the direction of our own fallen hearts leads us to rebel and resist God's will. God's Law reveals perfect righteousness and makes us aware of the painful fact that we are under its curse, incapable of attaining righteousness. And here Calvin, like Luther, introduces the Law, emphasizing its "first use" (namely, to drive us to Christ).

After briefly treating the Decalogue, he turns to the Gospel: "By Faith We Grasp Christ." This introduction is followed by a statement on election and predestination. There would be fewer caricatures of Calvin's theology if he were actually read, and this section (13) of his first catechism offers an excellent as well as typical opportunity. The doctrine's pastoral importance is central: it emphasizes God's steadfast grace, so long as the believer does not "seek to penetrate into heaven itself and to fathom what God from eternity decreed for us." The Scriptures must be sufficient, and we must not avoid their clear teaching on these remarkable truths, but if we have life in Christ, "we have not business investigating anything beyond this concerning God's eternal plan." Christ is a sufficient mirror and pledge of our election.

Sections 14 through 16 treat faith and justification in rich terms, and here the clarity of Battles's translation allows us to see the brilliance of the gospel: "Thus stripped of our own righteousness, we are clad with Christ's righteousness; unrighteous in our works, we are justified by faith in Christ." Calvin will pick

Make It God's Business.

You want God's blessing on everything you do. And your business career is no exception. Whether you're an entrepreneur, corporate executive, retail merchant or sales representative, exposure to Judeo-Christian ideals at Regent will impact your future in a positive way. We offer fully accredited graduate business degrees and the guidance of a seasoned faculty committed to faith and scholarship. You may enroll in day or evening classes or pursue your M.B.A. or M.A. in management from your home or office through our Distance Education

CALL TODAY!
1-800-477-3642

 REGENT
UNIVERSITY
SCHOOL OF BUSINESS

Program. A degree from Regent University's School of Business will help ensure that your business and God's business are the same business.

1000 Regent University Drive, Virginia Beach, VA 23464-9800 • World Wide Web: <http://www.regent.edu>
Regent University admits students of all disability, race, color, gender, and national or ethnic origin.

TOOLS for Effective Ministry

Dallas Seminary's graduate programs are designed to give you the tools you need to communicate God's Word clearly and effectively.

Call (800) 992-0998 for a free brochure

 DALLAS
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

up this theme again in his treatment of the Creed.

Section 17 concerns the inseparable relation between justification and sanctification, followed by the topics of repentance and regeneration and the connection between faith and works. Sections 20–21 cover the Creed, ending on what may be the most remarkable note in the entire catechism, “What Hope Is.” From the Creed, Calvin turns to the Lord’s Prayer (sections 22–25), giving a great deal of attention to the importance of prayer in the Christian life. Finally, the catechism closes with treatments of the sacraments and the power of the keys (i.e., the Ministry).

Professor Hesselink’s commentary provides rich historical insight, inviting nonspecialists into Calvin’s theological universe. He is less concerned with defending a hero against slanders than with demonstrating how Calvin’s teaching, minus the popular distortions, originates in Scripture and animates faith, hope, and love.

For instance, Hesselink notes the remarkable depth of Calvin’s ecumenical commitment: “In his lifelong quest for the unity of the church his first approach was to share doctrinal statements—quite different from some ecumenical efforts which concentrate more on organizational unity than doctrinal unity.”

A common bad habit, into which Hesselink sometimes falls, is to pit Calvin against the Calvinists, a practice that is (happily) coming under increasing criticism, thanks in no small measure to Richard Muller’s close study of the sources. For instance, Calvin says that we recognize the veracity of God’s Word by the Spirit’s inseparable testimony to it, but also by its evidences (fulfilled prophecy, etc.). Granted, the Westminster divines reverse the order: We recognize Scripture’s veracity by the evidences and the Spirit’s testimony. But the order in which each stated the terms is a slender thread on which to hang so much. Even the doctrine of total depravity is credited to later Calvinism, despite the severe sections 4–6 of this catechism, which Hesselink acknowledges as bleak.

Nevertheless, he offers useful distinctions where misunderstandings of Calvin’s theology thrive. For instance, he reminds us that for Calvin human depravity renders us ignorant of “things heavenly,” but it does not leave us without any wisdom, skill, art, or intelligence in “things earthly.” And there is a very good discussion of Calvin’s view of the will in contrast to determinism, as well as extensive treatment of the “three uses of the Law.”

In the discussion of justification, Hesselink is eager to defend Calvin’s doctrine from the (Roman Catholic) charge that it is a “legal fiction,” that is, a declaration without foundation: “It is clear that for Calvin justification is no mere forensic legal transaction or a formal technicality. It is an experiential reality, one of the greatest gifts of the gospel.” But Hesselink’s language here could give rise to confusion. While salvation in the broader sense (encompassing sanctification and glorification) is more than a “forensic legal transaction,” justification is not. In fact, Calvin is quite clear about limiting justification to “the remission of sins and the imputation of Christ’s righteousness” (Inst. 3.11.2). For Calvin, as for the other Reformers, although justification is inseparable from regeneration and sanctification, it is to be distinguished from these by its exclusively forensic character.

The author rightly stresses that Calvin’s doctrine of God is dominated by the notions of “gratuitous mercy,” goodness, love, and “fatherly tenderness.” This was a point that B.B. Warfield emphasized at the turn of the century against critics who claim that the notion of sovereignty is Calvin’s all-consuming motif. Such reductionism appears not only among critics, but also among some recent versions of Calvinism that lack the Reformer’s balance. Hesselink provides ample support for the centrality of God’s “fatherhood” in Calvin from recent studies.

There is also a superbly concise discussion of Calvin’s understanding of the Atonement, especially in relation to Anselm and Aulen’s Christus Victor motif, underscoring Calvin’s distinctive contributions to our understanding of this axis of Christian faith and practice. As God the Redeemer is known only in Christ, so every Christian truth is related somehow to the person and work of Christ. Neither the Word nor the sacraments gives us anything beyond Christ and his benefits. Baptism is “like a sealed document to confirm to us that all our sins are so abolished, remitted, and effaced that they can never come to his sight, be recalled, or charged against us” (Inst. 4.15.1).

And because this knowledge or “good news” is entrusted especially to ministers, Calvin has a high doctrine of the visible church. Hesselink emphasizes this with good reason, especially since American Protestantism seems to have such a low estimate of the visible church and its ministry.

One of the most fruitful contributions is Hesselink’s fresh evaluation of Warfield’s description of Calvin as “theologian of the Holy Spirit.” Hesselink observes that Calvin offers us no novel doctrine of the Holy Spirit but gives more attention to the Holy Spirit’s ministry of linking believers to Christ. Thus, union with Christ, faith and regeneration, as well as the sacraments become occasions for elaborating on the absolute necessity of the Holy Spirit’s work. Against those who would either confuse effectual grace with water, bread, and wine or separate it from these physical elements, Calvin emphasized the Holy Spirit’s role in uniting the sign to the thing signified. This had immense importance in the Eucharistic controversy. Poised against Zwingli’s symbolism and the Lutheran doctrine of ubiquity, Calvin insisted that in the Supper believers receive nothing less than the body and blood of Christ, and yet not by the ascended Savior’s physical presence at the altar, but by the union with Christ in heaven which is effected by the Holy Spirit.

Professor Hesselink has fulfilled his goal of not only making accessible Battles’s English translation of Calvin’s first catechism but also providing a reliable introductory summary of the Reformer’s thought. And he is right when he says that Calvin “hated ‘frigid speculation,’ and always tried to show the relevance and ‘usefulness’ of a doctrine.” This is even more observable in Calvin’s final catechism with its question-and-answer form, especially when he occasionally asks, “But do you derive any benefit from this?” (Geneva Catechism). It is this spirit that pervades other Reformed symbols, as in the Heidelberg Catechism’s first question, “What is your only comfort in life and death?” Such examples should dispell the widespread fear that doctrine and life, faith and practice, theology and relevance are sibling rivals.

Hesselink’s pastoral motivations in preparing this work compare favorably with those of Calvin himself in preparing his first catechism. This commentary was not written for the Calvin scholar, nor does it offer any surprises for specialists. Hesselink cites the translator of the French edition: “The reader will find, moreover, that the thought of this Instruction is clear and definite, qualities sadly needed in current Protestantism, so foggy and cold in comparison with that faith which was then an illumination of the mind and a warming of the heart.”

CT

Saving the Church by Killing God

John Shelby Spong is not only piloting a theological Titanic, he is aiming for the icebergs.

Why Christianity Must Change or Die: A Bishop Speaks to Believers in Exile, by John Shelby Spong (Harper-San Francisco, 258 pp.; $22, hardcover).
Reviewed by Michael G. Maudlin.

Unchurched Sally finds herself in a sanctuary, a little confused by her surroundings. Suddenly there appears on Sally's shoulder a little, haloed baby boomer who looks a lot like Bill Hybels. He tells her not to be put off by these strange cultural trappings, and with a snap of his fingers he gets rid of the stained glass, the pulpit, the organ, the pews, even the steeple. While her head is still spinning, he invites her to take a cushioned chair and listen to a guitar-wielding worship team and a talk on some practical topic that Bill will infuse with the gospel message. Just as he is urging her toward the small-group sign-up table, she suddenly stops, distracted.

On her other shoulder perches a red-robed figure with a mitred hat so that we can't see what is growing underneath. He whispers to Sally, "That's nothing. He doesn't go far enough! He is still trapped in a primitive theistic understanding of God. We need to find a way to journey through the Christian system to what lies beyond all systems. We need to be seekers who hold on to the Ground of Being without ignoring the insights of the knowledge revolution, the sexual revolution, and revolution against tribal identity and prejudices. By the way, did I mention that I am a bishop?"

Which strategy for "saving" Christianity speaks to Sally's soul? Bill Hybels's seeker-sensitive church, of course. He packs in over 15,000 every weekend. As for the red-robed bishop, John Shelby Spong, the Episcopal shepherd of Newark, let's just say that in a denomination that is the ecclesiastical equivalent of the Titanic, Bishop Spong's diocese is sinking twice as fast as the national average.

Yet the bishop knows how to sell books. Spong is famous not so much for what he says as for what he is willing to say. In Living in Sin, he called for the church to recognize same-sex marriage and homosexual ordination. In Rescuing the Bible from Fundamentalism, he speculated that Paul was a "deeply repressed, self-rejecting gay man." In Born of a Woman, he "raised the possibility" that the Virgin Birth was created to cover up Jesus' illegitimacy and that Jesus may have married Mary Magdalene. He calls this writing ministry "consciousness raising."

Spong's latest offering reveals that the bishop is getting worried. It appears that too many people are still listening to those fundamentalists. So now this: Why Christianity Must Change or Die. Here's the pitch: The Bible and the creeds were "fashioned inside a worldview that no longer exists" (Bultmann! Gesundheit). This world-view has been "obliterated by the expansion of knowledge." (Since we can split the atom, miracles can't happen. Get it?) So we must jettison the supernaturalism, the literalness, and the most obvious teaching of Scripture and bow down to "the Ground of Being," "the transcending reality present in the very heart of life," namely, God, who is "not concrete or specific," who "can only be pointed to" but "never be enclosed by propositional statements." And we are lucky to have Spong as our pointer.

I don't want to give the impression that Spong is merely a naïve rehasher of tired liberal thought. No, he is a shrewd rehasher of tired liberal thought. Instead of bemoaning Newark's empty pews, he has been busy keeping up on all the latest scholarship. He knows his Bible. Still, all his points rest on three premises: atheism; the stupidity of people in the past; and, "if you don't agree with me, you are stupid, fearful, and uncool."

Take his evaluation of the opening line of the Apostles' Creed, where God is described as Father Almighty. "Both of these words offend me deeply. . . . The word Father is such a human word—so male, so dated. . . . It shouts the masculinity of the deity, a concept that has been used for thousands of years to justify the oppression of women." Almighty is "equally troubling" because it implies God has the "power to remedy any wrong," yet "the traditional arguments about free will and the virtues developed through suffering are today so weak and so unconvincing. . . . The problem of evil simply cannot be solved by those pious claims of antiquity."

But John Shelby Spong is a bishop, and so he gets at least one thing right: "Those who think that Christianity consists of a supernatural deity who invades the world periodically, who works through a virgin birth, a physical resuscitation, and a cosmic ascension . . . those who believe that creeds are literally true, Bibles are inerrant . . . will call this heresy." Amen and amen. CT

EXCERPT Spongisms

I have been attacked in books from the religious right by such people as Alistair McGrath, N. T. (Tom) Wright, and Luke Timothy Johnson.

We are forced to recognize that other gods have died in human history . . . Baal, Astarte, Molech, Re, Jupiter, Zeus, Mars, or Mithra. We wonder if deicide is happening again, only now to our God.

If Christianity depends on a theistic definition of God, then we must face the fact that we are watching this noble religious system enter the rigor mortis of its own death throes.

I would choose to loathe rather than to worship a deity who required the sacrifice of his son.

All evangelical and missionary activities designed to convert the heathen are base born. They are expressions of our sense of superiority and our hostility toward those who are different.

I am first, last, and always a believer. CT

Classic and contemporary excerpts

Not I, but Christ

To close the gap between what I am and what God wants of me, I must empty myself and let Jesus come in and take over. I have prayed to understand his agenda for me. . . .

It is unsettling to pray to be emptied of self; it seems a challenge almost beyond our reach as humans. But if we try, I have learned, God does most of the work. I must simply let myself go in love and trust of the Lord.

—Joseph Cardinal Bernardin in The Gift of Peace

Perspective Matters

One sees great things from the valley; only small things from the peak.

—G. K. Chesterton in The Hammer of God

Adults Under Authority

Authority and dictatorship are not the same thing, and all of us need authority; we need the authority of law, . . . the authority of parents, the authority of teachers. And this doesn't mean blind obedience: it means . . . we all need guidance. . . . [W]e are children in the eyes of God. It's very important in organized society that we are adults, making free choices, but we should have the humility to recognize that we are in many respects children. . . .

[W]e had a great party in the Sixties and thereafter over the destruction of authority, and now we've got the hangover. . . . [I]n the Nineties . . . we know we've got something wrong. We're pessimistic. The Sixties was very silly in many ways, but it was . . . optimistic. Now we know that we have overthrown authority and we wish we hadn't, but we don't quite know how to re-establish it.

—Charles Moore in Third Way

Of Deeds and Motives

The last temptation is the greatest treason:

To do the right deed for the wrong reason.

—T. S. Eliot in Murder in the Cathedral

Praise God Anyway

Authentic praise of God acknowledges what is true about God; it responds to qualities that are "there" and not simply "there for me." . . . In other words, God is to be praised because God is God, because of what God is and does, quite apart from what God is and does for me. Anyone can, and should, praise God when the Lord blesses one and keeps one. . . . Gratitude is indeed often expressed as praise, and rightly. But that does not make praise and gratitude identical. Or does God cease to be praiseworthy when gratitude has fled because the Lord seems to withhold blessing, when the divine face appears to be set against us, and when agony drives out peace?

—Leander E. Keck in the Christian Century (Dec. 16, 1992)

Be Not Silent

A silent love is acceptable only from the lower animals. God has given us speech that we should call upon his name. Worship is to religion what fragrance is to the flower.

—Henry Van Dyke in The Upward Path

More Than Luv

Love should cast out terror, but not awe. True love must include awe. This is one of the great truths about sex and marriage that our age has tragically forgotten. . . .

God is love. But love is not love. Love is a fire, storm, earthquake, volcano, lightning and hurricane. Love banged out the Big Bang and endured the hell of the cross. . . .

Next time you hear "All you need is luv," think of the captain of the Titanic singing it to his passengers. As for me, I'd rather have a lifeboat.

—Peter Kreeft in New Covenant (July 1993)

In the Image of Man

I think it says something that the only form of life that we have created so far is purely destructive. Talk about creating life in our own image.

—Stephen W. Hawking at a computer convention, quoted in World (Aug. 27, 1994)

Birds of a Feather

If you're going to care about the fall of the sparrow, you can't pick and choose who's going to be the sparrow. It's everybody.

—Madeleine L'Engle quoted in Context (Jan. 15, 1995)

Live or Rot

It may be hard for an egg to turn into a bird: it would be a jolly sight harder for it to learn to fly while remaining an egg. We are like eggs at present. And you cannot go on indefinitely being just an ordinary, decent egg. We must be hatched or go bad.

—C. S. Lewis, quoted in Good News (May/June 1995)

Navel Gazing

Look outward. You have been rightly taught Socrates' dictum that the unexamined life is not worth living. I would add: The too-examined life is not worth living either.

Perhaps previous ages suffered from a lack of self-examination. The Age of Oprah does not. One of the defining features of modernity is self-consciousness: psychological self-consciousness as popularized by Freud; historical self-consciousness as introduced by Hegel and Marx; literary self-consciousness as practiced in the interior, self-referential, self-absorbed world of modern fiction.

—Charles Krauthammer in Time (June 28, 1993)

Fear Fosters Progress

Fear is not a bad place to start a spiritual journey. If you know what makes you afraid, you can see more clearly that the way out is through the fear.

—Kathleen Norris in Dakota: A Spiritual Geography

THE MARKETPLACE

Cost: 46 cents per character (each space & punctuation counts as a character); avg. 45 characters per line. Min. $39.10 (85 characters). CT blind box number available at $6 each insertion; checkmark box ☒ $14 each insertion. Supply permanent street address and phone number. Ads set display style: $276/column inch. Combination package available for CHRISTIANITY TODAY, CHRISTIAN READER, & YOUR CHURCH: 2 magazines—44 cents per character per insertion; 3 magazines—42 cents per character per insertion. Display style: 2 magazines—$263 per insertion; 3 magazines—$252 per insertion. All classified ads will now be automatically placed on CHRISTIANITY ONLINE at no additional charge. IMPORTANT: Prepayment & written confirmation required to process ads. Visa, MasterCard, or personal check accepted; fax (630) 260-0114. Employment ads are given priority. All other ads will be placed in first available issue. Deadline for reservation or cancellation is seven weeks prior to actual issue date. Address correspondence to: Classified Advertising, Christianity Today, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

DIRECTOR OF DEVELOPMENT for Pioneer Clubs, dedicated to Christian education of children. Need experienced professional to manage total development program. Must have experience with various acquisition techniques and planned giving. Experience with Pioneer Clubs a plus! Salaried with benefits. Send résumé to Mary Hackman, Pioneer Clubs, Box 788, Wheaton, IL 60189.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Rochester Family Mission, Rochester, NY, is seeking an energetic leader who possesses the experience and personal characteristics of a pastor to lead this urban multi-staff ministry composed of a local congregation, midweek youth programs, food and clothing distribution, and a continuing Christian education institute. Experience in evangelism required. Salary and benefits. Please send a résumé and cover letter to Rochester Family Mission, 388 Tremont Street, Rochester, NY 14608; fax: (716) 436-0607 or e-mail: BCCNY@aol.com

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES: Advent Group Ministries, a Christian social service agency located in San Jose, CA, seeks resident counselors, night counselors, summer interns for adolescent residential treatment programs. Competitive salary, benefits. Residential positions provide room & board. Contact Deborah Norris: (408) 281-0708; (1-800) 98ADVENT; fax: (408) 281-2658.

NATIONAL FELLOWS PROGRAM in Leadership, Sept. 1998-May 1999, offered to college graduates in their 20s as a supplement to their internship/work experience in the Washington, D.C., area. Explore new faith-based models in leadership with affordable, covenant group housing. For application: (202) 244-6424; www.natpresch.org/ncl.html

AMERICA'S FOREMOST INNER-CITY FREE children's camp. Lifeguards and camp recreational workers needed. Camp Penuel Ministry now leads 1,000 to Christ yearly. Write: Camp Penuel, Box 367, Ironton, MO 63650, or call: (573) 546-3020.

DIRECTOR OF DOCTOR OF MINISTRY PROGRAM

Asbury Theological Seminary, a confessional, evangelical seminary in the Wesleyan-Arminian tradition, invites applications for an administrative-faculty position as director of the Doctor of Ministry program. Applicants should have a doctoral degree, substantial pastoral experience, and competency in field research. Experience in seminary teaching and computer literacy are highly desired. Interested persons should send a letter of application, c.v., and list of at least three references to: Dr. Leslie A. Andrews, Dean of Doctor of Ministry Studies, Asbury Theological Seminary, Wilmore, KY 40390. Applications from racial/ethnic minority candidates are encouraged. Application deadline: Open until position filled.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

DUE TO GROWTH AND EXPANSION, Belhaven College seeks those faculty who are excited to serve in the following areas at a college which prepares students to serve Christ Jesus in their occupation, relationships, and in the world of ideas.

- Director of Libraries (Librarian Master's required)
 - Sports Science Faculty (Ph.D. & Athletic Training Certification required)
 - Theater Department Chair (MFA required)
 - Business Administration Educator in Memphis (DBA or Ph.D. required)
- Send vita to Daniel C. Fredericks, Provost, 1500 Peachtree St., Jackson, MS 39202. Minorities are encouraged to apply.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

Troy Christian High School, a new growing school of 230 students 7-12 (one of the six Dayton Christian campuses), is looking for an experienced, motivated educator who is willing to learn and be disciplined in the areas of intervention and counseling. This could lead to further administrative duties as the school grows. Also needed is a football coach who would start a Varsity program within three years. This position requires coach to teach in one of the three open teacher positions: English, math, science. Also needed is a band and choir teacher. Send résumé to: 700 S. Dorset Rd., Troy, OH 45373. For more info, call (937) 335-2214.

INVEST YOUR SKILLS, vocation, and experience ministering physically and spiritually to the hurting, broken, and lost in the 10/40 Window. HOW? Contact: Mission to Unreached Peoples, toll free at (1-888) 847-6950, or E-mail: mupinfo@mup.org or HTTP://www.mup.org/mupinfo/

NATIONAL CHURCH PLACEMENT SERVICE Churches and Ministers are connecting with CMPN, P.O. Box 1132, Barre, VT 05641; (802) 476-8902.

NONDENOMINATIONAL EVANGELICAL FAITH MISSION to replace deceased director. Experienced administrator/discipler/staff develop/speaker. Self-supported under God. Send résumé. Information/application: North Arkansas Gospel Mission, Hasty, AR 72640; phone: (870) 743-1487-June.

MINISTRY PLACEMENT for pastors & associates or churches. Call (503) 357-7830 or Believer's Dynamics, POB 596, Forest Grove, OR 97116. Since 1977.

CHRISTIAN SCHOOL in scenic Galena seeking administrator and positions in K-12. TSCS, 11084 Hwy. 20 W., Galena, IL 61036; (815) 777-3800.

MAKE A CHANGE! Teach English, business, or computers in China, Russia, Muslim Asia, or C. Europe. Call ESI at: (1-800) 895-7955. All college majors/degrees welcome.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

AN EXPANDING 2,000-member family church with two locations is seeking a full-time DIRECTOR and/or PASTOR OF CHILDREN'S MINISTRIES. The ideal candidate will be committed to serving Jesus Christ and the church and will possess broad-based 5 years+ leadership experience in children's ministries with a large church. Applicants should possess strong leadership-development skills, program development and management skills. Key areas of responsibility will be the direction of existing Sunday school programs from birth to sixth grade, Colonial's preschool and child-care programs, as well as development of expanded ministries on the new site. Salary commensurate with education, experience, and ability. Send résumé and salary requirements by June 26 to: Director of Children's Ministries Search Committee, Colonial Presbyterian Church, 9500 Wornall Road, Kansas City, MO 64114. Shape a new vision for a new century in the area of children's ministries.

ASSOCIATE PASTOR

Growing, vibrant, evangelical church of 400+ in upscale suburb of NYC seeks pastoral leadership in the areas of assimilation, discipleship, and mobilizing believers for ministry. Candidate must have strong teaching gifts as well as the ability to manage and develop people and ministries. Ideal candidate has graduate-level ministry training and a track record of effective ministry. Ability to lead music and worship a plus. Dynamic congregation with many first-generation believers. Send résumé and cover letter to MBC, 626 Plandome Rd., Manhasset, NY 11030.

ACMC PRESIDENT

ACMC (Advancing Churches in Missions Commitment) is an organization with a vision to increase the passion of the American church for world evangelization. We are looking for a godly servant leader with ten years of progressive management experience and a desire to stimulate local churches to reach across cultures with the gospel. Previous experience in working with and/or through local churches regarding missions is essential. Demonstrated skills in these areas are desired: supervision, strategic/tactical/financial planning, resource development. Fax résumés to Dale Folsom at (316) 265-2052; e-mail DaleFolsom@aol.com or mail to: 50 Springlake Lane, Wichita, KS 67230.

FULL-TIME BUSINESS MANAGER position available for church, school, and daycare center at Christ-centered Grace Brethren Church in south central Pennsylvania. Applicant will have leadership skills and experience in financial, facility management, human resource and MIS activities. Must have personal faith consistent with the church's statement of faith. Send or fax a résumé and salary history to Grace Brethren Church of Lititz, Attn: Barry Brooks, 501 W. Lincoln Ave., Lititz, PA 17543; fax: (717) 626-5683.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

PHILOSOPHY POSITION at Talbot School of Theology, Biola University. Full-time, tenure-track, assistant- or associate-level faculty position in philosophy. Ph.D. required. Open now, with likelihood of beginning in Fall 1999. Competence sought in two of the following three areas: metaphysics, epistemology, and philosophy of religion. Additional area of competence open. To receive application materials, qualified persons committed to the theological position of the school are encouraged to send a letter of interest accompanied by a CV to: Lisa Vasquez, Department Secretary, Talbot Department of Philosophy/Ethics, Biola University, 13800 Biola Ave., LaMirada, CA 90639; lisa_vasquez@peter.biola.edu; fax: (562) 903-4759.

DIRECTOR OF CHILDREN'S MINISTRIES Position available for an experienced person who loves children and is gifted in teaching, administration, and leadership. Major responsibilities would include: developing, implementing, and evaluating programs for children ages 0-5th grade, selecting and enabling teachers and volunteers for all children's ministry programs. We are a 10-year-old seeker-oriented church anticipating a move into a new facility in 1998. Please send résumé to Rob Murphey, Buckhead Community Church, 700 Galleria Parkway, Suite 560, Atlanta, GA 30339; phone: (770) 952-8834; fax: (770) 952-8243.

FACULTY POSITIONS WAYNESBURG COLLEGE

- Computer Science—teaching all levels of programming and/or applications. Master's required; varied computer experience desired; doctorate preferred.
 - Criminal Justice—two positions: program director plus teaching forensic accounting and other courses (depending on expertise). Master's or JD required; experience desired.
 - Education—two positions: department chair and one-year leave replacement; administering and teaching in variety of content. Doctorate preferred; school experience desired.
 - Music, Instrumental—directing band and other ensembles; teaching range of music courses; responsible for music program, including recruiting, programs, part-time faculty; doctorate preferred.
 - Nursing—coordinator of RN to BSN program (requires evenings). MSN minimum; experience required.
 - Sports Medicine—staff position with faculty rank; possibly program director. Teaching and athletic trainer responsibilities. Master's minimum; doctorate preferred.
- See home page at <http://waynesburg.edu>. All positions require commitment to Christian higher education, breadth of teaching skills, plus normal full-time faculty responsibilities. Send CV, copies of transcripts, letter addressing qualifications and philosophy of education, and three references to Richard Stanislaw, Vice President for Academic Affairs, Waynesburg College, Waynesburg, PA 15370 or rstanis@waynesburg.edu.

MISSION PASTOR/DIRECTOR

Energetic, 2,400-member suburban congregation in Seattle area seeks a person with demonstrated ability in promoting, developing, and leading mission efforts. Clear commitment to Christ and biblical mission mandate required. Significant leadership experience with local community and cross-cultural outreach activity important. Send résumé to: Jack Roos, APNC chair, First Presbyterian Church of Bellevue, 1717 Bellevue Way NE, Bellevue, WA 98004.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

PASTOR/DIRECTOR OF STUDENT MINISTRIES

Dynamic evangelical church of over 2,000 members in beautiful North Coast San Diego seeks pastor or director of student ministries to provide overall leadership and staff supervision of multiple youth programs while focusing on senior high. Required: minimum of 2-4 years full-time experience directing a student ministry program of more than 50 participants. For a position description and more information: <http://www.solanapres.org> or Secretary, Youth Pastor/Director Search Committee, Solana Beach Presbyterian Church, 120 Stevens Avenue, Solana Beach, CA 92075; fax: (619) 755-0531.

SENIOR PASTOR OPPORTUNITY

The Evangelical Free Church of Libertyville seeks a senior pastor to lead the church into the next millennium. Applicants should possess vibrant people skills, outstanding preaching/teaching gifts, and strong team leadership abilities. Qualifications shall include master of divinity or higher, minimum ten years of demonstrated pastoral experience, and experience in working with pastoral team in a growing church environment. The EFC of Libertyville is a growing church of 500+ with a current pastoral staff of five. Worship services tend toward a contemporary-blended style. Interested applicants should send their résumé of qualifications to the Evangelical Free Church of Libertyville, 431 W. Austin Ave., Libertyville, IL 60048, Attn: Sr. Pastor Search Committee.

NEW MAJOR GIFTS PROGRAM

The Salvation Army offers a superb opportunity for the right mission-driven development professionals. We are looking for nine such candidates in the Southeastern United States. Candidates will have a record of successful major donor work, be responsible to develop an annual plan, have strong written and verbal skills, and be self-motivated. The focus of these positions is to develop long-term relationships with key individuals, foundations, and corporate donors while representing the mission of the Salvation Army. EOE. Please send a cover letter, résumé, and salary requirements to: Paul Curnow, The Salvation Army, 1424 Northeast Expressway, Atlanta, GA 30329-2088.

CHRISTIAN HERITAGE COLLEGE PRESIDENT

Christian Heritage College, a private, nonprofit, four-year, evangelical Christian liberal arts college is seeking a president. Founded in 1970, the college is located east of San Diego on a 32-acre campus at the base of Shadow Mountain. The mission of Christian Heritage is "to equip Christians to contribute to society and thereby influence the world through knowledge, skills, and godly character within the framework of biblical and scientific creationism, authority, and inerrancy of the Scripture." Leading candidates should have a distinctive Christ-centered belief, strong ministry orientation, a doctoral degree, seven to ten years administrative experience in higher education, competence in fiscal management, successful fund-raising strategies, be committed to integration of faith and learning, and able to envision, inspire, and lead others toward a shared vision for the future of the college. A creationist view of origins and commitment to the doctrinal philosophy of the college is required. Please send a letter of inquiry and vita to: Executive Search Committee, Christian Heritage College, 2100 Greenfield Drive, El Cajon, CA 92019; (619) 441-2200; fax: (619) 440-0209.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

ADVERTISING PLANNER FOR CHRISTIAN MARKET

If you would like to use your communication skills to help churches know about Christian resources available to them, we would like to hear from you. We're looking for two persons with about 10 years experience for positions involving communications, advertising, and promotion. Bachelor's degree also required. Exceptional skills needed, including: strong interpersonal skills, planning skills, ability to work with a graphic designer to develop concepts, copywriting, ability to establish communication goals, and skills in selecting appropriate communication methods/vehicles to achieve those goals. While the methods currently being used are primarily print-oriented, some projects involve video presentations, audio messages and the use of exhibits. If that's a match with your skills, and if your heart yearns to be involved in a position that helps churches carry out their ministries, send your résumé and salary requirements to: Human Resources Dept., MSN 121, Sunday School Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, 127 9th Avenue North, Nashville, TN 37234 or fax to: (615) 251-5017.

DIRECTOR OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION wanted for dynamic, family-oriented Presbyterian church in a suburban New England town. A 450+ member congregation is seeking a full-time DCE to develop and lead the Christian education program for the church community, with emphasis on children and youth. A degree in Christian education, experience, and an ability to communicate well with all ages are key qualifications. Salary and benefits, including manse, commensurate with experience. Interested candidates should send PIF and personal philosophy of Christian education to: DCE Search, First Presbyterian Church of Fairfield, 2475 Easton Turnpike, Fairfield, CT 06432-1194.

POSITION OF PRESIDENT

Rio Grande Bible Institute seeks qualified candidate to oversee the VPs, administrate board policy, give spiritual oversight to staff & students, and other duties relative to position. Ideal candidate has doctorate, is fluent in Spanish & English, committed to RGBI's doctrinal, practice, & mission statements as an evangelical, interdenominational college with Calvinistic & dispensational tradition. Responsible to raise own support. Send résumé and letter to: Pres. Search Committee, RGBI, 4300 S. Bus. 281, Edinburg, TX 78539.

MANAGING EDITOR

Nonprofit interfaith organization seeks managing editor to coordinate book and periodical editing. Requires related degree, 5 yrs. editorial experience, book publishing experience preferred, copy editing, and WP 7.0 skills, knowledge of American religion. Salary $40,000. Send résumé to HR, The Alban Institute, 7315 Wisconsin Ave., #1250W, Bethesda, MD 20814.

SENIOR PASTOR

Bethany Chapel of Calgary, an independent evangelical citywide church of 1,100 people, with approximately 700 attending the worship and teaching service, is seeking a full-time senior pastor. The successful candidate will be responsible for mobilizing and equipping the church body through regular expository teaching and preaching. The senior pastor will work with an elder-based leadership team and an existing pastoral staff of five. Send résumé to: Pastoral Search Committee, c/o Bethany Chapel, 3333 Richardson Way SW, Calgary, AB T3E 7B6, Canada.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

MINISTRY DIRECTOR OF YOUTH AND YOUNG ADULTS

New Life Reformed Church, an outreach-oriented congregation, seeks a spirit-led team player who will establish a relational-style ministry and guide and assist adult leaders of jr. high, sr. high, and young adult ministries. Proven skills and solid background in youth ministries or related Christian education preferred. Request information or send résumé to: Jeff Vander Berg, 232 16th St. SE, Sioux Center, IA 52550; phone: (712) 722-3520; fax: (712) 722-3519.

VICE PRESIDENT/DEVELOPMENT & MARKETING for a $55 million Christian relief-and-development organization in Portland, Oregon. Responsible for management of all fund-raising activities, development of marketing strategies, and establishing relationships with key major donors. If you want to help a good fund-raising team make a difference in the lives of people around the world, send your résumé to: Bas Vanderzalm, President, Northwest Medical Teams, P.O. Box 10, Portland, OR 97207 or basv@nwmmti.org

DIRECTOR OF CHILDREN & FAMILIES MINISTRIES for thriving Baptist General Conference church, Avon, CT. Sunday worship attendance 950. Director responsible for ministry to 492, birth – 5th grade children and their families. Understanding of child developmental stages and family dynamics as they relate to ministry necessary. Master's degree in Christian Education or related comparable field experience required, including supervision of staff members and volunteers. Creativity, excellent leadership and interpersonal skills essential. Send résumé to: Nicholas Parisi, Valley Community Baptist Church, 590 W. Avon Rd., Avon, CT 06001; (860) 673-6826.

ASSOCIATE PASTOR FOR ADULT MINISTRIES sought for dynamic 560+-member Evangelical Covenant church for ministry with small groups, singles, adult education, discipleship, and family life. Responsive, visionary, and enthusiastic pastoral staff and congregation; strong lay leadership. Prefer broad church-based experience with strong leadership, organizational, and people skills. Require master's degree and eligibility for covenant ordination. Reply to: Search Committee, Hillside Covenant Church, 2060 Magnolia Way, Walnut Creek, CA 94596.

27-YEAR-OLD MINISTRY seeking director of development. Fund-raising experience necessary, bondable, college education preferred, good verbal and writing skills, marketing and media experience desirable. Send résumé to: RTCA, 3607 Hillcrest Dr., Belmont, CA 94002.

DIRECTOR OF HUMAN RESOURCES. Growing urban university of 2,000 students and 270 full-time employees seeks a human resources generalist to manage all aspects of the HR function., including staff recruitment, employee benefits, compensation, policy development, performance appraisal, and staff training and development. Bachelor's degree and five years of progressively responsible human resources experience required. Master's degree and higher education experience desirable. We seek applicants who enthusiastically support North Park's mission of Christian higher education. Position is available August 1, 1998. Submit résumé and cover letter to: Vice President for Administration and Finance, North Park University, 3225 W. Foster Ave., Chicago, IL 60625. North Park is operated by the Evangelical Covenant Church and is an equal opportunity employer.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

PRESIDENT

Greenville College (Greenville, Illinois) invites nominations and expressions of interest for the position of president. Greenville College is a Christian liberal arts institution (affiliated with the Free Methodist Church). People Management International is conducting this search. A detailed description of the college, position, and opportunity can be found on their Web site: www.jobformatters.com (go to current searches and double click on Greenville College-President). Those interested should visit the Web site, download the Opportunity Profile, and respond to Dr. Tommy W. Thomas; fax: (615) 463-2944; e-mail: tw@jobformatters.com.

SENIOR PASTOR

Trinitarian Congregational Church of Wayland, MA, an independent congregational church in the evangelical tradition, is seeking a senior pastor with outstanding preaching skills and the ability to lead a vibrant church with exciting possibilities. TCC is a regional church in the west Boston suburbs, with over 600 active members, a $700K budget and a history of strong support to home and overseas missions. Candidates must have a graduate degree in theology (master's or higher) and several years senior ministry experience. Send résumé to: Senior Minister Search Committee, TCC, Box 99, Wayland, MA 01778.

SENIOR PASTOR/HEAD OF STAFF

First Presbyterian Church, Norfolk, Virginia 1,400+-member thriving church located in a historic professional area is searching for a senior pastor/head of staff with a passion for God, an enthusiasm for things of the Spirit, and a commitment to empower members in their ministry to one another and to the community. The senior pastor will exhibit strong spiritual leadership and a devotion to the study, teaching, and preaching of the Word of God. The successful candidate will have a minimum of 8 years experience and will have experience in leading a large staff. Send PIFs to: Marie Achtemeier Finch, First Presbyterian Church, 820 Colonial Avenue, Norfolk, VA 23507.

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

NEW BOOK: The Writings of John Wesley: A Man for All Ages, edited by Frank Mitchell; $29.95 plus $3 shipping. Order from: Book Outlet, P.O. Box 341722, Bartlett, TN 38184.

PUBLISH YOUR BOOK!

Our FREE step-by-step guide to Self Publishing gives you all features and prices up-front. You're ensured quality with in-house printing and bindery services. We offer low minimum quantities – only 200 books! Call or write for our FREE guide.

MP
MORRIS
PUBLISHING
3212 E. Hwy 30
Kearney, NE 68847

800-650-7888, ext. CT6
<http://morrispublishing.com>

BAKER BOOK HOUSE buys libraries, large & small. Phone: (616) 957-3110; fax: (888) 263-7310; E-mail: used.books@bakerbooks.com. Grand Rapids, MI 49546.

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

A NARRATIVE HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. New 1998 edition. Chronological compilation of the four Gospels based on KJV, with updated language and some translation improvement. Not a parallel edition. Four Gospel accounts combined into single, readable narrative broken down into sections. Excellent for study of life and ministry of Christ. Easy to read, large 12-pt. type; $15.95 USD+ship. ISBN 1-894179-01-3. Goss Publishing, 604 St. Paul, Kamloops BC V2C 2K2; (250) 374-9472.

FROM AUGUSTINE TO C. S. LEWIS: LEGACIES OF THE FAITH, by Dr. Ed Emy. Daily devotional readings collected from over 30 years, of great Christian literature. Subject index aids ministers, evangelists, and Christian workers. Order your copy/ies now for only $8 plus $1.25 (U.S.) P/H per copy from the OMS International Bookstore, P.O. Box A, Greenwood, IN 46142-6599.

6,000 GOOD USED BOOKS FOR SALE. Get monthly free book list from Pastor Wayne, 3940 Winewood Ct. SE, Grand Rapids, MI 49508; E-mail: 73223.2010@compuserve.com

THE HOUSE CHURCH MOVEMENT—a catalog of books and tapes available on this fresh, new, revolutionary movement. P.O. Box 285, Sargent, GA 30275; (1-800) 645-2342.

MANUSCRIPTS WANTED, ALL TYPES. Publisher w/ 75-year tradition. Author's Guide to Subsidy Publishing; (1-800) 695-9599.

PUBLISH YOUR BOOK NOW! Your book can be produced and promoted by the leading subsidy book publisher. Send for free booklet P-53. Vantage Press, 516 W. 34th St., New York, NY 10001.

200,000 USED BOOKS. Libraries purchased. Kregel Used Books, Box 2607, Grand Rapids, MI 49501; (616) 459-9444; fax: (1-888) USD-BOOK; Web: www.kregel.com

DRAMA

THE LIGHTSOURCE STAGE CO. presents The Door, the evangelical play for the next millennium. Call J. Stan McCauley (860) 293-2223.

☒ CHRISTIAN DRAMA. Hundreds of plays for adults and youth. Free catalog Eldridge Publishing: (1-800) 95-CHURCH, or <http://www.95church.com>.

FUNDRAISING

FREE INFO. Your church etched on beveled glass suncatcher/ornaments. Low min. Wull brandt Studio C, 1270 Hwy. 65, Hampton, IA 50441; (515) 456-3580. www.heartofiowa.com/wullbrandt/

GREAT FUNDRAISING IDEA! Need a fund raising project for your church or group? Call (1-800) 872-1278 now for a free color brochure on full-color commemorative plate offered by Preston-Hopkinson, P.O. Box 1, Lynchburg, VA 24505. Ask for brochure 2016

MINISTRY OPPORTUNITIES

MISSION NANNYS. Women 50+ travel and help missionaries with domestic duties. P.O. Box 609, Edgewater, MD 21037

PREACH CHRIST to nations via shortwave radio. (561) 697-4547; www.flinet.com/~grlmi

MINISTRY OPPORTUNITIES

ATTENTION: ALL MISSIONARY GROUPS Camp Penuel, Ironton, MO, and Eldred, PA, provides a FREE camping program for inner-city and underprivileged children in America. We are looking for missionary groups who would be interested in helping us build a chapel, new cabins, lodge, nature trail, and recreational facility. Camp Penuel reaches 1,000s of youth, ages 7-12, for Christ. Write: Camp Penuel, Box 367, Ironton, MO 63650, or call: (573) 546-3020.

OUTREACH CENTER MINISTER

If you believe you are called to minister to people in small groups, the National Conservative Christian Church will provide you a course of study, coaching, and assistance to begin a cell group, home church, or an outreach center. Write the N.C.C.C. at 4460 Northgate Court, Sarasota, FL 34234, or phone (941) 365-8115.

VISIT PRISON IN AN ENVELOPE. By writing an inmate you can fulfill the Lord's command to remember those in prison. Contact Prison Fellowship Ministries (CT), P.O. Box 17500, Washington, DC 20041; (703) 478-0100, x590; <http://www.pfm.org>

COUPLES NEEDED. Boys averaging in age from 12 to 16 need you to create a loving, caring, nurturing home. Become a House Parent at the Omaha Home for Boys. You'll get training in our nationally recognized treatment program, enjoy full benefits, including health insurance, and know you're making a difference in young people's lives. Starting salary of $29,000 plus free housing, meals, and utilities. For information, call Kevin Orr (1-800) 408-4663 Monday-Friday or visit our Web site: www.omahafreenet.org/boyshome. The Omaha Home for Boys, 4343 N. 52nd Street, Omaha, NE 68104, An Equal Opportunity Employer.

FINANCE

MONEY TROUBLES? Overdue bills? Reduce interest, cut monthly credit card payments, restore credit. Nonprofit agency can help. Call (1-800) SAVE-ME-2.

EDUCATION

COLLEGE/SEMINARY DEGREES off-campus. Christian Bible College, P.O. Box 8968, Rocky Mt., NC 27804.

SCHOOL AT HOME

Kindergarten through Grade 8

- teach your child at home
- complete curriculum
- no experience necessary
- traditional, classical education
- accredited, nonprofit program
- advisory teachers available
- all materials included
- language, art, music courses offered
- free information available by request

CALVERT SCHOOL
Since 1897

Dept. CT48, 105 Tuscany Road, Baltimore, MD 21210
(410) 243-6030 fax (410) 366-0674
<http://www.calvertschool.org>

EDUCATION

FREE, 40-lesson Bible correspondence course. No private interpretations. Freedom Facts, P.O. Box 447, Long Key, FL 33001-0447.

SERVICES

DIABETICS with Medicare or insurance, get your diabetic supplies at no cost. (Insulin dependent only.) Call (1-800) 337-4144.

Moving Interstate?

The Service and Thrift Relocation Service offers discounted rates and other benefits to reduce your moving cost on moves within the Continental U.S. For a free, no-obligation estimate call Lewis, CORd northAmerican:

1-800-873-2673

ICCS MC 167012

northAmerican.
VAN LINES/AGENT

WEB SITE DESIGN/HOSTING. Low-cost, proven ministry tool: (1-800) 932-2759; www.worldimpact.com

EVANGELICAL DRAMA TEAM for GenerationXers. Please call Ed at (860) 279-1993.

FORCED TO RESIGN with nowhere to go? We network exited pastors with grace-based churches for support and return to ministry. Confidential inquiries welcome. Pastor-in-Residence, Inc., P.O. Box 64934, Virginia Beach, VA 23467; (757) 495-7889; e-mail: PIR@juno.com

CHRISTIAN AUTHOR reads, evaluates, and advises your ideas, proposals, and manuscripts (books, articles, and poetry). Send SASE for FREE information packet: Dr. Robert Choun, 818 Clover Park Drive, Arlington, TX 76013-1433.

ORDINATION. International Ministerial Fellowship, an association of evangelical churches and ministers, offers many services, including ordination, newsletters, networking, ecclesiastical endorsement, consultation in area of legal, accounting, church planting, biblical/theological training, Internet services (FREE Web site and E-mail address) and a missions sending agency. For free information, check out our Web site: www.i-m-f.org or write: P.O. Box 32366, Minneapolis, MN 55432; (612) 571-5967.

COMPUTER/VIDEO PROGRAMS

COMPUTER SOFTWARE for church membership, contributions, and accounting. PowerChurch Plus is the most widely used church-administration software package. Call or write today for free information. F1 Software, Dept. CT, 208 Ridgefield Dr., Asheville, NC 28806; (1-800) 486-1800.

MINISTRY AIDS

☒ SERMONHELP.COM, a great new preaching and worship resource for parish pastors, is now offering exceptional value subscriptions. www.sermonhelp.com

POSITION WANTED

MINISTER

Wants church to pastor or revivals. Prayer for lost and sick, old-time King James; 240 Ruth Ave. 201, Phoenix, AZ 85020.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

ASSEMBLE PRODUCTS at home for best companies. Great extra income idea! (1-800) 377-6000, ext. 8290.

TRAVEL

JOIN THE INTERNATIONAL Christian Bed & Breakfast Network. Call (1-800) 881-1940, or write to ICBBN, 550-777 Royal Oak Dr., Box 139, Victoria, BC V8X 4V1 Canada.

☒ GOLDEN RULE TRAVEL is a Christian agency specializing in wholesale and bulk rate airline tickets for church and missionary travel. Our services are available to individuals as well as all mission and church organizations. We try extra hard to save you money! Mention this ad for a one-time, 2% discount. Call toll-free (1-888) 950-3273 FARE for pricing.

INSURANCE

Missionaries Worldwide Health Plan

For Missionaries working overseas!

FHI Benefit Plans/Aetna Global Benefits
800-347-9547

www.rfdriver.com/fhigroup.htm

REAL ESTATE

MOVING? Call us to find a full time, highly recommended Realtor who:
*Is committed to utmost integrity and service
*If requested, will also introduce you to the Christian community, churches and schools
A totally FREE SERVICE (USA/Canada)

The EXODUS Network 1-800-395-8556

PUBLICATIONS

Interpretation

A JOURNAL OF BIBLE AND
THEOLOGY

A journal that bridges biblical scholarship and theology.

A journal that relates biblical faith to the pressing issues of our day.

A journal for pastors and students who demand in-depth studies.

Upcoming issues

Second Corinthians	July 1998
Reading the Bible Today	October 1998
Atonement & Theology	January 1999
Apocalypse 2000	April 1999

Subscription information

1-877-522-7799 toll-free
www.interpretation.org

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

PREPARE FOR IMPACT.

If you want to have an impact on the world, choose the seminary that can have the greatest impact on you. At Columbia, we focus first and foremost on your spiritual life, then challenge you to academic excellence and give you practical ministry skills. Our customized degree programs offer the flexibility you need to build on your past as you prepare for the future.

Become a world Christian who serves God with excellence. Call Columbia today at 1-800-777-2227.

Columbia Biblical Seminary
& Graduate School of Missions

A division of Columbia International University
7435 Monticello Rd. • P.O. Box 3122 • Columbia, SC 29230-3122
803.754.4100 • Toll Free 1.800.777.2227 • www.ciu.edu
Preparing World Christians To Know Him And To Make Him Known
CALL FOR OUR EXTENSION CATALOG

The Christian in the Modern World

- Listening to the Word
- And to the World
- With John Stott
- For internationals
- For lay men and women
- For ten weeks
- In London, In the Fall
- Sept. 21-Nov. 27

The Institute for Contemporary Christianity

Vere St, London W1 UK

Ph 0171 629 3615

Fax 0171 629 1284

@msn.com

Knox is there!

Knox is there with solid orthodox, reformed
theology to equip you to change the world,
one life at a time.

Join us

by the sea in Fort Lauderdale or in the mountains of Colorado Springs.

• Doctor of Ministry
• Master of Divinity
• Christian Ministry
• Biblical and
Theological Studies
• Pastoral Counseling
• Religion and Society

KNOX

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Fort Lauderdale: 1-800-344-5669

Colorado Springs: 1-800-554-5669

D. James Kennedy, Chancellor

Seminary training shouldn't require a mountain of debt.

Get the facts about an innovative, bi-vocational Anglican seminary, featuring a residential earn-while-you-learn program for students.

Climb the right mountain!

Cranmer Theological House

Box 52591 • Shreveport, LA 71135

Call 800/ REC-0910 (800/732-0910)

E-mail: RSutton@morrisdickson.com

Now offering doctoral studies on campus!

Moody Graduate School gives you an option!

Either - The Master of Arts in Biblical Studies (MABS.) A two-year residence program. Emphasis in Bible and Theology plus ministry courses.

Or - The Master of Arts in Ministry (MAMin.) This 36 credit hour program allows a person to continue their ministry while they study. Each course requires a week of on campus lectures accompanied with pre-course reading and a post-lecture project.

Now you can achieve a Masters
Degree one way or the other.

Write or call:
Moody Graduate School
820 N. LaSalle Blvd.
Chicago Illinois 60610
800-333-3139
<http://www.moody.edu/>

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

MAMFT, MAC

Family Counseling It's amazing how many marriages break up because of money. Yet that's just one of the problems that plague the modern American family. Which is why RTS offers programs in Marriage and Family Therapy and in Counseling. With 66 hours of classwork and 500 hours of clinical supervision, they're firmly rooted in practical experience and biblical principles. So you can help hurting people see that in Christ, they have all the riches they need.

REFORMED
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY
Make It Count

In Jackson 800-543-2703
In Orlando 800-752-4382
In Charlotte 800-755-2429
RTS@rts.edu

More than 20 nations represented
More than 30 percent African American
More than 40 percent female
More than just a place to get a degree.

Eastern Baptist
Theological Seminary
PHILADELPHIA

The whole gospel for the whole world through whole persons
1-800-220-3287

Why choose between academic rigor
and a loving, supportive Christ-centered
community?

You can have both at ABSW

- evangelical and ecumenical
- low student-to-professor ratio
- situated in the beautiful SF Bay area

David L. Schirer, Recruitment Director
American Baptist Seminary of the West
2606 Dwight Way
Berkeley, California 94704-3029
510-841-1905

MESSIAH COLLEGE
Grantham • Pennsylvania 17027 • USA

Call 1.800.233.4220
1.800.382.1349 in PA

RIGOROUSLY ACADEMIC.
UNAPOLOGETICALLY CHRISTIAN.
www.messiah.edu

A CHRISTIAN COLLEGE OF THE
LIBERAL & APPLIED ARTS AND SCIENCES

We're re-creating the way
Godly leaders train for their future ~

Scholarship with a Shepherd's Heart

- A balance to academic excellence and practical training
- A mentoring relationship with our students in both character and life development by faculty and local church pastors
- A partnering with the local church in training men and women for ministry

When you are making your plans for seminary, give us a call.

1-888-443-1020 • 602-443-1020 email@phoenixseminary.edu

Phoenix
Seminary

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

Carolina University of Theology

EARN YOUR DEGREE AT HOME

YOU ALREADY LIVE ON CAMPUS!

Going to seminary or graduate school once meant packing up the family station wagon and the rental truck so you could move to a strange city, get a minimum wage job, and go in debt. Those days are over! Through Carolina University you can complete and accredited Bachelors of arts, Masters, or Doctorate degree without leaving your home, your ministry, or your job.

TUITION FINANCING AVAILABLE

AREAS OF STUDY INCLUDE:

*Biblical StudiesMinistryChristian Education

TheologyChristian Counseling Psychology

FOR MORE INFORMATION WRITE OR CALL

Carolina University of Theology
113 South Oak Street
Lincolnton, NC 28092
(704) 736-9901 (704) 736-9903 FAX
E-Mail CUT@TNTIE.COM

NOW IS THE
TIME !
PURSUE YOUR MINISTRY EDUCATION WITH

Graduate School
HOUSTON
Of Theology

"Making Ministry Meaningful"

Doctor of Ministry
Master of Divinity
Master of Arts

1311 HOLMAN STREET
HOUSTON, TEXAS 77004

713.942.9505

Visit our web site :

<http://www.flash.net/~hgst>

email: hgst@flash.net

Luther Seminary, the largest of the eight seminaries of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA), has 45 teaching faculty and a student body of almost 800, including about 100 men and women from churches other than the ELCA.

Degree Programs

- Master of Divinity
- Master of Arts
- Master of Religious Education
- Master of Sacred Music
- Master of Theology
- Doctor of Philosophy
- Doctor of Ministry

Special Programs

- youth and family ministry
- ministry with the aging
- cross-cultural ministry
- Islamic studies

The 40-acre, wooded, rolling campus is half way between the downtown areas of Minneapolis and St. Paul.

For More Information

Check out Luther Seminary's home page, www.luthersem.edu, or call the Admissions Office: (612) 641-3521; e-mail: jsaarine@luthersem.edu

LUTHER SEMINARY
2481 Como Ave. + St. Paul, MN 55108

DOCTOR OF MINISTRY
MASTER OF MINISTRY

Programs Designed to Address the Work of Pastors

- Convenient One-Week Modular Classes
- Instructors with Successful Pastoral Experience

Courses Focused on Practical Ministry Skills

- Strategic Church Planning - Dr. Henry Klopp (Nehemiah Ministries)
- Biblical Leadership - Dr. Daniel Brown (Foursquare Church, CA)
- Spiritual Warfare - Dr. Tim Warner (Freedom in Christ Ministries)

Write for a catalogue or call:

1-800-935-GRAD

Northwest Graduate School of the Ministry

9051 132nd Ave. NE • Kirkland, WA 98033

E-Mail: ministers@aol.com Fax: 425-889-0652

Web Site: <http://members.aol.com/ministers>

TRAINING LEADERS for the HARVEST

Accredited

MASTER of MINISTRY Degree Emphasis:

- Church Revitalization/
Planting
- Urban Ministries/Missions

Featuring:

- One-Week Modules
- Renown Guest Professors
from Leading Seminaries
- Spiritual • Practical
- Affordable
- Pentecostal/Charismatic

CLASSES IN OKLAHOMA AND GEORGIA

Dr. Garnet E. Pike, Dean
7210 Northwest 39th Expressway
Bethany, Oklahoma 73008
Phone: 405-789-7661, Ext. 3447

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

Live and Learn at the Overseas Ministries Study Center

—and find renewal for world mission

Fully furnished apartments and Continuing Education program of weekly seminars

Write for Study Program and Application for Residence

Overseas Ministries Study Center

490 Prospect Street

New Haven, Connecticut 06511

SERVE YOUR COUNTRY WHILE STILL IN SEMINARY.

The Army needs ministers and seminary students to meet the spiritual needs of America's soldiers and their families.

The Army and Army Reserve have even developed a special program for seminary students that won't interfere with your studies. It's called the Army Chaplain Candidate program. And it enables you to use your summer vacation to minister to the diverse needs of America's troops here in the U.S. or overseas.

The need is great, but the rewards are even greater. For specific information call 1 800 USA ARMY or visit the Army Chaplain website at www.goarmy.com

ARMY CHAPLAIN CORPS
BE ALL YOU CAN BE

*Beginning a third century
of service*

SINCE 1794

Preparing men and women for pastoral ministry and lay leadership in all phases of the Church's outreach

Pittsburgh
Theological Seminary

www.pts.edu
1-800-451-4194
616 N. Highland Ave.
Pittsburgh, PA 15213

Dallas Theological Seminary

offers solid biblical and theological preparation in several degree programs, including:

- Master of Theology
- Evangelism and Discipleship track
- Cross-cultural Ministries track
- Master of Arts in Cross-cultural Ministries
- Master of Arts in Biblical Exegesis and Linguistics
- TESOL Certificate

"America is more culturally diverse than ever before. We'll train you for ministry in this multicul-tural reality and in the world at large."

Dr. Michael Pecore
Chairman of World Missions and Intercultural Studies

DALLAS
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

3909 Swiss Avenue
Dallas, TX 75204
For information call
(800) 992-0998

Within the context of its theological convictions and mission, Dallas Theological Seminary does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, sex, disability, or national and ethnic origin.

Global Connection

Off Campus and On Line

Without disrupting your family or leaving your present Ministry, you can complete your degree program. With Bethany, you can study off campus and on line via the World Wide Web. At your computer, in your home or office, or whether you use the mail, you can have a dialogue with Bethany's faculty, students, or alumni. Bethany will not take second place when it comes to providing nontraditional education. Bethany...A Seminary of Distinction.

The Bethany Degree Program...
Bachelor's, Master's and Doctorate
Degrees in the following areas:

- Biblical Studies
- Theology, Missions
- Pastoral Ministry
- Religious Education
- Christian Counseling

Bethany is an independent, conservative, Baptist College with a trans-denominational student body. Bethany is designed for educating Pastors, Missionaries, and Evangelists. Bethany accepts the historic and infallibility of the Word of God.

Advanced standing, college transfer credit and portfolio Learning Assessment for life experience and credit arrangements are possible.

Bethany Worldwide

BETHANY BIBLE COLLEGE AND THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

2573 Hodgesville Road / P.O. Box 1944 / Dothan, AL 36302

Ph: (334) 793-3189 • Fax: (334) 793-4344

E-mail: bethanybc@ala.net

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

We're training servant leaders.

Interested?

1-800-467-AGTS

ASSEMBLIES OF GOD
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
1435 N. Glenstone Ave.
Springfield, MO 65803
417-268-1000 • www.agts.edu

A Graduate School with
M. Phil. F. and Ph. D. 's
in these areas:

*Philosophical Theology
History of Philosophy
Philosophy of Science
Aesthetics
Political Theory
Systematic Theology
Biblical Studies
Systematic Philosophy*
One-year master's in Worldview/Education.

For more info contact

Institute for Christian Studies
229 College Street
Toronto, Ontario, Canada M5T 1R4
(416)979-2331

IN CENTRAL CALIFORNIA & BRITISH COLUMBIA:

Training Men and Women in Kingdom
Mission and Ministry
since 1955.

- 188 credit students and 263 auditors from 29 denominations and 13 countries.
- Evangelical/Anabaptist/Theological Orientation.
- Degree Programs: M.Div. (90 units); MA (60 units) in Theology, NT, OT, Church Ministry or Marriage, Family and Child Counseling.
Also Diploma in Christian Studies or Diploma in Integration: Psychology and Theology (27 units); or Certificates (15 units).
- Fully Accredited by ATS and WASC.

Mennonite Brethren Biblical Seminary
4824 E. Butler Ave. • Fresno, California 93727
Call Jim Holm at 1-800-251-MBBS or (209) 452-1702
<http://www.fresno.edu/mbseminary>
E-mail: MBSeminary@aol.com
Also ask about our BC Centre in Abbotsford, British Columbia

A Seminary To Change The World.

Kevin and Carol Hinman believe that family life and ministry go hand in hand. That's why Regent School of Divinity was their seminary choice. Their Regent training deepened their commitment to family and to leadership training at home and overseas. Now they conduct pastors' training conferences across the globe, and translate leadership training materials into other languages.

If you and your family are called to missions, pastoral ministry, or are simply eager to serve the Lord, Regent School of Divinity is your seminary choice, too! And our field-based program may be the perfect fit for your schedule.

Call toll free today for more information! (800) 723-6162

REGENT
UNIVERSITY
1000 Regent University Drive, Virginia Beach, VA 23464-2981
SCHOOL OF DIVINITY

e-mail: divschool@regent.edu • website: www.regent.edu/acad/schdiv
* The Hinmans enhanced their individual educations by earning joint degrees in other disciplines at Regent. Ask for details!

VISIT OUR NEW SUBURBAN CAMPUS
In Northwest Philadelphia

Where Theology, Ministry and Spirituality Meet

PHILADELPHIA
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

7372 Henry Ave., Philadelphia, PA 19128
1-800-899-5158 • 483-2480
Fax (215) 483-2484
Evangelical & Anglican since 1887

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

CHAFER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Orange, CA
Dr. George Meisinger, Dean

Free Grace

Sufficiency of Scripture

Literal in Hermeneutics

Emphasis on Greek

& Hebrew Exegesis

Correspondence Courses

1(800)68-GRACE

"A superior education without the towering costs"

E-mail us at cts@school.com

www.bible.org, "other sites"

COVENANT & THE FRANCIS SCHAEFFER INSTITUTE SEMINARY

web page: <http://www.inlink.com/~covenant>
email: 102557.1436@compuserve.com

From "Greek" to
"Church History" —
every class teaches you to communicate the claims of CHRIST
over all of life.

Degrees:

M.Div.

M.A. Counseling

M.A.G.T.S. (General Theological Studies)

M.A.E.T. (Exegetical Theology)

Th.M. (Master of Theology)

D.Min.

Correspondence Courses Available

1-800-264-8064

12330 Conway Road • St. Louis, MO 63141

Study in Israel

Jerusalem Campus

Biblical History • New Testament
Backgrounds • Middle Eastern Studies • Hebrew Language

- M.A. programs
- graduate & undergraduate semester abroad
- 2 and 3 week programs
- credits transferable

JERUSALEM UNIVERSITY COLLEGE

1-800-891-9408

formerly, Institute of Holy Land Studies

4000 Lake State St., Suite 203, Rockford, IL 61108

Now you don't need to choose between your ministry and an MA degree

At Simpson Graduate School, you can earn an MA degree through intensive one-week sessions spaced over three years. Or simply enroll in individual sessions that suit your needs.

MA in Missiology

MA in Christian Ministry:

- Church Education
- Diversified Ministry
- Pastoral Ministry
- Church Planting & Growth
- Preaching
- Youth Ministry

SIMPSON GRADUATE SCHOOL

530-224-5606 • 800-598-2493

2211 College View Dr.

Redding, CA 96003

www.simpsonca.edu

Jack Hayford
announces
the opening of

THE KING'S SEMINARY

A GRADUATE
PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL
OF THEOLOGY
September 1998

Jack W.
Hayford
President and Founder

Preparing—

Spiritually vibrant, biblically strong, theologically-balanced,
culturally sensitive, Spirit-empowered, ministry-minded
Leaders for the 21st Century

- Located on the 24 acre campus of
The Church On The Way
Van Nuys, California
- An evangelical, Spirit-filled faculty
with earned doctorates
- Library resources
approaching 100,000 units
- Multi-denominational
- Courses offered:
 - In 10 week Quarters
 - In One-week intensives
 - On-Line

Paul G. Chappell, Ph.D.
Chief Academic Officer

For information, call Toll-Free

1-888-779-8040

e-mail: tki@earthlink.net

website: www.kingsseminary.edu

THE KING'S
SEMINARY

Also...

THE JACK W. HAYFORD SCHOOL OF PASTORAL NURTURE

PASTORAL CONSULTATIONS

*Join a small group of pastors and spend a week with Pastor Hayford
in disciplined reflection and interaction—*

- Be with, talk to, question, and "feel the pulse of" Jack Hayford, pastor of one of America's leading churches
- Discussing key themes and values that make a mindset and lifestyle for ministry
- Providing exposition and sermonic resources and
- Sharing God's Word to nurture the shepherd's soul

For available dates, call 1-888-779-8040

COMING AUGUST 26 – 28, 1998

A Special 3-Day Colloquium on Preaching and Communication

featuring three of our Nation's best known Preachers and Communicators.

Jack W. Hayford
The Church On The Way

Lloyd J. Ogilvie
Chaplain, US Senate

John C. Maxwell
Founder, INJOY

For registration information, call
1-888-779-8040

THE JACK W.
HAYFORD
SCHOOL OF PASTORAL
NURTURE

A Leadership
Advancement
Program

*focused on increasing the ministry effectiveness
of pastors and leaders
and facilitating personal growth
and renewal.*

THE KING'S
SEMINARY

The Oxford Prophet

A prophet is without honor not only in his own town but equally in his own time. Only in hindsight can we appreciate the accuracy of his prophecies.

This summer we celebrate the one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of C. S. Lewis, and in hindsight it becomes startlingly clear that this tweedy, pipe-smoking scholar was not only a clever author of children's tales and a keen apologist, but also a true prophet for our postmodern age. Lewis might seem an unlikely candidate for the role, not being a theologian but an English professor, and what's more, a convert late in life. What was it that made him such a keen observer of cultural and intellectual trends?

For me, the question has intense personal significance. Twenty-five years ago, my friend Tom Phillips read me "The Great Sin," a chapter in Lewis's Mere Christianity dealing with pride. The words pierced the heart of this White House hatchet man, and the book became instrumental in my conversion.

The ministry of Prison Fellowship is likewise indebted to Lewis. His essay "The Humanitarian Theory of Punishment" (1954) anticipated the failure of policies seeking to cure or deter crime. Such theories may appear humanitarian, Lewis argued, but they actually reduce the criminal to an object to be manipulated for social goals.

By contrast, a biblical understanding treats the individual as a moral agent, whose actions deserve either praise or blame. Punishment is not about pragmatic goals but about justice.

Lewis's Miracles (1947) was likewise prophetic, penned before most Christians were aware of the emerging philosophy of naturalism, the belief that there is a naturalistic explanation for everything in the universe. Lewis demonstrated that naturalism is self-destructing: If nature is all there is, then life is nothing but a cosmic accident. Even our minds—and thoughts—are nothing but "accidental by-products of the movement of atoms."

But if all thoughts are the result of atoms knocking about in our brains, there is no reason to regard them as trustworthy or true—including the thoughts of the naturalist. Thus naturalism leads to the conclusion that the philosophy itself is not true.

It also undercuts any objective morality, opening a door to tyranny. In The Abolition of Man (1947), Lewis warned that naturalism turns human beings into objects to be controlled, and turns values into "mere natural phenomena"—which can be selected and inculcated into a passive population by powerful Conditioners. He predicted a time when those who want to remold human nature "will be armed with the powers of an omniscient state and an irresistible scientific technique." Thus "man's conquest of nature" in reality means "the rule of the Conditioners over the conditioned human material."

This prediction was fleshed out in That Hideous Strength, a portentous allegory about an institution called N.I.C.E., formed to carry out an ambitious utopian vision to "improve" humanity (by coercion if necessary). The theme is that the loss of an objective morality paves the way to despotism, for then there is no control over the rulers beyond their own impulses. In Lewis's words, "The very idea of freedom presupposes some objective moral law which overarches rulers and ruled alike."

Why was Lewis so uncannily prophetic? The answer may be somewhat discomfiting to modern evangelicals: One reason is precisely that Lewis was not an evangelical. He was a professor in the academy, with a specialty in medieval literature, which gave him a mental framework shaped by the whole scope of intellectual history and Christian thought. As a result, he was liberated from the narrow confines of the world-view of his own age—which meant he was able to analyze and critique it.

Lewis once wrote that any new book "has to be tested against the great body of Christian thought down the ages" ("On the Reading of Old Books"). Because he himself was steeped in that "great body of Christian thought," he quickly discerned trends that ran counter to it.

But how many of us are familiar with that panorama of Christian ideas "down the ages"? How many know the work of more than a few contemporary writers? How, then, will we stand against the destructive intellectual trends multiplying in our own day?

The problem is not that modern evangelicals are less intelligent than Lewis. As Mark Noll explains in The Scandal of the Evangelical Mind, the problem is that our sharpest intellects have been channeled into biblical scholarship, exegesis, and hermeneutics. While that is a vital enterprise, we rarely give the same scholarly attention to history, literature, politics, philosophy, economics, or the arts. As a result, we are less aware of culture than we should be, less equipped to critique it, less capable of being a redemptive force in our postmodern society.

Yet, in That Hideous Strength, Lewis encourages us not to lose heart: It is never too late. The forces of "Merlin," roused from the tomb, will ultimately be victorious. The best way to celebrate Lewis's one hundredth anniversary is to be at our posts, as he liked to say—with renewed spirits and with probing and informed minds as well.

Lewis predicted a time when those who want to remold human nature "will be armed with the powers of an omniscient state."

Karla Faye's Final Stop • Do Demons Have Zip Codes?

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

JULY 13, 1998

Eyewitness reports of repression and revival

CHINA'S Dynamic CHURCH

US $2.95 CANADA $3.95

AOL Keyword: CT
www.ChristianityToday.net

Shouldn't your church include indigenous missions in its annual missions budget?

Some 6000 indigenous ministries have more than 200,000 missionaries in the field

In most "mission field" countries, they carry out 90% of all pioneer evangelistic work among unreached people groups, even though they have only 10% of the financial support which American missions have. In closed lands such as India, Myanmar (Burma), Vietnam, Iraq, Iran, Communist China, and Cuba they do 100% of the work.

Shouldn't your church have a share in their ministry?

$50 monthly supports a missionary

God has raised up about 6000 indigenous missions worldwide. Half are in countries that are closed to missionaries from the USA. Altogether they have over 200,000 missionaries on the field, most of whom live on $50 per month, or less. Thousands have no support at all. Christian Aid has their names and photographs, and will send one to each sponsor who gives $50 monthly to support a missionary. Many churches support over 100 such missionaries.

Shouldn't your church be supporting some of these missionaries?

Over 500 Bible Institutes

Indigenous missions operate over 500 Bible institutes and missionary training centers. Often their students must go without food, or if they do eat it may be only rice or beans for days at a time. Many Bible institute teachers must work at full time jobs to support themselves and their families, and still teach 30 or 40 hours a week.

Shouldn't your church be helping to provide financial support for indigenous Bible schools?

Transportation needs

Thousands of native missionaries must walk 30 miles a day because they don't have money to buy a bicycle. Hundreds of mission boards with 100 or more missionaries on the field can't get their workers together for conferences, or send leaders to visit them on the field, because they don't have a motor vehicle.

Shouldn't your church be helping to provide bicycles, jeeps and vans for indigenous mission boards and traveling evangelistic teams?

Many needs to meet

Indigenous missions need financial assistance for printing Bibles and literature, Scripture translation, radio and TV broadcasting, care for homeless children, medical clinics, and to provide emergency food and shelter for victims of persecution, typhoons, floods, fires, earthquakes, epidemics, wars and famine caused by drought.

Shouldn't your church be meeting some of these needs among the poorest people on earth?

Christian Aid links U.S. churches with indigenous missionary ministries based in closed countries, and lands of poverty where Christians lack resources. To learn how you can help contact:

Christian Aid
3045 Ivy Road
Charlottesville
VA 22903

804-977-5650 www.christianaid.org
e-mail: info@christianaid.org

1987

RSI CAPITAL STEWARDSHIP
PROGRAM FOR NEW WORSHIP
CENTER

$2.2 Million Raised

1990

RSI DEBT RETIREMENT
PROGRAM

$1.8 Million Raised

1994

RSI CAPITAL STEWARDSHIP
PROGRAM FOR NEW EDUCATIONAL BUILDING

$2.1 Million Raised

1995

RSI ANNUAL BUDGET
PROGRAM

17% Increase in Giving

ONE GOOD PROGRAM LEADS TO ANOTHER.

WHEN IT IS TIME TO BUILD, MOST CHURCHES REALIZE THAT A SINGLE CAPITAL STEWARDSHIP PROGRAM RARELY COVERS ALL OF THEIR EXPANSION COSTS. TO STAY FINANCIALLY RESPONSIBLE, SOME BUILD IN STAGES AND FUND EACH PHASE WITH BACK-TO-BACK CAMPAIGNS.

OTHERS CHOOSE TO BUILD THE ENTIRE PLAN, BORROW THE OUTSTANDING FUNDS, AND CONDUCT MULTIPLE STEWARDSHIP PROGRAMS TO RETIRE REMAINING DEBT.

ACROSS THE UNITED STATES, CHURCHES TRUST RSI. AS THE NATION'S LEADING STEWARDSHIP CONSULTING FIRM, RSI HELPS THEM EXPAND THEIR BUILDINGS, RETIRE DEBTS, AND INCREASE GIVING — NOT JUST ONCE, BUT AGAIN AND AGAIN. CALL TODAY TO LEARN MORE. RSI — A NAME YOU CAN BUILD ON.

RESOURCE SERVICES, INC.

12770 MERIT DRIVE, SUITE 900

DALLAS, TEXAS 75251

800-527-6824

www.rsi-ketchum.com

Good Reasons to Earn Your Degree At Home

Balancing the needs of your ministry with the needs of your family isn't easy. But furthering your ministry through education doesn't have to disrupt your home life. You can study for your bachelor's, master's, or doctorate and still continue your ministry through the external studies program at Trinity.

Trinity College and Seminary allows you to complete your education through a personalized, accelerated degree program without a residency requirement. Our traditional off campus program, along with our virtual campus and optional Regional Seminars, lets you choose the method of study that best fits your responsibilities to your family and your personal educational goals.

Contact an Admissions Counselor for more information.

- B.A., M.A., M.Div., Ph.D., D.Min. in Various Disciplines
- Financial Grants are Available
- Off Campus and On-line Degree Programs
- Accelerated Study
- Regional Seminars Optional
- Accredited by the University of Liverpool, England

800-457-5510

International Academic and Administrative Offices
Newburgh, Indiana, USA

Fax: 812-858-3235

E-mail: 74777.245@compuserve.com

Visit our website! www.trinitysem.edu

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Volume 42, No. 8
July 13, 1998

A Magazine of Evangelical Conviction

FEATURES

30 Cover Story: China's Changing Church

Eyewitnesses report looser regulation, ongoing repression, and booming revival. What does this mixed picture mean for the future? By Timothy C. Morgan

34 China Mission: More than 'Ping-Pong Diplomacy'

NAE president Don Argue calls for engagement, not isolation. Interview by David Neff

40 Playing the Grace Card

Christians hold the key to racial reconciliation—but it won't be popular. By Spencer Perkins

45 Karla Faye's Final Stop

My hometown is the execution capital of the world. By Virginia Stem Owens

51 In the Word: What's Wrong with Spirituality?

The Gospel of Mark's prescription for spiritual sanity. By Eugene H. Peterson

DEPARTMENTS

4 Inside CT: The Journalist in the Sedan Chair

6 Letters

28 Editorials: Lies We've Heard Before: Discerning the Healing Spirit

57 Directions: Do Demons Have Zip Codes?

58 Frederick Mathewes-Green: Whatever Happened to Middle-Class Hypocrisy?

60 Comic Relief: Dear John the Evangelist

65 Highlights: Brimstone for the Broadminded

66 Books: Bad Things Still Happen

70 Arts: What the Hands Reveal

72 Reflections

80 Philip Yancey: Fear and Faith in the Middle East

NEWS

14 West Bank: Persecution Reports Unfounded

14 Israel: Fresh Threat to Religious Freedom Surfaces

16 Medicine: New Research Links Faith, Healing

21 Southern Baptists: Battlefront Moves to State Level

22 Missiology: Uncovering Christianity's Hidden History

24 Fraud: Faithful Lose Millions in Ponzi Scheme

26 Sex Allegations: Megachurch Pastor Quits, Denies Wrongdoing

12 North American Scene

18 World Scene

21

LIFEWAY CHRISTIAN RESOURCES OF THE SBC

David Neff,
Executive Editor

The Journalist in the Sedan Chair

INSIDE CT

I almost went to China this year, but the State Department changed my plans. Just before October's state dinner honoring Chinese President Jiang Zemin, National Association of Evangelicals president Don Argue received an invitation to be one-third of a delegation of American religious leaders to discuss religious policy with political leaders in China. That was fitting, as China had been the focus of debate on the relationship between U.S. foreign policy and religious persecution overseas, and Argue had been a key activist in raising public awareness of persecution.

Argue in turn asked me to be the delegation's scribe. I enthusiastically accepted, but just weeks before the trip, I was disinvented by the State Department. A professional journalist, they said, would make Chinese leaders less than candid.

Instead of my report, we present in this issue an exclusive interview with Argue about the meaning of his three-week trip across the vast land of China and his reading of top government officials there (see p. 34 ff.).

Other recent travelers contributed to Tim Morgan's cover story (p. 30 ff.). Among them is Carol Thiessen, CT's administrative editor. Carol serves on the board of Norwegian Mission Alliance—USA, the American offspring of a Scandinavian agency, which supports a polio rehabilitation center in Jiangsu Province. The facility currently serves about 90 of the 900 children seriously affected by a 1989 polio outbreak.

On a previous trip to China, Carol saw the tourist sights. This May she focused on ministry and conducted a rare two-hour, one-on-one interview with Dr. Han Wenzao, president of the China Christian Council.

Bruce Brander has been traveling since he joined the merchant marine at age 18. Since then he has traveled the world as a journalist and photographer for such organizations as the National Geographic Society and World Vision. Having been almost everywhere else on the globe, Brander visited China for the first time this May with Chinese evangelist George Chen. Brander and Chen traveled to remote areas by modes of transport as common as a truck and as exotic as a sedan chair.

Sociologist Tony Carnes, president of the New York-based Research Institute on Values Changes, studies values shifts in China, Russia, and the U.S. Carnes, who is married to a Chinese-American, says he has fallen in love with village life in rural China and loves to sit around talking with villagers while eating watermelon and spitting out the seeds.

Alex Buchan, the Hong Kong-based Asia bureau chief for Compass Direct News Service, also contributed to our cover story. According to CT's news editors, Buchan's commentary has become a must-read for leaders of Christian ministries working in Asia. CT

CHRISTIANITY TODAY Founded 1956

Senior Editors: George K. Brushaber, Chairman; James I. Packer, Visiting Scholar; Timothy George, Senior Adviser; R. Kent Hughes, Earl F. Palmer, Marianne Meyer Thompson, John D. Woodbridge

Editorial Director Harold L. Myra
Executive Editor David Neff
Managing Editor Michael G. Mauldin
Art Director Carla Sonheim
Associate Editors Richard A. Kauffman
Timothy C. Morgan
Wendy Murray Zoba
Administrative Editor Carol R. Thiessen
Associate News Editor John W. Kennedy
Book Review Editor John Wilson
Assistant Editor Kevin D. Miller
Associate Designer June M. Gunawan
Editorial Residents Mary Cagney
Christine J. Gardner
Editor at Large Philip Yancey
Senior Writer Tim Stafford
Senior News Writer Arthur D. Moore
Arts Editor Karen L. Mulder
Editorial Coordinator Paulette DePaul
Administrative Assistant Lara Badalamenti

Board of Directors: Billy Graham, Chairman; B. Clayton Bell, Sr., Executive Chairman; Harold L. Myra, President; Miriam Adeney, John N. Akers, Jill P. Briscoe, Stephen W. Brown, A. Kenneth Curtis, Susan S. Eames, Robert P. Evans, Eugene B. Habecker, Ben Haden, Pete Hammond, Michael E. Haynes, Oswald C. J. Hoffmann, C. B. Hogue, John A. Huffman, Jr., Edward L. Johnson, Jay L. Kesler, Dennis F. Kinlaw, Jack Modesett, Jr., William W. Pendleton, Robert E. Record, Paul D. Robbins, W. Fred Smith, Jr., Howard S. Williams

Billy Graham, Founder; Carl F. H. Henry, Editor 1956-68; L. Nelson Bell, Executive Editor 1956-73; Harold Lindsey, Editor 1968-78; Kenneth S. Kantzer, Editor 1978-82; V. Gilbert Beers, Editor 1982-85; George K. Brushaber, Executive Editor 1985-91; Terry C. Muck, Executive Editor 1985-90

Contributing Editors: Miriam Adeney, Nigel M. de S. Cameron, Charles W. Colson, James R. Edwards, Nathan O. Hatch, Kenneth A. Myers, Mark A. Noll, Thomas C. Oden, Ben Patterson, David Schiedermayer, David A. Seamands, Howard A. Snyder, John R. W. Stott

Consulting Editors: Paul M. Bassett, Colin Brown, Harold O. J. Brown, Robert E. Cooley, David S. Dockery, William A. Dyrness, Stanley J. Grenz, Christopher A. Hall, Walter C. Kaiser, Jr., Kenneth S. Kantzer, Donald W. McCullough, Alistair E. McGrath, Richard Mouw, Roger E. Olson, Haddon W. Robinson, Stephen A. Seamands, Aida Besançon Spencer, John G. Stackhouse, Jr., Donald A. D. Thorsen, Edwin M. Yamauchi

Corresponding Editors: Tokunboh Adeyemo, V. Elving Anderson, Donald G. Bloesch, Edith L. Blumhofer, Darrell L. Bock, Calvin B. DeWitt, Samuel Escobar, C. Stephen Evans, Ajith Fernando, Richard J. Foster, Vernon Grounds, Allen C. Guelzo, Christopher D. Hancock, Alan F. Harre, Roberta Hestenes, Arthur P. Johnston, Robert K. Johnston, David Livingstone, Paul L. Maier, George M. Marsden, David L. McKenna, Stephen V. Monsma, Leon Morris, Terry C. Muck, Nancy Murphy, Bradley Nassif, Armand M. Nicholi, Jr., Roger Nicole, C. René Padilla, William E. Pannell, Eugene H. Peterson, Richard V. Pierard, Robert C. Roberts, John Rodgers, Vincent Samuel, David P. Scaer, Bruce L. Shelley, Ronald J. Sider, Russell P. Sittler, Elmer L. Towns, Grant Wacker, Robert L. Wilken, J. Rodman Williams

Advisory Editors: Leith Anderson, Myron S. Augsburger, William Bentley Ball, David B. Barrett, Paul W. Brand, Michael Cromartie, Edward G. Dobson, James Engel, George Gallup, Jr., Charles E. Hummel, Diane L. Knippers, Steven T. McFarland, Dean Merrill, Bryant L. Myers, Richard John Neuhaus, Will Norton, Jr., Michael Novak, Matthew Parker, James W. Reapsome, Beth Spring, Joseph M. Stowell, Warren W. Wiersbe

CT CHRISTIANITY TODAY, INC.

Harold L. Myra, President, C.E.O.
Paul D. Robbins, Executive Vice President, C.O.O.
Laurie Powell, Executive Assistant
Harry Genet, Executive Administrator
Keith Stonehocker, Senior Vice President
Harold B. Smith, Corporate Vice President
David Hemstreet, Vicki Howard, John C. LaRue, Jr., Kevin A. Miller, David Neff, Linda Schambach, JoAnn Flanagan, Marshall Shelley, Carol Thompson, Vice Presidents

Advertising: Joyce Bardin, Karen Booker, Joel Carlsen, Lee Cunningham, Heather Dake, Kevin Flanagan, John Grey, Carol Hayes, Daniel Poorman, Kathryn Stephens, Joel Stombres

Circulation/Marketing:
Production: Charlene Perez, Director
Fulfillment: Jo Ann Rosenbaum, Director
Leslee Baron, Norma Bormann, Bradley Dupuy, Heidi Hall, Julie Kaminski, Sherry Kyle, Dianne Lambert, Debra Lane, Jeremy Long, Nancy Nance, Louie P. Parker, Karen Rad, Carol Schaley, Jennifer Stenzel, Elizabeth Tolentino, Bonnie Willman, Joy Windes, Philip Woods

Financial Operations: Terumi Echols, Manager, Cheri Peterson, Credit Manager, Gary Johnson, Sandra Johnson, Judy Van Zanten

Human Resources: Susan Cronk, Manager, Kate Bryant, Bert Davidson, Joanna DeWolf, Philip DiCicco, Lew Radabaugh

Internet Online Services: Judy Gill, Manager, Clayton Anderson, Kathy DePue, Sky Findlay, Wendy Harley, Michelle Hayes, Michael Herman, Elesa Hodges, Todd Watermann, Aaron Welch

Market Research: Cynthia Solter, Manager, Grace Ferroni, Rachel Wetzel, Douglas Zimmerman

Production Services: Cynthia Cronk, Manager, Jeff DiNanno, Ted Gysan, Kelly Johnson, Theresa Phillips, Rebeka Santos, James Smeenge, Les Smith

Special Sales: Becki Bustin, Michael Fister, Rodney Heckler, Lynn Long, John Ramsell

Editorial/Advertising Offices: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gunderson Drive, Carroll Stream, Ill. 60188 630-260-6200; FAX: 630-260-0114. Advertising in CHRISTIANITY TODAY does not necessarily imply editorial endorsement.

Subscription Services: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, P.O. Box 37060, Boone, Iowa 50037-0060. Customer service: 800-999-1704.

Manuscript Policy: Unsolicited manuscripts are not accepted. A query letter must be sent first, describing a proposed manuscript (poetry is not accepted). Unsolicited manuscripts sent without a self-addressed, postage-paid envelope will not be returned.

Permissions: CHRISTIANITY TODAY grants permission for any original article (not a reprint) to be photocopied for use in a local church or classroom, provided no more than 1,000 copies are made, are distributed free, and indicate the source is CHRISTIANITY TODAY.

Australian Agent: MEDIA COM, 14 Eton Road, Keswick 5061, South Australia. United Kingdom Agent: Martin Publishing Co., 63-67 Kingston Road, New Malden, Surrey KT3 3PB, phone 0181-942-9442.

Indexes: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is indexed in Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature; Christian Periodical Index; Religion Index One: Periodicals, Religious and Theological Abstracts; Book Review Index; and Academic Abstracts and Magazine Article Summaries. ISSN 0009-5753. © 1998 CHRISTIANITY TODAY INC.

Christianity Today (ISSN 0009-5753) is published monthly (semi-monthly in April and October), 14 issues per year, by Christianity Today, Inc., 465 Gunderson Drive, Carroll Stream, Ill. 60188. Periodicals postage paid at Carroll Stream, Ill., and additional mailing offices.

Postmaster: Send address changes to Christianity Today, P.O. Box 37060, Boone, Iowa 50037-0060; 1-800-999-1707. GST Registration Number R126028836, Canada Post M. Product Sales Agreement #59536. Printed in U.S.A.

Subscription Rates: Regular subscription price: one year $24.95. Outside U.S. add $8.00 postage prepaid U.S. currency. $2.50 per copy.

Subscription Renewals? Gift Subscriptions? Address Changes? Call toll-free 1-800-999-1704

E-mail: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is available electronically on America Online (keyword: CT); E-mail CHRISTIANITY TODAY at CTedit@aol.com. CT is also on the Web at www.christianitytoday.net. For information on how to enroll in Christianity Online, call 1-800-633-8888.

Last Minute Budget Programs Don't Work Any Better Than The Sermon You Wrote On Saturday Night.

You know it's coming. So don't do to your annual stewardship drive what you wouldn't do to a sermon. This year, plan ahead to guide your congregation in the privilege of giving. RSI gives you three self-led programs to choose from—each one unique, prepackaged, proven, with detailed instructions . . . everything you need to conduct a successful annual budget campaign.

Call RSI today to order your manual, and mark one big project off your list. You can use the extra time to polish your close.

RESOURCE SERVICES, INC.

12770 Merit Drive, Suite 900

Dallas, Texas 75251

800-527-6824

www.rsi-ketchum.com

Mormons and Cultural "Orthodoxy"

There is an important angle missing from your account of the successes of Mormonism, and it points to the abiding need to revive the evangelical mind ["Mormons on the Rise," June 15]. It is true that Mormons have a tough row to hoe in their historical apologetic; that liability is more than compensated for in the power of their philosophical apologetic. One ought to be duly aware of how well Mormon orthodoxy comports to the prevailing cultural "orthodoxy." Evangelicals may smile at a Mormon tradition of stone-peeping, polygamy, and polytheism. However, the materialism in Mormonism and their willingness to conceive of God as a material object makes them very compatible with the materialism of the academy. Mormon belief expresses a very plausible way of holding religion together with current philosophical views of the mind. The universalism, social ethos, and relation of church and state are also, I suggest, very compatible with contemporary liberalism.

Consequently, it may not really be asking a lot for a modern person to become a Mormon. Mormonism has a cultural advantage in holding a modern view of life and potentially satisfying postmodern longings for spirituality. In confronting the success of Mormonism, evangelicals must tackle these fronts—the philosophical and cultural fronts—as well.

John Hartung
Syracuse, N.Y.

Hooray for the Southern Baptists! I wish the rest of us had had the courage and compassion to go to Salt Lake City for our annual meetings. Maybe some will in the years to come. My thanks to the SBC!

Mike Jaskilka
Eugene, Oreg.

After studying growth statistics in Operation World, I have regretfully observed that the Mormons and Jehovah's Witnesses are rapidly outpacing the Muslims and Christians around the world. What is causing this? I believe the Christian faith community is not adequately educating our members (like the Mormon indoctrination). Can you imagine how Christianity would effectively grow if our young people were required to serve two years on the mission field (here or abroad)? The zeal of the Mormons is taking away our thunder! Let's follow our eternal Savior, Jesus Christ, who not only died for our personal sins, but also rose from death to save us from these sins. No other cult leader (Joseph Smith included) can ever hold a candle to the power of Christ. I challenge our churches to train soldiers for Christ.

Dale A. Nyberg
DePere, Wis.

Mormons believe: "what God has said to apostles and prophets in the past is always secondary to what God is saying directly to the apostles and prophets now" (CT, June 15, p. 30). In a way, the Mormons have one up on other Christians. But it is God's style today which is secondary to yesterday. For yesterday and today and forever, the Word of God is relevant. Jesus would be rolling over in his grave, if he were still in it, by the way Scripture "soundeth" so foolish. (Consistently speaketh thou like this for a few months/years and you will see how foolish this bad habit is.)

Mark R. Henninger
Trexlerstown, Pa.

Not-So-Strange Bedfellows?

In his review of John Shelby Spong's newest book, Why Christianity Must Change or Die [Books, June 15], Michael G. Maudlin raises what is perhaps an unintended issue. In the review, he juxtaposes a choice for Bill Hybels's "seeker sensitive" worship style with John Spong's skeptic-sensitive version of Judeo-Christian Faith. Is it merely an accident that these two come up in the same illustration?

It could be argued that since both Spong and Hybels seem to perceive the "felt needs" and present experiences of people to be the determining factor in the church's outreach, then perhaps the two deserve each other's company. Perhaps Schleiermacher is the proud grandfather of both perspectives. Could it not be argued that Hybels's appeal to "felt needs" might eventually lead an individual to Spong's reductio absurdum of the old "I theology"?

Pastor Lawrence L. Isbell
Rensselaer County Lutheran Parish
East Schodack, N.Y.

Maudlin's review uses valuable space to imply that since Bill Hybels has his 15,000 and Spong has a shrinking diocese, Hybels must be right. While Spong by any measure is a heretic, the use of numbers and "success" to help refute him is troubling—especially when this review appears in an issue of CT with a cover showing "Mormons on the Rise." Many Mormons, no doubt, are comforted into believing Mormonism is true because it is bringing aid and comfort to many of the unchurched Sallys Maudlin writes about. Numbers and success were on the side of the fourth-century Arian heretics. Yet "success" seems to be the apologia du jour for many American Christians today. "Successful" Christians today may actually help breed the Spongs of tomorrow by their abandonment or relativizing of doctrines now held only by "fundamentalists." American Christianity must change in this regard or die, eventually.

James M. Kushiner
Chicago, Ill.

Theft by Consent

Your editorial ["Gambling with the Enemy"] and feature article ["None Dare Call It Sin," May 18] on gambling address three major concerns facing Christians in responding to the prevalent climate of moral lawlessness in our culture.

1. Many Christians are as likely as our unbelieving neighbors to fall for the deception of gambling as one of many forms of immediate self-gratification or get-rich-quick schemes. While acknowledging the theoretical validity of the tenth commandment (you shall not covet), we are reluctant to challenge the something-for-nothing mentality that pervades the gambling ethos (and many other areas of economic activity) either as a matter of morality or prudence.

2. Most Christians are unable to articulate ideas of public morality in ways that identify obedience to scriptural teachings with the well-being of our neighbors or our communities. Most of us would acknowledge that good laws are intended to promote the public good—whether in protecting public health or promoting honesty in business dealings. Yet we tend to ignore the fact that the gambling industry is based on theft by consent—aided and abetted by governments who seek to profit from the weaknesses of their citizens.

3. Many Christians and Christian churches preach a gospel of salvation and/or personal peace unconnected to the Savior's command to love our neighbors—in tangible as well as spiritual ways. If we are indifferent to the suffering and loss creat-

"The Bible is full of folklore that's more relevant for my life."

WHAT IF THE BIBLE HAD NEVER BEEN WRITTEN?

D. JAMES KENNEDY
AND JERRY NEWCOMBE

WHAT IF THE BIBLE HAD NEVER BEEN WRITTEN
D. James Kennedy and Jerry Newcombe

When critics question the validity of God's Word, this well-documented and in-depth book can provide the answers. From the Ten Commandments, which many of our laws and governments are based upon, to the Golden Rule, the Bible has set the standard for western civilized culture. There is no doubt the Bible has stood the test of time and influences everyone, in some degree, every day.

ISBN 0-7852-7154-6 $19.99

"I've lost religion. I'm searching for something more."

THE SOUL SEARCH

A Spiritual Journey to Authentic Intimacy
with God

GARY R. COLLINS

THE SOUL SEARCH
Gary R. Collins

Today many are grasping for something new—searching for enlightenment and inner peace. For those on the journey, the author provides a fresh approach to spirituality. He gives an overview of the fascinating, yet deceptive world of alternative medicines, UFOs, Native American spirituality, cult involvement and new age trends. The book sets forth solid biblical insight to help seekers establish a special intimacy with God that only Christianity can provide. ISBN 0-7852-7411-1 $18.99

"I thought success would bring me happiness. What's missing?"

LIVING THE LIFE YOU WERE MEANT TO LIVE

TOM PATERSON

LIVING THE LIFE YOU WERE MEANT TO LIVE
Tom Paterson

Our culture tells us that by setting goals we can achieve whatever we want. But many are not happy with the life they have chosen. This author and international consultant says that God has a plan for our lives, and has built into our beings what we are to do. When we discover His intent and embrace His design, we will begin to live stress-reduced and satisfying lives. This is a book with practical applications and proven processes. ISBN 0-7852-7195-3 $19.99

"Christianity is not for the intelligent thinker."

AN UNCHANGING FAITH IN A CHANGING WORLD

Understanding and Responding to Critical Issues that Christians Face Today

AN UNCHANGING FAITH
IN A CHANGING WORLD
Kenneth D. Boa and
Robert M. Bowman Jr.

This is a manual designed to challenge Christians to reach out to the world around them. The authors target many of the critical issues facing Christians today. From science vs. Scriptures, to the mainstream acceptance of homosexuality and abortion, to explaining why your values are different than others, this book provides a wide-ranging analysis to help you develop a biblically based, up-to-date Christian worldview.

ISBN 0-7852-7352-0 $22.99

Strategies for Today's Battles.

THOMAS NELSON

CELEBRATING 200 YEARS OF HONORING
"GOD AND SERVING PEOPLE"

Available at your local bookstore or call 1-800-231-0444

ed by the gambling industry and its political sponsors, then we will pass along to our children communities that have been morally, socially, and economically impoverished as a result. Just as important, we will have to answer to God for our own indifference.

These principles can also apply to our attitudes to many of the other social evils which beset our communities. But if we are committed to loving and working with our neighbors and not just preaching at them, communities all over Canada and the United States have shown that Christians can make a constructive difference.

*Geoffrey E. Hale
London, Ont., Canada*

After three years of right-to-life work in the Reno area (the greatest moral issue of our nation's history), I concluded that evangelicals really couldn't care less. The system works for them. Like me, they are middle class and prosperous. Few have ever suffered oppression or hardship. If they get involved, it would take effort and the authorities might come and take their place.

Evangelicals draw their lines of protection too close to their own front door. Abortions happen to other people. It doesn't affect us. Gambling is for other people. We can't see how it will affect us. We'll always deal with it too late—when it is so widespread and hits our front door.

This is symptomatic of our prosperous evangelical culture. Why should CT be so surprised that gambling has taken over communities in the Bible Belt? Why should we be so surprised that this is a surprise to them? They don't even know what's in their own Bibles.

Pastor Don Nelson Sparks, Nev.

Your recent articles on gambling are both relevant and timely. They focused on a very important religious issue of the day; however, as closely as I read these articles and interviews, I did not find a biblical explanation for the case against gambling. It is clear that gambling takes a toll on our families and society; but if we are going to make a moral argument, we need to base our reasoning on the Bible.

*A. Vincent Siciliano
San Diego, Calif.*

The spectacle of Christians who have lived for years below the poverty line,

"When my daughter said she was marrying a small group leader, I really had something else in mind."

being attracted by lucrative jobs in the gambling industry is not so surprising. If wealthier Christians saw it as their ministry to follow the example of the early church by establishing labor-intensive industries to employ their poorer brothers and sisters in the faith, their example would go a long way toward reducing the fatal attraction presented by jobs in casinos.

*Gerald Wright
Cambridge, Ont., Canada*

An Ideal Sinner

I found the late hit on former Colorado coach Bill McCartney by jocular journalist and judge Phyllis E. Alsdurf to be a blend of amusement and amazement ["McCartney on the Rebound," May 18]. I don't recall reading or hearing anywhere that McCartney ever professed perfection or its approximation. My read on McCartney is that he has publicly professed specific identifiable sins, a fact that places him far ahead of the priapic president of the United States—not to mention Alsdurf herself or even me. One is forced to wonder what Alsdurf's ideal penitent alcoholic and adulterer would be. While I would agree that forsaking the glories of football, fabulous femme fatales, and $350,000 a year to spend more time with his wife is not a living end in reformation repentance, it ain't really a bad spiritual preseason.

McCartney strikes me as one of Martin Luther's ideal sinners. And just think, if this old hypocrite can get grown men to stop their drinking and doinking in his current condition, think how God might be able to use him when he gets serious about his faith!

James Lutzweiler Jamestown, N.C.

Christianity today is tragically and realistically portrayed in your cover article on Bill McCartney. A seven-year-old boy bargains with his god for a wallet and is increasingly convinced this is the best way to stop smoking, drinking, fornication, racism, and so on.

Evangelical leadership shows little interest in teaching McCartney that his "zeal for God is not based on knowledge" (Rom. 10:2). Instead, they join him in the stadium crying out as did the Israelites: "We will obey" (Exod. 24:7).

Is not Scripture painfully clear in revealing to us that we have neither obeyed nor kept our promises? Surely the visible church is being given a veil of deception because they do not love that Truth, nor do they really love that one and only Promise Keeper who came to die because of our wretched failure.

*Carol K. Tharp
Winnetka, Ill.*

I was at the Detroit Promise Keepers with more than 70,000 men, and I too was very surprised that less than 1 percent were black. The ones we have to fear are the non-churchgoers, whether black or white.

Perhaps if we visited one another's church more, the black preacher would come off his political agenda with habitual cries of discrimination, and the whites would get rid of their racist suspicions in their antiseptic surroundings.

*Paul L. Liberty
Toledo, Ohio*

It is more the approach to reconciliation than the need for reconciliation that invokes my lack of enthusiasm. We need be sensitized to current and future opportunities to live and work in harmony and share each other's burdens in Christian love. Promise Keepers could lead by suggesting promises we should consider, make, and live so that reconciliation becomes the natural outcome. Hope they fine-tune the subject.

*David C. Horneys
Mt. Prospect, Ill.*

Loving the Colombians

I read the article "Colombia's Bleeding Church" just days after returning from the funeral of my sister's husband, Charles Hood. Charley and Becky, along with their two children have been International Mission Board (SBC) missionaries to Bogotá, Colombia for ten years. Charley was struck down by an assassin's bullet on April 21 [CT, June 15, 1998, p. 19].

While the article was particularly poignant for me in light of the tragic circumstances, it brought to mind the reason

*Words of wisdom
from the pulpit.*

*Words of wisdom
from the lunch table.*

In the intimate mountain setting of The Cove, you'll hear some of the great inspirational Christian speakers of our time. You might even get a chance to ask a follow-up question or two over lunch or coffee. Now that's Christian fellowship.

The Cove

Billy Graham Training Center At The Cove • www.thecove.org • 1-800-950-2092

Charley and all other missionaries are there in the first place: They love the people.

My initial reaction to Charley's death was shock mixed with bitterness and resentment against a nation of people whose violent culture would allow this to happen and a hapless military government that seems paralyzed to change it. But, as my sister gently reminded us, "It was not a Colombian who shot Charley, it was a human being who happened to live in Colombia."

Gary Harvey
Cookeville, Tenn.

Understanding Wolf-Spector

■ I believe there is a critical misunderstanding about the Wolf-Spector Bill on religious persecution (May 18).

Wolf-Spector does not allow someone who merely claims to be a member of a persecuted group to enter the U.S. immediately, as James Robb suggests. In 1996, Congress passed an "expedited removal" law that allows the INS to immediately turn back asylum-seekers if they are not able to make a credible claim of fear on the spot. What Wolf-Spector does is recognize that asylum-seekers are often traumatized by the persecution they have just been through (often at the hands of their government officials), and have difficulty expressing their fear to uniformed government officials as soon as they arrive. The bill does not allow such a person access to the U.S., but merely guarantees that if they belong to a persecuted group (as identified by the State Department), they will be allowed to apply for asylum.

More disturbing is Robb's prediction that this asylum provision will empty many Middle Eastern countries of Christians in a few decades. The implication is that Christians suffering persecution should stay where they are and not flee. Those of us who enjoy religious freedom in this country should not presume to know what is best for our brothers and sisters suffering persecution at the hands of intolerant regimes. With 50 years of experience in refugee assistance and as the only evangelical agency authorized by the State Department to resettle refugees in this country, World Relief believes the decision to flee ought to be made by those suffering persecution. Wolf-Spector gives them the opportunity to at least ask for asylum.

Lonni Jackson
World Relief
Alexandria, Va.

Where Are the Women?

■ I am amazed! Not one of 1998's best books was authored by a woman ["1998

Book Awards, Apr. 27]—a significant, though not very positive, observation. I could conclude that women don't write, or maybe they don't write in a valuable way. But recently I've noticed that a high percentage of CT's articles—and some outstanding ones at that—have been written by women. So maybe women just don't write worthy books. I wonder how many of the 200 nominated books were written by women. I also wonder how many ballots were sent to women. Lastly, I wonder why the book review editor didn't notice that the absence of the female voice was an additional weakness to the weaknesses he already identified in this year's book list.

Scottie May
West Chicago, Ill.

God's Answer to Prayer Life

With regard to the article "The Myth of a Better Prayer Life," by Susan Wise Bauer [Apr. 27]: Why do we always think we are going to find the answers in books written by man, when God has written his own Book, and all the answers are there? I've told people that prayer is hard work for me. It's a struggle. And I've been piously told that it shouldn't be like that. So I was excited to read once that C. S. Lewis felt the same way about prayer. But the wonderful thing is, God created us as very unique creatures, and we need to respond to him in our own ways—through our own personalities—and how it is most meaningful to us. We don't need books. He's given us the ultimate—his own Word.

Nancy Holmstrom
Gladstone, Mich.

■ Bauer stopped one short in her search for a good book on prayer. Creative Prayer, by Brigid E. Herman, was written at the turn of the century and recently republished by Paraclete Press. It's the best I've read since Prayer, by O. Hallesby. The emphasis is on God, not me, nor about power nor getting what I want, but about deepening my relationship with God.

Bernice Karnop
Great Falls, Mont.

More Agreement Than Exists?

"The Gift of Salvation" [Dec. 8, 1997] was supposed to clarify deficiencies of the original statement [from Evangelicals and Catholics Together] on the issue of justification. Instead, it appears that we have another ambiguous document, requiring subsequent "clarifying" statements from various signers that contradict each other. To illustrate, one needs only to read the article in the April 27 issue of CT that quoted Jesuit scholar Avery Dulles as saying "The Gift of Salvation" is true to the Council of Trent. In the same issue of CT, Timothy George, J. I. Packer, and Thomas Oden issued an open letter stating that "The Gift of Salvation" confirmed the Reformation doctrine of justification by faith alone. I fail to understand how the statement can do both.

Meaningful analysis and discussion among evangelicals on the issue of justification by faith alone and its importance relative to the message of the gospel is sorely needed. While the "Gift of Salvation" has the appearance of supporting the doctrine of "justification by faith alone," it readily admits that it does not address the necessarily related issues of merit, works, the sacrament of penitence, purgatory, and so on. Additionally, based on the comment noted above from Avery Dulles, I am led to believe that its wording has been carefully crafted such that most readers will be given the impression that there is more agreement than actually exists. Thus, I am convinced that this statement will confuse its readers as to what issues are essential to the gospel. That is a dangerous effect.

Gary G. Nichols
Trussville, Ala.

Although there is reason to be thankful that a segment of Roman Catholics believe the "biblical teaching . . . that salvation or justification is on condition of faith and only faith," it hardly seems reasonable, logical, or wise to speak of ECT when relatively few Catholics adhere to things that are supposed to bring evangelicals and Catholics "together."

Better would it be to speak of and work for ET! This would open the door for "evangelicals" not only in the Roman Catholic and Protestant traditions to be together, but also for evangelicals in the Russian Orthodox and Greek Orthodox churches as well as evangelicals in other church bodies to join hand and heart on the foundation of a basic biblical and evangelical doctrine.

Ralph H. Isensee
Vancouver, Wash.

Brief letters are welcome. They may be edited for space and clarity and must include the writer's name and address if intended for publication. Due to the volume of mail, we cannot respond personally to individual letters. Write to Eutychus, CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188; fax: 630/260-0114. E-mail: ctedit@aol.com (✉).

ADONAI

TOUCH THE HEART OF ISRAEL AND BE TOUCHED BY THE HEART OF GOD

ADONAI is a powerful journey of worship, weaving English and Hebrew into a tapestry of messianic praise. With Israeli artists, ancient sounds, modern world music, and historical recordings you will find a striking and moving experience as you celebrate with Israel's believers.

CELEBRATE
ISRAEL'S 50TH YEAR JUBILEE WITH ADONAI.

For a Christian bookstore nearest you, call 1-800-991-7747.
In Canada, call Christian Marketing Canada at 1-800-387-6950.

SEXUAL ABUSE

Church Nearly Closed After Lawsuit

Redeemer Lutheran church in Duluth, Minnesota, will not have to sell its building to satisfy a civil lawsuit judgment awarded to a former member for sexual abuse committed by a former pastor.

In April 1994, a Duluth jury found Redeemer, its leaders, and former pastor Daniel Reeb liable for sexual abuse that David Samarzia suffered from the ages of 11 to 14 in the late 1960s. The Minnesota Court of Appeals and the Minnesota Supreme Court upheld Samarzia's $644,000 award.

Samarzia, now 44, says he began drinking and attempted suicide before getting counseling that helped him understand how he had been victimized. He sued in 1991.

Praying precedes paying: Before the auction, Graeme Wick, a 44-year Redeemer Lutheran member, tacks up a prayer outside the church asking God for strength and understanding.

Reeb, 63, served as pastor of the Lutheran Church—Missouri Synod congregation from 1961 to 1979. Three other men abused by Reeb filed suit after Samarzia and settled out of court with the church's insurance company. By then the statutory period for criminal charges had expired. Reeb was fired as pastor of a church in the Bahamas in 1994 after the Samarzia verdict.

An auction of the contents of the church had been set for late May to satisfy the judgment, but Samarzia offered to stop the process and halve the amount owed if the church apologized.

Samarzia let the church keep the contents after an apology.

The church's insurance company paid $215,000 to Samarzia, who accepted a promise by the 80-member congregation to pay him a reduced judgment of $204,000. Of that total, an anonymous donor pledged $100,000 to help keep the church open.

By Willmar Thorkelson.

Market Gobbles Up Veggie Tales

Bob the Tomato and Larry the Cucumber, the computer-animated stars of the Veggie Tales children's video series, have sold 3 million units with titles such as Josh and the Big Wall and Rack, Shack, & Benny since their 1993 debut.

Bob and Larry have also spawned a merchandising explosion. Their colorful images now appear on hats, neckties, games, puzzles, and stationery.

Two "Veggie Tales" episodes are now selling in general merchandise outlets such as Wal-Mart, Kmart, and Target and have become two of the nation's ten bestselling children's videos. In May, Where's God When I'm Scared? climbed ahead of all other children's videos except Sesame Street's Elmopalooza.

URBAN MINISTRY

One-Year Mission Changes Lives

Young graduates from high school and college are giving one year of their time to urban mission through a new program.

The Philadelphia-based Evangelical Association for the Promotion of Education operates Kingdomworks, which is completing its inaugural "Mission Year" program for urban missionaries between the ages of 18 and 29. The organization is led by sociologist Tony Campolo.

Since September, 15 missionaries have served in Philadelphia and 13 in Oakland, California. They live together—usually in teams of five—and work under the tutelage of an established urban church. Missionaries raise $500 in monthly support, with the ministry giving an additional $200.

At least 8 hours a week, they work in church programs, at least 10 hours in evangelistic outreach and visitation, and at least 12 hours in community service under the auspices of an organization they choose based on their interests and abilities. Mission Year workers are teaching computer classes, leading prison Bible studies, painting murals to beautify inner-city neighborhoods, and instructing young people about job skills. They work closely with church members so that the programs and services can continue well after the missionaries leave.

"This is a far better design than a summer program," says

Vince Coles, youth minister at the mostly black, 2,700-member Mount Carmel Baptist Church in West Philadelphia, host to five missionaries. "When someone is here for just the summer, the programs they start usually leave when they leave." The goal of Mission Year, however, is not just to change urban dwellers for a year, but to change young men and women for a lifetime. Mission Year National Director Cindy Lee Hauger says, "Wherever they go, these people will understand urban reality in a new way."

Missionary Betsy Vanderhaagen, 23, had planned to attend Princeton Seminary

Learning experience: Betsy Vanderhaagen teaches third graders at Timothy Academy in North Philadelphia.

after graduating from Calvin College last year. She will follow through with those plans this fall, but a year's missionary experience has reshaped her thinking. "This program has caused me to examine all aspects of my life," Vanderhaagen says. "I've learned to live in community, to love others, to live with less, and to trust God more."

By Randy Frame in Philadelphia.

DAVID SKIDMORE

Communion seekers: ELCA Presiding Bishop H. George Anderson (left) confers with Martin Marty and Episcopal Bishop Herbert Donovan at a meeting in Chicago.

Lutherans, Episcopalians Revive Talks

In a new step toward the "ecumenical opportunity of the century," the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA) has released a revised proposal calling for full communion with the Episcopal Church.

Emphasizing unity but not merger, "Called to Common Mission" replaces the Concordat of Agreement (CT, Apr. 7, 1997, p. 55), a document narrowly defeated by the ELCA last year (CT, Oct. 6, 1997, p. 61).

The revised draft affirms

the "historic episcopate," acknowledging the apostolic succession of bishops as a link to the early Christian church.

Unlike the concordat, the new proposal eliminates the mandate that three Episcopal bishops participate in the ordination of Lutheran bishops, but it keeps the requirement that only bishops can ordain pastors.

Currently, a Lutheran bishop can authorize a pastor to perform the installation and consecration. CT

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

House Rejects Prayer Amendment

The Religious Freedom Amendment, sponsored by Rep. Ernest Istook (R.-Okla.), lost 224 to 203 in a House vote on June 4, 61 votes short of the two-thirds majority needed to pass. The proposed measure, supported by 197 Republicans and 27 Democrats, would have allowed religious expression in schools, including organized prayers (CT, Apr. 27, 1998, p. 15).

Opponents say it politicizes religion, allowing majority faiths to rule. "It should have been called the 'Religious Tyranny Amendment,'" says James Dunn, executive director of the Baptist Joint Committee. "We'd have Mormon prayers in Utah, Baptist prayers in Atlanta, Buddhist prayers in Hawaii, and Islamic prayers in south Bronx."

Some critics view the vote as a lobbying tactic by the Christian Coalition to obtain a voting record for their 45 million voter guides to be distributed this fall. Lawmakers who voted against the measure will be listed unfairly as against God and prayer, says Dunn.

Christian Coalition executive director Randy Tate says the vote is a "launching pad" for future legislative efforts to protect religious liberty. "Prayer and the expression of one's faith is part of the solution, not the problem."

By Christy Gardner.

News Briefs

◆ Priscilla Deters was sentenced to eleven years and three months in federal prison on May 22 following her conviction on wire- and mail-fraud charges. Deters had been found guilty in a church-fraud scheme that took more than $6 million from victims, principally members of evangelical Friends and Nazarene churches in 21 states (CT, Apr. 27, 1998, p. 19). Judge Monti Belot pronounced the maximum sentence allowed by law. "There's nothing lower in my opinion than people who use religion to cheat other people," Belot said.

◆ Detroit lawyer and entrepreneur Mike Timmis is the new chair of Prison Fellowship International, the world's largest volunteer criminal-justice ministry. Timmis, a 58-year-old Roman Catholic, cofounded the Talon Corporation, a holding company. He will coordinate Prison Fellowship activities in 83 countries. He replaces founder Charles Colson, 66, who remains on the Prison Fellowship International board and will still be chair of the U.S.-based Prison Fellowship Ministries. "I have never met a man with a greater passion to win people to Jesus," Colson says of Timmis.

◆ Last month, the largest U.S. Christian retail chain, Family Christian Stores, based in Grand Rapids, Michigan, completed the purchase of the 56-store Joshua's Christian Stores retail chain, based in Fort Worth. Family Christian Stores, which now has 270 stores in 35 states, recorded sales of $168 million last year.

◆ Sue Misheff, 47, a tenured assistant professor of English at Malone College in Canton, Ohio, has agreed to resign because of her conversion to Judaism. Misheff, a former Methodist, began teaching at Malone in 1989. She had signed the school's statement of faith requiring her to "recognize Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior." The college has agreed to a severance package of one year's salary and full benefits.

◆ Campus Crusade for Christ is proceeding with the construction of a $48 million World Center in Orlando, Florida, (CT, Oct. 6, 1997, p. 84) despite the withdrawal of a pledge of $5 million from an anonymous donor. Spokesperson Jay Berlinsky says Campus Crusade is "confident that our many friends around the world will assist us in the completion" of the new headquarters.

◆ STOPP International, founded by Jim Sedlak in 1986 to counter the activities of Planned Parenthood, has become part of American Life League (ALL), a pro-life organization. Sedlak becomes ALL's vice president of public policy and education.

◆ George Fox University president Edward Stevens died May 21 at age 57. He had been on medical leave after suffering a stroke caused by a cancerous brain tumor (CT, Dec. 8, 1997, p. 63). During Stevens's 14 years as president, the enrollment of the school in Newberg, Oregon, more than quadrupled to 2,225 students. It became a university in 1996 by merging with Western Evangelical Seminary.

◆ Paul Risser, 59, is the new president of the International Church of the Foursquare Gospel. Risser succeeds John Holland, 64, who resigned in July 1997. The denomination, founded by Aimee Semple McPherson in 1927, has more than 2.2 million members in 91 countries. CT

Timmis

Stevens

Risser

Persecution Propaganda?

U.S. team finds that Arab Christians are subject to discrimination, but not life-threatening persecution.

Recent reports from the Israeli government and news media say the Palestinian National Authority (PA) and Muslim extremists are targeting Arab Christians for discrimination and persecution.

Yet a group of Christian leaders who completed an inquiry into religious persecution in the West Bank and Gaza say the charges are false, representing an attempt to sow division among Christians and Muslims who live in PA-controlled areas.

Uri Mor, director of the Israeli Ministry of Religious Affairs in the Department for Christian Communities, is adamant that Muslims are persecuting Christians. "It's a matter of fact," he says. To document the reports of persecution, Israeli television in May ran a special on Muslim persecution of Christians.

Two Christian Zionist organizations in Jerusalem have backed up Mor's assessment. Clarence Wagner, president of Bridges for Peace, says the PA is largely responsible for growing persecution, primarily targeted at Christian converts from Islam.

A recent article in Middle East Digest, a publication of the International Christian Embassy-Jerusalem (ICEJ), tells about Muslim converts to Christianity who have been persecuted for their faith and are frightened to return home under PA rule. The article quotes Yassir Arafat's legal adviser Ziad abu Ziad as saying Muslims who publicly convert and refuse to return to Islam violate their religion and are at risk of execution. Representatives from ICEJ say that the PA, as a Muslim government, has ordered the execution of converts to Christianity. But no such executions are known to have occurred.

Cultural exchange: Brother Andrew (left) hears a report from Emil Salayta.

AMERICANS INVESTIGATE: In May, a group of Americans, associated with Open Doors with Brother Andrew and Evangelicals for Middle East Understanding (EMEUE), toured the West Bank, Gaza, and Israel to investigate the charges.

After meetings with more than 15 Palestinian Christian leaders, they found no evidence to substantiate claims of systematic persecution.

"If Christians are being persecuted for their faith, then we wanted to document it and do all we could to stop it," says Donald Wagner, executive director of EMEUE. "What we found instead was an intense desire for harmony among both Christians and Muslims from Galilee to Gaza. There is a handful of very isolated, personal incidents, but no indication of an anti-Christian tide rising."

"There is no persecution," says Jiryus Khouri, mayor of the Christian village Fasula. "But there is real tension between Christians, Muslims, and Jews." Reports distributed recently by the Palestinian Human Rights Monitor and LAW—the Palestinian Society for the Protection of Human Rights and the Environment—reached similar conclusions.

CULTURAL CONDITIONING? Human-rights lawyer Jonathan Kuttub told the team from EMEUE and Open Doors that religion in the Middle East has strong tribal and ethnic components. By law, residents are born into the religion of their parents. Conversion and proselytizing are widely discouraged.

Emil Salayta, a Latin Catholic priest in the West Bank village of Bir Zeit, explains that the family considers it an insult when one of their own converts. "It's family honor," he says. Christians who convert to Islam may be harassed or abused by their Christian family. The Qur'an says converts

New Bill Threatens Freedom of Speech, Religion

The battle for religious freedom in Israel is heating up again—and the stakes are higher. Israeli believers barely had time to sigh in relief over the apparent demise of one "antimissionary" bill (CT, May 18, 1998, p. 22) before another, far more punitive bill was introduced—this time with the initial support of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and his cabinet.

The current round began in January 1997 when an antimissionary bill was introduced in the Knesset that would have made publishing, possessing, or distributing "missionary materials" a crime, punishable by up to a year in prison. Although similar bills had been introduced in the past by ultra-Orthodox members of the Knesset (MKs), they were generally considered to have little chance of passing. But this bill was different: it was cosponsored by MK Nissim Zivli of the Left-leaning Labor party and sailed through its first Knesset reading with a comfortable bipartisan majority.

Israeli believers breathed a sigh of relief when Zivli withdrew his support for the bill in response to continued protests from around the world. But the celebrations were premature: within three weeks, a new antimissionary bill was introduced by MK Raphael Pinchasi of the Orthodox Shas party. To the dismay of the bill's opponents, the entire cabinet—including Netanyahu—voted for the bill, which provides for a maximum three-year prison term or $13,800 fine for offenders, in its first reading.

Reaction has been swift, both in Israel and abroad. Chuck Kopp, president of the United Council of Churches in Israel, called Netanyahu's vote "absolutely contrary to his written commitment to Christian leaders that he would oppose such legislation." During the controversy over the earlier bill, Netanyahu stressed that it did not have the support of his government, and he would work against any such legislation.

By S. Aaron Osborne in Jerusalem.

should be executed, Salayta points out, but that is not happening. "There is no organized religious persecution in this country," he says. "I was shocked to hear about the PA's [reported] persecution of Christians. It is not a fact."

The investigation by LAW, a group often critical of the PA, uncovered "no evidence of systematic persecution, or even of a general hostility toward Christians on the part of the Palestinian Authority." LAW found a group of "marginalized, troubled people, with various pre-existing problems within their various communities, with no evidence that their problems with local security services were based solely upon their faith, or that they suffered from an overall policy of persecution for their faith."

Khader Shkenat, director of the Palestinian Society for the Protection of Human Rights, says his own research led him to similar conclusions. Christians may suffer mistreatment for nonreligious reasons. Although the PA has committed human-rights violations, LAW could find no overt campaign by the PA to abuse Christians or Christian converts.

The LAW report concludes: "Claims of persecutions, couched as they are in the terminology of human rights, have gained a currency in Israel and abroad that outweighs the evidence that supports them."

COOPERATION DESPITE TENSION:

Regardless of actual cases of harassment and abuse, Palestinian Christians are eager to share examples of Muslim-Christian cooperation. Elias Chacour, a Melkite Catholic priest, says his Prophet Elias School in Galilee, where nearly 3,000 Muslims, Christians, and Jews learn together, demonstrates that peaceful cooperation can be a reality.

In Gaza, Manuel Musallam, a Latin priest, says that both Christian and Muslim Palestinians are on the same side in the struggle for "our existence in the land."

In one area of Gaza, an Orthodox church and mosque share the same wall. "We are like brothers," Maher Ayad, a Baptist pastor in Gaza, says of Christians and Muslims. "We live in the same land."

Palestinian Christian Claudette Habesch agrees. "We are one people," she says. "We share joys. We share suffering."

Many Arab Christians in the West Bank strongly assert that their main concern at present is the lack of progress in the peace talks with Israel and the day-to-day hardships they experience in having poor access to quality employment, education, and health care.

By Peri Stone in Jerusalem.

Trying to Fund Your Study Leave?

Through its SGRL program, the Louisville Institute seeks to assist promising American religious leaders. These study grants enable you to set aside one to three months from your ministerial position to reflect on the contemporary challenges facing American religious institutions and their leaders.

Applicants, such as pastors, church staff members, or denominational or diocesan officials, should be employed full time in recognized positions of leadership in religious institutions in North America.

Study Grants for Religious Leaders Louisville Institute

A Lilly Endowment Program for the Study of American Religion based at Louisville Seminary

Louisville Institute
1044 Alta Vista Road
Louisville, KY 40205-1798
Application Deadline: September 15

Phone: 502 895-3411
FAX: 502 894-2286
www.louisville-institute.org
E-mail: info@louisville-institute.org

THE DIGITAL HYMNAL

NEW VERSION CP

Now With Acoustic Grand Piano Plus Over 650 New Titles Previously Unavailable

- Instantly plays thousands of new praise and worship music, contemporary selections, traditional hymns, gospel favorites, kid's titles plus wedding, graduation and memorial selections - already stored inside - and indexed to page numbers of popular hymn books
- Acoustic grand piano, pipe organs, choir, strings and brass plus other exciting instruments already stored inside for instant use
- You choose the key, number of verses and style
- Completely self contained - no costly keyboards or disks needed
- Includes remote control and built-in speakers, or use PA system - CD quality sound
- Rechargeable NiCad battery available
- Pre-program an entire service in memory mode

Ask for cassette demo, master list of song titles and color brochure

 Gulbrandsen, Inc.
800-677-7374

- CONGREGATIONAL SINGING
- OUTDOOR MEETINGS
- HOME USE
- SOLOS AND CHOIR REHEARSAL

2102 Hancock Street, San Diego, CA 92110 • FAX: 619-296-7157

Winding Paths Meet

Healing and faith find a connection.

Losing Our VIRTUE

*Why the Church
Must Recover
Its Moral Vision*

DAVID F. WELLS

"David Wells travels far and wide in the fields of cultural criticism to bring back a blunt ultimatum for contemporary evangelicals: 'Face up to the moral challenge of modernity or lose your integrity.' The future of our tradition depends on our answer to his warning." — OS GUINNESS

"Too many in Christ's family are preoccupied with 'reforming' culture instead of being transformed by the renewing of their minds. Wells puts the kingdoms back in their proper order and challenges believers not only to take the Lord's instructions seriously, but to do so especially in those areas that might make them feel uncomfortable." — CAL THOMAS

"Scholarly, readable, and thought-provoking options for the twenty-first century are laid out in terms that are unambiguous and bold." — D. JAMES KENNEDY

ISBN 0-8028-3827-8

- 240 pages
- Hardcover
- $25.00

At your bookstore, or call 1-800-253-7521
FAX: 616-459-6540
E-mail: sales@eerdmans.com

8080  Wm. B. EERDMANS
PUBLISHING CO.
255 JEFFERSON AVE. S.E. / GRAND RAPIDS, MI 49503

Increasing evidence that faith and prayer help patients heal is encouraging a once unimaginable partnership between medical science and religion.

As the nation flirts with alternative cures—from herbs to tai chi—doctors, scientists, and clergy are exploring how religion and spirituality facilitate physical health and emotional well-being. Influential people and institutions are studying connections between the two in a trend dating back more than a decade. What is changing, the experts say, is that clinical findings are finally being shared with family physicians and local pastors.

"For a long time, we've been exploring and researching the relationship between belief and healing as a complement, not an alternative, to traditional medicine," says Herbert Benson, director of the Spirituality and Healing in Medicine course. The course, offered at a regional three-day conference sponsored by Harvard Medical School's Department of Continuing Education, recently attracted more than 600 doctors, nurses, psychologists, and social workers to the Institute of Religion at Houston's Texas Medical Center. They came for training in how spirituality shapes general health and the ability to recover from serious illness.

In this, the fourth year of such regional seminars, it is clear there is a growing emphasis on listening to—and understanding—a patient's faith as a significant factor in a person's healing. As physicians have discovered the healing power of prayer (CT, Jan. 6, 1997, p. 20), more than thirty of the nation's top medical schools now offer teaching programs on the subject, compared to only three in 1993.

TREATING THE WHOLE PERSON: That factor underscores a major shift within academic medicine to train doctors in the treatment of "the whole person—body, mind, and spirit," says David Larson, president of the National Institute for Healthcare Research.

Working with the John Templeton Foundation, the institute last summer announced that eight medical schools had been granted funds to study how social and religious factors influence mental and physical health. The intersection of faith and medicine is one of the key concerns of the foundation, founded in 1997.

"People's faith has a very strong influence over their well-being, their willingness to fight disease, and their ability to get well," says pediatric surgeon John Templeton, Jr., the foundation's president and son of its founder. He emphasizes that, until recently, the medical community too often overlooked faith's role in health.

"Most physicians have been trained primarily in empirical science, chemical formulas, and surgical technique," Templeton says. "In the process, we have created a great divide. We separated the mind from the body. As a result, in some cases, we have lost touch with our patients."

New clinical studies support Templeton's and Larson's contentions. Advocates say they provide more than anecdotal evidence that faith plays a major role in physical health.

Religious leaders insist medicine is finally returning to faith, once its partner in healing. They point to the biblical tradition in which Jesus and his apostles laid hands on the infirm and to the church's tradition of healing by faith.

GETTING THE MESSAGE: The nation's medical schools and its physicians may finally be listening. Two recent surveys of health professionals found 99 percent of family physicians and 94 percent of executives with health maintenance organizations believe that spiritual practices including prayer and meditation accelerate healing.

More than half the doctors surveyed reported they now weave relaxation and meditation—or what scholars call mind/body techniques—into a balanced program for their patients.

While it remains unclear whether all the discussion will translate into ongoing change in general medical practice, the Harvard-sponsored conferences are but one facet of a growing movement to bridge the gap between the pew and the operating room. Some techniques are questionable, but many leading advocates come from traditional medical backgrounds.

Benson believes the results have far-reaching implications, because incorporating belief and spirituality into modern medicine "has the potential to reduce the cost of health care for individuals and society."

By Cecile S. Holmes in Houston.

John Brown University Proudly Introduces Dr. Gary Oliver and The Center for Marriage and Family Studies

Dr. Gary Oliver

The Executive Director of John Brown University's new Center for Marriage and Family Studies is Dr. Gary Oliver. Dr. Oliver is a husband, father, lecturer, seminary professor, psychologist and clinical director with over 30 years of experience in strengthening family relationships across the country and has had an extensive nationwide teaching ministry.

The master's degree program in Marriage and Family Therapy will produce licensed counselors. Personal lives of individuals will be healed and strengthened.

In addition to its graduate students, the Center for Marriage and Family Studies will benefit undergraduates, who will be better equipped to build and sustain healthy relationships.

Individuals, couples and families will benefit from professional counseling services made available through the Center for Marriage and Family Studies.

The Center will be a source of quality Christian counselors who will be equipped to serve in communities and churches across the nation. In addition, the Center will be a valuable source of information to further the advance of marriage and family studies.

Counseling Clinic

Center for Marriage and Family Studies
JOHN BROWN UNIVERSITY

Graduate Degree

The Center for Marriage and Family Studies will provide biblical, enriching events for couples and churches across the nation. These will include retreats, seminars, and lectures on marriage and family issues by nationally recognized authorities. Pastors and lay ministers will also benefit greatly from the tools and training the Center for Marriage and Family Studies will offer.

Educational Opportunities

Now accepting enrollment applications in undergraduate and graduate studies in marriage and family therapy.
For more information call 1-800-634-6969 or see us on the web at www.jbu.edu

NORTHERN IRELAND

Vote for Peace No Panacea

Despite the overwhelming vote in favor of the peace agreement in Northern Ireland on May 22, many problems remain. Religious leaders are concerned about issues such as the decommissioning of arms, the release of paramilitary prisoners, and the marching season.

All the main churches in northern and southern Ireland supported the peace agreement. Overall, 94 percent of the voters in the south approved the plan along with 71 percent in the north.

Belfast pastors Ken Newell of Fitzroy Presbyterian Church and Charles Kenny of Saint Ann's Anglican Cathedral organized 150 clergy in supporting the referendum. "The agreement offers an opportunity for a new beginning for our society," the clergy said.

"It's a resurrection day for the community after 30 years of suffering and crucifixion," Newell said of the vote's outcome.

But Newell and other leaders warn that the path ahead will not be easy even though there is a desire for healing. "It's difficult after being divided for 300 years to make decisions on a cross-community basis," he says.

Catholic Tom Kelly, a former Irish Republican Army terrorist, hopes to help in the rebuilding process by holding meetings with Protestant Jim Tate, a former Ulster Volunteer Force paramilitary. "There's a recognition even in the major paramilitary organizations that nobody was going to win," Kelly says.

Landmark vote: Sinn Féin leader Gerry Adams goes to cast his ballot in Belfast.

Still, David Porter, director of Evangelical Contribution on Northern Ireland, says voting on the agreement is not the same as the will to make peace. "You are not going to move from suspicion to trust in one vote," Porter says. "There is a lot of potential for breakdown." Among the most potentially divisive issues is the marching season, which normally starts in mid-June, ending in July. These historic Protestant parades have triggered violence in the past, especially when Protestant groups marched through Catholic areas.

"If trust can't be built, then the political structures in the agreement won't work," Porter says. "I see the future as a very long, difficult road to find a way for people to live together."

By Mary Cagney.

INDONESIA

Riots Traumatize Chinese Christians

Terrified by May riots in the capital, Jakarta, that left nearly 2,000 dead and more than 4,000 shops and homes looted or burned, Indonesia's 3 million ethnic Chinese Christians remain traumatized and ready to flee if the situation worsens.

Iman Santoso, leader of a national prayer network, warns that "Chinese, including Christians, feel angry, violated, and betrayed by the recent events, but the church is uniting through the suffering, and we must get ready for more persecutions ahead."

Protesters calling for the resignation of President Suharto (who stepped down May 21) began to blame the economic woes of the country on the Chinese, who form only 3 percent of Indonesia's 200 million people but are disproportionately successful. "We were made the scapegoats," says Christian and Missionary Alliance pastor Hardi Farianto, who saw 10 percent of his 300-member congregation flee.

The rioters were thorough. "They took everything, right down to our knives, forks, and spoons," says one Chinese Christian.

They were also cruel. The human-rights commission has documented more than 100 cases of rape and sexual assault of Chinese females ranging from ages 10 to 55 during the height of the riots May 13-15 in Jakarta. Some women who had been repeatedly gang-raped were thrown into burning buildings that had been set afire by gasoline. Other women, humiliated by the attacks in front of their neighbors, committed suicide afterwards.

In the city of Bandung, where no disturbances took place, Christians marched around the city "erecting a protective wall of prayer," according to local pastor Bambang Widjaja.

Indonesia's 20 million Christians are apprehensive about the future because they are a minority in an overwhelmingly Muslim nation.

Indonesia's new president, B. J. Habibie, and opposition reformist hero Amien Rais have made strongly anti-Christian statements in the past. Christianto Wibisono, a Chinese businessman and lay Christian whose daughter's house burned in the riots, says, "Christians must lobby for principles of nondiscrimination, build alliances with moderate Muslims, and come together in prayer like never before." Otherwise, according to Sularso Sopater, general secretary of the Indonesian Council of Churches, "We will Balkanize like Bosnia."

By Alex Buchan

with Compass Direct in Jakarta.

Looting aftermath: A Chinese Christian in Jakarta weeps over the destruction.

Clinton Names Seiple to New Post

In a White House gathering June 18 of more than 50 religious leaders, President Clinton named former World Vision president Robert A. Seiple to the new post of senior adviser for international religious freedom.

Seiple, who at 55 stepped down last month after 11 years as head of the world's largest privately funded Christian international relief-and-development organization (CT, June 15, 1998, p. 49), will advise the Secretary of State on ways to integrate and implement policies that promote religious freedom into U.S. foreign policy.

Calling the appointment "a victory of great magnitude" for evangelicals, former National Association of Evangelicals president Don Argue says it is "a great statement on advocacy for our brothers and sisters in Christ who are persecuted for their faith."

A member of the State Department's Advisory Committee on Religious Freedom Abroad that proposed the new position, Argue briefed the President on his recent diplomatic trip to China (see p. 34).

Clinton says the position is designed to "make sure that religious liberty concerns get high and close attention in our foreign policy."

The appointment of Seiple "brings to the attention of world governments that the U.S. is serious about freedom of conscience," says Argue, who attended the ceremony. CT

PERU

Evangelical Released from Prison

Wuille Ruiz Figueroa's long wait for freedom ended June 6 when Peruvian President Alberto Fujimori granted him a full pardon. Ruiz, an evangelical Christian, served more than five years in Lima's maximum security Castro Castro prison (CT, Feb. 9, 1998, p. 94).

Ruiz, a Methodist and law-school graduate, had been arrested in February 1993 for possessing subversive propaganda, an accusation he firmly denied. Six months later, a "faceless" judge found him guilty and sentenced him to 20 years.

His first action as a free man involved visiting the graves of his mother and mother-in-law, both of whom died during his imprisonment. Ruiz also took a long walk with his daughter, Esteli, who was an infant at the time of his arrest.

Open Doors, a ministry that provides Bibles, training, and encouragement to persecuted Christians, launched several prayer and awareness campaigns for Ruiz, who organized a church inside his cellblock.

Eleven other Christians also received pardons on June 6.

Many Peruvian Christians have become outspoken critics of the Fujimori government's pursuit of terrorists at the expense of constitutionally guaranteed freedoms. According to some estimates, since 1992 Peru's courts have sent more than 4,000 men and women to prison for terrorist crimes. Experts estimate that as many as a quarter of those in prison are innocent of the crimes of which they are accused. About 90 of these prisoners are evangelical Christians.

By Deann Alford.

March for Jesus: Christians take to the street in Greenwich, one of five London marches during the annual event May 30. In all, 10 million Christians around the world marched.

ALBANIA

First Protestant Church Dedicated

The first Protestant church building constructed in Tirana, Albania's capital, is open for services after a joint effort by University Presbyterian Church (UPC) of Seattle, the ICHTHUS congregations of London, and a Swedish mission group.

John Quanrud, the son of a UPC couple, began thinking about Albania while a Bible school student in Sweden in 1981. The fact that Albania's government in 1967 declared the nation officially atheist fascinated Quanrud, and he vowed to do something about it. In 1987, Arthur Beals, UPC's pastor of urban and global mission, offered Quanrud the church's support.

The breakup of Communist rule allowed Quanrud and his wife, Lynne, to move to Albania in 1991. The Quanruds, Beals (who has traveled to Albania 27 times since 1991), and a handful of Christians began to work in the country. The results include establishing not only Emanuel Church, but the Albanian Bible Institute; an educational project, library, and resource center for Christians; and a missionary school for children.

Emanuel Church is part of a three-level building that will also function as a bakery, providing revenue in the midst of a depressed economy. Albania still has no constitution, little civil order, and a staggering level of unemployment, estimated at upwards of 70 percent. Workers building the foundation of Emanuel Church found themselves ducking ricocheting bullets. There are 8,000 Protestants in the nation of 3.5 million.

By Mike Beeson in Tirana.

News Briefs

◆ The American Center for Law and Justice has opened a European Center for Law and Justice. ECLJ has an office in London and expects to open a branch in Strasbourg, France, in the fall. The European office will have a staff of three people, led by John Warwick Montgomery.

◆ Robert Sayer, 47, is the new U.S. director of Arab World Ministries of Upper Darby, Pennsylvania. Sayer replaces Bill Saal, who died of a heart attack in July 1997 at age 49. Founded in 1881 in England, Arab World Ministries has 369 missionaries in 22 countries.

◆ Christian Solidarity International USA has ended its 10-year relationship with the Swiss-based Christian Solidarity International and will continue its work as Christian Freedom International. The independent organization will place more of an emphasis on the investigation and disclosure of religious persecution. CT

BRINGING TRUTH TO LIFE.

Righteous Sinners examines what genuine faith in Christ looks like and discusses the conflicting teaching that abounds on this issue to help you come to a clearer understanding of what it means to be a "righteous sinner." $12

If you want a more vital union with God, a richer relationship with others, and a deeper sense of personal wholeness, take another look at Inside Out and discover how God works real, liberating change. $12

This book bypasses the rules surrounding faith that we've come to accept and examines childlike qualities that should be the characteristics of faith—things like wonder, curiosity, and passion. $17

 Do you feel burned out or bored when it comes to your Christian walk? The River Within will help you regain the passion and excitement of following God. $15

Filled with letters from adolescent girls to their dads, Daughters and Dads offers guidance to fathers struggling to understand their changing role in their daughter's life. $11

The best leaders are those who serve and empower others to use their gifts and develop their skills. Upside Down provides leaders with a new paradigm of leadership that empowers others to serve too. $10

NAVPRESS
BRINGING TRUTH TO LIFE
www.navpress.com

Get your copies today at your local bookstore, or call (800) 366-7788 and ask for offer #1963.

Patterson's Election Seals Conservative Control

Two decades ago, conservative activist Paige Patterson began laying the groundwork to gain control of Southern Baptist Convention (SBC) agencies and institutions.

The strategy of Patterson and retired Houston judge Paul Pressler to reshape the 15.9 million-member denomination through presidential appointments has been wildly successful.

Patterson, who last month became the first seminary president to lead the SBC since 1940, told CT the methodology used to wrestle the denomination back may not have been wisest. Nevertheless, he called the battle "an essential and necessary exercise for self-definition." He has no plans to offer an olive branch to those not in his camp.

"Anybody who wants to believe that the Bible is true and is deeply concerned about reaching the world for Christ is going to be increasingly happy in the Southern Baptist Convention," Patterson told CT. "Those with serious questions about the validity and veracity of certain portions of the Word and who do not have a deep commitment to evangelism and missions will be less comfortable with the Southern Baptist Convention of the twenty-first century."

The pursuit of doctrinal uniformity by Southern Baptist leaders has come at a price. Deep fractures within the denomination are still evident.

"The controversy that has been settled at the national level has moved to the state conventions and local congregations," says Bill Leonard, dean of Wake Forest Divinity School. "There are diverse responses at the state level. It's not a slam dunk for either side."

Bitterly fought battles throughout the 1980s spurred disenfranchised Southern Baptists to form a separate yearly Cooperative Baptist Fellowship (CBF) gathering in the 1990s, complete with their own missionaries and chaplains.

Meanwhile, six SBC seminaries, two mission boards, and the presidency are in the hands of what Southern Seminary president R. Albert Mohler, Jr., calls those who are "pure in doctrine."

Patterson, 55, had no opposition in running for the presidency. In fact, at last month's annual SBC convention in Salt Lake City, registration secretary Lee Porter acclaimed Patterson president without even a show of hands.

Patterson, president of Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary in Wake Forest, North Carolina, since 1992, earlier served as president of Criswell College and as associate pastor of First Baptist Church in Dallas. Southeastern has grown to 1,705 students from 748 students in his six years there.

In Mormon country: Roberts (left) and Patterson talk at the Salt Palace.

Unified, Patterson says, Southern Baptists should now focus on soul winning. But several speakers at the meeting warned the faithful to be vigilant. "The battle for the soul of our denomination, our colleges and seminaries, our churches, even for the Bible itself, will never be over," advised James G. Merritt, chair of the SBC executive committee. "There may be a cease-fire, but . . . we can never let our guard down."

BATTLEGROUND SHIFTS: The 8,586 SBC messengers represented the lowest convention turnout in 47 years, both because of the geographic isolation from the heart of the denomination's base and the lack of major issues at this year's meeting. Much of the business finished earlier than anticipated at the three-day gathering. The now comparatively calm convention will become a two-day annual event next year.

While moderate Southern Baptists largely ignore the national meeting, they are more active at the state level. Moderates are in control of the Texas and Virginia conventions, and conservatives have formed separate affiliations in those two states. In November, the Texas Baptist Convention is expected to give final passage to a bylaws change that will make it more autonomous and will allow official links with the CBF and the Baptist World Alliance. Baylor University in Waco, Texas, has become a center for moderate Baptists.

MESSAGE TO MORMONS: Weeklong witnessing efforts resulted in more than 1,700 regional residents—most of them without a religious affiliation—making salvation decisions. Baptists staged an aggressive billboard, television, newspaper, and door-to-door witnessing campaign (CT, June 15, 1998, p. 24).

Anticipated fireworks between Latter-day Saints (LDS) residents and SBC visitors did not materialize. In fact, SBC leaders, including Patterson and North American Mission Board Interfaith Witness Division director R. Philip Roberts—who has written two new books on the dangers of Mormonism—had a friendly meeting with LDS leaders before the convention. They affirmed likemindedness on issues such as religious liberty, abortion, and pornography.

"But we are light years apart doctrinally," Patterson said. "I hope a day comes when Mormon friends would say Jesus is the only way to be saved, and by grace alone."

FAMILY VALUES: Messengers approved a statement lauding marriage as "the uniting of one man and one woman in covenant commitment for a lifetime." It is the first amendment to the Baptist Faith and Message, the closest the SBC comes to a creed, in 35 years.

The most controversial section of the statement involved a phrase declaring, "A wife is to submit herself graciously to the servant leadership of her husband even as the church willingly submits to the headship of Christ."

The two women—both of them wives of high-profile seminary presidents—on the seven-member panel that devised the statement cited Colossians 3 and 1 Peter 3 as reasons why wives should be submissive.

"As a woman standing under the authority of Scripture, even when it comes to submitting to my husband when I know he's wrong, I just have to do it and then he stands accountable at the judgment," Dorothy Patterson said.

"Submit may be a politically incorrect word," Mary Mohler said. "But it is a biblically correct word, and that's what counts."

By John W. Kennedy in Salt Lake City.

The Quest Study Bible

ANSWERS FOR YOUR TOUGH QUESTIONS

How many times have you had questions about the Bible for which there were no apparent answers? The QUEST STUDY BIBLE will help you grasp difficult-to-understand words and phrases and will present fair summations of controversial passages. You'll also read explanations of peculiar types of writing—like genealogies, proverbs, and prophecies.

Order the hard-cover QUEST STUDY BIBLE today for answers to over 6,000 textual, historical, and theological questions that Christians have pondered down through the centuries.

No. of Bibles	% Off	Price Each	Qty.	Total Cost
1	15%	$32.25
2	20%	$30.40
3-5	40%	$22.75
6 +	50%	$18.99

QSBH

Sub-total

Add 10% Shipping

Grand Total

Name _____

Address _____

City, State, Zip _____

☐ Personal check ☐ Visa ☐ Mastercard

Card # _____ Exp. _____

Signature _____

Prepaid orders only. Please allow 4-6 weeks for delivery. Outside U.S. add 30% shipping. U.S. funds only, please.

Mail to: QUEST STUDY BIBLE

Product Fulfillment

P.O. Box 606

Mt. Morris, IL 61054-0606

QE8G14

A global experience: Professors at the conference heard that Christianity is not a modern Western phenomenon.

Scholars Uncovering Church's Hidden History

Church history as taught in American seminaries and church colleges often portrays Christianity as a largely Western religion, which did not become a global faith until the modern missionary movement. "Thus, it appears that it took nineteen hundred years for the Great Commission to be realized," says New York Theological Seminary professor Dale Irvin.

But recently, church scholars and missiologists have more fully realized that the history of the modern missionary movement has largely been told from the perspective of the Western sending churches, which was never the whole story.

In April, 40 scholars and church leaders met at Fuller Theological Seminary in part to recover the hidden histories of Christianity worldwide at the "Christian History in Global Perspective" consultation.

MODERN-DAY PARALLELS: Andrew Walls, former missionary to Sierra Leone and professor emeritus at the University of Edinburgh, says Christianity in its early centuries spread into Europe, Asia, and Africa. Even as a new faith, Christianity had a global reach.

Today, at the brink of a new millennium, Christianity's identity as a Western religion is being challenged and changed as never before. Due to the growth of Christians in the developing world, the church's demographic center of gravity has shifted from the north and west to the south and east: Latin America, Africa, and Asia (CT, May 19, 1997, p. 39). This shift happened quickly, and the church in the West has hardly begun to grasp this reality, Walls says.

One implication of this reversal is the growing need for new historical perspectives on church growth and missions. Younger churches outside the West are sparking greater interest in a non-Western view of mission history.

Philip Yuen-Sang Leung, historian from the Chinese University of Hong Kong, says that China missions histories "are dominated by missionary heroes, martyrs, the mainline denominations, and the home missions based in Europe and America.

"The role of the Chinese converts and the domestic sociocultural forces in China have not been taken significantly in the history-writing process." He seeks to develop a mission history told from the standpoint of the receiving churches rather than the sending churches.

But Fuller professor Wilbert Shenk believes that two simultaneous and complementary movements are needed. The first will trace the development of a local church and its relationships, both local and global. The second movement will develop a synthesis of many "locals" into global relationship.

Irvin and Pittsburgh Theological Seminary professor Scott Sunquist are working on the kind of local-global synthesis prescribed by Shenk. Irvin and Sunquist, both evangelicals teaching in mainline Protestant seminaries, have been commissioned by Orbis Books, a Catholic publisher, to write a two-volume history of world Christianity. The most important need now is for textbooks that can be used in places such as Beijing and Bogotá that tell the history of Christianity as a world movement, Sunquist says.

EVANGELICAL GROWTH: The global spread of evangelicalism has become another focus of scholarship. Of the nearly 1.8 billion Christians worldwide, less than half—most of them in non-Western societies—are evangelical.

According to Regent College historian Don Lewis, most evangelicals in the West are unaware that the rapid growth of evangelicalism is in the Two-Thirds World or that it is largely nonwhite, Pentecostal, and non-English-speaking.

To understand this new reality better, Lewis and a corps of evangelical scholars are planning two international gatherings, one at Oxford University in 1999 and another in South Africa in 2001 as part of the "International Project on Evangelicalism and Globalization." The project will examine the past 300 years and eventually produce a textbook on world evangelicalism.

One challenge of developing global church history is garnering the resources for historical research on the local, national, and regional levels among the younger churches outside the West. Training nationals to gather and preserve source materials is critically important.

Sunquist, who formerly taught at Trinity Theological College in Singapore, reported on an experimental program in which Southeast Asian Christians were taught how to write their own local or national histories.

The experiment revealed that Asian Christians do not know much about Christianity outside their own countries. "Such a focus on the history of Christianity within the local political borders denies the ecumenical and transcultural nature of the gospel," Sunquist says. "This narrow focus also ignores the reality that ethnic groups and historical movements cross boundaries."

This effort to rewrite church history in global perspective will focus less on denominations, yet draw together the separate, sometimes intertwined, stories of Eastern Orthodoxy, Roman Catholicism, and Protestantism, along with the indigenous churches. Modern church history, told in global perspective, will also need to give an account of the incredible rise and spread of world Pentecostalism, whose "significance for world Christianity may well be as far-reaching as the Protestant Reformation," says Lewis.

By Richard A. Kauffman in Pasadena.

Global Connection

Off Campus and On Line

Without disrupting your family or leaving your present Ministry, you can complete your degree program. With Bethany, you can study off campus and on line via the World Wide Web. At your computer, in your home or office, or whether you use the mail, you can have a dialogue with Bethany's faculty, students, or alumni. Bethany will not take second place when it comes to providing nontraditional education. Bethany...A Seminary of Distinction.

The Bethany Degree Program...
Bachelor's, Master's and Doctorate
Degrees in the following areas:

Biblical Studies
Theology, Missions
Pastorial Ministry
Religious Education
Christian Counseling

Bethany is an Independent, Conservative, Baptist College with a trans-denominational student body. Bethany is designed for educating Pastors, Missionaries, and Evangelists. Bethany accepts the sovereignty and inimitability of the Word of God.

Advanced standing, credit for college transfer, credit and portfolio Learning Assessment for life experience, and admission arrangements are possible.

Bethany Worldwide

BETHANY BIBLE COLLEGE AND THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

2573 Hodgesville Road / P.O. Box 1944 / Dothan, AL 36302

Ph: (334) 793-3189 • Fax: (334) 793-4344

E-mail: bethanybc@ala.net

SERVE GOD AND COUNTRY.

The Army and Army Reserve need ministers to meet the diverse needs of America's soldiers and their families.

As a chaplain you can expand your ministry by helping people who truly need spiritual guidance. Plus serving in the Army or Army Reserve will help you develop professionally and improve your abilities as a leader.

The need is great, but the rewards are even greater. For specific information call 1 800 USA ARMY or visit the Army Chaplain website at www.goarmy.com

ARMY CHAPLAIN CORPS
BE ALL YOU CAN BE

Cranmer Theological House Shreveport, Louisiana

An Anglican School of Ministry in the Tradition of the English Reformation

For more information, call
1-800/732-0910

An EARN-WHILE-YOU-LEARN program open to incoming students in the 1997 - 1998 academic year.

A Theology of Things	Gina Bria	9
Notes on Drowning	Doug Frank	15

Art and Christian Spirituality: Companions in the Way	Luci Shaw	25
Searching for Our Fathers	Don Hudson	37

The Addict and the Artist Sharon Hersh 49

A Conversation with Irvin D. Yalom Bruce Ramsay 65

The Writing Life .

A Deep, Black Joy
Nonfiction H.E. Francis 11

Grandma's Cookbook	Stuart C. Hancock	99
--------------------	-------------------	----

"The Coiled Spring"	Luke Schelhaas	102
"The Coiled Spring"	D. L. W. W. W.	102

"Further in to Fleckness" James Durrell Shivers 106

"Hail the Daisy"	Grace Holdom	109
"The Love Bird's Frenzy"	Bessie D. Dismick	110

Views and Reviews
Music

Reviews: Bob Dylan, Time out of Mind Brent Short 121

Music Also Reviewed Douglas Thorpe 127

at Home in Lake Wobegon Ivy Alexander 129

Mount Misery, Samuel Shem,
 Fl. A. 1. 6 D. 1. 6 G. 1. 6 I. 1. 6 J. 1. 6 K. 1. 6 L. 1. 6 M. 1. 6 N. 1. 6 O. 1. 6 P. 1. 6 Q. 1. 6 R. 1. 6 S. 1. 6 T. 1. 6 U. 1. 6 V. 1. 6 W. 1. 6 X. 1. 6 Y. 1. 6 Z. 1. 6

James Calvin Schaap Joey Earl Horstman 141

Film

in the Films of Woody Allen Joey Earl Horstman 145

The Ice Storm	Scott Sawyer 151
Elm Hill Road	Shirley Sawyer 152

Risvolti
Timeless affetti

Journal of Management Studies, 19(1), 67-80.

Investigators charged that Harmon had been defrauding investors and health-plan members since the mid-1980s, taking in millions and shuffling the money among an ever-expanding network of shell companies. When state investigators began looking into his business practices, they quickly realized there was more involved than they could handle and went to federal officials. Ultimately, a multiagency task force was set up, involving the FBI, the Justice and Labor Departments, the IRS, and state insurance and investment investigators. The probe received its own code name: Operation Island Scam.

LIFE SAVINGS LOST: Harmon was arrested in March 1997 and pleaded guilty to conspiracy and tax fraud last October. At the sentencing hearing in May, victims denounced Harmon and the damage his thefts had done to their retirement hopes. Other victims had already said their piece, including Esther Hardinger of Coldwater, Kansas.

A retired schoolteacher, Hardinger invested with Harmon after her husband's death. She put in her entire savings of $40,663. "Because of him, I lost my financial security," she says.

Hardinger's sister, Lois Hutson of Seeking justice: Hutson, who lost $94,252 to Harmon, prepares to leave the Wichita courthouse.

Wichita, Kansas, also had been victimized after her husband's death in 1992.

Based on trusting an investor within her denomination, Hutson turned over nearly $100,000 to Harmon. "I can only hope to get back a tiny percentage," she says.

"The most severe damage flowing from all of this is not the financial devastation, but the damage to the sense of trust in fellow humans that so many of the victims have experienced," says Judge William L. Dwyer. "That's something that is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to repair."

Prosecutor Schroeder says the case is not over. Harmon's son Steve and son-in-law Terrill Beebe both worked in the business, and both were named as coconspirators and could be indicted. Other U.S. attorneys have pledged to file negligence suits against insurance companies that did business with Harmon in an effort to recoup some of the victims' losses.

By Chuck Fager.

550 Kirkland Way Suite 100
Kirkland, WA 98033
425-828-2734
425-739-2261 Fax
west.sem.seattle@pobox.com
www.marshallforum.org

CAN YOU RELATE? In today's post-Christian America, where according to Gallup, only 32% believe the Bible to be true, where 70% reject moral absolutes, and where the overwhelming majority of people in your neighborhood are unfamiliar with Christian ideas... how in the world does one go about engaging someone with the hope of the gospel?

Western Seminary Seattle's approach to ministry-training is relational... relevant. We seek thoughtful, reflective students captured by a timeless mandate to reveal Christ in today's postmodern culture. Our accredited degree programs are led by author and psychologist Dr. Dan Allender and a team of noted theologians and counselors.

For more information about the Master of Spiritual Nurture and Master of Divinity offerings and our 21st century approach to ministry, 1-888-WSS-2002 please call toll-free.

WESTERN SEMINARY
SEATTLE

To order a copy of our journal, the Mars Hill Review please call 1-800-990-MARS. "passing thoughts" cols. by Kevin Short

Western Seminary Seattle
is part of the Western Seminary System.

Megachurch Pastor Resigns, but Denies Sexual Misdeeds

The dynamic builder of a 6,500-member congregation bent on winning Seattle's upscale Eastside suburbs for Christ has resigned amid allegations of sexual misconduct. Bob Moorehead, senior pastor of Overlake Christian Church since 1970, steadfastly maintains his innocence, but stepped down June 15 because his credibility in the community had been "seriously damaged."

Overlake's board of elders decided to dismiss the allegations of 17 accusers, based upon "the biblical process" for handling accusations against an elder. Moorehead, 61, was one of 14 elders governing the nondenominational evangelical church, which in November moved into a new $37.5 million facility in Redmond, Washington.

PRIVATE INVESTIGATOR HIRED: The events that led to Moorehead's resignation began in July 1996 with his arrest on a charge of indecent exposure in a public restroom near his vacation home in Daytona Beach, Florida. Under controversial circumstances, charges were dropped. But news coverage of the story prompted four men to make accusations that Moorehead had molested them during adult baptism and wedding ceremonies. A private investigator hired by the elders interviewed 17 men who gave similar accounts of events that occurred as long as 20 years ago. The statute of limitations has expired in all those cases.

The overseers of the largest church in Washington State interpret 1 Timothy 5:19 to require another witness, besides the accuser, in order to consider an accusation against an elder. The elders conceded, however, that Moorehead was not "above reproach" as required by 1 Timothy 3:2 and consequently needed to resign. They presented a verbal summary of their decision to the congregation on May 27, based on information from the private investigator's report and their own interviews with the accusers.

"This is not like a secular case, where conviction can be based on a preponderance of evidence, or evidence that's beyond a reasonable doubt," elder Duane Atkins told a hushed Wednesday-night gathering of more than 2,500. "Ours is a biblical investigation."

The congregation erupted in a standing ovation when elder Gary Scott declared that the leaders found "no basis for church discipline" against Moorehead. Most church members interpreted that to mean that their pastor had been exonerated.

OTHER PASTORS SPEAK: Two days later, however, four area pastors who originally had been asked to help oversee the investigation, held a press conference claiming that Overlake elders misinterpreted key biblical passages and failed to settle the question of Moorehead's guilt or innocence by not releasing the investigator's report as originally expected. The pastors lamented the "firestorm" of division that the decision had provoked and called for the elders to resolve the matter for the sake of church unity.

Grand opening: Last November, Bob Moorehead first preached in Overlake Christian Church's 241,000-square-foot complex. His accusers believe the elders' actions are akin to a coverup.

"My English language and my biblical understanding don't allow me to accept the position they came up with," Jerry Mitchell, pastor of Crossroads Baptist Church in Bellevue, Washington, told CT after the press conference. "If the man is not innocent, which they have said, then in my estimation he is guilty. They say, 'No, he's not guilty'; therefore, in my estimation he's innocent. Where in the English language and where in the Bible is the in-between stage?"

Overlake's elders and staff declined interview requests from CT, saying the

May 27 verbal report "stands on its own."

Phil Ling, pastor of the largest of Overlake's eight daughter churches, Northshore Christian Church, agrees that the issue is unresolved. "If you set yourself up with We're not going to deal with the world; we're going to use a biblical process to deal with this issue, then the eldership is the judge and the jury, and they have to come to a verdict; and I haven't read any verdict," Ling says.

Critics of Overlake's interpretation of Scripture point out that cases of abuse are rarely witnessed by a third party and insist that the requirement for more than one witness is not confined to each individual case.

Seventeen cases add up to "a preponderance of evidence that can't be ignored," says Jan David Hettinga of Northshore Baptist Church in Bothell, Washington. Hettinga, one of the four pastors publicly challenging the decision, says the group is now "in dialogue" with Overlake about the possibility of re-examining the biblical premise for the decision.

SATANIC SCHEME? Communications from Overlake elders to their congregation in the months leading up to the resignation evoked images of spiritual warfare and included numerous references to "persecution" and an "orchestrated" attack on the church being carried out by the news media and the alleged victims.

Overlake's elders say their decision took into account Moorehead's 41 years of ministry without "a chink in his armor."

Known for his aggressive evangelism and powerful expository preaching, Moorehead had a daily radio program and wrote a dozen books.

But focus on Moorehead's fate, critics say, has ignored the accusers, who need either discipline or ministry, depending upon who is telling the truth. Moorehead has called on those who brought the "horrible, perverted" charges against him to repent.

"I would have a particularly challenging time with this congregation, because they are fishing in Scripture in a way that is not going to be very healing for them," says Kibbie Ruth, senior consultant for the San Mateo, California-based Kyros Ministry, formerly known as the Pastoral Center for Abuse Prevention. "It makes them an unsafe congregation for anyone else who has been wounded by one person in a one-on-one situation."

By Art Moore in Seattle.

SAMARITAN'S PURSE

Voted most effective relief agency
by this panel of international experts

*We don't just see the needs of the world.
We see one person who has a world of needs.*

Samaritan's Purse provides food, medicine, and relief supplies, and shares the Good News of Jesus Christ with people in need in 80 countries. But we can't help without people like you. It's that simple. For more information on how you can be involved, call 1-800-245-9600.

Samaritan's
Purse Reaching a World of One.

Franklin Graham, President
P.O. Box 3000-H
Boone, NC 28607

Lies We've Heard Before

The same flawed arguments that legalized abortion are now used to support physician-assisted suicide.

One of the most important stories of recent months was Dr. Diane Meier's change of heart about physician-assisted suicide (PAS). Meier, a New York physician and professor of geriatrics, is a specialist in "palliative care"—pain relief—for dying patients. For some years, she was an influential advocate of the legalization of PAS. But this past spring, Meier publicly reversed course. In a column in the April 24 New York Times, Meier made public the reasons for her change of mind. Her insights suggest broader connections for those committed to the sanctity of human life.

First, according to Meier, PAS advocates assume patients are mentally alert and competent to make a rational choice to end their lives. Meier now argues that these patients rarely are able to exercise such judgment. Normally they are confused, anxious, depressed, or simply incapable of thinking clearly—hardly a propitious context for making an important, life-or-death decision.

Second, those in favor of PAS normally would restrict its use to situations in which patients are within six months of death. Meier argues that it is nearly impossible to predict when patients are going to die until the last few days of their lives.

Third, PAS advocates claim that patients can be protected from coerced decisions to end their lives through the use of a doctor's signed certification. Meier now claims that noncoercion is impossible for a doctor to certify. Especially given the enormous financial pressures that medical bills impose, the availability of PAS is itself coercive. Dying patients know that merely by signing a document they would reduce the financial pressure on their families. No one needs to say a word about it.

Why this sounds all too familiar

Advocates of PAS have succeeded in only one state: Oregon. The regulations Meier discussed in her article are drawn from the Oregon law. Already at least two assisted suicides have been performed there, though public officials are keeping such a tight lid on information that no one can know for sure how many assisted suicides have occurred or will occur. But the explicit goal of PAS advocates is to go national, making the Oregon experiment the American way of life.

According to David P. Gushee, director of the Center for Christian Leadership at Union University, it is deeply disturbing to compare early returns from the Oregon PAS experiment with an experiment in medicalized killing with which we are all familiar: abortion. Gushee, who is also vice president of Evangelicals for Social Action, notes that initial advocates of full legalization of abortion operated from a model strikingly similar to the medical and regulatory milieu envisioned by supporters of PAS and currently operating in Oregon. Women facing unwanted pregnancies would undertake a rational conversation with their physicians, who would guide them through their medical options to the best choice for them.

In fact, what emerged was a pattern in which emotional, confused, and frightened women turned to impersonal specialized abortion clinics staffed by marginally competent doctors whose full-time medical chore day by day is the termination of pregnancy. This fundamental corruption of the doctor-patient relationship, observes Gushee, is repeating itself with the Oregon PAS experiment. Both of the two known PAS victims in Oregon were refused PAS by their own physicians, only to receive referrals to death doctors from the Oregon branches of Compassion in Dying and the Hemlock Society. One can imagine a new industry of such physicians if PAS goes national, says Gushee, just like with abortion providers.

Likewise, advocates of full legalization of abortion assumed that this option would be selected by a small number of women under specialized circumstances. Abortion would be "safe, legal, and rare." This assumption parallels that of PAS advocates who intend to restrict that procedure to "the last six months of life" for certifiably terminally ill patients.

However, it is fully to be expected that just as abortion came to be the option of first rather than last resort for so many, so will PAS grow into a widely used procedure that far exceeds its originally envisioned boundaries, especially given the nebulous definitions of those boundaries.

PAS advocates are concerned to protect patient autonomy and noncoercion. Interestingly enough, Gushee notes, so were advocates of abortion; indeed, autonomy, noncoercion, and self-determination are the watchwords of the pro-choice movement. But such autonomy for women facing crisis pregnancies has turned out to be quite elusive. Many women end up at abortion clinics due to pressure from their fathers, husbands, boyfriends, and sexual partners. Just so, we can fully expect that patient autonomy in the area of assisted-suicide will erode under psychological, financial, and social pressures.

Fortunately, PAS has not won universal support. Dr. Meier's reversal is a hopeful sign. Perhaps we have learned a few things in the 25 years between Roe v. Wade and the Oregon PAS experiment. CT

Discerning the Healing Spirits

A pastor went to a massage therapist for back treatment. Once on the masseuse's table he noticed crystals used by New Age channelers on the floor. What was he to do? Tell the therapist to remove the crystals? Rebuke the therapist? Get up and leave?

At first this pastor was fearful of subjecting himself to spiritual forces. Then he remembered that in Christ "all things in heaven and on earth were created . . . whether thrones or dominions or rulers or powers—all things have been created through him and for him" (Col. 1:16, NRSV). This pastor decided the "all things" included these crystals. So he prayed that Christ would exercise his lordship over them and any evil spirits in the room.

Illness makes people receptive to all kinds of nostrums and remedies, particularly chronic health problems that don't yield easily to conventional treatment. A whole industry is emerging that provides alternative medical treatments, including acupuncture, biofeedback, homeopathy, massage therapy, and therapeutic touch (TT; see "Winding Paths Meet," p. 16). A third of all Americans have tried some form of alternative medicine or therapy.

Even health-insurance companies are starting to see the benefit of alternative forms of treatment. Alternative medicine tends to treat people holistically, inviting the patients to participate in their healing. There is not always a pill or injection for everything that ails us. Sometimes lifestyle changes are needed, such as diet and stress management. The best approaches blend conventional and alternative medicines: conventional medicine for trauma or major illnesses, alternative treatments for chronic conditions such as pain, headaches, fatigue, or recurring back pains. Yet, as the pastor's experience illustrates, Christians must be on their guard: alternative treatments sometimes come packaged in world-views more akin to New Age philosophies and plain old paganism than to orthodox Christian faith.

Of course, bona fide methods have to be sorted out from the bogus. This past April the influential Journal of the American Medical Association published an article that debunked the claims of therapeutic touch. TT is practiced by more than 43,000 medical professionals in more than 80 hospitals nationwide. Behind TT is the theory that each person emits an "energy field." Practitioners claim that by manipulating this human energy field, they can heal numerous conditions, from Alzheimer's to ulcers, without actually touching their patients (CT, Feb. 5, 1996, p. 96).

What was most surprising about the JAMA article debunking TT was that the supporting research was done for an elementary-school science project by nine-year-old Emily Rosa. Emily set up a simple experiment using a cardboard screen with two holes cut in it for TT practitioners to put their hands through. When Emily would place her hand over a practitioner's hand without touching it, the "healer" was asked to say which hand Emily's hand was near. In the 280 tests involving 21 different TT practitioners, the correct response was given only 44 percent of the time—a worse outcome than mere coin-flipping might produce. Predictably, TT advocates have contested Emily's findings, but it appears that TT may stand for "tall tale," not therapeutic touch.

While being on guard against evil spirits connected to some instances of alternative medicine, Christians should not be locked into an Enlightenment perspective that maintains healing can come only through modern medicine. Emily's work contrasts with a host of studies in recent years that have demonstrated a positive correlation between healing and faith, prayer, and association with a supportive, religious community. There is now clear empirical evidence that "religious involvement helps people prevent illness, recover from illness, and—most remarkably—live longer" (Dr.

Dale A. Mathews, The Faith Factor: Proof of the Healing Power of Prayer). Some of this benefit can be attributed to people of faith living more healthfully—not smoking or drinking, for example. But not all. Sound scientific studies show there is curative power in prayer and regular participation in a supportive religious community.

As Dr. Mathews says, "The faith factor is not a panacea—the mortality rate for human beings still remains 100 percent." Why and when some people experience healing or remission is still a mystery to researchers. The faith factor allows for this mystery—for a God who gives and takes life and health in his own good timing. CT

Alternative medicine sometimes comes packaged in world-views more akin to New Age philosophies and plain old paganism than to orthodox Christian faith.

A Tale of CHINA'S Two CHURCHES

Eyewitness reports of repression and revival.

BY TIMOTHY C. MORGAN

During China's brutal Cultural Revolution in 1968, Peter Xu Yongze, newly called to Christian ministry, surveyed the bleak future facing Christianity in China and was overcome with grief.

Climbing a mountain near his village in the rugged Henan Province, Xu stopped and prayed, "Dear Lord, please revive your church!"

During the intervening 30 years, Xu evangelized, planted new house churches, and trained local church leaders, eventually creating what some call the Born Again Movement (BAM), which has an estimated 3 million followers independent of the official registered church in China. Spin-offs from BAM, one of the fastest-growing religious groups in China, have an estimated 20 million followers, nearly twice the size of the registered church, which was re-established in 1979.

HERETIC OR HERO? This year, however, Xu will not be celebrating the thirtieth anniversary of his mountaintop plea. Last December he was sentenced to serve three years in a "re-education-through-labor" camp in Henan. Chinese authorities arrested Xu, now 58, on charges of being a leader of a banned religious cult, disrupting public order, and spreading religious heresy about the imminent end of the world.

After Xu's arrest, the official Chinese news agency compared him to David Koresh, the Branch Davidian leader who in 1994 died in a fiery apocalypse in Waco, Texas, as the FBI attempted to arrest him. Both registered-church and house-church

CHINESE PHOTOGRAPHER CONSORTIUM

Passionate piety: At her husband's pathside grave in remote northwest China, a Christian woman offers a prayer of remembrance. In rural areas of China, Christianity through house-church networks has been growing rapidly.

leaders, including Samuel Lamb and Allen Yuan, have criticized Xu and his movement for alleged doctrinal aberrations, such as the expectation that new converts weep for three days to bring about forgiveness for their sins.

Yet, other Christian leaders have defended Xu, saying that his harsh sentence exposes how the Chinese government has not changed in its essentially hostile attitude toward religion as a superstition.

While evangelicals have noted that Xu's movement is emotional and highly expressive, Brent Fulton, managing director of the Institute for Chinese Studies based at Wheaton (Ill.) College, says Xu is no heretic and his theology is sound. "Xu is caring, very sincere. He is smart in a strategic sense. He knows how to organize a huge band of evangelists. Most of his followers have a junior-high education."

Pastors in BAM believe "jail is their seminary," says Jonathan Chao, president of China Ministries International, a leading house-church advocacy group that recently relocated from Hong Kong to Taiwan. "Jail is like a battery that charges the believer and movement." Xu had been imprisoned twice before, including in 1988 when he attempted to meet Billy Graham during the evangelist's trip to China.

According to sources in China close to the Xu family, "They say our church is a heresy. This is a very bad word to use about us. Xie-jiao [heresy/evil religion] is like when a person kills somebody or a group always killing.

"People say that we say that you can only be saved if you cry for three days or even three days and nights. This is not true. We are saved by Jesus' grace."

SERIAL HOSTAGE-TAKING: For Paul Marshall, author of Their Blood Cries Out (Word, 1997), Xu's arrest and imprisonment is another odious example of China's "serial hostage-taking," in which emerging Chinese Christian leaders are locked away as they reach their most productive phase. Years later, they may be released or exiled. Recently, China freed an aging Catholic leader from prison, only to put him immediately under house arrest. "I've met with people from 17 provinces in the last 12 months," Marshall says. "They said they are suffering the worst crack-down since the 1980s." Xu is one of hundreds or perhaps thousands of religious leaders who have been arrested or jailed in China during the 1990s. As recently as May 31, officials reportedly detained Roman Catholic Bishop Zhang Weizhu, one of the millions of underground

Catholics who recognize Vatican authority. (China requires all Catholics to join a government-controlled association.)

The imprisonment of Xu comes at a time when American religious and political leaders are focusing on religious persecution as never before. Congress, which is targeting China's abuse of human rights, has passed legislation prohibiting imports of Chinese products made by slaves or prisoners and banned from visiting America those Chinese officials responsible for religious persecution or forced abortions.

Conservatives have renewed efforts to oppose most-favored-nation trade status for China because of human-rights abuses (CT, June 16, 1997, p. 54). This fall more than 100,000 congregations are expected to participate in the third International Day of Prayer for the Persecuted Church.

The most critical debate among church and ministry leaders is how best to bring about greater religious freedom in China. Traditionally, missions leaders have focused on evangelism and relief work, not human rights, for fear that public criticism could jeopardize their ability to work in the country.

But as abuses of religious freedom have persisted, missions and church leaders have been forced by circumstances to re-evaluate their methods and strategies.

Meanwhile, outspoken religious-freedom advocates have steadily increased the political pressure in Washington to put religious freedom near the top of America's foreign-policy agenda.

Last month more than 200 American religious leaders, representing Protestants, Roman Catholics, Orthodox, Muslims, Jews, Buddhists, and Scientologists, signed a letter urging President Clinton to persuade the Chinese government to release all religious prisoners, to revoke mandatory church registration, and to relax restrictions on Buddhists in Tibet.

Rabbi Yechiel Eckstein, founder of the Center for Jewish and Christian Values, initiated the letter to Clinton, whose historic nine-day trip to China was scheduled to wrap up July 3. Last year Eckstein presented to Chinese authorities a petition with 12,000 signatures calling for Xu's release. But Eckstein does not want to be counted among the growing number of China-bashers.

"One of the things I've learned in my dealings with the Chinese is they want to see that Americans are not using them or bashing them," he says. "China-bashers don't acknowledge the changes that have taken place." He advocates greater religious freedom in China's policy, using what he calls "prodding engagement."

Although China's constitution enshrines freedom of belief, there is no corresponding constitutional protection for freedom of worship or freedom from state control. Through the Chinese government's Religious Affairs Bureau (RAB), the Public Security Bureau, and the Communist party's United Front Work Department, every aspect of religious expression is managed.

"Those Chinese who seek to express openly dissenting political and religious views still live in an environment filled with repression," the U.S. State Department reported in January.

The Chinese government places boundaries on religion at every key point:

- Worship places must be registered, which normally entails joining one of five officially recognized religious associations (Protestant, Catholic, Buddhist, Muslim, or Taoist).

- Publication of Bibles, religious books, magazines, and other materials must be state approved.

- Admission to seminaries or other religious training for registered-church pastors or lay leaders requires permission of local authorities.

- Individual believers may be required to provide identification on receipts when purchasing Bibles at a registered church.

- Communist party members are prohibited from expressing religious beliefs. As a result, only atheists are allowed to head government offices that regulate religion.

- Government officials determine which religious beliefs are heretical, and therefore illegal, for anyone to espouse.

- No religious group outside China is permitted to have control over any Chinese religious body or religious affairs, or to establish an independent operation.

Chinese who stray outside permitted religious activities have frequently been detained without being charged or having legal counsel. The U.S. State Department declares, "The judicial system continues to deny defendants basic legal safeguards and due process because authorities attach higher priority to maintaining public order and suppressing political opposition than to implementing and enforcing legal norms."

Amnesty International, in its 1997 human-rights report, estimates that China's prisons detained 200,000 people without charge or trial. In the main Chinese prison in Lhasa, the capital of Tibet, one out of six prisoners is a Buddhist monk or nun

HOW MANY CHRISTIANS IN CHINA?

Unofficially, Chinese leaders estimate there may be up to 100 million Christians in China. But officially, leaders say there are fewer than 15 million baptized Christians and regular churchgoers.

SOURCE: AMITY NEWS SERVICE, OPERATION WORLD.

CHINESE CHRISTIANS BY PROVINCE:

Chinese traditional or Folk religion: 27% (324 million)
 Protestant: 5.1% (61.2 million)
 Buddhist: 3% (36 million)
 Muslim: 2.4% (28.8 million)
 Animist: 2.4% (28.8 million)
 Catholic: 1% (10.2 million) who had most often been accused of "endangering public security."

A GOLDEN PERIOD? Although the Communist United Front Work Department establishes China's overall policies toward religion, no individual has greater influence over day-to-day government oversight of religious activities in China than Ye Xiaowen, the ambitious and energetic director of the RAB, which has officials in every province and major city.

During Ye's first American appearance one year ago, he met with leaders from the Christian Leadership Exchange of California, an influential group composed mostly of overseas Chinese Christian leaders.

Ye, 45, plays the role of an intimidating police officer well. "The ancient Greeks have a saying: The most difficult thing is to know yourself. I am a tiger, having the willingness to have the boldness and braveness characteristic of a tiger." The RAB and other Chinese leaders have not been reluctant to demonstrate the power of the state in limiting religious practice. In May 1997, according to Amnesty International, about 5,000 Chinese troops were deployed to the village of Donglu, Hebei Province, to bar Catholics from making an annual pilgrimage.

Ye was influential in developing the Chinese government's conviction that Christianity played a critical role in the collapse of communism in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

Although one American evangelical leader who is knowledgeable about Ye says he is a "hardcore materialist," Ye's main philosophy seems to be pragmatism within the context of the directives of the top leadership.

Ye, like China's President Jiang Zemin, represents a new attitude that is not personally hostile to religion but expects religious leaders to buttress state and party control. Some of China's leaders, including Ye, a sociologist by training, have closely studied American culture. Ye finds one secret to American success in Max Weber's The Protestant Ethic and the Spirit of Capitalism, first published in 1904. Weber, also a sociologist, compared the West and China, concluding that a missing element in Chinese culture had been, up to that time, a strong antimagical religion like Christianity, with its emphases on a transcendent God, transcendent laws, and spiritual calling above all human favoritisms and local superstitions.

China's leadership still has difficulty comprehending basic Christian concepts, says Richard Cizik, policy analyst for the National Association of Evangelicals (NAE): "They don't understand the power of faith to change people's lives, the Christian teaching of the soul, or the Christian teaching of the conscience. They view [religion] through a political lens." Cizik and other evangelicals have attempted to counter the belief among China's leaders that Chinese Christians pose a threat to the state by arguing that good Christians are good citizens and good workers.

In 1994, as new regulations governing religion in China were being implemented, Ye became RAB director and quickly positioned himself and the RAB as protectors of the religious status quo. In suppressing house churches, the RAB most often labels them as secret cults with an antisocial agenda. In addition, Ye says the RAB protects registered churches from corrupt local officials who may harass faithful believers.

While in Washington, Ye declared that religious believers in China had entered "a golden period." Last October, an official Chinese government white paper, which focused on all religious activity in China, listed 100 million religious believers, 85,000 worship sites, 300,000 clergy or priests, and 74 schools for clergy training, far more than in 1949 when Communists took control. The report also noted:

- Since 1980, more than 600 Protestant churches have been reopened or rebuilt annually.
- More than 18 million Bibles have been printed.
- The official number of baptized

Peter Xu

Christians in registered churches has risen to 10 to 15 million in 1997, from fewer than 1 million in 1949.

The document defends the Chinese government's regulation of religious activity, saying, "No one in China is punished because of his or her religious belief. But no country that practices the rule of law in the world today would tolerate illegal and criminal activities being carried out under the banner of religion."

However, the report does not detail the ideological work of the Communist United Front Work Department. In a September 1996 article in its journal, the United Front detailed how 400 religious leaders had been "trained politically on how to get the religious organizations to cooperate with the [Communist] party." In 1992, Tong Zhan, a former United Front leader, published an inside view on how the United Front works behind the scenes in the appointment of key religious leaders. He said the United Front follows a "divide and rule" strategy to keep religious groups in check.

Even by official accounts, Christianity among the Chinese is experiencing the

CHINA MISSION:

More Than 'Ping-Pong Diplomacy'

Former NAE president Don Argue calls for engagement, not isolation.

A member of the State Department's Advisory Committee on Religious Freedom Abroad, Don Argue helped marshal evangelical leaders to the frontlines in the international campaign on behalf of persecuted Christians.

In February, Argue, then president of the National Association of Evangelicals (NAE) and now president of Northwest College, Seattle; Catholic Archbishop McCarrick; and Rabbi Schneider traveled to China for three weeks of meetings with top leaders in China's government and Communist party (CT, Apr. 6, 1998, p. 26). While security concerns prevented Argue from meeting with members of China's house churches, staff with the delegation met one-on-one with house-church members to hear their views.

David Neff, CT executive editor, conducted the first in-depth interview of Argue following the delegation's return from China.

You have said your trip to China was not a fact-finding mission, because persecution is already well documented. But did you find out anything that surprised you? Did your perceptions change?

As far as we know, our trip was the first time the government officials at that level have been willing to sit down and talk about religious persecution and religious-freedom issues in China. I was surprised by that.

During your meetings, did you sense any resistance from Chinese officials?

The resistance from Chinese officials was the feeling that we'd come there to inspect, and they made it very clear on the first day, "We're here to talk about the issues."

We got to ask whatever we wanted to ask within certain constraints that they imposed on us. On one occasion with kind of stunning revival and explosive growth that would test the structure of any religious organization. In Guizhou Province in the rural southwest, there are more than 360,000 Christians. About half of them await baptism, and many baptized believers go more than one year without celebrating Communion.

"The Chinese church today is the most charismatic church in the world. They rely totally on the Holy Spirit," says David Wang, international director of Asia Outreach. "With all the persecution and harassment and suffering, the church is still exploding. Growing is too tame a word."

HAZARDOUS PILGRIMAGE: In February, a delegation of three American religious leaders, at the invitation of President Jiang, made an unprecedented pilgrimage throughout China.

During their three-week tour, then-president of the National Association of Evangelicals Don Argue, Roman Catholic archbishop of Newark Theodore McCarrick, and Appeal of Conscience Foundation president Rabbi Arthur Schneier met with China's president, held discussions with about 60 other top leaders, and traveled to Tibet to visit Buddhist leaders (CT, April 6, 1998, p. 26).

Although the threesome described the trip's mission as focused on deepening dialogue with China's leaders, they frequently brought up issues of human rights and religious freedom.

In a lengthy interview with CHRISTIANITY TODAY (see below), Argue says that they inquired about the cases of 30 persecuted believers. He said Chinese authorities have responded with details about some, but not all, of the individuals.

From the beginning, American political and religious leaders sharply questioned the wisdom of the effort, saying that China would manipulate domestic media coverage to its own advantage. While the delegation was in China, the front page of the People's Daily published photos of President Jiang and Argue, but quoted only Jiang.

American critics of the delegation's visit cut across a wide spectrum, including Gary Bauer of the Family Research Council, Nina Shea of Freedom House, and Joan Brown Campbell of the National Council of Churches.

During the delegation's visit, Shea charged, "Beijing manipulated the group's visit throughout, even detaining priests and the families of Christian prisoners so that the group could not meet with them."

But after the visit, one Chinese official in Beijing said, "These people were very well briefed, and actually disputed some of our versions of events, and expressed strong discontent with our religious policy. This we were not used to."

When the delegation returned, they held a press conference in New York City, where they issued a 12-page report. Their findings included:

- Official government statistics significantly undercount Christians.
- Chinese leaders view religion as a potentially destabilizing force in society, particularly among China's large peasant population.
- "Joint ventures in understanding" between the United States and China on religious belief and practice should be undertaken as soon as possible.

Cizik, who traveled with the American delegation, told CT that China's leaders are the vice chair of Jiangsu Province, after we had raised the question of religious freedom, he said abruptly, "It's time for dinner." And we all knew it was going to be time for dinner.

Back to the Bible: Evangelical representative Don Argue (far left) presents a Chinese-language Bible to China's President Jiang Zemin (third from left).

It was a subtle contest of wills to ascertain who was going to control a meeting. You are given high-level access if you are forthcoming with favorable comments about China. But we didn't give them what they wanted in order to get the access.

Why has the National Association of Evangelicals resisted efforts for the U.S. government to end most-favored-nation (MFN) trade status for China?

Part of the church says that the way to get to China is on MFN. But we did not feel that we should just proceed without checking with the people who are in ministry in China.

Across the board their message was unanimous: "Don't politicize MFN." The moment you make that a bargaining chip on religious persecution, you've politicized it, and that is the last thing we want to have done.

So we followed the logic of the people who are doing the most effective ministry in China. We took a neutral position.

When the church in China says, "Don't touch it," and those on this side of the water who are having very effective ministry in China say, "Don't touch it," I don't understand why some people would rather blatantly say we should use MFN as a bargaining tool.

What was accomplished in your meeting with the president of China?

The attention of the Chinese government has been focused. If they're going to continue in dialogue with American leaders, they have to address human-rights issues. That, to me, was a very important part of what we were doing.

President Jiang Zemin clearly stated that these issues are on the agenda for Sino-American talks.

The wheels in China move very slowly. We look at something and say, "What do we do to fix it?" The Chinese look at a situation and say, "What relationships do we need to develop to deal with this situation?"

So we were building bridges, explaining the importance of separation of church and state, a concept that is foreign to them,

"being forced to acknowledge by the faith of their own people that religion isn't a Western phenomenon only. It's a church that is growing. And, to some degree, [it] poses a threat to the power of the state."

A BIGGER CAGE? Even as the Chinese government has moved to marginalize underground churches, it has given the registered church more room to breathe. But its critics still view the registered church as a caged bird.

With the retirement of Bishop Ting in 1997, the China Christian Council (CCC) is now under the leadership of Han Wenzao, a lay church leader. The CCC and the Three Self Patriotic Movement (TSPM), which promotes the doctrinal ideals of self-propagation, self-government, and self-support, form the central nervous system of the registered church.

During an in-depth interview with CT at Nanjing Seminary, Han struck a conciliatory note toward the house-church movement. But he did not repeat Ting's call in 1994 for the Chinese government to recognize house churches.

Han says many unregistered churches have become registered in Jiangsu Province. "We have two problems with registration. Government officials are reluctant to get more churches to be registered. On the other side, some congregations, I'm sorry to say, are influenced by outsiders who advise them not to get registered."

Han says the relationship between house and registered churches is not black and white. Some believers, especially in urban areas, may attend services at both kinds of churches. In addition, some registered churches allow house-church leaders to use their facilities.

In calling for greater cooperation and Christian unity, Han says, "We also have to confess that we have done some things wrong to our brothers and sisters. A divisive church cannot be very strong for our Lord, especially in China. Yet we fight each other."

Some house-church leaders have shown a willingness to register with the local government, but they resist joining the TSPM, which falls under government and Communist party control.

But Han says, "The Three Self does not have a political nature. It's just a people's organization to show our fellow Christians that we Christians are fellow Chinese Christians."

Han disputes the allegations that freedom is nonexistent for the registered church. "We have enjoyed a reasonable amount of religious freedom," he says,

"because the context is very different around China."

"We can do much. Within the framework, we can move around much. So my observation is that we have enjoyed a reasonable amount of freedom within the churches."

Although Han is striking a conciliatory note in comments about house churches, he has not minced words when condemning the International Mission Board (IMB) of the Southern Baptist Convention for "covert missionary" activities within China (CT, Jan. 12, 1998, p. 64).

Last year, Han broke off relations between the CCC and IMB because he alleged that Southern Baptists were pursuing an illegal "two-track" strategy of working openly with registered churches, but covertly as well through setting up businesses for missionaries to use as a front for evangelistic outreach. There have been estimates that as many as 200 IMB missions personnel in China are involved in such work.

Werner Burklin, whose German mis-

Meager resources: Despite many limitations, including a severe shortage of Bibles, Christian women in China's far western Yunnan Province take an active role in village worship services.

dealing with the practice of faith and the fact that Christians are good citizens. Christians pay their bills, they show up for work on Monday morning, they put in an honest day's work, they have good families, and they will be productive people in China. Christians are not to be feared; they're to be encouraged.

In our main meeting with President Jiang, the subjects discussed included the value of religion to society, the positive role of religion in the United States, and the genuine concern of American religious believers about the status of religion in China. Questions were raised about human rights, abuses, and torture, and how the proper agencies can improve conditions.

We also stressed the need for China's religious believers, particularly Christians, to relate more fully with international church bodies. We explored the possibility of expanded exchanges of religious leaders, scholars, and others. We discussed the possibility of opening dialogue with the Holy See.

President Jiang observed that the reality of religious practice has not always fulfilled the founders' ideals. Foreign powers had bullied China during the nineteenth century, he noted, and many improper acts were carried out in the name of religion. Nevertheless, working from the "basis of a clear understanding of history," Mr. Jiang said, "Differences can be gradually narrowed, and common ground can be broadened."

The meeting, in fact, the whole mission, was unprecedented. Never before have three American religious leaders been invited to discuss religious issues at China's highest level.

At one point, President Jiang changed the subject and looked at me. He said, "Dr. Argue, some don't think I know much about religion. I know about your coreligionists."

He said, "I was a youth in a Shanghai hospital. I watched an older single lady in one of your hospitals work with the patients and take care of the patients," including him. He emphasized she was old and single. He said, "She never cared for herself. But from early, early morning till late at night until she was extremely tired, she gave of herself to us."

He said, "I know who you are." And then he went back to his dialogue. One plants. Another waters. And God gives the increase.

Second, he stopped in the discussion and turned and looked at me again and said, "You know, I've been having trouble understanding the Bible." It's interesting that he would admit in that forum that he was reading the Bible.

Before I left the hotel, I felt prompted to go back up to my room and get a Bible. That was a little risky. But I was obedient to the inner prompting, and I had a Bible with me (of course, it was one printed in China), and I felt this was the opportunity.

So after our formal discussions, I said, "Mr. President, you said you were having trouble reading the Bible."

He said, "Yes."

I said, "May I give you a Bible?"

He said, "Please."

I said, "Let me recommend that you read the Book of John."

A high-level U.S. embassy official was in the meeting. I sionary parents raised him in China until they were forced out in 1949, has worked with registered churches since 1981. He has also had contact with house-church members. Burklin says, "To the local Christians, it really doesn't make too much of a difference with whom they are registered. They would like to see the church expand." Burklin believes if the Communist state collapses, Chinese Christians will lose an important unifying force.

Burklin observes Chinese Christians across the board have taken responsibility for outreach and missions, unlike their dependency on foreigners prior to the 1949 revolution. "Chinese Christians are strengthening the social arm of the church to win the hearts of the people. I know of churches that even take offerings for [state] schools."

LIMITS OF COOPERATION: In spite of the ongoing dramas of religious repression in China, Christian ministries worldwide have regained a strong presence throughout the country, in relief work, adoption, pro-life advocacy, church support, Bible publishing, and leadership training.

Increasingly, American-based ministries are openly attempting to establish relationships with house-church and registered-church leaders. The 1998 Missions Handbook, published by the California-based Mission Advanced Research and Communications Center, reports that 155 Americans from more than 40 Protestant agencies work inside China. In addition, more than 660 Chinese citizens who are active in Christian ministry receive support from American missions organizations in the form of training, materials, or money for building improvements or construction.

Much of the support comes from the estimated 7,000 Christian churches for overseas Chinese, many of whom fled following the Communist revolution.

George Chen is a significant example of how Americans and Chinese are rewriting the ministry playbook. Born in Shanghai 64 years ago, Chen gave up university studies in economics for Bible school and began working as a missionary at age 18. "God called me to spread the gospel to the poor of the villages," Chen explains. "The cities have made progress. But in the villages, it's the same as ever. The people are very poor."

After the 1949 Communist revolution, Chen's work grew increasingly hazardous. He was jailed for religious activities in the 1950s. In 1960, he was sentenced to hard labor at a prison in Anhui Province in eastern China.

With a wife and son still in Shanghai, he saw little prospect for survival. "They tried to make things really bad for me by putting me to work in the cesspool," turned and shook his hand and said, "Thank you for your good work. This is a result of your good work." The official said, "Oh no. This is the Lord's doing." And then he became very serious and said, "God is at work in China."

What specific measures did you take on behalf of imprisoned religious leaders?

I saw the sovereign hand of God in this trip again and again, orchestrated in ways that showed a divine plan at work. We presented a list of 30 names of specific people. We were expecting to have some results back. Some of these are people in prison. Some are people who have been persecuted enough to be on the list. Arriving at that list was not easy. How do you isolate just 30 people? They have answered 8 so far. But they are inadequate in their details and scope. We're not satisfied.

What about discussions concerning the house-church movement? Did you meet with any of them?

We had multiple contacts with unregistered people. We did not want to put anybody in the church—registered or unregistered—in harm's way. There are those in the United States ready to skin us and send us up a flagpole because we did not spend our entire time with the unregistered church. But that was not the purpose, and the criticism was part of the risk of what we were doing. While the underground church does not want persecution, they are not afraid. It is a way of life for them.

Are house-church members penalized for their Christian activities?

We had a unique situation where we were given a certificate with the stamp of the village committee, telling about the restrictions put on a particular group of Christians. We were able to hand that to one of the officials.

It said, "If you don't stop going to the Christian church, your work team will not be included in the distribution." Which I took to mean distribution of funds. "Your electricity will be cut off, and your kids will not be able to go to school."

We presented a document in English in one meeting. And a woman official, said, "Oh yes, I've been given a copy of that in English. We're looking into it."

Then we asked about it in another meeting, and there was confusion. They said, "We've seen it in English, but we're not really sure if it's authentic. We'd like to see it in Chinese." So we

Chen recalls. "I spent my days deep in human waste, turning it with a shovel to make compost. They thought I'd be miserable, but actually I was happy. It smelled so bad that no one would come near me, so I could pray and sing aloud all day."

Yet physical adversity was only part of the hardship at the camp. "The brainwashing was the worst," Chen says. "If God had not been with me, I'd have collapsed under it. People who were physically stronger than I did."

In 1978, as official attitudes toward religion changed, Chen was finally released. He discovered that the churches he planted had grown to 5,000 from the original 300 members.

Now a U.S. citizen, Chen travels for nine months each year throughout China organizing churches, preaching, training leaders, and raising funds.

Because Chen works mostly in rural areas, he has been able to enlist the cooperation of local government leaders as well as house-church leaders in his ministry efforts.

In May, a journey brought Chen deep into the rugged wilderness of Yunnan Province to show the needs of Lisu tribal people to Ralph Plumb, president of International Aid, a relief and mission-support agency of Spring Lake, Michigan.

Wedged between Tibet and the countries of Southeast Asia, Yunnan remains one of the least-known areas of China.

The Lisu were converted from demon worship early in the century by missionaries. In the early years of Communist rule, the tribal people were forbidden to worship. Their Bibles were confiscated, and some of the people were imprisoned or killed. Many fled across the mountains to nearby Myanmar (Burma). Yet most remained faithful. The year that brought Chen's release also brought them freedom to worship openly again.

With special permits to enter the territory normally closed to foreigners, Chen and Plumb traveled in trucks provided by the provincial government to the remote village of Kang Po near the upper Mekong River.

Mountain people waited to lead them up a steep foot trail into misty green valleys. They passed log and plank houses clinging to slopes. Meager crops of corn, rye, and wheat smear mountainsides so steep that farmers lie on their sides when they plant and harvest to keep from tumbling downward.

"I've never seen people in China poorer than the Lisu," Chen says. "They have not enough food."

Yet the welcome at a village named Wahsaluke was lavish. Many of the 900 residents lined both sides of the trail applauding the visitors and shaking their hands. They provided basins of spring water for washing and feasts of freshly killed chicken, eggs, fried ferns, corn cakes, rye pancakes, and honey.

"The Lisu people love very much," Chen explains. "Really, they follow the teaching of the gospel."

Plumb saw the log frame of a new school his agency financed through Chen. The visitors worshiped with villagers in a dark and primitive log-and-plank church building so rotted that local officials fear it might collapse.

Both Chen and government authorities encouraged International Aid to finance a new church structure. Chen had also arranged a cash gift to buy 100 goats loaned to families for breeding then returned for reloaning. "But the greatest need of all," Chen emphasizes, "is for trained church leaders. Christian-presented a copy of the original Chinese certificate. At least four times we presented it but did not get an adequate reply.

Leadership shortage: A Catholic priest in one of China's southern provinces hears a peasant's confession. Both Catholic and Protestant churches are experiencing a severe shortage of trained clergy.

What messages do you want to convey after this historic trip to China?

We often talked about the Ping-Pong diplomacy that took place in the seventies: the result of a full, open relationship with China. This was certainly much more significant than Ping-Pong diplomacy. This was diplomacy at the highest level, where the case was made for America's concern with religious freedom.

Americans do not understand that at any time the Chinese government can come in and require a church to register. That is foreign to Americans. If China's leaders are going to understand the American Congress, they've got to understand the meaning of religious liberty.

Second, I feel it was the opening of the door for the beginning of continuing and further dialogue. Once I was specifically addressed: "Until you die, any time you come into these offices, you will be our guest." We now have a degree of stewardship and responsibility—as God leads—to provide for further dialogue and further opportunity for continued development and diplomacy along this line.

Also, in the case of the 30 people, it was very clearly articulated, these are only 30 out of a large body of individuals. We want to hear an answer. We want action on these.

Was one of your goals to understand more deeply the push and pull over religious issues within Chinese society?

That's right. The religion issue has to be understood in light of a changing China. China couldn't feed their population when they had the collective farms. The basic profile of the Chinese psyche is that they are not collective-farm people.

They are entrepreneurs, the business people of the Far East. They're hard workers. They're creative. They're bright. The Chinese government gave farmers the opportunity to develop some of their own land and sell the excess. It worked so well that most collective farms are history in China today.

Has the evangelical movement appropriately engaged itself on the issue of religious persecution?

We have a tendency to polarize and to make it black and white. And I'm very concerned about the whole move of American evangelicals speaking out against religious persecution be focused on the facts and not undocumented stories. NAE provided the catalyst document in our statement of conscience [www.nae.net]. It's the benchmark, but so many have gone beyond that statement.

I'm also concerned about how much of the public's concern is being used now to raise money to perpetuate ministries.

Tremendous things are happening on this issue. The silence about religious persecution worldwide is being broken. We are getting the attention of the right people.

CT

ity is growing, but because we don't have trained leaders, cults and heresies are springing up. Nine thousand evangelists should be trained," he says.

But the spirit of cooperation that Chen has forged in rural areas has not always translated into urban settings. When Chen traveled to a village near a major urban area in southern China, he was invited to preach at a Sunday service. But at the last minute, officials denied permission for him to preach.

MORE TURNING TO CHRIST: China missions experts who have studied the growth of Christianity during the past 35 says Daniel H. Bays, history professor at the University of Kansas and author of Christianity in China: From the Eighteenth Century to the Present (Stanford, 1996). "Nobody believes in communism anymore. This is one reason why people are becoming Christians. There is a lot of corruption, people are cynical, and ever since the 1980s, there's been a good bit of public anger with the government officials lining their own pockets."

New research on Christian growth in certain provinces reveals how China in some regions is turning to Christianity. In the eastern coastal province of Jiang-

Christian theology, teaching, and practice. These include:

- Lightning from the East, which promotes the idea that Christ has come again, bodily reincarnated in a woman named Lightning, and that only those who believe in this female messiah will be saved.

- The Disciples (Mentuhui Society), started in 1989 by farmer Ji Sanbao, who has a strong end-times orientation and calls for overthrow of the government.

- The Lingling Cult, which was begun as a religious movement in 1985 by Hua Xuehe, who sees himself as a second Jesus and in 1990 prophesied the second coming of Christ.

THE GOSPEL THREAT? The Chinese government has increasingly employed the strategy of associating charismatic religious leaders with antisocial cults and charging those leaders with violating criminal laws, not religious regulations.

In the case of the imprisoned evangelist Xu, the founder of BAM, the government has alleged that Xu's church members have committed suicide amid intense religious fervor. Church leaders deny the allegation.

But it was not Xu's theology itself that posed a threat to the Chinese government, China scholars say. Xu's covert, independent network of evangelists was the true target of the state. Last year, six other house-church evangelists were arrested with Xu as they apparently laid plans to coordinate their outreach efforts.

In a discussion with CT, a Chinese central government official who asked not to be named reported that the government's actions in the Xu case reveal the depth of its concerns about independent Christian evangelists. But he said, "I don't think it's important for the church in China to get Xu out [of prison]. No matter how many people or church leaders are put into jail, the church keeps on growing."

"The reason is that the church is not controlled by these leaders. The church develops in China in a very strange and incredible way."

As Xu serves out his prison sentence, hidden Chinese evangelists travel to western China, Vietnam, Myanmar (Burma), Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan, and Outer Mongolia with no visas, passports, or support. Asia Outreach's Wang says, "But they have feet. They travel as far as transportation will take them; then they walk into those countries."

With reporting in China by Tony Carnes, Bruce Brander, Carol Thiessen, and Alex Buchan.

years often say that the decade-long cultural revolution in the 1960s and '70s was the church's time of greatest persecution and greatest rate of growth.

But in the late 1990s, the economic revolution in China is a central element in driving individuals toward religion and spirituality. China scholars say the surge of working-age adults from rural villages to industrial areas, along with urban unemployment, has created a displaced "floating population" of 100 million people, desperate for work and living on the margins of society.

Among China's 1.2 billion people, more than 700 million are considered non-religious, making them the largest group of unchurched people in the world. With the collapse of communist ideology, Chinese society is facing a vacuum of values and beliefs, and many Chinese are turning to nationalism, consumerism, or religion.

"The prestige of the party has gone," su, the site of the nationalist capital of Nanjing, there are 890,000 Christians, four times as many as a decade earlier.

Tony Lambert, director of Chinese research for a large mission agency, says China's leaders are well aware of Christian meteoric growth rates, which drives their need for stricter control. "I did a sampling and analysis of letters we are receiving from China," he said. "I grouped them by province. Jiangsu [Province] letters reported the worst persecution. Anhui and Henan [Provinces] also reported very tight control in some localities."

For Lambert and other scholars of Chinese Christianity, the growth of new religious sects, Christian cults, and heresies in many ways poses a greater threat to the church than the state.

While some heresies develop from non-Christian religions, dozens of heretical groups in China that are drawing millions of followers develop from distortions of Christians hold the missing key to racial reconciliation—but it won't be popular.

SPENCER PERKINS

Playing the GRACE CARD

We are at an impasse over race because we cannot forgive, declared Spencer Perkins in what became his last public statement. Speaking at a conference on racial reconciliation last January, the activist and writer confessed his past struggles in dealing with “white folks” and how he discovered a radical way forward in healing our racial divide. The following week he died of heart failure at the age of 44. Perkins, along with Chris Rice, directed Reconcilers Fellowship in Jackson, Mississippi, coauthored More than Equals: Racial Healing for the Sake of the Gospel (IVP), and coedited Reconcilers magazine.

It was winter 1970, and my mother was taking my seven siblings and me to visit our father in the hospital. No auto accident or natural illness had landed him in this life-threatening condition. Rather, it was the nightsticks and fists of white law-enforcement officers that had nearly beaten him to death for his civil-rights activities.

My sister Joanie, then 14 years old, took one look at my battered father and stormed out of the room repeating angrily, “I hate white people. I will never like them!”

My mother tried to convince her that her attitude was not very Christlike. But at that moment, with my father lying bruised and swollen, I could tell that even though my mother knew the right things to say, her heart was not in the words she spoke.

Not that it would have mattered. My sister was having no part of those tired, old words—love and forgiveness—anyway. Those white people were not going to get off that easily. All of us siblings wanted those men to get what they deserved. To our knowledge, they never did.

Today, to the casual observer, my sister looks as though she has reneged on her vow. She has white friends, attends an interracial church, and functions well in a white environment. But all her life, like many African Americans, Joanie has had a safe, time-tested method for emotionally dealing with whites.

There is a scene from the movie Roots that illustrates the way blacks tend to label whites. Tom and his family (newly freed slaves) have befriended a poor white couple. Against tradition, George and Mary treat their new black friends as equals. One night Tom is visited by white night riders, tied to a tree, and about to be horse-whipped for being “uppity.” In a backhanded way, George saves Tom’s life by demanding that he deliver the whipping.

Afterward, Tom’s young son sits in tears on the porch with Mary. Summoning all the hate and bitterness an eight-year-old can muster, he vents his feelings. “I hate white folks,” he sobs bitterly. “And if I get a chance I’ll do to them what they did to my daddy.”

“But what about me and George?” Mary asks. “We’re white.”

The boy looks up as if surprised that Mary could say such a silly thing. “But you and George are different,” he says. “You good white people.”

This is precisely how many blacks deal with whites today. From a distance, they are “white folks” and therefore suspect. Once we get to know them up close and personal, we may mentally remove them from the “bad” category.

Explaining this procedure is risky. Generalizations are always dangerous; and many of my black brothers and sisters feel that revealing our secrets in mixed company borders on treason. But there are also many of us African Americans who are growing tired of the tiptoeing that takes place in so many racial-reconciliation gatherings. For us, it is time to move into deeper waters.

White folks

There is an automatic mental procedure that takes place for many blacks upon first meeting a white. First a decision must be made as to whether or not we will give him or her the time of day. If so, then, immediately the "Is he for real or phony?" antennas are raised, the "white superiority" sensors powered up, and the "racism" detector activated—all in an effort to analyze quickly any "vibes" and interpret any data, verbal or nonverbal, from the subject. All this is necessary to determine whether the white person deserves special consideration as an "individual," that is, a "good white person," or as a "typical" white person who should be quickly relegated to the simple category "white folks," as in "You know how white folks is."

Whether the label is deserved or undeserved, in the minds of most blacks, all white people are "white folks" until they prove themselves "different." It is part life experience, part self-preservation, and part projection. I have questioned very intelligent black people who admit that this "sizing up" of whites is often not very objective. But it takes place just the same.

Now, before you white readers get too indignant, you need to acknowledge that many of you do something similar when you meet a black person: "Is this a run-of-the-mill black or is he or she an exception that I can respect and treat like a peer?"

This is not intended to be another hoop for whites to jump through. This is about black responsibility in the reconciliation process.

Obviously, this judging is unfair to whites. But most blacks don't care about the fairness of it. They have a convenient rationalization that goes something like this: In the grand historical scheme of fairness, the incidence of blacks beating the system, blacks placing unfair demands on whites, and whites getting the short end of the stick today is only a brief moment in history—whether this happens through the courts or through affirmative action. And these minor inconveniences whites experience don't even deposit an ounce of weight toward balancing the cosmic scales of historical justice.

There is a problem for those of us who believe that God intends for all believers to be one family and that our faith should supersede our race: We sense that something is not right in our attitudes about whites. Something has been conspicuously missing in our dialogue about racial justice and reconciliation. It is the one characteristic that sets our God and faith apart from all the other religions. It is our secret weapon and the major reason why Christians have the best shot at making racial reconciliation a reality.

I am not all that excited about bringing up the subject of grace. It's similar to the way white people don't like apologies for slavery and the injustices of the past because of where that may lead—to a demand for reparations.

Part of my consciousness trembles because it has already calculated the consequences of allowing grace to take its rightful place in reconciliation. That part of me already knows where I am heading with this and that it will not go over very well with my homeys. Still, I know that it is the truth according to the gospel of Jesus.

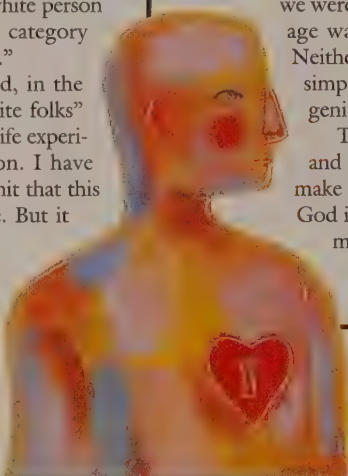

Irreconcilable differences

For more than 10 years, Chris Rice, my white ministry partner, and I have preached the importance of relationships in achieving racial reconciliation. We are so adamant about this because most of what we have learned and now teach comes out of our own relationship.

For what was not the first time nor likely to be the last, Chris and I had come to what seemed like insurmountable obstacles in our relationship. By summer's end, both of us held tightly to a long mental list of ways that each of us had hurt or disappointed the other. We were close to settling for irreconcilable differences and going our separate ways.

But in order to demonstrate that we were good Christian boys, we sought the counsel of some dear friends. In my mind, we were just going through the motions. The damage was already done. The pain was too great. Neither of us was prepared for the overwhelming simplicity, the complete absurdity, and illogical genius of God's amazing grace.

The brand of Christianity that both Chris and I feebly attempt to live by demands that we make a good-faith effort to follow when we feel God is leading. Trying to live up to that commitment allowed us to be bushwhacked by John and Judy Alexander and their ramblings about grace.

Practicing forgiveness will mean "white folks" category and practice

"Yeah, yeah, I know all about grace," I thought. I could quote John 3:16 when I was knee high to a duck. Grace is God's love demonstrated to us, even though we don't deserve it. But in all my 43 years of evangelical teaching, I never understood until now that God intended for grace to be a way of life for his followers. Maybe I'm the only one who missed it, but judging by the way that we all get along, I don't think so. Sure, I knew that we are supposed to love one another as Christ loved us. But somehow it was much easier for me to swallow the lofty untested notion of dying for each other than simply giving grace to brothers and sisters on a daily basis, the way God gives us grace. Maybe I'm dense, but I just never got it.

At our relationship's weakest moment, Chris and I saw, as clearly as we had ever seen anything, that only by giving each other grace could we find healing and restoration. We could either hold on to our grievances and demand that all our hurts be redressed, or we could follow God's example, give each other grace, and trust God when we lacked the ability to forgive. We chose grace.

I heard a well-known Christian black woman tell about her grown daughter getting into a fight with a white woman on an airplane. Although she taught her children all their lives to be nonviolent, a smile crept across her face and a gleam of pleasure twinkled in her eyes as she described how her daughter "gave that white woman a black eye." Although this woman believed wholeheartedly in racial reconciliation, there was still something deep down in her that felt it was payback every time a white person got the short end of the stick at the hands of someone black. And she's not alone.

Because blacks have suffered unjustly at the hands of whites, our brand of Christianity has allowed us to hang on to this particular category of unforgiveness. Sure, we say that we are willing to forgive, and we do. But that special dispensation is reserved for whites who prove that they are "worthy."

I stumbled across Philip Yancey's landmark book, What's So Amazing About Grace, just when Chris and I were discovering grace all over again. God was attacking me with grace from all angles. According to Yancey, "Grace is unfair, which is one of the hardest things about it. It is unreasonable to expect a woman to forgive the terrible things her father did to her just because he apologizes many years later. . . . Grace, however, is not about fairness."

It is just as unreasonable for blacks to forgive whites for past and present mistreatment. But grace is not about being fair. We wouldn't dare demand fairness from God. What's so amazing about grace is that God forgives us and embraces us even though we don't deserve it. What's new about grace, at least for me, is that because we are grateful for what God did for us, we allow him to do the same to others through us. This means that if I know this loving God who is so full of grace, then I will forgive, accept, and embrace those who, like me, don't deserve my grace and forgiveness.

Our willingness and ability to give grace or to forgive others is an accurate indicator of how well we know God.

Learning to dismantle the old seeing whites as individuals.

A new player

We African Americans have rightly considered much of white Christianity illegitimate because it accommodated itself so conveniently to racism. But lately I have been questioning our own brand of Christianity. What does our inability to forgive and embrace undeserving whites say about our knowledge of and intimacy with this God of grace?

When I was much younger and just beginning to wrestle with the concept of reconciliation, I was occasionally asked if I had forgiven the men who beat and almost killed my father, or the white classmates who made my life hell while I was integrating a segregated school. At that time, my response always focused on the ones who had committed the offense. "They've never asked me to forgive them," I would say. End of discussion.

However, Jesus knew that the only sure way to peace on earth and peace of mind was for humans to practice forgiveness. His last words on the cross were spoken aloud so that we would have an example to follow. "Father, forgive them because they don't know what they are doing." Jesus forgave without being asked. For our own sakes, not the offenders', we are expected to do the same.

Black Christians possessing a truly Christlike faith would not only be compelled, but would also be willing and empowered to forgive specific white offenders. Moreover, we would have the faith and compassion to begin practicing forgiveness to the nameless collective we refer to as "white folks."

I believe that African Americans will easily grasp the implications and magnitude of totally and unconditionally forgiving "white folks." Some blacks will find ways to justify themselves.

Others will rise to the challenge. My sister, who vowed as a child never to like white people, is just now beginning the process.

In December she participated in a first-of-its-kind gathering in our city. We brought together 25 black Christian leaders and 25 white Christian leaders for an intense, honest, off-the-record dialogue on racial reconciliation. I have been participating in racial dialogue gatherings for more than 15 years, and everyone agreed that none of us had ever been involved in anything this honest. Two days after the gathering, in our small group meeting, my sister bravely confessed through her tears that she, for the first time in her life, had begun the process of forgiving "white folks."

For Joanie and many other African Americans, practicing forgiveness will mean beginning to dismantle the old "white folks" category and practicing the discipline of seeing whites as individuals. It will mean responding with Christlike compassion and kindness to whites who reach out a hand, instead of going through the process of determining whether or not they are "worthy." It will mean no longer being obsessed with the blindness of our white brothers and sisters at the expense of tolerating our own.

And finally, reconciliation will ultimately mean not only forgiving and tolerating, but fully embracing each other as brothers and sisters, all of us equally unworthy in the eyes of God.

No, it ain't fair, but it's right. And God understands that there will be slip-ups and wrong turns, moments of anger and unforgiveness. But as we grow in our discipleship of grace, each day will bring more victories. And when we fail, our God, who is full of grace, is eager to forgive. The more I have come to know this divine quality, the dearer he becomes to me, and the more I want to demonstrate this quality to others.

What about justice?

I grew up in one of the most justice-oriented families in this country. My father has been called a modern-day prophet of justice. Two of his most popular books are entitled Let Justice Roll Down and With Justice for All.

Nothing that I have been learning about grace and forgiveness diminishes my belief in Christians working for justice, especially on behalf of the poor and oppressed. I know many tired soldiers who, like me, have fought for social justice most of their lives. Nothing in the Scriptures even hints that these modern-day prophets of justice should soften their message.

But I know that some of them have carried an extra weight of resentment against people they consider oppressors and against people of privilege who seem to care nothing about the poor. I recognize it in them because I feel it in myself. But what I have found and latched onto is a whole new way of looking at those who refuse to hear the message of justice.

Although we must continue to speak on behalf of those who are oppressed and warn oppressors, my willingness to forgive them is not dependent on how they respond. Being able to extend grace and to forgive people sets us free. We no longer need to spend precious emotional energy thinking about the day oppressors will get what they deserve.

What I am learning about grace lifts a weight from my shoulders, which is nothing short of invigorating. When we can forgive and accept those who refuse to listen to God's command to do justice, it allows them to hear God's judgment without feeling a

A series of 24, available individually or in a boxed set (ISBN 0-7363-0136-4)

New believers earnestly desire to know the Lord Jesus in a deeper way. They have a hunger for the Word of God and long to understand and fully experience the reality of salvation. In twenty-four simple yet profound messages, Watchman Nee guides new believers through some of the most pressing issues that they face, helping them to mature in the Lord and to be built up with other believers.

Topics in this series include:
 Baptism Confession with the Mouth
 Terminating the Past If Anyone Sins
 Witnessing Separation from the World
 Leading Men to Christ Consecration
 Confession and Repentance Prayer
 Reading the Bible Seeking God's Will
 Forgiveness and Restoration Meeting
 Rising Early The Discipline of God
 Governmental Forgiveness Our Life
 Deliverance Withstanding the Devil
 Loving the Brothers The Priesthood
 The Discipline of the Holy Spirit
 The Body of Christ

Now Available
 at Christian Bookstores from Living Stream Ministry
 through Spring Arbor

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Web Site Directory

- Arab World Ministries
www.gospelcom.net/awm
- Calvin College (Alumni)
www.calvin.edu
- Gordon Conwell Theo. Seminary
www.gcts.edu
- New Tribes Mission/Destination Summit
www.ntm.org/summit
- Pioneer Clubs
www.pioneerclubs.org

To list your Web address in a Christianity Today Web directory
 phone (630) 260-6202 x239.

Check Us Out Online!

Keyword: CO
 on AMERICA ONLINE

One of the top
 50 sites on
 America Online

- Community Interactivity.
Constantly packed chat rooms, dozens of weekly events, hundreds of message board topics to meet any interest.
- Current News & Magazines.
Including: Christianity Today, Today's Christian Woman, Computing Today, plus daily news updates.
- Music & Media • Resource Center • Church, Bible & Reference • Marketplace • & More

Use AOL's integrated Web browser to access
 Christianity.Net, Christianity Today, Inc.'s
 exciting new Web site.

www.christianity.net

A member of Christian Community Network
 www.christcom.net

- NET/SEARCH.
One of the most comprehensive Christian Internet directories on the Web with nearly 5,000 links to Christian Web sites.
- Church Locator.
A searchable database of over 4,000 links to church Web sites from around the world. Add a FREE link to your church's Web site.
- Newsstand • Message Boards • & More

Get unlimited access to America Online
 and the Internet for $19.95 a month.
 Call 1-800-633-8888 for a free start-up kit.
 To advertise online call (630) 260-6202 x 239

personal judgment from us. Which, in the end gives our message more integrity. The ability to give grace while preaching justice makes our witness even more effective.

Taking baby steps

"Daddy, come quick," shouted my four-year-old daughter. "Someone stole the presents from under the Christmas tree."

At first I thought it was a joke that the children were playing on me. But immediately I could see that they were visibly upset. Apparently someone had come into our house while we slept, picked out some choice presents, removed the blanket that covers my favorite chair, and used it to haul away about a dozen or so gifts that were to be given to the children and to friends and family on Christmas morning.

To say that the children were angry would be an understatement. My 11-year-old son, Jonathan, after realizing that among the gifts stolen were his brand new Nike sneakers, stormed out of the house in tears.

I sat silent on my coverless chair, stunned, fuming. I had seen the children's Christmas special How the Grinch Stole Christmas dozens of times since childhood. But I never believed such a tale could come true. How do you forgive a person like this? How do I teach my children to practice forgiveness?

Because it is unnatural, we have to practice forgiveness, like any other discipline. According to Dr. King, "Forgiveness is not just an occasional act: It is a permanent attitude."

Later that day I put the question to my son, "How should we respond as Christians to the person who tried to steal our Christmas?"

"Yeah, yeah, I know, Dad," he said. "Even though he doesn't deserve it, we're supposed to give him grace."

Sure, I knew that the words that came out of his mouth were almost the complete opposite of what he was feeling in his heart (I knew because I felt the same way). But I also knew we had to start somewhere. And if, one step at a time, our discipleship as Christians could include giving each other grace, if our children could learn and practice forgiveness as well as they practice praise and worship, if we could literally create a counterculture of grace, then just maybe, as we all mature in our faith, our hearts could finally line up with our words.

And the world would have to take notice. CT

How my hometown deals with being the execution capital of the world.

VIRGINIA STEM OWENS

Karla Faye's Final Stop

LISA RIGSTAD

When I moved back this year to Huntsville, Texas, my childhood home, only one small cloud shaded my anticipation of warmer weather, a longer growing season, and waking up to mockingbirds calling through the morning mists. Though it has grown a good bit since I lived here as a child, my hometown has remained verdant, well kept, and user friendly. Live oaks still arch the walks of the state university. Redbuds, jonquils, and bluebonnets paint the early spring hillsides. The crime rate is low and church attendance high. Huntsville's public-spirited citizens volunteer to teach literacy classes, sort used clothing for Good Shepherd Mission, and serve as docents for the historical museum.

Such manifest virtues got Huntsville named the most desirable place to live in Texas on a recent survey of the nation's best small cities. But the compilers failed to mention the distinction that darkens my hometown's history: Huntsville is also the execution capital of the nation.

If you drive just two blocks east of the courthouse square, past the auto-parts store, the shop advertising Perfect Nails, and the First Baptist Church, you come to The Walls, the prison where the state of Texas last year put to death 37 men—a number that equals the combined executions in all the other states. Since 1976, when the U.S. Supreme Court lifted the ban on capital punishment, one-third of all the nation's executions have taken place in this small town. At this moment, 446 people wait on Death Row at the Ellis Unit, a few miles outside the city limits.

Huntsville citizens are not proud of this distinction. In fact, it makes them—or I should say us—downright uncomfortable, especially since the executions, which used to be done in the dead of night, are now performed at six in the evening, right about the time most of us are sitting down to our suppers. And “performed” became the operative word last February at the execution of Karla Faye Tucker, who, 14 years earlier, had taken a pickax and, with a friend, hacked the life out of two people. A week before her sentence was scheduled to be carried out, camera crews, international news teams, Amnesty International representatives, and victims’-rights advocates crowded our town to chronicle the event. Every motel room was booked, the town’s restaurants were packed, the Enterprise car rental office overwhelmed. Even the stylist who did Bianca Jagger’s hair for the occasion got interviewed by the press.

No one denies that the town is economically dependent on the prison system—or as it is now called, the Department of Criminal Justice. Crime pays in Huntsville—the salaries of our six prisons’ 7,000 employees, to be specific. Gray TDCJ (Texas Department of Criminal Justice) uniforms show up everywhere—shopping at Kroger, picking up children at daycare centers, eating at fast-food restaurants. If Texas felons suddenly reformed or went elsewhere to rob banks or shoot their wives, the Wal-Mart superstore out by the Interstate would have to shut its automatic doors.

Yet incarcerating criminals is not quite the same as executing them, especially when they turn into born-again Christians. Though the local newspaper’s informal poll showed most of Huntsville’s citizens favored executing Karla Faye, despite her religious conversion and changed life, the citizenry would still have preferred the sentence be carried out elsewhere.

So even as the city’s tourism board met to figure out a way to bring good out of this evil, ordinary townsfolk retreated to their homes to wait out the media invasion, the way they would batten down against a hurricane blowing in off the Gulf. Everyone knew that rowdy fraternity boys, drinking beer and waving Rebel flags, would treat the execution like a human fox hunt. Yet even diehard death-penalty advocates shuddered at the bad impression of our town these unseemly shenanigans would make. We expected that the world’s media, camped on our small doorstep, would portray Huntsvillians as uniformly sanctioning and collectively responsible for killing this repentant woman.

Huntsville has always been the location for executions in Texas, yet until Karla Faye Tucker’s execution we had never felt our imputed guilt quite so keenly. The U.S. Supreme Court’s 1972 ruling against capital punishment had given Huntsville a respite from its dark heritage, and even after the death penalty became legal again in 1976, another six years would pass before anyone was actually executed in Texas. That decade-long hiatus temporarily lightened the dark cloud over our town.

But during the past decade, steadily growing numbers of convicted murderers have been making their way to the gurney waiting on the second floor of The Walls. Before the ban on capital punishment, prisoners had met their end strapped down in Old Sparky, the low-tech electric chair now displayed in the Texas Prison Museum on the courthouse square between Rogers Shoe Store and Ernst Jewelers. As a child, I had listened to the local legend telling why these executions were carried out at midnight. Supposedly, the lights dimmed all over town when the switch was thrown. But I never quite understood the point. Was the late hour meant to avoid an inconvenient interruption of services, or to evade an unpleasant reminder of what was happening across town?

We don’t have to worry about execution brownouts nowadays, however. After the right to rid themselves of their worst offenders against peace and safety was restored to the states, Texas initiated a purportedly more humane method of execution—lethal injection. Now the smell of singed feathers no longer pervades the execution chamber. The prisoner’s limbs don’t jerk, and there’s no danger the body will catch fire as one did in Florida last year. The only accouterments are a white-sheeted hospital gurney and a doctor with a syringe containing pancuronium chloride. The process is quick—the chemical takes effect in 18 to 20 seconds—and the experience is certainly easier on the survivors’ sensibilities. But I wonder if such medically modeled executions are good for our collective soul? Does this switch in styles show we have grown more humane or merely more fastidious about our own feelings?

My grandfather, who worked as a prison guard during the chain-gang era when a prison was still called a penitentiary, insisted on the justice of the death penalty as retribution. A life for a life. At the same time, he considered executions occasions of high seriousness. He debated the subject with rhetorical passion, but also with a reverential awe that today seems almost antique. To take a human life was to put oneself in the place of God, who only could give it. Though he upheld society’s right to exact retribution for capital crimes, he owned that pulling the lever that released the necessary voltage to kill a man might be beyond his personal capacities. And he pitied the man whose job it was.

By that simple confession he early and unwittingly influenced my own attitude toward this thorny subject more than any theologian or legal expert since. Could I throw the switch? It came down to that simple question. As a child, I could feel my skin grow cold when I pondered an answer. However, since coming back to Huntsville, I have yet to hear anyone wonder aloud if he could depress the plunger in the syringe.

Sometimes it takes an outsider to point out the elephant in the living room. The town’s Episcopal rector, still considered a newcomer here after four years, decided last year to see for himself what goes on outside The Walls during an execution. He stood in the parking lot across the street from the prison on an evening when the death sentence was served on one of the 37 men last year. Groups for and against the death penalty clotted opposite corners of the parking lot, he reported. Some had come to celebrate, some to accuse. “One side was yelling ‘Kill him!’ and the other side was yelling ‘Murderers!’”

RNS/REUTERS

*Could I throw the switch?
It came down to that simple question.*

he said. "I didn't feel like I belonged on either corner."

Still, he felt the church should be taking some notice of such a momentous event. Among the town's 31 churches, no congregation had ever met to pray on the day of an execution. However, on February 3 at 5:30 P.M., just as Karla Faye Tucker was being readied for the gurney, some of the members of Saint Stephen's parish, along with a number of other townsfolk, gathered at the church to pray. Television camera crews, getting wind of this new angle, asked to film the service but were turned away. The service was not a demonstration for or against capital punishment. We were there to pray for someone who was dying, for those already dead, for those they left behind.

In my pew that evening, I feel my skin grow cold again the way it did when I listened to my grandfather telling about the man throwing the switch for Old Sparky. I think about the husband of the woman Karla Faye killed. His wheelchair is parked now, facing a plate-glass window through which the state's invited guests view executions. He has told reporters he will relish watching Karla Faye die.

A church member who leads weekend prison retreats reads the Old Testament lesson—Genesis 4, the story of Cain. "Sin is crouching at the door. . . . Am I my brother's keeper? . . . Your brother's blood cries out to me from the ground. . . . My punishment is more than I can bear. . . . Then the Lord put a mark on Cain so that no one who found him would kill him" (NIV).

I recall the slogans on the placards I saw in the parking lot across from The Walls. "Hands off Cain," demand signs on one corner. "Forget the injection, use a pickax," the other side's say.

A man who works as a prison guard reads the New Testament lesson—Luke 23, the thief on the cross. "Are you not the Christ? . . . we are receiving the due reward for our deeds. . . . [T]oday you will be with me in Paradise" (RSV).

I think about the brother of the murder victim, a thin, sad man I saw interviewed this afternoon. His sister's death opened a way for him to find peace in Jesus, he told the reporter. Otherwise, he would still harbor the same rage the rest of his family feels. They don't speak to him anymore, he told the reporter. "I understand. I just don't know what they'll do when they wake up a year from now and find the pain is still there."

The Prayers of the People are led by a retired parole officer. We pray for Karla Faye's sincere contrition and confidence in Jesus Christ, for eternal peace for her victims, for forgiving hearts for their families, for the guards that are preparing Karla Faye for execution, for the chaplains, the warden, the judges, the jury, the attorneys. The board of pardons and paroles, the governor. For the executioners.

And last, we pray "for the people of Huntsville, that we remain distressed and avoid complacency." I find the words sticking in my throat. It was easy to pray for the others. It's harder to pray for ourselves.

In fact, I find the experience both an upper and a downer. Holding a person, rather than an issue, in your mind makes it more painful to picture the scene unfolding on both sides of the plate-glass window at The Walls. Nevertheless, I feel a strangely incongruous surge of joy as we stand and hold hands to sing "Amazing Grace," the default setting these days for expressing the spiritually inexpressible. Where does this joy come from, I wonder? It feels like some kind of victory—not ours, certainly. We are merely witnessing that repentance counts, even when the cost is everything. That forgiveness alters reality.

The next week, however, we discover to our dismay that we have to come back and do it all over again. This time we're praying for Steven Renfro who, on August 25, 1996, according to his confession, took 70 Valium tablets, washed them down with liquor, then dressed in camouflage clothes, blackened his face, and shot his girlfriend, Rhena, and her Aunt Rose, who lived with them in the East Texas town of Marshall. Afterward, armed with four guns, one an assault rifle, and 500 rounds of ammunition, he went to a nearby trailer house and shot George Counts, a man against whom he had a grudge. He fired 150 rounds into the trailer, and when police turned up to check out reports of gunfire, he turned the patrol car "into Swiss cheese," hitting an officer in the shoulder.

The state of Steven Renfro's soul remains a mystery. Unlike Karla Faye, he has granted no interviews from prison, nor has he appeared on television or developed a Web page. We only see video clips of him on the evening news the day he dies. Surrounded by a phalanx of gray uniforms, the prisoner moves in the protracted bob of slow motion along the hall as if they are all—the condemned man and his guards—swimming through the same thick tide of time. His hair is dark, as is the full mustache weighing his grim mouth. His eyes catch the camera only briefly before turning back to focus down the hall where they are leading him.

As soon as he was taken into custody, Steven Renfro confessed to the arresting officers and has never gone back on that confession. As it turned out, Rick Berry, the district attorney who prosecuted this case, had gone to high school with the accused. Steven Renfro made it easy for his former classmate by assuring the jury at the conclusion of his trial that he deserved to die for his crime. They didn't argue with him. Neither did the judge. In the months that followed, Steven Renfro was adamant that no appeals be filed on his behalf. He wanted the death sentence carried out as soon as possible.

The state of Texas obliged him. It took 14 years to kill Karla Faye Tucker. It took only 10 months to execute Steven Renfro. Karla Faye had thousands of supporters. Steven Renfro had Rick Berry.

After the hearing to set the execution date, the district attorney picked up hamburgers at McDonald's and shared them with the murderer in his office. As they ate, they reminisced about growing up in Marshall, then talked about life and the death penalty. "We had a kind of handshake deal," Rick Berry says, "that we were going to see this thing through."

Twelve hundred demonstrators, both for and against the death penalty, along with two hundred reporters, had poured into Huntsville days in advance of Karla Faye Tucker's execution. The next week, a scant two dozen people showed up less than an hour before Steven Renfro was scheduled to die. Rick Berry was one of them.

Though Steven Renfro had refused to give any interviews from Death Row, Rick Berry, his prosecutor and friend, provided the public some interpretation for his unusual—and some would say misguided—resistance to judicial appeals. According to Berry, Steven Renfro's religious convictions governed those decisions as surely as Karla Faye's conversion guided hers. He saw his execution "as a way to get to heaven," the attorney says. "By voluntarily going ahead and being punished, it's like atonement. He was pretty adamant about this."

The notion of atonement, of making up for, of balancing moral accounts in some cosmic zero-sum game, has little currency in contemporary Western culture. It's the opposite of filing for bankruptcy. It's like submitting to elective retribution. Even Christians struggle to understand the concept. Most of us find atonement efficacious only when applied to Jesus.

Karla Faye Tucker's supporters, especially evangelicals, based their opposition to her execution on the changes her conversion effected in her. Even inside the prison's walls she was making a positive contribution to society. So why wipe out her potential for doing good? For years the same argument has been made by those who see prison as a means to rehabilitation, a position evangelicals have not always taken. They have tended to agree with Steven Renfro and the Old Testament: criminals must pay with their own lives for the ones they take. Retribution makes sense in a tit-for-tat world. It elevates the value of human life by putting a high price on it. But can one life make up for the three Steven Renfro took? Can anyone work the moral arithmetic required to solve this problem, I wondered. Only a few people came to the service that evening. How do you weigh the mere handful of prayers for Steven Renfro?

Two weeks later, though, the church is full again. It's Ash Wednesday, and the execution scheduled for that evening has been stayed, pending an appeal. Instead of the Litany for an Execution, we are starting our series of Lenten soup suppers and speakers. Tonight the soup is vegetable and the speaker James Brazzil, chaplain at The Walls unit, the man the state of Texas pays to provide spiritual counsel for the people it puts to death.

At supper, I sit across the table from a man in a deep blue shirt who identifies himself as a producer from National Public Radio. He explains he came to Huntsville to do a story on the execution scheduled for that day. "I guess I'll have to leave though," he says, hunkering over his bowl. "I know it sounds callous, but the execution is the story. If it doesn't happen, there's not any story."

Chaplain Brazzil, his reddish hair thinning and his sport coat barely buttoning across his middle, begins by telling several stories. As he speaks, his fair skin flushes peach with fervor. His deft narratives soon put us in the damp palm of his hand. We feel the urgency in these stories that come from the borderland between life and death. He reads us the note Karla Faye wrote in his Bible the day she was executed, the first time he has shared it in public. He also tells of men he has accompanied to the death chamber whose faith he found as authentic as hers.

From his Bible he pulls another letter, this one written to one of those men by his 16-year-old daughter the week he was executed. In it, she tells her father she thinks about him often, even though she has not seen him since she was two years old. She says she has never really known him and recognizes she will never have that chance now. She tells him she wishes she had the faith he has told her he's been given, but he'll be gone, and no one else has ever spoken to her about Jesus.

The chaplain folds the letter carefully and puts it away. In the morning, he tells us, he will be out at Peckerwood Hill, the graveyard for inmates who die unclaimed in prison. Except for the two bodies he'll be burying and the inmates operating the backhoe, he'll be the only one there.

I glance over at the NPR producer who said there is no story without an execution. I wonder if he can feel the weight of the stories filling up this room. Maybe not. Maybe you have to live here in Huntsville.

CI

Virginia Stem Owens is former director of the Milton Center in Wichita, Kansas, and author of Looking for Jesus, forthcoming from Westminster-John Knox.

David Horn ON Distance Learning

It can be easy for you to take the first few steps toward an M.Div., since many seminaries offer correspondence classes.

But do you end up taking a few random classes, or do you enter into a structured program that leads to your ultimate goal?

This concern is why we created a new way to begin studying for an M.Div.

Semlink is our commitment to make distance learning more productive. We determined that "at a distance" would no longer mean "at a disadvantage."

That's why we actually reshaped our entire M.Div. curriculum. We lowered the barriers you have to hurdle to get started, without lowering our degree's high spiritual and academic quality.

We made sure that each class was as good as it could be, and that all of the classes worked together in a logical progression toward your degree.

With Semlink, you can take ten courses, a full one-third of your M.Div., before moving on campus.

The program is "high tech," with audio

"If you're going to study at a distance,
make sure that every step counts."

cassette lectures complemented by the emerging use of video, CD-ROM, and internet resources.

But it is also "high touch." You will have a faculty mentor for each course, to assist you via phone, fax, mail, or e-mail.

You will also have a faculty advisor to help you with your overall program.

The Semlink program is responsive to your schedule. Once accepted, you can begin courses at any time during the year! And you can study at your own pace.

It's even more affordable! With Semlink, tuition costs are reduced 50%. That's just one more way to make every step count!

David Horn is Director of the Shoemaker Center for Church Renewal at Gordon-Conwell. He also directs the Semlink program, as part of our efforts to make the Seminary more responsive and accessible to the church, clergy and laity alike.

You can register online at www.gcts.edu.

Or call, toll-free: 877-SEMLINK.

736-5465

SOUTH HAMILTON
Massachusetts

BOSTON
Massachusetts

CHARLOTTE
North Carolina
(800) 600-1212

Gordon-Conwell
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

(800) 428-7329

www.gcts.edu

2000 YEARS IN THE MAKING!

FOR MILLENNIA, THE LIGHT OF SCRIPTURE IS THE ETERNAL WORD OF GOD TO PEOPLE OF FAITH.

Now modern Christians have an unparalleled resource for reading the Scriptures with the faithful cloud of witnesses who have gone before us.

In collaboration with the Ancient Christian Commentary Project at Drew University, InterVarsity Press presents the ANCIENT CHRISTIAN COMMENTARY ON SCRIPTURE (ACCS). Under the leadership of renowned theologian Thomas C. Oden, an international and ecumenical team of scholars presents the finest commentary of the early Christian church alongside the Scripture text. When completed, the ACCS will fill twenty-seven volumes encompassing the entire canon of Scripture plus the Apocrypha. Here the salient insight, rhetorical power and consensual exegesis of our early Christian ancestors meets the horizon of the third millennium.

InterVarsity Press Downers Grove, Illinois

www.ivpress.com (630) 887-2500

"This series has been badly needed for several centuries, and the whole Christian world should unite to thank IVP for undertaking to fill the gap. The Ancient Christian Commentary will prove itself to be an indispensable resource."

J. I. PACKER

ANCIENT CHRISTIAN COMMENTARY ON SCRIPTURE
NEW TESTAMENT
VOLUME II: MARK
EDITED BY THOMAS C. ODEN & CHRISTOPHER A. HALL
NEW TESTAMENT
VOLUME VI: ROMANS
EDITED BY GERALD BRAY
GENERAL EDITOR: THOMAS C. ODEN

Mark 1:1-8
Mark 1:9-11
Mark 1:12-13
Mark 1:14-15
Mark 1:16-20
Mark 1:21-28
Mark 1:29-34
Mark 1:35-39
Mark 1:40-45
Mark 1:46-54
Mark 1:55-59
Mark 1:60-64
Mark 1:65-72
Mark 1:73-78
Mark 1:79-84
Mark 1:85-90
Mark 1:91-96
Mark 1:97-102
Mark 1:103-108
Mark 1:109-114
Mark 1:115-120
Mark 1:121-126
Mark 1:127-132
Mark 1:133-138
Mark 1:139-144
Mark 1:145-150
Mark 1:151-156
Mark 1:157-162
Mark 1:163-168
Mark 1:169-174
Mark 1:175-180
Mark 1:181-186
Mark 1:187-192
Mark 1:193-198
Mark 1:199-204
Mark 1:205-210
Mark 1:211-216
Mark 1:217-222
Mark 1:223-228
Mark 1:229-234
Mark 1:235-240
Mark 1:241-246
Mark 1:247-252
Mark 1:253-258
Mark 1:259-264
Mark 1:265-270
Mark 1:271-276
Mark 1:277-282
Mark 1:283-288
Mark 1:289-294
Mark 1:295-300
Mark 1:301-306
Mark 1:307-312
Mark 1:313-318
Mark 1:319-324
Mark 1:325-330
Mark 1:331-336
Mark 1:337-342
Mark 1:343-348
Mark 1:349-354
Mark 1:355-360
Mark 1:361-366
Mark 1:367-372
Mark 1:373-378
Mark 1:379-384
Mark 1:385-390
Mark 1:391-396
Mark 1:397-402
Mark 1:403-408
Mark 1:409-414
Mark 1:415-420
Mark 1:421-426
Mark 1:427-432
Mark 1:433-438
Mark 1:439-444
Mark 1:445-450
Mark 1:451-456
Mark 1:457-462
Mark 1:463-468
Mark 1:469-474
Mark 1:475-480
Mark 1:481-486
Mark 1:487-492
Mark 1:493-498
Mark 1:499-504
Mark 1:505-510
Mark 1:511-516
Mark 1:517-522
Mark 1:523-528
Mark 1:529-534
Mark 1:535-540
Mark 1:541-546
Mark 1:547-552
Mark 1:553-558
Mark 1:559-564
Mark 1:565-570
Mark 1:571-576
Mark 1:577-582
Mark 1:583-588
Mark 1:589-594
Mark 1:595-600
Mark 1:601-606
Mark 1:607-612
Mark 1:613-618
Mark 1:619-624
Mark 1:625-630
Mark 1:631-636
Mark 1:637-642
Mark 1:643-648
Mark 1:649-654
Mark 1:655-660
Mark 1:661-666
Mark 1:667-672
Mark 1:673-678
Mark 1:679-684
Mark 1:685-690
Mark 1:691-696
Mark 1:697-702
Mark 1:703-708
Mark 1:709-714
Mark 1:715-720
Mark 1:721-726
Mark 1:727-732
Mark 1:733-738
Mark 1:739-744
Mark 1:745-750
Mark 1:751-756
Mark 1:757-762
Mark 1:763-768
Mark 1:769-774
Mark 1:775-780
Mark 1:781-786
Mark 1:787-792
Mark 1:793-798
Mark 1:799-804
Mark 1:805-810
Mark 1:811-816
Mark 1:817-822
Mark 1:823-828
Mark 1:829-834
Mark 1:835-840
Mark 1:841-846
Mark 1:847-852
Mark 1:853-858
Mark 1:859-864
Mark 1:865-870
Mark 1:871-876
Mark 1:877-882
Mark 1:883-888
Mark 1:889-894
Mark 1:895-900
Mark 1:901-906
Mark 1:907-912
Mark 1:913-918
Mark 1:919-924
Mark 1:925-930
Mark 1:931-936
Mark 1:937-942
Mark 1:943-948
Mark 1:949-954
Mark 1:955-960
Mark 1:961-966
Mark 1:967-972
Mark 1:973-978
Mark 1:979-984
Mark 1:985-990
Mark 1:991-996
Mark 1:997-1002
Mark 1:1003-1008
Mark 1:1009-1014
Mark 1:1015-1020
Mark 1:1021-1026
Mark 1:1027-1032
Mark 1:1033-1038
Mark 1:1039-1044
Mark 1:1045-1050
Mark 1:1051-1056
Mark 1:1057-1062
Mark 1:1063-1068
Mark 1:1069-1074
Mark 1:1075-1080
Mark 1:1081-1086
Mark 1:1087-1092
Mark 1:1093-1098
Mark 1:1099-1104
Mark 1:1105-1110
Mark 1:1111-1116
Mark 1:1117-1122
Mark 1:1123-1128
Mark 1:1129-1134
Mark 1:1135-1140
Mark 1:1141-1146
Mark 1:1147-1152
Mark 1:1153-1158
Mark 1:1159-1164
Mark 1:1165-1170
Mark 1:1171-1176
Mark 1:1177-1182
Mark 1:1183-1188
Mark 1:1189-1194
Mark 1:1195-1200
Mark 1:1201-1206
Mark 1:1207-1212
Mark 1:1213-1218
Mark 1:1219-1224
Mark 1:1225-1230
Mark 1:1231-1236
Mark 1:1237-1242
Mark 1:1243-1248
Mark 1:1249-1254
Mark 1:1255-1260
Mark 1:1261-1266
Mark 1:1267-1272
Mark 1:1273-1278
Mark 1:1279-1284
Mark 1:1285-1290
Mark 1:1291-1296
Mark 1:1297-1302
Mark 1:1303-1308
Mark 1:1309-1314
Mark 1:1315-1320
Mark 1:1321-1326
Mark 1:1327-1332
Mark 1:1333-1338
Mark 1:1339-1344
Mark 1:1345-1350
Mark 1:1351-1356
Mark 1:1357-1362
Mark 1:1363-1368
Mark 1:1369-1374
Mark 1:1375-1380
Mark 1:1381-1386
Mark 1:1387-1392
Mark 1:1393-1398
Mark 1:1399-1404
Mark 1:1405-1410
Mark 1:1411-1416
Mark 1:1417-1422
Mark 1:1423-1428
Mark 1:1429-1434
Mark 1:1435-1440
Mark 1:1441-1446
Mark 1:1447-1452
Mark 1:1453-1458
Mark 1:1459-1464
Mark 1:1465-1470
Mark 1:1471-1476
Mark 1:1477-1482
Mark 1:1483-1488
Mark 1:1489-1494
Mark 1:1495-1500
Mark 1:1501-1506
Mark 1:1507-1512
Mark 1:1513-1518
Mark 1:1519-1524
Mark 1:1525-1530
Mark 1:1531-1536
Mark 1:1537-1542
Mark 1:1543-1548
Mark 1:1549-1554
Mark 1:1555-1560
Mark 1:1561-1566
Mark 1:1567-1572
Mark 1:1573-1578
Mark 1:1579-1584
Mark 1:1585-1590
Mark 1:1591-1596
Mark 1:1597-1602
Mark 1:1603-1608
Mark 1:1609-1614
Mark 1:1615-1620
Mark 1:1621-1626
Mark 1:1627-1632
Mark 1:1633-1638
Mark 1:1639-1644
Mark 1:1645-1650
Mark 1:1651-1656
Mark 1:1657-1662
Mark 1:1663-1668
Mark 1:1669-1674
Mark 1:1675-1680
Mark 1:1681-1686
Mark 1:1687-1692
Mark 1:1693-1698
Mark 1:1699-1704
Mark 1:1705-1710
Mark 1:1711-1716
Mark 1:1717-1722
Mark 1:1723-1728
Mark 1:1729-1734
Mark 1:1735-1740
Mark 1:1741-1746
Mark 1:1747-1752
Mark 1:1753-1758
Mark 1:1759-1764
Mark 1:1765-1770
Mark 1:1771-1776
Mark 1:1777-1782
Mark 1:1783-1788
Mark 1:1789-1794
Mark 1:1795-1800
Mark 1:1801-1806
Mark 1:1807-1812
Mark 1:1813-1818
Mark 1:1819-1824
Mark 1:1825-1830
Mark 1:1831-1836
Mark 1:1837-1842
Mark 1:1843-1848
Mark 1:1849-1854
Mark 1:1855-1860
Mark 1:1861-1866
Mark 1:1867-1872
Mark 1:1873-1878
Mark 1:1879-1884
Mark 1:1885-1890
Mark 1:1891-1896
Mark 1:1897-1902
Mark 1:1903-1908
Mark 1:1909-1914
Mark 1:1915-1920
Mark 1:1921-1926
Mark 1:1927-1932
Mark 1:1933-1938
Mark 1:1939-1944
Mark 1:1945-1950
Mark 1:1951-1956
Mark 1:1957-1962
Mark 1:1963-1968
Mark 1:1969-1974
Mark 1:1975-1980
Mark 1:1981-1986
Mark 1:1987-1992
Mark 1:1993-1998
Mark 1:1999-2004
Mark 1:2005-2010
Mark 1:2011-2016
Mark 1:2017-2022
Mark 1:2023-2028
Mark 1:2029-2034
Mark 1:2035-2040
Mark 1:2041-2046
Mark 1:2047-2052
Mark 1:2053-2058
Mark 1:2059-2064
Mark 1:2065-2070
Mark 1:2071-2076
Mark 1:2077-2082
Mark 1:2083-2088
Mark 1:2089-2094
Mark 1:2095-2100
Mark 1:2101-2106
Mark 1:2107-2112
Mark 1:2113-2118
Mark 1:2119-2124
Mark 1:2125-2130
Mark 1:2131-2136
Mark 1:2137-2142
Mark 1:2143-2148
Mark 1:2149-2154
Mark 1:2155-2160
Mark 1:2161-2166
Mark 1:2167-2172
Mark 1:2173-2178
Mark 1:2179-2184
Mark 1:2185-2190
Mark 1:2191-2196
Mark 1:2197-2202
Mark 1:2203-2208
Mark 1:2209-2214
Mark 1:2215-2220
Mark 1:2221-2226
Mark 1:2227-2232
Mark 1:2233-2238
Mark 1:2239-2244
Mark 1:2245-2250
Mark 1:2251-2256
Mark 1:2257-2262
Mark 1:2263-2268
Mark 1:2269-2274
Mark 1:2275-2280
Mark 1:2281-2286
Mark 1:2287-2292
Mark 1:2293-2298
Mark 1:2299-2304
Mark 1:2305-2310
Mark 1:2311-2316
Mark 1:2317-2322
Mark 1:2323-2328
Mark 1:2329-2334
Mark 1:2335-2340
Mark 1:2341-2346
Mark 1:2347-2352
Mark 1:2353-2358
Mark 1:2359-2364
Mark 1:2365-2370
Mark 1:2371-2376
Mark 1:2377-2382
Mark 1:2383-2388
Mark 1:2389-2394
Mark 1:2395-2400
Mark 1:2401-2406
Mark 1:2407-2412
Mark 1:2413-2418
Mark 1:2419-2424
Mark 1:2425-2430
Mark 1:2431-2436
Mark 1:2437-2442
Mark 1:2443-2448
Mark 1:2449-2454
Mark 1:2455-2460
Mark 1:2461-2466
Mark 1:2467-2472
Mark 1:2473-2478
Mark 1:2479-2484
Mark 1:2485-2490
Mark 1:2491-2496
Mark 1:2497-2502
Mark 1:2503-2508
Mark 1:2509-2514
Mark 1:2515-2520
Mark 1:2521-2526
Mark 1:2527-2532
Mark 1:2533-2538
Mark 1:2539-2544
Mark 1:2545-2550
Mark 1:2551-2556
Mark 1:2557-2562
Mark 1:2563-2568
Mark 1:2569-2574
Mark 1:2575-2580
Mark 1:2581-2586
Mark 1:2587-2592
Mark 1:2593-2598
Mark 1:2599-2604
Mark 1:2605-2610
Mark 1:2611-2616
Mark 1:2617-2622
Mark 1:2623-2628
Mark 1:2629-2634
Mark 1:2635-2640
Mark 1:2641-2646
Mark 1:2647-2652
Mark 1:2653-2658
Mark 1:2659-2664
Mark 1:2665-2670
Mark 1:2671-2676
Mark 1:2677-2682
Mark 1:2683-2688
Mark 1:2689-2694
Mark 1:2695-2700
Mark 1:2701-2706
Mark 1:2707-2712
Mark 1:2713-2718
Mark 1:2719-2724
Mark 1:2725-2730
Mark 1:2731-2736
Mark 1:2737-2742
Mark 1:2743-2748
Mark 1:2749-2754
Mark 1:2755-2760
Mark 1:2761-2766
Mark 1:2767-2772
Mark 1:2773-2778
Mark 1:2779-2784
Mark 1:2785-2790
Mark 1:2791-2796
Mark 1:2797-2802
Mark 1:2803-2808
Mark 1:2809-2814
Mark 1:2815-2820
Mark 1:2821-2826
Mark 1:2827-2832
Mark 1:2833-2838
Mark 1:2839-2844
Mark 1:2845-2850
Mark 1:2851-2856
Mark 1:2857-2862
Mark 1:2863-2868
Mark 1:2869-2874
Mark 1:2875-2880
Mark 1:2881-2886
Mark 1:2887-2892
Mark 1:2893-2898
Mark 1:2899-2904
Mark 1:2905-2910
Mark 1:2911-2916
Mark 1:2917-2922
Mark 1:2923-2928
Mark 1:2929-2934
Mark 1:2935-2940
Mark 1:2941-2946
Mark 1:2947-2952
Mark 1:2953-2958
Mark 1:2959-2964
Mark 1:2965-2970
Mark 1:2971-2976
Mark 1:2977-2982
Mark 1:2983-2988
Mark 1:2989-2994
Mark 1:2995-3000

Mark 1:1-8
Mark 1:9-11
Mark 1:12-13
Mark 1:14-15
Mark 1:16-20
Mark 1:21-28
Mark 1:29-34
Mark 1:35-39
Mark 1:40-45
Mark 1:46-54
Mark 1:55-59
Mark 1:60-64
Mark 1:65-72
Mark 1:73-78
Mark 1:79-84
Mark 1:85-90
Mark 1:91-96
Mark 1:97-102
Mark 1:103-108
Mark 1:109-114
Mark 1:115-120
Mark 1:121-126
Mark 1:127-132
Mark 1:133-138
Mark 1:139-144
Mark 1:145-150
Mark 1:151-156
Mark 1:157-162
Mark 1:163-168
Mark 1:169-174
Mark 1:175-180
Mark 1:181-186
Mark 1:187-192
Mark 1:193-198
Mark 1:199-204
Mark 1:205-210
Mark 1:211-216
Mark 1:217-222
Mark 1:223-228
Mark 1:229-234
Mark 1:235-240
Mark 1:241-246
Mark 1:247-252
Mark 1:253-258
Mark 1:259-264
Mark 1:265-270
Mark 1:271-276
Mark 1:277-282
Mark 1:283-288
Mark 1:289-294
Mark 1:295-300
Mark 1:301-306
Mark 1:307-312
Mark 1:313-318
Mark 1:319-324
Mark 1:325-330
Mark 1:331-336
Mark 1:337-342
Mark 1:343-348
Mark 1:349-354
Mark 1:355-360
Mark 1:361-366
Mark 1:367-372
Mark 1:373-378
Mark 1:379-384
Mark 1:385-390
Mark 1:391-396
Mark 1:397-402
Mark 1:403-408
Mark 1:409-414
Mark 1:415-420
Mark 1:421-426
Mark 1:427-432
Mark 1:433-438
Mark 1:439-444
Mark 1:445-450
Mark 1:451-456
Mark 1:457-462
Mark 1:463-468
Mark 1:469-474
Mark 1:475-480
Mark 1:481-486
Mark 1:487-492
Mark 1:493-498
Mark 1:499-504
Mark 1:505-510
Mark 1:511-516
Mark 1:517-522
Mark 1:523-528
Mark 1:529-534
Mark 1:535-540
Mark 1:541-546
Mark 1:547-552
Mark 1:553-558
Mark 1:559-564
Mark 1:565-570
Mark 1:571-576
Mark 1:577-582
Mark 1:583-588
Mark 1:589-594
Mark 1:595-600
Mark 1:601-606
Mark 1:607-612
Mark 1:613-618
Mark 1:619-624
Mark 1:625-630
Mark 1:631-636
Mark 1:637-642
Mark 1:643-648
Mark 1:649-654
Mark 1:655-660
Mark 1:661-666
Mark 1:667-672
Mark 1:673-678
Mark 1:679-684
Mark 1:685-690
Mark 1:691-696
Mark 1:697-702
Mark 1:703-708
Mark 1:709-714
Mark 1:715-720
Mark 1:721-726
Mark 1:727-732
Mark 1:733-738
Mark 1:739-744
Mark 1:745-750
Mark 1:751-756
Mark 1:757-762
Mark 1:763-768
Mark 1:769-774
Mark 1:775-780
Mark 1:781-786
Mark 1:787-792
Mark 1:793-798
Mark 1:799-804
Mark 1:805-810
Mark 1:811-816
Mark 1:817-822
Mark 1:823-828
Mark 1:829-834
Mark 1:835-840
Mark 1:841-846
Mark 1:847-852
Mark 1:853-858
Mark 1:859-864
Mark 1:865-870
Mark 1:871-876
Mark 1:877-882
Mark 1:883-888
Mark 1:889-894
Mark 1:895-900
Mark 1:901-906
Mark 1:907-912
Mark 1:913-918
Mark 1:919-924
Mark 1:925-930
Mark 1:931-936
Mark 1:937-942
Mark 1:943-948
Mark 1:949-954
Mark 1:955-960
Mark 1:961-966
Mark 1:967-972
Mark 1:973-978
Mark 1:979-984
Mark 1:985-990
Mark 1:991-996
Mark 1:997-1002
Mark 1:1003-1008
Mark 1:1009-1014
Mark 1:1015-1020
Mark 1:1021-1026
Mark 1:1027-1032
Mark 1:1033-1038
Mark 1:1039-1044
Mark 1:1045-1050
Mark 1:1051-1056
Mark 1:1057-1062
Mark 1:1063-1068
Mark 1:1069-1074
Mark 1:1075-1080
Mark 1:1081-1086
Mark 1:1087-1092
Mark 1:1093-1098
Mark 1:1099-1104
Mark 1:1105-1110
Mark 1:1111-1116
Mark 1:1117-1122
Mark 1:1123-1128
Mark 1:1129-1134
Mark 1:1135-1140
Mark 1:1141-1146
Mark 1:1147-1152
Mark 1:1153-1158
Mark 1:1159-1164
Mark 1:1165-1170
Mark 1:1171-1176
Mark 1:1177-1182
Mark 1:1183-1188
Mark 1:1189-1194
Mark 1:1195-1200
Mark 1:1201-1206
Mark 1:1207-1212
Mark 1:1213-1218
Mark 1:1219-1224
Mark 1:1225-1230
Mark 1:1231-1236
Mark 1:1237-1242
Mark 1:1243-1248
Mark 1:1249-1254
Mark 1:1255-1260
Mark 1:1261-1266
Mark 1:1267-1272
Mark 1:1273-1278
Mark 1:1279-1284
Mark 1:1285-1290
Mark 1:1291-1296
Mark 1:1297-1302
Mark 1:1303-1308
Mark 1:1309-1314
Mark 1:1315-1320
Mark 1:1321-1326
Mark 1:1327-1332
Mark 1:1333-1338
Mark 1:1339-1344
Mark 1:1345-1350
Mark 1:1351-1356
Mark 1:1357-1362
Mark 1:1363-1368
Mark 1:1369-1374
Mark 1:1375-1380
Mark 1:1381-1386
Mark 1:1387-1392
Mark 1:1393-1398
Mark 1:1399-1404
Mark 1:1405-1410
Mark 1:1411-1416
Mark 1:1417-1422
Mark 1:1423-1428
Mark 1:1429-1434
Mark 1:1435-1440
Mark 1:1441-1446
Mark 1:1447-1452
Mark 1:1453-1458
Mark 1:1459-1464
Mark 1:1465-1470
Mark 1:1471-1476
Mark 1:1477-1482
Mark 1:1483-1488
Mark 1:1489-1494
Mark 1:1495-1500
Mark 1:1501-1506
Mark 1:1507-1512
Mark 1:1513-1518
Mark 1:1519-1524
Mark 1:1525-1530
Mark 1:1531-1536
Mark 1:1537-1542
Mark 1:1543-1548
Mark 1:1549-1554
Mark 1:1555-1560
Mark 1:1561-1566
Mark 1:1567-1572
Mark 1:1573-1578
Mark 1:1579-1584
Mark 1:1585-1590
Mark 1:1591-1596
Mark 1:1597-1602
Mark 1:1603-1608
Mark 1:1609-1614
Mark 1:1615-1620
Mark 1:1621-1626
Mark 1:1627-1632
Mark 1:1633-1638
Mark 1:1639-1644
Mark 1:1645-1650
Mark 1:1651-1656
Mark 1:1657-1662
Mark 1:1663-1668
Mark 1:1669-1674
Mark 1:1675-1680
Mark 1:1681-1686
Mark 1:1687-1692
Mark 1:1693-1698
Mark 1:1699-1704
Mark 1:1705-1710
Mark 1:1711-1716
Mark 1:1717-1722
Mark 1:1723-1728
Mark 1:1729-1734
Mark 1:1735-1740
Mark 1:1741-1746
Mark 1:1747-1752
Mark 1:1753-1758
Mark 1:1759-1764
Mark 1:1765-1770
Mark 1:1771-1776
Mark 1:1777-1782
Mark 1:1783-1788
Mark 1:1789-1794
Mark 1:1795-1800
Mark 1:1801-1806
Mark 1:1807-1812
Mark 1:1813-1818
Mark 1:1819-1824
Mark 1:1825-1830
Mark 1:1831-1836
Mark 1:1837-1842
Mark 1:1843-1848
Mark 1:1849-1854
Mark 1:1855-1860
Mark 1:1861-1866
Mark 1:1867-1872
Mark 1:1873-1878
Mark 1:1879-1884
Mark 1:1885-1890
Mark 1:18

What's Wrong with Spirituality?

The Gospel of Mark's prescription for spiritual sanity.

Eugene H. Peterson

ILLUSTRATED ALASKAN MOOSE

on. Each character contributes something essential to the quest. The world is large with meaning, and no one is left out—but no one is sure what the North Pole is, not even Christopher Robin who proposed the expedition.

Along the way little Roo falls into a stream and needs rescuing—everyone pitches in. Pooh picks up a pole and fishes him out. The emergency over, the animals talk it over while Pooh stands there with the pole in his hands. Christopher Robin then says,

"Pooh . . . where did you find that pole?"

Pooh looked at the pole in his hands.

"I just found it," he said, "I thought it ought to be useful. I just picked it up."

"Pooh," said Christopher Robin solemnly, "the Expedition is over. You have found the North Pole!"

"Oh!" said Pooh.

The animals go on with their desultory, haphazard conversation for a while until Christopher Robin finally gets them back to attending to the North Pole that Pooh had discovered.

They stuck the pole in the ground, and Christopher Robin tied a message on to it,
North Pole
Discovered By Pooh
Pooh Found It.

Then they all went home again. . . .

What I so suddenly "saw" as I was listening to Jan read was the culture in which I live, peopled with engaging characters out looking for a vaguely defined spirituality (the "North Pole"). Every once in a while one of them picks up something and someone says, "That's it!" Sure enough, it does look like "it." And someone, usually a "spiritual authority" (Christopher Robin), hangs a sign on it: "Spirituality." And then everyone goes home again, until the next expedition is proposed.

People are attracted to "spirituality" in increasing numbers these days. Fresh expeditions for the "North Pole" set out almost daily from most places in the country. (The "East Pole" and the "West Pole" are also options). As I listened to the story that late autumn evening, I recognized many of the "characters" whom I love and admire so much but am not content to leave as is: I want to honor every Recently my wife started reading Winnie the Pooh to me. She had read it to our children 35 years ago, and I had overheard parts of it. But she thought it would be good if I got it whole and firsthand before it was too late.

One evening while she was reading, I was watching the autumn light leak out of the mountain lake that is our front yard and letting the words of the story drift through my consciousness. Suddenly I was fully awake: the blurred world in which I teach and write on Christian spiritual theology came into crisp focus. I saw the people I was working with in a fresh way.

Jan had just completed chapter 8 in which the childlike animals had been assembled by Christopher Robin for an adventure—they were off to discover the North Pole. It is a meandering tale in which everyone takes everything with complete seriousness, although no one understands much of what is going detail of their childlike charm, but I also want to show them both what and where the “North Pole” is. I want to lead them to Jesus.

Fundamental to the Christian task of dealing with our meaning-hungry, spirit-thirsty, God-curious world is to teach and preach the Holy Scriptures as the Revelation of Life, the life defined and created by Jesus. This has always been necessary, but there is a contemporary urgency to the task in these times in which we are flooded with “spiritualities” that, ignorant of Jesus, are developed from the various and sundry experiences of Christopher Robin and friends, especially Pooh, “a bear of very little brain.”

If the Holy Spirit through Scripture as a whole both forms the company and provides the map to the “North Pole,” the Gospel of Mark is as good a place as any to take our bearings. The entire canon of Scripture is our comprehensive text, but Mark as the first Gospel holds a certain primacy. It is the basic text for Christian spirituality.

Formed by gospel

No one had ever written a Christian gospel before Mark wrote his. He created a new genre. It turned out to be a form of writing that quickly became both foundational and formative for the life of church and Christian.

The Bible as a whole comes to us in the form of narrative, and it is within this large, somewhat sprawling narrative that Mark writes his gospel. Stories invite us into a world other than ourselves, and, if they are good and true stories, a world larger than ourselves. Bible stories are good and true stories, and the world that they invite us into is the world of God’s creation and salvation and blessing.

This is in contrast to the ancient preference for myth making, which turns us into spectators of the supernatural. It is also in contrast to the modern preference for moral philosophy that puts us in charge of our own salvation. “Gospel story” is a verbal way of accounting for reality that, like its subject—the Incarnation—is simultaneously divine and human. It reveals something we could never come up with on our own by observation or experiment or guess; and at the same time, it engages, it brings us into the action as recipients and participants without dumping the responsibility ty on us for making it turn out right.

This has great implications for our spirituality, for the form itself protects us against two major ways we go off the rails: becoming frivolous spectators, clamoring for new and more exotic entertainment out of heaven; or, becoming anxious moralists, putting our shoulders to the wheel and taking on the burdens of the world. The very form of the text shapes responses in us that make it hard to become a mere spectator or a mere moralist. This is not a text that we master, it is one that we are mastered by.

Spirituality is the attention we give to our souls, to the invisible interior of our lives that is the core of our identity, these image-of-God souls that comprise our uniqueness and glory. Spirituality would appear to be a wonderful thing, and our initial exclamation is most likely, “Would that all the Lord’s people were so engaged!” But 20 centuries of experience in spirituality qualifies our enthusiasm considerably. In actual practice, it turns out to be not so wonderful. When you look at our history, it is no wonder that spirituality is so often treated with suspicion, and not infrequently with outright hostility. For in actual practice, spirituality very often develops into neurosis, degenerates into selfishness, becomes pretentious, turns violent. How does this happen?

The short answer is that it happens when we step outside the gospel story and take ourselves as the basic and authoritative text for our spirituality; we begin exegesis of ourselves as a sacred text. We don’t usually throw the gospel out; we merely put it on the shelf and think that we are honoring it by consulting it from time to time as an indispensable reference work.

Our spiritual guides tell us, “You are wonderful, glorious beings, precious souls. Your aspirations for holiness and goodness and truth are splendid. But you are not the content of spirituality; God revealed in Jesus is that. You need a text to read and study and learn from—here’s your text, the gospel of Jesus Christ. Start with Mark’s gospel as your basic text.”

We open the text and read the story of Jesus, an odd kind of story. It tells us very little of what interests us in a story. We learn virtually nothing about Jesus that we really want to know. There is no description of his appearance. Nothing about his origin, friends, education, family. How are we to evaluate or understand this person? And there is very little reference to what he thought, to how he felt, his emotions, his interior struggles.

At some point or other we realize that this is a story about God—and about us. Even though Jesus is the most referred-to person in the story, there is a surprising reticence in regard to Jesus. Jesus is the revelation of God, so we are always being faced in Jesus with what we are faced with in God: most of what is here we don’t get, we don’t see, don’t understand. We don’t figure Jesus out, we don’t search Jesus out, we don’t get Jesus on our terms. It follows that neither do we get God on our terms. As a story, it is a most unsatisfying story.

And then we realize that our attention has been drawn away from ourselves and is on Jesus, God revealed in Jesus. True spirituality, Christian spirituality, takes attention off of ourselves and focuses it on another, on Jesus.

There are others in the story, of course, many others—the sick and hungry, victims and outsiders, friends and enemies. But Jesus is always the subject. No event and no person appears in this story apart from Jesus. Jesus provides both context and content for everyone’s life. Spirituality—the attention we give to our souls—turns out in practice (when we let Saint Mark shape our practice) to be the attention we give to God revealed in Jesus. The text trains us in such perception and practice. Line after line, page after page—Jesus, Jesus, Jesus. None of us provides the content for our own spirituality; it is given to us; Jesus gives it to us. The text allows for no exceptions.

There can hardly be any question about the intent of Saint Mark: the plot and emphasis and meaning of Jesus is his death.

The death of Jesus

As we read this text we soon discover that the entire story funnels into the narration of the events of a single week of Jesus' life, the week of his passion, death, and resurrection. And of these three items, death gets the most detailed treatment. If we are asked to say as briefly as possible what Mark's gospel consists of, we must say, "the death of Jesus."

That doesn't sound very promising, especially for those of us who are looking for a text by which to live, a text by which to nurture our souls. But there it is. There are 16 chapters in the story. For the first eight, Jesus is alive, strolling unhurriedly through the villages and backroads of Galilee, bringing others to life.

And then, just as he has everyone's attention, he starts talking about death. The last eight chapters of the Gospel are dominated by death talk.

The death announcement also signals a change of pace. As the story is told through the first eight chapters, there is a leisurely and meandering quality to the narration. But with the death announcement, that changes: now he heads straight for Jerusalem. Urgency and gravity and destination now characterize the narration. The direction changes, the pace changes, the mood changes. Three times Jesus is explicit: he is going to suffer and be killed and rise again (8:31; 9:31; 10:33).

And then it happens: death. Jesus' death is narrated carefully and precisely. No incident in his life is told with this much detail. There can hardly be any question about Mark's intent: the plot and emphasis and meaning of Jesus is his death. This is a carefully defined death. It is defined as voluntary. Jesus did not have to go to Jerusalem; he went on his own volition. He gave his assent to death. This was not accidental death; this was not an unavoidable death.

It is defined as sacrificial. He accepted death that others might receive life, "his life a ransom for many" (Mark 10:45; cf. 14:23–24).

And it is defined in the company of resurrection. Each of the three explicit death announcements concludes with a statement of resurrection. The gospel story as a whole concludes with a witness to resurrection. This does not make it any less a death, but it is a quite differently defined death than we are accustomed to dealing with.

Tragedy and procrastination are the words that characterize our culture's attitude toward death. The tragic view of death is a legacy of the Greeks. The Greeks wrote with elegance of tragic deaths—lives that were caught up in the working out of large, impersonal forces, lives pursued with the best of intentions, but then enmeshed in circumstances that canceled the intentions, circumstances indifferent to human heroism or hope. The death of Jesus is not tragic.

The procrastinated death is a legacy of modern medicine. In a culture where life is reduced to heartbeat and brainwave, death can never be accepted as such. Since there is no more to life than can be

Study in Israel

it can make all the difference!

- MASTER OF ARTS DEGREES • GRADUATE OR UNDERGRADUATE SEMESTER ABROAD
- SHORT-TERM ACADEMIC STUDY TOURS • CREDITS TRANSFERABLE

Jerusalem University College

an evangelical Christian institution of higher learning celebrating 40 years in Jerusalem

formerly: INSTITUTE OF HOLY LAND STUDIES

For literature and free video: 1-800-891-9408
or (815)229-5900 in North America, all others 972-2-718628

accounted for by biology—no meaning, no spirituality, no eternity—increasingly desperate attempts are made to put it off, to delay it, to deny it. The death of Jesus is not procrastinated.

It is essential that we counter our culture by letting Mark's storytelling shape our understanding of death and eventually come to understand our own death within the rich dimensions and relations of Jesus' story.

The ascetic and the aesthetic

Right at the center of Mark's text is a passage that I designate as the "spirituality" of the text: 8:27–9:9. It is set at the center of the gospel story so that one half of the Gospel, the multiple Galilean evocations of life, falls symmetrically on one side, and on the other side, the single-minded travel to Jerusalem and death.

This passage consists of two stories. The first story, Jesus' call for renunciation as he and his disciples start out on the road to Jerusalem, provides the ascetic dimension in spirituality. The second story, Jesus' transfiguration on Mount Tabor, provides the aesthetic dimension in spirituality.

The stories are bracketed at either end by affirmations of Jesus' true identity as God among us: first, Peter saying, "You are the Christ, the Son of the living God"; second, the voice out of heaven saying, "This is my beloved son, listen to him." Human testimony at one end, divine attestation at the other.

These stories are organically connected. They are the two-beat rhythm in a single spiritual theology, not two alternate ways of doing spiritual theology. The two stories bring together the ascetic and aesthetic movements, the no and the yes that work together at the heart of spiritual theology.

The ascetic. This is God's no in Jesus. Jesus' words are succinct and stark: "If any want to become my followers, let them deny themselves and take up their cross and follow me" (8:34). The ascetic life deals with life on the road.

The verbs that leap out of the sentence and pounce on us are "deny yourself" and "take up your cross." Renunciation and death. It feels like an assault, an attack. We recoil.

But then we notice that these two negatives are bracketed by the positive verb "follow," first as an infinitive, then as an imperative. "If anyone wants to follow" opens the sentence; "you follow me" concludes it. Jesus is going someplace; he invites us to come along. There is no hostility in that. It sounds, in fact, quite glorious: the great verb "follow" sheds glory on the negative verbs that call for renunciation and death.

There is always a strong ascetic element in true spiritual theology. Following Jesus means not following your impulses and appetites and whims and dreams, all of which are sufficiently damaged by sin to make them unreliable guides for getting anyplace worth going. Following Jesus means not following the death-procrastinating, death-denying practices of a culture that, by obsessively pursuing life under the aegis of idols and ideologies, ends up with a life that is so constricted and diminished that it is hardly worthy of the name.

Grammatically, the negative, our capacity to say no, is one of the most impressive features of our language. The

Answer God's calling

You don't have to leave your ministry to earn a Master's degree.

"I enjoyed my work a great deal," says Dennis. "But, I felt the Lord moving in my heart to be available for full-time service. I also realized that I needed training to prepare for Christian ministry."

Moody Graduate School allowed Dennis to begin working full-time as the associate pastor at New Castle Bible Church while completing graduate school coursework.

Moody Graduate School offers modular courses designed for people in ministry. Programs that fit the schedule of people on the go. People like you.

Practical ministry related courses provide immediate application to your life. Courses such as Conflict Management, Teaching Skills, Leadership and Motivation of People, Marriage and Family Counseling, and much more!

*Interested in pursuing further education,
while staying in full-time ministry?*

Check out MOODY GRADUATE SCHOOL

You don't have to leave your ministry to earn a Master's degree.

MOODY GRADUATE SCHOOL

Admissions Office

820 N. La Salle Boulevard • Chicago, Illinois 60610
1-800-967-4MBI(4624) • admissions@moody.edu

Dennis Schlappi was a husband, father of three kids, and an electrical engineer when he felt God's call to full-time ministry.

negative is our access to freedom. Only humans can say no. Animals can't say no. Animals do what instinct dictates. The judicious, well-placed no frees us from many a blind alley, many a rough detour, frees us from debilitating distractions and seductive sacrilege. The art of saying no sets us free to follow Jesus.

If we adhere carefully to Mark's text, we will never associate the ascetic with the life-denying. Ascetic practice sweeps out the clutter of the god-prententious self, making ample space for Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; it embraces and prepares for a kind of death that the culture knows nothing about, making room for the dance of resurrection. Whenever we are around someone who is doing this well, we notice the lightness of step, the nimbleness of spirit, the quickness to laughter.

The aesthetic. Alongside Mark's ascetic is his aesthetic. This is God's yes in Jesus. Peter, James, and John see Jesus transfigured before them on the mountain into cloud-brightness in the company of Moses and Elijah and hear God's blessing, "This is my Son, the Beloved, listen to him!" (9:7). The aesthetic deals with life on the mountain. The word beauty does not occur in the story, but beauty is what the disciples experienced, and what we find ourselves experiencing.

There is always a strong aesthetic element in true spiritual theology. Climbing the mountain with Jesus means coming upon beauty that takes our breath away. Staying in the company of Jesus means contemplating his glory, listening in on this vast, intergenerational conversation consisting of law and prophet and gospel that takes place around Jesus, hearing the divine confirmation of revelation in Jesus. When God's Spirit makes his appearance, we recognize the appearance as beautiful.

Now here is the thing about the transfigured Jesus. Jesus is the form of revelation, "and the light does not fall on this form from above and from outside, rather it breaks forth from the form's interior" (Hans Urs von Balthasar, The Glory of the Lord, vol. 1, p. 151). The only adequate response that can be made to light is to keep our eyes open, to attend to what is illumined—adoration.

The aesthetic impulse in spiritual theology has to do with training in perception, acquiring a taste for what is being revealed in Jesus. We are not good at this. Our senses have been dulled by sin. The world, for all its vaunted celebration of sensuality, is relentlessly anesthetic, obliterating feeling by ugliness and noise, draining the beauty out of people and things so that they are functionally efficient, scornful of the aesthetic except as it can be contained in a museum or flower garden. Our senses require healing and rehabilitation so that they are adequate for receiving and responding to visitations and appearances of Spirit, God's Holy Spirit.

Following Jesus means not following your impulses and appetites and whims and dreams.

These bodies of ours with their five senses are not impediments to a life of faith; our sensuality is not a barrier to spirituality but our only access to it. When John wanted to assure some early Christians of the authenticity of his spiritual experience, he did it by calling on the witness of his senses of sight, hearing, and touch (1 John 1:1). In his opening sentence, he calls on the witness of his senses seven times.

Mark sets this story of glorious affirmation in immediate juxtaposition to his story of stern negation. He knows that, simple and obvious as it is, it is easy to get it wrong. Peter's initial response in both the ascetic road story and the aesthetic mountain story was wrong.

On the road, Peter tried to avoid the cross; on the mountain, he tried to possess the glory. Peter rejected the ascetic way by offering Jesus a better plan, a way of salvation in which no one has to be inconvenienced. Jesus, in the sternest rebuke recorded in the Gospels, called him Satan. Peter rejected the aesthetic way by offering to build memorials on the mountain, a way of worship in which he could take over from Jesus and provide something hands-on and practical. This time Jesus just ignored him.

Peter's propensity to get it wrong keeps us on our toes. Century after century we Christians keep getting it wrong —and in numerous ways. Every time we get sloppy in reading this text of Saint Mark and leave the company of Jesus, we get it wrong.

One more thing

Mark chose to tell us about Jesus as the revelation of God, a full accounting of Jesus' work of salvation. We are invited to become full participants in the story of Jesus and shown how to become such participants. We are not simply told that Jesus is the Son of God; we not only become beneficiaries of his atonement; we are invited to die his death and live his life with the freedom and dignity of participants. And here is a marvelous thing: we enter the center of the story without becoming the center of the story.

Spirituality is always in danger of self-absorption, of becoming so intrigued with matters of soul that God is treated as a mere accessory to my experience. This requires much vigilance. Spiritual theology is, among other things, the exercise of this vigilance.

And for this Mark provides our basic text. The two stories at the center, the road and mountain stories, are clearly proleptic—they anticipate Jesus' crucifixion and resurrection. They immerse us and train us in the ascetic negations and aesthetic affirmations, but they don't leave us there; they cast us forward in faith and obedience to the life that is finally and only complete in the definitive no and glorious yes of Jesus crucified and risen. CI

Eugene H. Peterson is the James M. Houston Professor of Spiritual Theology at Regent College, Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada, and author of Leap over a Wall: Earthy Spirituality for Everyday Christians (Harper San Francisco, 1997).

Church Chair Industries, Inc.

Cathedral Stacker

Now Only
$24.25
100+

Free Chair Test Compare
(100+)

Plush, tall backs over 1/2" plywood.

Free Lumbar Back Support

Royal Stacker

Now Only
$26.25
100+

Design Stacker #1

DESIGN PATENT NO.
DES. 333,7333

Plush 4 & 5" deep foam
seats over 1/2" plywood.

Call 1-800-331-5411
For Free Catalog & Steel
Frame Sample Chair

GREAT PEW LIKE CHAIRS OAK OR STEEL FRAMES
LOCKS TOGETHER TO FORM A CONTINUOUS BENCH

Oak Pew Chair

OPTIONS

Arms

Kneelers

Book & Card Pockets

Do Demons Have Zip Codes?

Q: We hear a lot today about citywide exorcisms of territorial spirits. Where does this idea come from, and what does the Bible have to say about it? —Nathan Miller
Rosedale, Ohio

A: The exorcism of territorial spirits is a growing practice around the globe, including among evangelicals in America. I know of a group of Christians who flew to a foreign city where they spread into key neighborhoods and historic spots to identify the demons that ruled over those areas. Afterward they reassembled for a time of aggressive prayer to name and bind the demons so that the gospel could spread powerfully there.

In terms of influence, perhaps two decades of overly mechanistic techniques, including church-growth methods and step-by-step evangelistic and discipleship programs, have left Christians thirsting for raw supernaturalism. In response, the church has seen a series of emphases on power evangelism, prophetic ministry, and even “holy laughter.” Also, the New Age interest in spirit guides has stimulated a corresponding fascination among evangelicals with angels and demons, evident, for example, in the enormous popularity of Frank Peretti’s novels.

The territorial component grew—at least in part—out of the notable effectiveness of citywide evangelistic campaigns in Latin America. Some evangelists in those campaigns attributed their success to days spent in wrestling in prayer against the powers of darkness.

I believe there is another influence as well: animism, which is strong in much of Latin America, Africa, and Asia. In animism, all sorts of spirits are worshipped—including those of tribes and geographic territories. When this animistic world-view is taken at face value, a certain logic follows: demons oppose the church; extended prayer leads to powerful evangelism; some demons are territorial, and thus can only be overcome through on-site citywide exorcism.

This is not the first time that Christians have attempted to discern the bureaucratic structure of the spirit world. Some of the early church fathers tried to reconstruct demon hierarchies. The medieval church tried again. But when the Reformation led the church back to the Word of God, Luther, Calvin, and Wesley each renounced such speculation as futile. What does the Bible itself say about this practice? Actually, very little. Instead, the Old Testament focuses on God’s sovereignty, noting that even Satan requires God’s permission before doing evil (Job 1:6–12). While Daniel alludes briefly to a “prince of Persia” and a “prince of Greece” (10:13, 20), these “princes” are not colleagues ruling over different regions, but competitors, battling each other (see 11:2). Daniel is describing the future history of the Middle East: with Persia falling before Greece, and Greece splitting into four smaller kingdoms (Dan. 11–12). Of course, any nation that attacks the people of God is serving the cause of Satan. This much Daniel intends. But Daniel never prays against demon princes over Persia or Greece nor attempts to cast them from their respective regions.

Another commonly cited passage is Revelation 2:12–13, which says Satan resides in Pergamum. A literalistic interpretation of this passage, however, poses more complications than clarification. If, as some claim, a demon’s power is reflected in the size of its territory, the identification with Pergamum reduces Satan to relative insignificance. Furthermore, Satan would then need to live and work in Pergamum, yet worship in Smyrna (Rev. 2:9) and Philadelphia (Rev. 3:9) and teach Sunday school in Thyatira (Rev. 2:24). This is a lot of commuting for a “territorial” spirit! In the end, the closest things to territorial spirits in the New Testament are the angels—not the demons—of Revelation 2 and 3 (each assigned to one of the seven churches).

The Bible has more to say about the practice of “shouting down” the Devil, but in consistently negative terms. In contrast to the Qumran community (of Dead Sea Scrolls fame), whose liturgy included curses of Satan alongside praise of God, Jude 8–10 and 2 Peter 2:10–12 rebuke those who verbally abuse spirits. We do better, Jude warns, simply to turn the demons over to God. Satan is indeed a formidable adversary (1 Pet. 5:8), yet Jesus has already conquered him on the cross (Col. 2:15) and will one day confine him in hell (Rev. 20:1–10). In the meantime, we are called to oppose Satan—but not by identifying the names of his subordinates, reconstructing their hierarchy, or mapping their supposed jurisdictions. Rather, we are called to stand firm through spiritual disciplines (Eph. 6:10–18), persevere in persecution (Rev. 3:21), and cast out demons as they become manifest in people (Acts 16:16–18).

By Chuck Lowe, author of Territorial Spirits and World Evangelisation? (Mentor/OMF) and an OMF missionary lecturing at Singapore Bible College. Send questions to be answered by evangelical scholars to "Directions" at CTedit@aol.com; or CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

The closest things to territorial spirits in the New Testament are angels, not demons.

Whatever Happened to Good Old Middle-Class Hypocrisy?

Sorry, Jimmy Olsen;
middle-class morality ain't what it used to be.

Pundits and commentators, who normally consider themselves more open-minded than the plodding masses, have been rocked by a discovery in the last six months: When it comes to a President's indiscretions, most people just don't care. "But you're supposed to be outraged," you can almost hear them pleading. "That's your job." Sorry, Jimmy Olsen; middle-class morality ain't what it used to be.

What it used to be, middle-aged readers may remember, was "hypocritical." At least, that was the charge, that conventional morality was a false front: seemingly upright citizens would deplore sexual hanky-panky and publicly condemn anyone who strayed, but their private lives were not so pristine. The sad suburban couples in John Updike's stories illustrate this thesis: on the surface, big happy families; underneath, sneaking and adultery and broken hearts.

One goal of the sexual revolution was to eliminate the false front. Fooling around was to be freely admitted, even celebrated—the more "love," the merrier. No one's indiscretions would be condemned. You'll still find people waving this anti-hypocrisy banner, as if it were a new idea that they alone are brave enough to champion.

No, hypocrisy is not our besetting national sin. If anything, the reverse is true. Americans no longer do naughty things secretly while condemning the same conduct in others; instead, while we are increasingly reluctant to condemn anything or anybody, we actually live more circumspectly than we did a couple of decades ago. Since the mideighties, generalized promiscuity has been on the decline. First herpes, then AIDS sobered up the party. The tragic mess of abortion added accumulating grief, hardly an aphrodisiac.

Sex moved from the bedroom to the living-room TV, a less risky site. There, competition among the media prompted an increasingly wide display of the varieties of sexual behavior. Once people did it but didn't talk about it; now every imaginable practice is talked about frantically, and loves that dared not speak their name won't shut up. We're forcibly educated about practices that the ordinary person will never experience and may have no desire to experience. There is much more talk than action.

When the comprehensive survey Sex in America was published a few years ago, the results made headlines: ordinary people weren't committing adultery, weren't sleeping around, weren't just misbehavin' to nearly the extent everyone had presumed. Among married couples, 94 percent said that they had been faithful to each other during the previous year. Among singles, a third of women and a fourth of men said they had not had sex at all, all year. Similar proportions could claim only "a few times," indicating that over half of singles were not doing much swinging. I had this finding inadvertently confirmed when I went to buy the book. "Do you have Sex in America?" I asked the plump young man behind the counter. "In my case, no," he said sadly.

In his new book, One Nation, After All, based on interviews with middle-class Americans in eight communities, sociologist Alan Wolfe demolishes the popular misconception that a typical American "insists everyone conform to a stern moral code, yet personally violates that code." In fact, Wolfe concludes, "Most middle-class Americans uphold strict moral standards for judging their own behavior but are extremely reluctant to judge the behavior of anyone else." He attributes this widespread tolerance to the conjunction of sixties' culture and corporate culture, both rigorously nonjudgmental. While generally approving the live-and-let-live outlook of his subjects, as one might expect of a good liberal sociologist, Wolfe adds: "I'm not sure toleration is always the best thing. I think at some point you have to make judgments."

Of course, people do make judgments; they are just ashamed to admit it to pollsters. They know that openly criticizing others' behavior would be scandalous. Voicing moral objection is the last great act of social transgression.

This is one explanation, I think, for the bizarre popularity of tabloid TV shows—the ones that showcase pregnant strippers and bald men wearing dog leashes. The titillating appeal is that these characters are so plainly worthy of decent folks' ridicule. They have been preselected by show producers to give better-behaved citizens something to hoot at in the privacy of their own homes.

When questioned in a public poll, decent citizens have to put on the long face of tolerance. But when the shades are drawn, tabloid TV gives them a chance they have to act up. It's not sexual urges they have been compelled to restrict, but their minds—their intelligence, wisdom, and common sense. Thanks to Jerry Springer, upstanding citizens can occasionally be as naughty as they wanna be. CT

COMPUTING TODAY

MAKES TECH SUPPORT AN ONGOING ISSUE!

When it seems technology is changing faster than your kids are changing clothes, it's time to enlist some help to stay on top of the current trends in hardware, software and internet activity in light of Christian beliefs. Computing Today is here to keep you informed on the best software for your family and your church, because we know you don't have time to keep up with it all! That's why the publishers of Christianity Today have created Computing Today—to support you. You can look to us to provide reviews of hardware and software packages as well as internet sites to hit and those to avoid! Sign up today for the only Tech Support that comes to you every other month for a year for only $14.95!

Subscribe Today!

☐ Yes! I'd like to receive the next issue of Computing Today. After reading it, I'll decide whether or not I want to keep Computing Today coming. If I do, I'll honor your invoice for just $14.95 and receive 5 more bi-monthly issues, a full year in all. If not, I'll simply write "cancel" across the invoice and return it to you. The first issue is mine to keep, regardless.

E8G14

Your Name _____
 Address _____
 City _____ State _____ Zip _____
 Phone _____
 Email Address _____

Mail to:

Computing Today
 Subscription Services

P.O. Box 37060

One, IA 50037-0060

Please allow 4-6 weeks for delivery of first issue. Outside U.S. add $5/year for delivery. U.S. funds only.

Dear John the Evangelist

Bob Hudson

What if the writer of the Fourth Gospel had to get his work published in today's market...

Dear John: Enclosed you will find my editing comments for the first few chapters of your book. Overall, it looks great! Your story has wonderful suspense (will the Pharisees manage to kill the protagonist or not?), a sense of mystery (the miracles are fascinating, though a couple, like raising people from the dead, strain credibility), and lots of good characterization (all those wise sayings of Jesus make for great sound bites; we'll use some on the flap). It's going to cause quite a stir in the Christian bookstores, though it will probably have only limited crossover potential in the secular stores. It should get rave reviews in CBA Marketplace and Moody.

There are a couple of problems, however, that we need to work through.

Structure. Right off, consider deleting the entire opening section. All that "In the beginning was the Word" stuff is confusing, abstract, and sure to make the average reader say, "Huh? What's going on here?" As you probably know, storytellers have always used the technique of starting in medias res—that is, in the middle of the story. (Have you read John Grisham?) I recommend you begin chapter 1 with John the Baptist's interrogation by the Pharisees. It's so intense! And it gets the reader hooked right away.

Scene. In your writing you tend to emphasize character at the expense of developing the scene. For instance, where does John's encounter with the Pharisees take place? What kind of day is it? Are there mosquitoes and that kind of thing? Only after the dialogue ends do you mention that it takes place "in the desert, near Bethany, on the other side of the Jordan." Let's beef up that section and move it to the front as exposition so the reader will have more of a sense of locale. Don't be afraid to make the reader sweat; after all, it's a desert.

Dialogue. You really need to work on your dialogue. I recommend you read Hemingway to see how a true master handles it. Your characters speak all these great, dramatic lines, but they sound so stogy and formal, as when John says, "I am the voice of one calling in the desert." It certainly has a bell-like tone, but people just don't talk that way. You've already characterized John as a kind of wild man (have you read Iron John?), so why doesn't he speak like one? Remember, he's a vagrant, really, an outcast. He goes around in sandals and animal skins. It will help your development of his character if you have him say, instead, something like, "Hey, I'm shoutin' my fool head off out here and nobody's listenin'!" See what I mean? It's so much gutsier. It portrays his frustration and his colloquial way of talking.

Market sensitivities. First of all, the mention of wine at the Cana wedding will be a problem in our market. Wouldn't the scene work equally well with some other beverage? I recently attended a wedding at which nonalcoholic punch was served. Though I have no objection to wine personally, we are sure to get angry letters from readers if we leave the reference in.

Also, in the opening section you refer to Jesus as having been conceived by the Holy Spirit and not by "human decision or a husband's will." Many readers will find that sexual innuendo tasteless, and it should probably come out. (We have to be extra careful in our romance novels on that score.)

Similarly, I'm surprised that Jesus, in chapter 8, doesn't deal a little more harshly with the "woman taken in adultery." I know you want to portray his compassion, but the fact that she gets off scot-free will leave us open to the charge that you (the author) and we (the publisher) are tacitly condoning her sin.

As it stands, parents would have a hard time sharing this book with their teenagers, wouldn't they? Isn't the whole point of Christian stories that evil people get punished?

Since the whole issue of prostitutes and adultery is probably too much of a "red flag" for our market anyway, maybe you could rewrite it as "the woman taken in shoplifting," or something like that.

Finally, while the conflict with the Pharisees is extremely well developed and moves the story along nicely, I think we need to show some sensitivity here. You characterize the Pharisees, basically, as the legalistic, conservative religious establishment of the time. This may cut a little too close to home for some readers. Could we possibly characterize them instead as the secular humanists and religious liberals of their time? If not, maybe it's best not to say anything at all. We'll just let the reader fill in the blanks.

Naming. Since another character pops up later in the story, the Beloved Disciple, who we know is really you (like Alfred Hitchcock making cameo appearances in his films), it will be confusing for readers to have two major characters with the same name. I'm not alone on this one—all of the major books on narrative technique say the same thing. Therefore, I've taken the liberty of changing the Baptist's name to Bill. I like the phrase "Bill the Baptist." It has a certain punch.

Market position. We're really pumped about pushing this one in our market. "Spirituality" and "narrative theology" are big buzzwords right now, so I think you'll be hitting the market at the right time. My gut feeling is that you've hit on a very hot topic—believe it or not, we are currently considering three other manuscripts on the same subject.

One of the unique things about your book is that it can be read not only for its fast-paced story line but also for its devotional value. In fact, one of our marketing people even suggested that we divide the chapters into short passages and number them for those readers who would like to read just a couple of sentences each day. Makes sense to me. What do you think?

Title. We haven't decided on a title yet. Our committee is still working on it. I will warn you in advance that I'm fairly certain we won't be going with your original title since several people on the committee felt the word Gospel is too over-used in book titles nowadays. (Have you seen John MacArthur's The Gospel According to Jesus, or the humor book The Gospel According to First Grade?) It's a cliché, I'm afraid. We need to find something epic, suggesting intrigue and suspense, as hard-hitting as a good movie title. Something like Prophet would be ideal—but Frank Peretti has already used that. We'll let you know.

Author photo. I don't know how to deal with this next issue other than honestly. We've decided not to use your photo on the back cover. It's nothing against you personally, but you must understand that people with dark complexions and strong Middle Eastern features, like yourself, are looked upon with considerable distrust in the United States right now, and our marketing people are afraid that having your picture on the book could hurt sales. It's just one of those hard realities we have to live with. Sorry.

Marketing plan. As for promotion, I think you'll be a natural for radio interviews, and that will certainly be key in selling your book. I would suggest, however, that you don't mention your belief that your work is directly inspired by a Higher Power. As real as that may seem to you, it's bound to strike most Christian radio listeners as smacking of New Age religion—you know, channeling, out-of-body experiences, and all that. Also, speaking of out-of-body experiences, I would avoid any mention of the heavenly visions that you told me about over the phone recently. No offense intended, but it might give listeners the impression that you're a little off-kilter—or else a charismatic. Then again, with all the interest in angels recently, maybe you should collect those visions and put them into your next book! Send us a proposal. If anyone can make it work, you can!

Sorry you couldn't make it to the Christian Booksellers Association convention. Your agent said something about not being able to get a flight out—hey, must be tough living on a sunny island in the Mediterranean! Hope all is well on Patmos.

Sincerely, Your Editor.

CT

Bob Hudson is a senior editor at Zondervan Publishing House, and coauthor, with his wife, Shelley, of Companions for the Soul (Zondervan).

Buying? Selling? Refinancing?

Let the Christian Purchasing Network Help You Realize Your Dream of Home Ownership

We are a nationally recognized provider of goods and services for the Christian Community, serving more than 400,000 churches. Our church partners value our integrity as well as our business acumen.

Now you can use our reputation for honesty, quality and exemplary service to help you realize your goal of buying a home. The Christian Purchasing Network has formed an alliance to provide a full array of real estate and mortgage services tailored to meet your needs. And we're so confident about our mortgage program, that we'll guarantee your mortgage...twice. We'll provide you with a same-day decision or pay you $250!*

And if we don't close your loan on the date you select, we'll reduce your interest rate by 1/8 of one percent for the life of your loan. Excellent pricing and tremendous service...all from people you can trust.

Let us help you achieve your dream.....

Call us now!!

Christian Purchasing Network
Home Ownership Services Program®

1-800-372-1791

CPN+

Christian Purchasing Network
Home Ownership Services Program®

Financing provided by PHH Mortgage Services Corporation, 6000 Atrium Way, Mt. Laurel, NJ 08054. Arizona Residential Mortgage Licensee #BK10039; Georgia Residential Mortgage Licensee; Illinois Residential Mortgage Lender; Massachusetts Licensed Lender #ML0060; Licensed Mortgage Banker - N.J. Department of Banking; Licensed Mortgage Banker - NYS Banking Department; Rhode Island Licensed Lender; Minnesota - This is not an offer to enter an interest rate lock-in agreement. * conventional first mortgages only.

START A "CHANGE REACTION" IN YOUR CHURCH

This is a living, breathing, working degree. You may hang it on your wall, but it will live in your heart.

When you're ready for this bold move, this change reaction, give us a call—we will introduce you to Richard Foster. You may know him as the acclaimed speaker or the prolific author. But he is much more. Here, at the Haggard Graduate School, he leads an unequaled group of godly professors committed to their call.

DR. RICHARD FOSTER

He literally wrote the book on spiritual formation and is ready to work with you toward a deeper, more intense ministry.

The program, in essence, also seems to live. By design, it allows for new ideas and perspectives. It takes into consideration how very individualized ministry can be. Passionate, in-depth discussions erupt regularly both one-on-one and in the classroom. Growth and learning at the Haggard Graduate School of Theology are always reciprocal—rooted in a solid scriptural foundation, tirelessly seeking truth and understanding.

It could revive your ministry, your parishioners, . . . YOU. It's worth looking into.

Call APU's Haggard Graduate School of Theology at (626) 812-3049 and cause a Change Reaction.

OUR DOCTOR OF MINISTRY TEAM

DR. EARL GRANT

DR. KENNETH GANGEL

DR. JOHN MAXWELL

DR. JESSE MIRANDA

DR. JIM GARLOW

DR. KEVIN MANNOIA

DR. JOHN TIMOTHY KAUFFMAN

FOR MORE INFORMATION, CALL
DR. EARL GRANT AT
(626) 812-3049.

AZUSA PACIFIC
UNIVERSITY

Haggard Graduate School of Theology

901 E. Alosta Ave., PO Box 7000, Azusa, CA 91702-7000
(626) 812-3049 • FAX (626) 815-3809 • <http://www.apu.edu>

Remember the Persecuted

Along the Burma/Thailand border, people are living in makeshift camps, fleeing from the Burma military regime that persecutes them simply because they are Christian. Soldiers will routinely storm these camps, burning them to the ground; killing the refugees at will. Food is scarce and medical supplies are horribly inadequate. This is everyday life for the Christian Karen of Burma.

Without help, the Karen face a very bleak future. These all-but-forgotten, gentle, Christian people are slowly being massacred and ethnically cleansed while most of the world has turned a deaf ear. Through Christian Freedom International, you can help the Karen help themselves to survive

These colorful handbags are made by the Karen in the refugee camps. Each bag represents three days of work, from the fabric woven on handmade looms, to the design and stitching, all crafted by hand. The size and style of these bags will vary from one to another, because each is one of a kind. For a donation of $20, you can provide food, medical supplies, and equipment to help the Karen, and receive a unique gift.

Your involvement can make a difference in the lives of the persecuted. Call or write CFI today.

Visa/MC

1 800 323 CARE (2273)

check or money order

Christian Freedom International
P.O. Box 16367
Washington DC 20041

The next great leap for equipping church leaders is ready.

step back.

Back to the way Jesus himself
equipped and trained the 12.

Smelly fishing boats. Dusty streets. Windblown hillsides. Not much of a campus! But the student body of 12 sure learned the secrets of effective ministry. At Denver Seminary, we're following the example of the Master Professor with an emphasis on hands-on learning directed by experienced mentors. Learn more about the seminary education with an innovative approach to knowing, being and doing. We borrowed it from the best!

Take the leap.

DENVER SEMINARY

1-800-922-3040 Ext. 278 e-mail: admit@densem.edu www.gospelcom.net/densem/
P.O. Box 10,000 Denver, CO 80250

HIGHLIGHTS: LEADERSHIP

Brimstone for the Broad-Minded

Can we seriously preach hell in a tolerant age?

Only if we also communicate the true sacrifice of the cross, says Tim Keller, pastor of Redeemer Presbyterian Church in New York City. His article is condensed from LEADERSHIP journal, one of a dozen periodicals published by Christianity Today, Inc.

The main objection secular people make to the Christian message is hell.

The young man in my office was an Ivy League MBA, successful in the financial world. He had lived in three countries before age 30. Raised in a family with only the loosest connections to a mainline church, he had little understanding of Christianity.

I was therefore gratified to learn of his intense spiritual interest, recently piqued as he attended our church. He said he was ready to embrace the gospel. But there was a final obstacle: hell.

"I work with some fine people who are Muslim, Jewish, or agnostic," he said. "I cannot believe they are going to hell just because they don't believe in Jesus. In fact, I cannot reconcile the very idea of hell with a loving God—even if he is holy too."

This young man expressed what may be the main objection contemporary secular people make to the Christian message. Moderns reject the idea of final judgment and hell.

When preaching hell to people of this mindset (who tend to be younger, from nominal Catholic or nonreligious Jewish backgrounds, from liberal mainline Protestant backgrounds, and from the western and northeastern U.S. and Europe), I've found I must clearly communicate the following four points:

Sin is slavery. I do not define sin as just breaking the rules, but also as "making something besides God our ultimate value and worth." These good things, which become gods, will drive us relentlessly, enslaving us mentally and spiritually, even to hell forever if we let them.

C. S. Lewis writes, "Hell . . . begins with a grumbling mood, and yourself still distinct from it: perhaps even criticizing it. . . . You can repent and come out of it again. But there may come a day when you can do that no longer. Then there will be no you left to criticize the mood or even enjoy it, but just the grumble itself going on forever like a machine."

When sin is seen as slavery, and hell as the freely chosen, eternal skid row of the universe, hell becomes much more comprehensible.

Tolerance is exclusive too. Nothing is more characteristic of the modern mindset than the statement "I think Christ is fine, but I believe a devout Muslim or Buddhist or even a good atheist will certainly find God." This approach is seen as more inclusive.

I point out that the universal religion of humankind is: We develop a good record and give it to God, and then he owes us. The gospel is: God develops a good record and gives it to us, then we owe him (Rom. 1:17). In short, to say a good person, not just Christians, can find God is to say good works are enough to find God. But this apparently inclusive approach is really quite exclusive. It says, "The good people can find God, and the bad people do not." What does this mean for those of us with moral failures? We are excluded.

So both approaches are exclusive, but the gospel's is the more inclusive exclusivity. It says joyfully, "It doesn't matter who you are or what you've done. It doesn't matter if you've been at the gates of hell. You can be welcomed and embraced fully and instantly through Christ."

Salvation in Christianity is more personal. The postmodern "sensitive" approach to the subject of hell says, "It doesn't matter if you believe in the person of Christ, as long as you follow his example." But to say that is to say the essence of religion is intellectual and ethical, not personal. If any good person can find God, then the essential core of religion is understanding and following the rules.

There is no love without wrath. I answer people who say, "What kind of loving God is filled with such wrath as to send people to hell to suffer eternally?" by pointing out that a wrathless God cannot be a loving God. In Hope Has Its Reasons, Becky Pippert writes, "Think how we feel when we see someone we love ravaged by unwise actions or relationships. Do we respond with benign tolerance as we might toward strangers? Far from it. . . . Anger isn't the opposite of love. Hate is, and the final form of hate is indifference."

Pippert then quotes E. H. Gifford: "Human love here offers a true analogy: the more a father loves his son, the more he hates in him the drunkard, the liar, the traitor."

She concludes: "God's wrath is not a cranky explosion, but his settled opposition to the cancer of sin which is eating out the insides of the human race he loves with his whole being."

Ultimately, it is only because of the doctrine of judgment and hell that Jesus' proclamation of grace and love is so brilliant and astounding. CT

To subscribe to LEADERSHIP: A PRACTICAL JOURNAL FOR CHURCH LEADERS, call 1-800-777-3136.

Bad Things Still Happen

A concise, clear argument for how God can be both good and omnipotent.

Can God Be Trusted? Faith and the Challenge of Evil, by John G. Stackhouse, Jr. (Oxford University Press, 196 pp.; $25, hardcover). Reviewed by Elizabeth Fox-Genovese, who teaches literature, history, and women's studies at Emory University.

If God is all good and all-powerful, how can evil exist? The problem, known to theologians as theodicy, has haunted Christianity from its distant origins in the Old Testament. Why should God have visited untold miseries upon Job, his most exemplary and faithful servant? How may we explain, much less accept, the death of "innocent" babies? The destruction of "good" people and their homes through tornadoes or earthquakes? The indiscriminate ravages of famines, floods, and plagues?

If anything, human impatience with pain, suffering, and destruction seems to have increased with the passage of centuries, perhaps because we moderns have become more arrogant about our ability to judge the good and the bad in human affairs and more presumptuous about our ability to control so many of life's normal vicissitudes. Increasingly reluctant to recognize either sin or suffering as inherent in the human condition, we grow rebellious against a God who could subject us to either. In this slim volume, John Stackhouse, Jr., sets the daunting challenge of evil within the context of Christian faith, recasting the problem of God's willingness to tolerate evil as the question of whether God can be trusted.

Throughout, Stackhouse's language is deceptively direct and accessible, and he more than fulfills his self-imposed task of translating the work of philosophers and theologians into terms that ordinary Christians can understand. His admirable avoidance of intellectual pretension and technical jargon should not be mistaken for philosophical simplicity. He neither obscures the intractability of the central problem nor claims to have fully "solved" it. Rather, he graciously invites readers to progress with him through the steps in an argument that must inevitably end with the mystery with which it began.

Stackhouse divides his book into two parts: "Problems" and "Responses." The first begins with the question of whether the existence of evil does pose a problem. Many religions revere an omnipotent god capable of capriciously wreaking hardship upon his faithful without jeopardizing their devotion. In contrast, Christianity worships a God whom it celebrates as ultimately and absolutely good. This emphasis upon God's goodness opens the possibility that he may be powerless to prevent evil and, hence, not be omnipotent. Stackhouse, following orthodox Christian tradition, rejects this explanation, reminding us that Christians condemn the Manichean heresy that would raise Satan to equality with God in a struggle to control the world.

But if God is both good and omnipotent, then why does he inflict evil upon the children he claims to love? We must begin, Stackhouse suggests, by examining our idea of evil. First, we may view evil from either a subjective or an objective perspective. Our subjective perception includes the anger, pain, or outrage we feel when evil directly befalls us or those we cherish, or perhaps offends our convictions about how things should be. The objective perspective, in contrast, adopts a certain distance on specific events, permitting us to acknowledge our own inability to see and assess distant consequences: Even the most painful apparent evil may turn out to further a larger good.

Such objectivity does not, however, offer emotional satisfaction, nor does it let God "off the hook or out of the dock." Stackhouse acknowledges that God's works everywhere confront us with apparent inconsistency and moral contradictions, which make it impossible to "derive a consistent ethic from the available phenomena around us." To complicate matters further, evil itself does not follow consistent patterns: some evil results from natural phenomena over which we have no control; some evil results from our own moral failings—from our proclivity to choose sin rather than virtue.

Above all, Stackhouse insists that to ask why God could create evil is to ask the wrong question: "Evil is not a 'something' God could create." Evil in this sense is only an abstraction, not a real entity. Evil, he insists, "is primarily an adjective." Actions, events, human qualities, or even human beings can be evil, but the evil does not exist independent of their embodiment of it. Nor are we endowed with an innate ability to recognize the evil quality of specific phenomena: Our ability to recognize a phenomenon as evil depends upon our having a prior idea of the good. For evil can only be understood as a deviation from the good—as something or someone gone awry. But the recognition of evil as a violation of the good in turn forces us to ask why there is good. Thus does the consideration of evil force us back upon the ultimate problem of meaning.

Stackhouse concludes “Problems” with the acknowledgment that any adequate response must take account of all of the dimensions of evil he has evoked: its natural, moral, and possibly supernatural causes; its various degrees; its place in the lives of the guilty and the innocent; and, especially, the questions it raises about meaning and the existence of good. His succeeding section on “Responses” successively reviews a range of Christian explanations of evil, but his delineation of the problems has already pointed the way toward his main point, namely, that, as Christians, we must trust—and have reason to trust—in the essential goodness of God.

In this respect, some readers may feel that Stackhouse begs precisely the question he set out to answer, for he never fully explains why a God of love could or should tolerate a prevalence of evil that leads many to doubt his power, his goodness, and, indeed, his very existence. That charge, however, itself misses the point, as the most important of Stackhouse’s responses implicitly suggests: in attempting to reconcile ourselves to the simultaneous existence of the myriad manifestations of evil in our world and of a good and omnipotent God, we must learn truly to think as Christians. For, as Christians, we do know that none of us can pretend to the comprehensive understanding that belongs to God alone.

We further know that each of us is, by the mark of our birth, a sinner and, accordingly, liable to be complicit even in the manifestations of evil from which we most seek to distance ourselves. In this connection, Stackhouse quotes Mother Teresa, who, when asked by a reporter where God is when a baby dies in a Calcutta alley, responded, “God is there, suffering with the baby. The question really is, where are you?”

We know also that when God created the world he found it “good,” and that he found Adam and Eve “very good.” Loving his human creatures, he endowed them with free will, which our ancestors rapidly—and repeatedly thereafter—used to sinful ends. Entrusted with stewardship for the rest of creation, our kind has frequently chosen the temptations of exploitation and abuse. In sum, we bear no small share of responsibility for the world’s pervasive and recalcitrant deviation from the good.

Our acceptance of these explanations, Stackhouse acknowledges, requires our prior adherence to Christianity—requires a faith that leads us to trust in God. He thus devotes the most substantial part of his responses to a defense of Christianity as the truth that commands our adherence. Scrupulously acknowledging the claims of other religions upon their faithful, he does not put the matter as baldly as I have, but his arguments permit no doubt about his meaning.

Christianity, Stackhouse insists, uniquely combines reason and faith, which it holds as both compatible and mutually reinforcing. Relying heavily upon the work of Alvin Plantinga, he details the many “warrants” that support the truth of Christianity, notably the gospel accounts of the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. Stackhouse takes the reliability of the warrants for the gospel account of Jesus as the crux of our Christian response to evil, and herein lies the special form he gives to the general problem of theodicy.

The point for Christians is emphatically not that we should complacently accept evil. What Christian faith offers us is the certainty that even the most daunting manifestations of evil represent an (imperfectly understood) aspect of the truth or meaning that gives shape, direction, and purpose to our lives. For however mysterious many of the central tenets of our faith remain, we have the certainty that “Christ was and is the actual human face of God.” The mysteries remain: the mystery of God’s providence has not been fully revealed, nor has it been revealed why some suffer and others do not. “But God has revealed Godself in Jesus in a manner adequate for faith. And that, we recall, ‘is the point of it all.’”

Stackhouse thus answers his own question, “Can God be trusted?” with a steadfast yes. Only that trust, which rests upon the adequately warranted conviction of reason, can effectively locate evil within the context of meaning. Trust in God does not strip evil of the power to wound, but it does offer us a way to accept it as a consequence of God’s meaning, about which we have only the most fragmentary and partial understanding. Informed by grace, this trust might even help us to recognize ourselves as part of the evil that tempts us into rebellion against God himself and thereby chasten those aspects of our own nature that cripple our ability to embrace and return his love. For, as Stackhouse might well have concluded, despair is a sin. CT

If Christ Be Not Risen...

Scholars debate the meaning of the Resurrection.

The Resurrection: An Interdisciplinary Symposium on the Resurrection of Jesus, edited by Stephen T. Davis, Daniel Kendall, and Gerald O’Collins (Oxford University Press, 368 pp; $35, hardcover). Reviewed by D. A. Carson, research professor of New Testament at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School.

Books on the resurrection of Jesus are many. What makes this one distinctive is its scope. Its chapters include contributions from biblical studies, systematic theology, the philosophy of religion, homiletics, liturgy, fundamental theology (in the Catholic definition), the study of religious art, and literary criticism. Theologically, the contributors range from confessional conservatives such as William Craig to a variety of liberals (though in the current mix of outlooks these categories are inadequate and leave me uneasy).

The sheer diversity makes the book as interesting as it is difficult to review. The contribution of some of the essays is primarily to the history of thought about the Resurrection. Thus, after sketching the history of biblical expressions for resurrection, Alan Segal argues that second-temple Jews were divided: on the one side were “millenarian” movements that lionized the Jewish martyrs who lost their lives in the expectation of bodily resurrection at the end of time; on the other were those intellectuals who embraced some form of the Platonic idea of the immortality of the soul, emphasizing continuity of consciousness beyond death. Segal argues that the martyrdom context influenced Christians living in the shadow of the Cross. Eventually immortality was subsumed under resurrection in both Judaism and Christianity, though in characteristically different forms.

No less interested in historical development is Marguerite Shuster, who demonstrates how central the resurrection of Jesus is in the line of preacher-theologians that runs from Paul through Augustine, Luther, Barth, and Thielicke. In each instance, these Christian thinkers understood the resurrection of Jesus to be a bodily resurrection, however transformed his body was, and tied Jesus' resurrection to our resurrection at the End. Moreover, they defended this confession against major currents of intellectual thought in their own day that took contrary positions.

Another group of essays belongs to the stream of classical apologetics: they focus on the historical reality and credibility of the Resurrection. William Craig's essay is a critique of the work of John Dominic Crossan, whose reconstruction of Jesus' resurrection, Craig charges, is based on idiosyncratic methods and presuppositions embraced by no major New Testament scholar.

William Alston argues for the substantial historical credibility of the New Testament Resurrection accounts. His procedure is primarily to refute suggestions that this or that detail is not historical. In particular, he interacts with the work of Reginald Fuller.

Stephen Davis asks what it is the first witnesses "saw." He refutes theories that argue their "seeing" was some kind of visualization, "grace-assisted seeing." On the axis from "sight" to "insight," Davis situates the "seeing" of the first witnesses at the "sight" end. Even when the two disciples on the road to Emmaus failed to recognize Jesus, it was not because they required some special grace to make the connection, but because their eyes were withheld from "seeing" Jesus: in other words, the actual textual evidence suggests that normal vision would have enabled them to see the resurrected Jesus had their powers not somehow been restrained.

Summarizing some of the work in one of his books, Carey Newman examines the theological logic at work in the New Testament's identification of Jesus as "Glory." This not only signals the dawning of the eschatological age, but opens a "breach" in Jewish monotheism by identifying Jesus as the divine presence. Tied as it is to the resurrection of Jesus, this glory-language not only supports the view that high Christology was early, but indicates that the parting of the ways between Jews and Christians began rather early as well.

None of this suggests that all the contributors to the symposium are convinced by these arguments. In her reply to Alston, Sarah Coakley suggests that while he effectively parries Fuller's dogmatic skepticism, Alston downplays the redactional (and, in her view, therefore probably unhistorical) elements of the Gospels.

In his reflection on the summit, John Wilkens distances himself from Davis's argument that if a modern camera had been present in the first century, it would have been able to capture an image of Jesus' resurrection body on film. In his response to a largely survey essay by Gerald O'Collins, Peter Carnley argues that one can neither prove nor disprove John Hick's conjecture that the Resurrection appearances are psychogenic projections. In Carnley's view, it doesn't really matter: a contemporary theology of the Resurrection should focus more attention on how to construct an "epistemology of faith" that enables us to identify the "Spirit of Christ" in our experience with the crucified Jesus.

Richard Swinburne argues that, in coming to an informed opinion as to what really happened, one must not only examine the detailed historical evidence but also evaluate the general background evidence. Here he includes, on the negative side, the obvious human experience that people do not normally rise from the dead, and, on the positive side, various arguments from natural theology, and especially the argument that the celebration of the Eucharist on the first day of the week constitutes admissible historical evidence for Jesus' resurrection on what came to be called "the Lord's day."

Inevitably, some contributions approach the subject with self-conscious reliance upon, or at least interaction with, postmodern assumptions. Alan Padgett insists that it is illegitimate to bracket off Christian faith, including faith in the resurrection of Jesus, from "scientific" knowledge. The ideology (he calls it a "myth") that these two domains are mutually incommensurable needs to be rejected. The way forward is a post-modern approach that is holistic and humble, that recognizes the "prejudice of perspective" in science as in religion, that refuses to rule out the pursuit of objectivity even while not succumbing to the kind of subjectivity that drowns in a sea of relativism. The resurrection of Jesus becomes the "test case" for Padgett's arguments.

Francis Schüssler Fiorenza is equally willing to critique foundationalism. He probably explores how one should affirm the resurrection of Jesus with fundamental theology once the foundationalism that has long characterized fundamental theology is set aside.

Some of the essays reflect on the ethical implications of the Resurrection. Brian Johnstone argues that while the Resurrection of the crucified Jesus has been at the heart of the Christian kerygma, it has not been at the heart of moral theology and Christian ethics. He sets out to explore what such an ethical system might look like, focusing not least on an ethics of transformation. Janet Martin Soskice argues that for Paul, belief in the Resurrection has implications not only for "corporeality" (bodiliness) but for "corporateness," as she ties the personal body of Jesus to the body of Christ that is the church.

The strength of the book is also its weakness. It could not usefully serve as a textbook (unless the course were on contemporary theology, using the resurrection of Jesus as a test case). There is no focused and balanced theology of the Resurrection, no systematic presentation of critical issues, no obvious basis for selecting which people will be discussed (apart from the idiosyncratic preferences of the essayists).

Why, for instance, is there extended evaluation of the views of Reginald Fuller, and only passing comment on Wolfhart Pannenberg? Above all, the diversity of the contributors, for all that it adds interest to the book, means that there is no developing line of thought, no overarching stance with which to engage—though I confess I wanted to say "Yes, but . . ." to many of the essays.

Nevertheless, this volume remains a useful reflection of the breadth of current discussion about the resurrection of Jesus, and for that we can be grateful. C1

WE PRACTICE WHAT WE TEACH

From the day Fuller Theological Seminary opened its doors half a century ago, our faculty and students have shared a dual commitment: to outstanding biblical scholarship and to the ministry of Christ.

That same focus remains central to the Fuller mission today. Our professors not only excel in the classroom, but they are out in the world, pastoring churches, engaging in mission, practicing psychology. Just as founding faculty member Carl F. H. Henry used to witness between theology classes, so New Testament scholar Isaac Canales serves as minister of a 1,300-member church and volunteer chaplain to a high school football team. Judith Tiersma Watson lives and works among the poor in Los Angeles as part of InnerChange, when she's not teaching classes in urban mission. And they are joined by scores of Fuller colleagues who are equally active on campus and in the community.

The reason for their dedication is simple: Teaching and preaching are the best ways we know to nurture keen minds and compassionate hearts.

Still faithful.
Still Fuller.

FULLER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

An unchanging focus for an ever-changing world

135 NORTH OAKLAND AVENUE, PASADENA, CA 91182

1-800-AFULLER HTTP://WWW.FULLER.EDU

Pasadena Seattle Sacramento Menlo Park Irvine Phoenix Colorado Springs

What the Hands Reveal

His Bill of Rights sculpture shows American hands, but Wu Kwan knows his life journey has been shaped by God's hand.

While it seems inconceivable that Olympian Jim Ryun, Chinese dictator Mao Zedong, baseball great Satchel Paige, and Carolyn Kennedy Schlossberg could have much in common, they share one thing: all have been shaped into likenesses by the hands of Chinese sculptor Wu Kwan.

During China's Cultural Revolution (1966–76), Mao considered artists the most dangerous intellectuals because art has the ability to mobilize people of all levels and education. China's artists, and most other intellectuals, were often incarcerated or sent to farms and put "out to pasture." Even after the revolution, libraries were considered centers of potentially dangerous capitalist ideas and remained padlocked mortuaries for the dust-covered books not destroyed. But in the 1970s, as a teen in Guangzhou, Wu showed such artistic promise that his headmaster slipped him a key to the library so he could thumb through Western art books at night.

Gradually, the government began to invite artists back into society. By 1981, Wu Kwan was teaching at the Art Institute of Guangzhou, and much of the cultural chaos caused by Maoist doctrines had faded into a bad dream. Wu gained recognition as a sculptor of monumental pieces—some as high as 45 feet—exhibiting the muscularity and heroic proportions of Russian social realist art. In 1988, Wu met a leading American bronze sculptor at a cultural exchange. Unexpectedly, he was invited to serve as visiting professor at the University of Kansas for one year.

Wu Kwan never expected to leave his native country—travel even between provinces prior to 1990 was heavily monitored by the government. His only exposure to English had been during casual evenings at the institute, where an American from Zhongshan University taught English by reading from the Old and New Testaments. "In my background, I had no religion," Wu explains, referring to Mao's complete repression of religion. "But this teacher spoke simply about Jesus taking care of all our sins in a way that moved many of us. I began to understand something of Christianity, even though my priority was to learn English."

Transplanted suddenly to Kansas, Wu's lack of English made life difficult, although it did not affect his ability to teach, because art is truly a universal language and he could let his hands talk for him. Socially, however, "not having language was like being no different from an animal," Wu remembers. Alone, because he could not afford to bring his wife and teenage son to America, he faced anonymity, financial stress, and the prospect of starting from scratch after unqualified artistic success in China.

A track coach's generosity

To his surprise, Wu was championed by Bob Timmons, Jim Ryun's track coach. Timmons—who knows no Chinese and knew even less about art—took Wu under his wing, relating Wu's story to anyone who would listen. This supportive experience gave the artist, for the first time, the sense that God had plucked him out of China for a reason and would provide for him. He felt convicted that he should recreate his career in the States, and Timmons's generous spirit prompted him to choose the Christian God as his Savior.

In 1989, Wu's legal status in America was vouchsafed by Sen. Bob Dole and a Washington, D.C.-based sculpture association. In 1990, he brought his family to Kansas, and his wife, also an artist, eventually converted to Christianity too, as amazed as Wu by the hospitality and concern of Christian friends. Last January, Wu proudly became an American citizen in a ceremony presided over by Federal Judge Scott Wright, who in 1991 had commissioned Wu to create a bronze commemorative for the bicentennial of the Constitution's Bill of Rights.

Hands and the American dream:
Wu Kwan's 100 Hands symbolizes the strength of U.S. democracy.

The riddle that links a patriotic American sculpture to a transplanted Chinese artist rests, apparently, with Wu's creative solution. Like his faith, the idea came out of adversity. Before he knew English, Wu observed people closely in an attempt to understand them. He noticed that Americans spoke with their hands much more than the Chinese, using a large repertoire of "OKs" and other signage. He also realized that, because Americans display such a wide variety of facial features, he could not use in an American sculpture the social realist portrait approach of one figure as representative of thousands. It seemed logical, then, to use hands to portray America, so he began "collecting" hands just as he "collects" faces, photographing hundreds of examples. Each pair of hands came to signify the individual strengths and successes that brought American democracy into action, forming the motif for Wu's Bill of Rights sculpture.

100 Hands is a bronze stack of minutely detailed hands, topped by those of runner Jim Ryun. One set of hands belongs to a deaf woman, who signed "love" in a way that moved Wu deeply; another is missing a finger. Asked by Judge Wright why that hand seemed "unfinished," Wu explained, "Even American history is not that smooth. You have not been without your wars or violence. I wanted that hand to symbolize the tragedies, as well as the hard work, that also built the country."

Among a "personal" repertoire, Wu's loosely titled works often depict a study of a deeply contained emotion hidden stoically within a muscular body. In Struggling, Wu sculpts the idealized portrait of an Asian, frowning with concentration as he struggles to burst the bindings cutting into his arms and torso. It is Wu's portrait of China and the Chinese, who are often stereotyped as "inscrutable": in fact, he says, they "look inward for strength, struggling inwardly all the time—not in the free, open poses of Western figures by Rodin and Henry Moore. Quiet on the outside, but inside, always trying to get emotions under control."

Wu's approach to his faith, much as his sculpture, is designed on the grand scale. "My attitude as a Christian is shaped by God bringing me to the States and getting me through all the hard times. So often people pray for small things but don't work hard themselves to get the answer. I think that if you don't work hard, God is not going to be as likely to help you. I was brought to a Promised Land, which is a big thing, and after facing the hard challenges God gave me, I feel stronger, and my heart is light. When I pray, I don't stay in the details of life—he gave me faith, and transferred his spirit to me, and brought me here," he says contentedly. "Isn't that enough?"

CT

By Karen L. Mulder. For more information on Wu Kwan or his work, contact Ron Stowe at rstowe@gvi.net or 913-963-7953.

UPDATE

Miracle Monument

Red tape couldn't stymie sculptor Esther Augsburger. After a mere three years—a brief moment by bureaucratic standards—the artist's dream for a protest against gun violence, made of disarmed handguns and a huge, steel plowshare, has materialized in Judiciary Square in Washington, D.C. Augsburger described her vision for CT in "A .38-calibre Plowshare" (Oct. 2, 1995, p. 38) but had no idea that in such a relatively short time she could have beaten the odds and cut through the red tape of a city famous for its red tape. She gives the credit all to God.

Monument proposals in the capital face a trying array of local committees, then other inquisitions occur on the federal level. This process has interrupted such commissions as Franklin D. Roosevelt's memorial or the statue commemorating women in the military by as much as eight years—one sculpture proposed by a private citizen has been pending for 38 years. Nevertheless, Augsburger engaged in the fray knowing that God supported the effort. In retrospect, she is still amazed by the outcome.

On September 9, 1997, before 500 onlookers, the 16-foot high, four-ton plowshare form was lowered by crane into a permanent cement and steel base. Augsburger fervently hopes that it will remain there as a memorial to every child and adult destroyed by gunfire—a considerable constituency.

Symbols of life and death

Augsburger knew the project was particularly blessed by God when the chairman of the formidable Commission of Fine Arts, who has the final say on such projects, asked to be quoted on the record as approving the project "with enthusiasm."

While guns stand for death, the plowshare is a symbol of preparing the ground for life-sustaining growth. Augsburger, a Mennonite who lived near the capitol for 14 years and felt the pain of violence each day in her work with inner-city children, said in her dedication speech, "When we lay down our instruments of violence and turn our attention to implements which cultivate life, we will have peace. . . . We want this sculpture to help bear the pain of those who have lost loved ones by gun violence. And we hope that it can be a symbol of joy. . . ."

For a time, after the sculpture's installation, gang members met regularly to discuss peacekeeping; Augsburger reports, however, that gang leaders ultimately did not support that effort, and so it withered. Undaunted, the artist begins work this summer on a commission to honor Christians martyred in the Soviet gulags. She will travel to Siberia to review the site and interview families of the victims. As she knows from experience, the work of sowing peace and making restitution never ends.

CT

DR. WYRON S. AUGSBURGER

REFLECTIONS

Classic and contemporary excerpts

Traveling God's Road

Before we were born, God knew us. He knew that some of us would rebel against His love and His mercy, and that others would love Him from the moment that they could love anything, and never change that love. He knew that there would be joy in heaven among the angels of His house for the conversion of some of us. . . .

In one sense we are always travelling, and travelling as if we did not know where we were going.

In another sense we have already arrived.

We cannot arrive at the perfect possession of God in this life, and that is why we are travelling and in darkness. But we already possess Him by grace, and therefore in that sense we have arrived and are dwelling in the light.

—Thomas Merton in Mornings with Thomas Merton

Grace to Follow

Cheap grace is the preaching of forgiveness without requiring repentance, baptism without church discipline, Communion without confession, absolution without personal confession. Cheap grace is grace without discipleship, grace without the cross, grace without Jesus Christ, living and incarnate.

Costly grace is the treasure hidden in the field; for the sake of it a man will gladly go and sell all that he has. It is the pearl of great price to buy [for] which the merchant will sell all his goods. It is the kingly rule of Christ, for whose sake a man will pluck out the eye which causes him to stumble, it is the call of Jesus Christ at which the disciple leaves his nets and follows him. . . .

Such grace is costly because it calls us to follow, and it is grace because it calls us to follow Jesus Christ.

—Dietrich Bonhoeffer in
The Cost of Discipleship

Sledgehammer

Authority without wisdom is like a heavy axe without an edge: fitter to bruise than polish.

—Ann Bradstreet in Wise Women

Sightlessness

When you have first learned God, or His will, you can address yourself cheerfully to the study of His works. If you do not see yourselves and all things as living, moving, and having their being in God, you see nothing, whatever you may think you see.

—Richard Baxter in
The Reformed Pastor

Poor Substitutions

A post-intellectual society is one where public relations substitutes for public policy, where one mass-media image can wipe out many careful arguments, where sound moral character means feeling good about yourself, and the increase of freedom means more consumer choices. It is, finally, a society where intellectuals are very comfortably kept thinking about what they are told to think about. I suppose the biggest difference in the past 30 years is that the intellectually gifted now have so many more places to sell out. Freshmen with any smarts at all now arrive at universities eager to become commodities

—Richard Lee,

in a commencement address at Valparaiso University (Cresset, Christmas/Epiphany 1997–98)

Whose Image?

Is Christian music really a ministry or a business, or both, and how do we define its success? . . .

Musicians, as well as record companies, are perplexed by these questions. Ministry is great, but is God honored by an artist who defaults on his or her mortgage and can't feed his or her children? What good is a record company that does its books only in red? . . .

I think our society inwardly, even unknowingly, longs for a truth that endures. For people of character. For substance and meaning behind the images. . . .

Ultimately, Christian musicians must ask whether they are more concerned with their own image or being made in the image of God.

—Mark Gersmehl of Whiteheart in

Billboard (Apr. 25, 1998)

To Effect Change—

You must be the change you wish to see in the world.

—Mahatma Gandhi,
quoted in Zen Soup

Past and Future with God

For what has been—thanks!

For what shall be—yes!

—Dag Hammarskjöld,

quoted in Sacred Moments

THE SPECTATOR (UK), JULY 21, 1990.

New York City's Evangelical Christian College

Recent high school graduates searching for a solid Bible foundation in a Christ-centered academic environment have an exciting new option.

Nyack College's Manhattan Center—located in the heart of the pulsing city—offers afternoon, evening and weekend courses to serve the needs of traditional students as well as working adults. Nyack College rewards life experiences with college credits and makes generous grants available.

Associate Degrees:	Liberal Arts A.A., Christian Work A.S.
Bachelor Degrees:	Bible B.A., Pastoral Ministries B.S., Youth Ministries B.S., Psychology B.A., Business Administration B.S., Elementary Education B.S., Interdisciplinary Studies (Double Major degrees – B.A. & B.S. only)

Call 212-625-0500 now
for free information!

Contact President
David Schroeder
at (914) 358-1710
if you would like to aid Nyack College's ministry in
New York City.

335 Broadway/93 Worth Street, 10th Floor
New York, NY 10013-3904
<http://www.nyackcollege.edu>

Stay put

While you move ahead

What you hear could affect your vision.

SAINT PAUL • SAN DIEGO

www.bethel.edu AOL: keyword BETHEL

THE MARKETPLACE

Cost: 46 cents per character (each space & punctuation counts as a character); avg. 45 characters per line. Min. $39.10 (85 characters). CT blind box number available at $6 each insertion; checkmark box (✓) $14 each insertion. Supply permanent street address and phone number. Ads set display style: $276/column inch. Combination package available for CHRISTIANITY TODAY, CHRISTIAN READER, & YOUR CHURCH: 2 magazines—44 cents per character per insertion; 3 magazines—42 cents per character per insertion. Display style: 2 magazines—$263 per insertion; 3 magazines—$252 per insertion. All classified ads will now be automatically placed on CHRISTIANITY ONLINE at no additional charge. IMPORTANT: Prepayment & written confirmation required to process ads. Visa, MasterCard, or personal check accepted; fax (630) 260-0114. Employment ads are given priority. All other ads will be placed in first available issue. Deadline for reservation or cancellation is seven weeks prior to actual issue date. Address correspondence to: Classified Advertising, Christianity Today, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES: Advent Group Ministries, a Christian social service agency located in San Jose, CA, seeks resident counselors, night counselors, summer interns for adolescent residential treatment programs. Competitive salary, benefits. Residential positions provide room & board. Contact Deborah Norris: (408) 281-0708; (1-800) 98ADVENT; fax: (408) 281-2658.

MINISTRY PLACEMENT for pastors & associates or churches. Call (503) 357-7830 or Believer's Dynamics, POB 596, Forest Grove, OR 97116. Since 1977.

AMERICA'S FOREMOST INNER-CITY FREE children's camp. Lifeguards and camp recreational workers needed. Camp Penuel Ministry now leads 1,000 to Christ yearly. Write: Camp Penuel, Box 367, Ironton, MO 63650, or call: (573) 546-3020.

MAKE A CHANGE! Teach English, business, or computers in China, Russia, Muslim Asia, or C. Europe. Call ESI at: (1-800) 895-7955. All college majors/degrees welcome.

NEW MAJOR GIFTS PROGRAM

The Salvation Army offers a superb opportunity for the right mission-driven development professionals. We are looking for nine such candidates in the Southeastern United States. Candidates will have a record of successful major donor work, be responsible to develop an annual plan, have strong written and verbal skills, and be self-motivated. The focus of these positions is to develop long-term relationships with key individuals, foundations, and corporate donors while representing the mission of The Salvation Army. EOE. Please send a cover letter, résumé, and salary requirements to: Paul Curnow, The Salvation Army, 1424 Northeast Expressway, Atlanta, GA 30329-2088.

CIRCLE CHURCH, bordering Chicago, looking for catalytic seasoned PASTOR. Involved, committed Bible/worship-focused congregation of diverse backgrounds and life perspectives. For an info application packet, leave name/address at (708) 848-3733.

URBAN REFORMED congregation in St. Louis seeks musician with mastery of piano or pipe organ, competent in both. Our worship fosters a wide range of musical styles from classical to black gospel. Part-time position. Call Kathleen Thro, Grace and Peace Fellowship, (314) 367-8969.

DIRECTOR OF MEN'S MINISTRIES

Christian shelter is seeking a director of Men's Ministries. Must have excellent management skills and 5-10 years of drug & alcohol or mental-health program administration experience. Mail résumé and references to: Bryan Yesilonis, Executive Director, P.O. Box 3041, 611 Reily Street, Harrisburg, PA 17105; (717) 257-4440; fax: (717) 257-5486.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

DUE TO GROWTH AND EXPANSION, Belhaven College seeks those faculty who are excited to serve in the following areas at a college which prepares students to serve Christ Jesus in their occupation, relationships, and in the world of ideas.

- Business Administration Faculty in Memphis (DBA or PhD required)
 - Director of Libraries (Librarian Masters required)
 - History Faculty (Fall 1999, PhD required)
 - Mathematics Department Chair (PhD required)
 - Sports Medicine Faculty (PhD & Athletic Training Certification required)
 - Theatre Department Chair (MFA required)
- Send vita to Daniel C. Fredericks, Provost, 1500 Peachtree St., Jackson, MS 39202. Minorities are encouraged to apply.

DIRECTOR OF WORSHIP AND MUSIC MINISTRIES

Tuesday-Friday, Sunday, 40 hours: $30,000-35,000+ benefits. Pastor Kent Crawford, Westside Christian Fellowship, 2948 Colorado Avenue, Santa Monica, CA 90404; (310) 829-9344.

NATIONAL CHURCH PLACEMENT SERVICE Churches and Ministers are connecting with CMPN, P.O. Box 1132, Barre, VT 05641; (802) 476-8902.

SCHAEFFER ACADEMY, a classical, Christian school, beginning its sixth year with over 200 students in grades K-11, seeks applicants for the following teaching positions: secondary science (ft), physical education (pt). Send résumé to: 4400 55th St. NW, Rochester, MN 55901, or call: (507) 286-1050.

CHRISTIAN ACADEMY OF KNOXVILLE, 9426 Dutchtown Road, Knoxville, TN 37923. K-12 independent Christian school of 800+ students, established 1977, is now accepting applications for the following positions beginning August 1998:

- Classroom teachers-M.S. English, M.S. Life Sciences, H.S. English
 - High School Principal
 - Athletic/Facilities Director
- C.A.K. is an equal opportunity employer and is accredited by the Association of Christian Schools International and the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

ASSOCIATE PASTOR FOR ADULT MINISTRIES sought for dynamic 560+member Evangelical Covenant church for ministry with small groups, singles, adult education, discipleship, and family life. Responsive, visionary, and enthusiastic pastoral staff and congregation; strong lay leadership. Prefer broad church-based experience with strong leadership, organizational, and people skills. Require master's degree and eligibility for Covenant ordination. Reply to: Search Committee, Hillside Covenant Church, 2060 Magnolia Way, Walnut Creek, CA 94596.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

ACMC PRESIDENT

ACMC (Advancing Churches in Missions Commitment) is an organization with a vision to increase the passion of the American church for world evangelization. We are looking for a godly servant leader with ten years of progressive management experience and a desire to stimulate local churches to reach across cultures with the gospel. Previous experience in working with and/or through local churches regarding missions is essential. Demonstrated skills in these areas are desired: supervision, strategic/tactical/financial planning, resource development. Fax résumés to: Dale Folsom at (316) 265-2052; e-mail: DaleFolsom@aol.com or mail to: 501 Springlake Lane, Wichita, KS 67230.

GOD'S WORLD PUBLICATIONS, publisher of Christian periodicals, has openings in the following positions:

- Ad reps to sell display advertising for World magazine; 3-5 yrs. experience in ad sales.
 - Buyer to negotiate & arrange print runs for children's book club. B.A. or B.S. in English, liberal arts, or business-related field. Experience in book publishing preferred.
 - Marketing analyst to research for GWP marketing dept. Degree in marketing-related field & 3-5 yrs. experience in direct-marketing analysis.
 - Web marketer to develop corporate Web marketing opportunities. Knowledge of Web-page design required; marketing experience preferred.
 - Book marketing/publishing to develop book sales & copublishing division for World magazine. B.A. or B.S. in English, liberal arts, or business-related field. Catalog or publishing experience preferred.
- HR Dept., GWP, P.O. Box 2330, Asheville, NC 28802; fax: (828) 253-1556. Deadline: July 25, 1998.

PHYSICS POSITION beginning August 21, 1998. Seeking person with an enthusiastic mature Christian faith coupled with the mission of the college. Ph.D. in physics, electrical engineering, computer skills. For details contact Dr. Jonathan S. Raymond, Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs, Greenville College, P.O. Box 159, Greenville, IL 62246-0159; fax: (618) 664-9775; E-mail: jraymond@greenville.edu VIBRANT PC(USA) church of 440 in Mississippi seeks dynamic, warmhearted evangelical PCUSA senior pastor to love and lead flock. Five years experience preferred. Competitive salary package. Please send PIF to: PNC, P.O. Box 774, McComb, MS 39648.

MINISTER OF MUSIC & WORSHIP full-time in San Francisco area. First Presbyterian San Mateo seeks a renewal-minded leader, open to the Holy Spirit, to lead worship and direct choirs, using traditional and contemporary material. Mozart to Kenoly. Fax résumé to Search Committee at (650) 345-7357.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

USE MINISTRY AND LIFE SKILLS to reach the hurting, broken, and lost as a tentmaker in the 10/40 Window. HOW? contact: Mission to Unreached Peoples, toll free at (1-888) 847-6950, or E-mail: mupinfo@mup.org or HTTP://www.mup.org/mupinfo/

CHILDREN'S MINISTER

Casas Adobes Baptist Church, a large, contemporary Southern Baptist church in Tucson, AZ, needs a Minister to Children. Administrative gifts and leadership skills required to oversee programs serving 700 1st to 5th graders. Résumés to: Gary Siefers, 2131 W. Ina Rd., Tucson, AZ 85741.

DIRECTOR OF MARKETING for Pioneer Clubs, dedicated to Christian education of children. Need marketing professional with 5 years experience, including sales, direct mail, and telemarketing, proven management abilities, with a broad-based understanding of the protestant evangelical church. Christian education background and club experience a plus. Submit cover letter and résumé to Mary Hackman, Pioneer Clubs, Box 788, Wheaton, IL 60189.

EVANGELICAL BIBLE CHURCH OF OMAHA, NE seeks Sr. Pastor. Attendance 400-500. Offer community Sunday school, adult bible fellowship/prayer, Awana, youth programs, missions emphasis. In growing NW part of Omaha (pop. 600,000). 27 years of growth has necessitated three building and expansion phases. 500-seat worship center, completed debt-free four years ago. Tenure of our two previous sr. pastors (23 yrs.) reflects stability and unity. Known for systematic expository preaching and a worship style that appeals to all ages. Seminary and experience required. Contact Jim Classen (402) 346-7296; email: jclassen@juno.com or send résumé to 7820 Fort Street, Omaha, NE 68134.

DIRECTOR OF YOUTH MINISTRIES

Rapidly growing evangelical Associate Reformed Presbyterian church seeks visionary committed to Jesus Christ to provide oversight for middle, high school and college programs. Proven ministry developer/leader required. Seminary degree a plus. Send résumé to: Search Committee, Christ Community Church, 4747 Lake Brandt Road, Greensboro, NC 27455.

DIRECTOR OF DEVELOPMENT for Pioneer Clubs, dedicated to Christian education of children. Need experienced professional to manage total fundraising program. Must have experience with various acquisition techniques and planned giving. Experience with Pioneer Clubs a plus! Salaried with benefits. Send résumé to Mary Hackman, Pioneer Clubs, Box 788, Wheaton, IL 60189.

STUDENT MINISTRIES PASTOR

The Five Points Community Church (Auburn Hills, MI—northern suburb of Detroit) is seeking a pastor to oversee the church's ministry to junior- and senior-high students. FPCC is a growing church of 500+ in one of the fastest-growing areas in the Midwest. Prospective candidates should be committed to Reformed theology in a baptistic context, student ministry as your calling, excellence and relevance in ministry, lifelong learning, and a team relationship with the church staff, all to this end: the glory of God in our consuming joy in Christ alone. Graduate training and 3 years+ experience is desirable. Interested candidates should send inquiries or résumés to: Search Committee, FPCC, 3411 E. Walton Blvd., Auburn Hills, MI 48326; (248) 373-1381.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

YOUTH PASTOR

Growing Christ-centered church of 450 is currently seeking spiritually mature Youth Pastor to be responsible for Jr-Sr High ministry (60 students). He must be committed to discipleship and spiritual growth of youth & their families, have experience & thorough knowledge of Scripture. Send résumé & references to: Pastor J. C. Burgman, Hilltown Baptist Church, P.O. Box 1, Hilltown, PA 18927. Fax: (215) 249-1641.

CHILDREN'S MINISTRY DIRECTOR

Vital Christ-centered Presbyterian church seeks Children's Ministry Director. Requires Christian servant with Bible-based vision and expertise to lead children's ministry, Nursery-5th grade. Join multi-pastor staff with strong volunteer support. Apply to Palos Park Presbyterian Community Church, 12312 S. 88th Ave., Palos Park, IL 60464; fax: (708) 448-5331.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLICATIONS

World Vision International's publishing division experienced increased performance over the past four years. Now it needs a director to take them to new heights. The director will oversee the efforts of this division, including MARC Publications, which publishes books on holistic Christian development, and World Vision's International journal, Together. The ideal candidate will have a strong familiarity with holistic Christian mission and publishing. Experience as an acquisitions editor of book manuscripts strongly preferred. Ability to guide a highly creative and dynamic team essential. Must possess the ability to represent the publications department to senior management, board of trustees, and network internally throughout a large international organization. Connections in the realms of Christian mission, academia and non-government organizations highly desirable. We're looking for a flexible, responsive and open-minded team player. Inquiry or résumé to Human Resource Specialist, World Vision International, 800 W. Chestnut Ave., Monrovia, CA 91016-3198; fax: (626) 301-7710.

HEADMASTER

The Covenant School, a non-denominational, K-12, Christian day school with 640 students is currently seeking a Headmaster. The school is committed to the highest quality academic program and a belief that Christ belongs in all aspects of our lives, particularly education. Building on 13 years of spiritual, academic and financial foundations, the school is poised for a dynamic future. The qualified candidate will evidence a personal relationship with the Lord Jesus Christ, be a strong communicator and be a servant leader to the school's multiple constituencies. He/she will have an advanced degree, proven leadership skills, and the ability to take an active role in the school's capital development campaign. Please submit résumé to: Chair, Search Committee, The Covenant School, 1000 Birdwood Ave., Charlottesville, VA 22903; fax: (804) 979-3204.

CHILDREN'S PASTOR

Large Midwestern church seeks children's pastor to oversee the church's ministries to children and their families. Applicants should possess good leadership, administrative and relational skills, ability to develop volunteer leaders, and administer a large multi-faceted children's ministry. Understanding of cultural issues facing children and families and enthusiasm for outreach to children and parents are essential. Advanced degree and large-church experience preferred. Send résumés to: Children's Pastor Calling Committee, P.O. Box 24414, Minneapolis, MN 55424.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

YOUTH DIRECTOR, Mt. Soledad Presbyterian Church, San Diego. Candidates should have proven ability in youth work with 60 or more students, with 3 or more years experience in a successful program. Music ability a plus. Résumé to: 6551 Soledad Mt. Rd., LaJolla, CA 92037; (619) 459-3865.

SUBSTANCE ABUSE COUNSELOR needed for Christian shelter for men. Position requires CAC certification, B.S. degree in social/human services, and at least 5 years experience implementing D&A recovery programs. Mail résumé and references to: Bryan Yesilonis, Executive Director, Bethesda Mission, P.O. Box 3041, 611 Rely Street, Harrisburg, PA 17105; (717) 257-4440; fax: (717) 257-5486.

CHRISTIAN FAMILY wants Christian couple for domestic help on country estate: one for maintenance of property & equipment, driving duties, etc., the other for cooking, house cleaning, laundry, shopping, pet care, & personal assistance. Salary, with private modern 3-bdrm. house included. Résumé & current photos required now and references later. Write us at: Woodlake Estate, P.O. Box 834, Madison, VA 22727.

MILLENNIUM JERUSALEM 2000

A once in a thousand years opportunity to work alongside top Christian leaders, anointed teachers, VIPs, and celebrities! Christian men and women nationwide are needed. Qualifications: spirit-filled and enthusiasm. Find out how you can serve a great cause, earn handsomely, be a part of history, and also visit Jerusalem as part of your job. Millennium Jerusalem 2000, 2206 W. Atlantic Ave., Ste. 204, Delray Beach, FL 33445; tel: (1-800) 477-2306; fax: (561) 278-8113.

DIRECTOR OF CHILDREN & FAMILIES MINISTRIES for thriving Baptist General Conference church, Avon, CT. Sunday worship attendance 950. Director responsible for ministry to 492, birth - 5th grade children and their families. Understanding of child developmental stages and family dynamics as they relate to ministry necessary. Master's degree in Christian Education or related comparable field experience required, including supervision of staff members and volunteers. Creativity, excellent leadership and interpersonal skills essential. Send résumé to: Nicholas Parisi, Valley Community Baptist Church, 590 W. Avon Rd., Avon, CT 06001; (860) 673-6826.

SENIOR PASTOR

Independent evangelical church seeks experienced pastor to serve as senior pastor with a diverse congregation. The candidate must have the passion and ability to preach the entire Word of God. Applicants must have college and seminary degrees. Duties include: preaching and leading Bible studies, expanding missions and outreach programs, visitation, and developing church growth. Inquiries to Northside Congregational Church, 820 W. Mt. Pleasant Rd., Evansville, IN 47711, Attn: Pulpit Committee.

ASSOCIATE PASTOR

Primary duties will be in youth and confirmation ministries and the implementation of a praise-style worship service. St. Philip is a high energy church located in the Denver metropolitan area. Interested? Send résumé to: Associate Pastor Call Committee, St. Philip Lutheran Church, 7531 S. Kendall Blvd., Littleton, CO 80123.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

BRANCH DIRECTOR

National Christian pro-life child and family service agency seeks an experienced director for its Baton Rouge office serving the state of Louisiana. Responsibilities include significant leadership in fund development, administration, planning, budget oversight, public relations, directing social services delivery, and staff supervision. Five years management/supervisory experience required. Board Certified Social Worker. Child welfare experience preferred. This position of considerable responsibility provides an attractive salary and benefits package. Visit our Web site at www.bethany.org. Send résumé and salary history to Bethany Christian Services, Human Resources, 901 Eastern Avenue N.E., P.O. Box 294, Grand Rapids, MI 49501-0294.

PRESIDENT

The Presidential Search Committee of Hope College invites nominations and applications for the position of president, to take office July 1, 1999, upon the retirement of President John H. Jacobson. Chartered in 1866, Hope College is a co-educational, residential liberal arts college and is affiliated with the Reformed Church in America. Hope offers bachelor's degree programs in 53 major fields. The student body of approximately 2,900 comes from 38 states and territories and 33 foreign countries. The full-time faculty numbers 195. Hope College is accredited by North Central Association, the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education, the National Association of Schools of Art and Design, the National Association of Schools of Theatre, the National Association of Schools of Dance, the National Association of Schools of Music, the National League for Nursing, the Council on Social Work Education, and the American Chemical Society. Hope is a member of the Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association of NCAA, Division III. The college is a member of the Great Lakes Colleges Association and has a chapter of Phi Beta Kappa. The campus is situated in a residential area of Holland, Michigan. The nearest major city is Grand Rapids, Michigan, which is approximately 30 miles away. Holland, Michigan, is located 150 miles from Chicago, Illinois, and 190 miles from Detroit, Michigan. The next president of Hope College must be an individual of wisdom and integrity whose life and work reveal a commitment to following Jesus Christ. This individual should also be committed to retaining and advancing the Christian character of Hope College. The successful candidate must have a passion for academic excellence. This individual shall have a deep understanding of scholarship, research and teaching. This individual should also be capable of raising the excellent academic reputation of Hope College to the next level. The successful candidate must be a visionary individual with a broad understanding of the world's events and cultures. The individual shall have a demonstrated ability in leading an organization which effectively carries out its mission. This individual shall have a vision for Hope College and its graduates, and the ability to elicit change by exciting others. Copies of the position announcement are available from, and letters of nomination or application should be submitted with detailed résumé by August 1, 1998, to: Elton J. Bruins, Executive Secretary, Presidential Search Committee, Hope College, Post Office Box 9000, Holland, Michigan 49422-9000. Hope College is an Equal Employment Opportunity Employer.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

DEAN, SCHOOL OF NURSING

Union University invites applications and nominations for the position of dean of the School of Nursing. The NLNAC-accredited baccalaureate program has a faculty of 18. The dean reports to the provost and is expected to create a positive academic environment for faculty and students, work with the faculty to assure the integrity of the curriculum through effective planning, implementation, and evaluation, and serve as a mentor for faculty in teaching, scholarly activities, and service. Minimum qualifications include: an earned doctorate in nursing or related area from a regionally accredited institution and a minimum of master's degree in nursing; experience in clinical practice, baccalaureate or higher nursing education and administration; eligibility for licensure in the state of Tennessee. All faculty and staff are professing Christians and are expected to be active members of an evangelical Christian church. Preference in hiring is given to Southern Baptists. The Screening Committee will begin reviewing credentials after May 1, 1998, and will continue until an appointment is made. To apply, send a letter of application, curriculum vitae, student copies of transcripts, and names of three references to: Mrs. Cynthia Meredith, Assistant to the President for University Operations, Union University, 1050 Union University Drive, Jackson, TN 38305-3697. For more information about Union University, please see our Web site at: www.uu.edu. Men and minorities are encouraged to apply.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

RETIRED PASTOR/ENTREPRENEUR/LAY LEADER type. Build a lucrative business with cutting-edge technology. My average managers earn $80K/yr. and other perks: cars, travel, profit sharing, & more! Investment required, 0 interest financing for credit-worthy candidates. Sales experience a plus. North America is your territory. If you're success minded, call Doug at Action Jackson Marketing, Inc. (1-888) 426-6826.

BECAUSE "EVERYONE has a kitchen or knows somebody who does," Pampered Chef® reps needed in your area. For free info: (1-800) 842-8937.

CHRIST-DIRECTED DESIGNS need patent engineer & attorney. Smith, 826 Oak St., Lawrence, KS 66044.

CAREER CHANGE

A rewarding opportunity to earn substantial income at home while sharing amazing "fresh air" product for strong Christian indoor environmental company: (1-800) 780-2417.

ASSEMBLE PRODUCTS at home for best companies. Great extra income idea! (1-800) 377-6000, ext. 8290.

DRAMA

✓ CHRISTIAN DRAMA. Hundreds of plays for adults and youth. Free catalog. Eldridge Publishing: (1-800) 95-CHURCH, or <http://www.95church.com>.

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

CULT APOLOGETIC. Learn how to witness effectively to Jehovah's Witnesses. For free information, call (1-888) 339-SECT, Pin 8271.

Beautifully designed CHRISTIAN BOOK-LETS. Send SASE: Mooney Graphics, P.O. Box 58248, Philadelphia, PA 19102.

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

FROM AUGUSTINE TO C. S. LEWIS: LEGACIES OF THE FAITH, by Dr. Ed Erny. Daily devotional readings collected from over 30 years, of great Christian literature. Subject index aids ministers, evangelists, and Christian workers. Order your copy/ies now for only $8 plus $1.25 (U.S.) P/H per copy from the OMS International Bookstore, P.O. Box A, Greenwood, IN 46142-6599.

THE RAPTURE IS COMING! Prepare for this great event. Our exciting new book, Heaven Bound, teaches how to protect your possessions from the Antichrist, what the Great Deception is about, how to help those left behind, etc.; $10.00 ppd. Silos Publishing, Dept. CTR, PO Box 26115, Tamarac, FL 33320.

OFFENDED EASILY? Better pass. Care about truth? FREE cassette. Home Bible Fellowship, 4002 W. 42nd St., Tulsa, OK 74107.

6,000 GOOD USED BOOKS FOR SALE. Get monthly free book list from Pastor Wayne, 3940 Winewood Ct. SE, Grand Rapids, MI 49508; E-mail: 73223.2010@compuserve.com

200,000 USED BOOKS. Libraries purchased. Kregel Used Books, Box 2607, Grand Rapids, MI 49501; (616) 459-9444; fax: (1-888) USD-BOOK; Web: www.kregel.com

EVANGELISTIC MATERIAL IN ARABIC: books, tracts, cassettes. In English: The Bible and Islam ($4.95 U.S./$5.95 Canada). Write: Arabic Dept., Back to God Hour, 6555 W. College Dr., Palos Heights, IL 60463.

BAKER BOOK HOUSE buys libraries, large & small. Phone: (616) 957-3110; fax: (888) 263-7310; E-mail: used.books@bakerbooks.com. Grand Rapids, MI 49546.

SHORT-RUN BOOK PUBLISHING! We can publish your book professionally in quantities as low as 250 books for less than $1,200 U.S.! Take advantage of the Canadian dollar: For free info contact: Essence Publishing, 103B Cannifton Rd., Belleville, ON, Canada K8N 4V2; (1-800) 238-6376; fax: (613) 962-3055; www.essence.on.ca

PUBLISH YOUR BOOK NOW! Your book can be produced and promoted by the leading subsidy book publisher. Send for free booklet P-53. Vantage Press, 516 W. 34th St., New York, NY 10001.

THE HOUSE CHURCH MOVEMENT—a catalog of books and tapes available on this fresh, new, revolutionary movement. P.O. Box 285, Sargent, CA 30275; (1-800) 645-2342.

THE LIBRARY OF SPIRITUAL CLASSICS. The greatest literature on the deeper Christian life ever penned. Free catalog. Spiritual Classics, 1275 Hwy. 16 W, Newnan, GA 30263; (770) 254-9442.

MANUSCRIPTS WANTED, ALL TYPES. Publisher w/ 75-year tradition. Author's Guide to Subsidy Publishing: (1-800) 695-9599.

MINISTRY OPPORTUNITIES

VISIT PRISON IN AN ENVELOPE. By writing an inmate you can fulfill the Lord's command to remember those in prison. Contact Prison Fellowship Ministries (CT), P.O. Box 17500, Washington, DC 20041; (703) 478-0100, x590; <http://www.pfm.org>

MINISTRY OPPORTUNITIES

ATTENTION: ALL MISSIONARY GROUPS Camp Penuel, Ironton, MO, and Eldred, PA, provides a FREE camping program for inner-city and underprivileged children in America. We are looking for missionary groups who would be interested in helping us build a chapel, new cabins, lodge, nature trail, and recreational facility. Camp Penuel reaches 1,000s of youth, ages 7-12, for Christ. Write: Camp Penuel, Box 367, Ironton, MO 63650, or call: (573) 546-3020.

PREACH CHRIST to nations via shortwave radio. (561) 697-4547; www.flinet.com/~grlmin

COUPLES NEEDED. Boys averaging in age from 12 to 16 need you to create a loving, caring, nurturing home. Become a House Parent at the Omaha Home for Boys. You'll get training in our nationally recognized treatment program, enjoy full benefits, including health insurance, and know you're making a difference in young people's lives. Starting salary of $29,000 plus free housing, meals, and utilities. For information, call Kevin Orr (1-800) 408-4663 Monday-Friday or visit our Web site: www.omahafreenet.org/boyshome. The Omaha Home for Boys, 4343 N. 52nd Street, Omaha, NE 68104, An Equal Opportunity Employer.

COMPUTER/VIDEO PROGRAMS

COMPUTER SOFTWARE for church membership, contributions, and accounting. PowerChurch Plus is the most widely used church-administration software package. Call or write today for free information. F1 Software, Dept. CT, 208 Ridgefield Dr., Asheville, NC 28806; (1-800) 486-1800.

FUNDRAISING

FREE INFO. Your church etched on beveled glass suncatcher/ornaments. Low min. Wullbrandt Studio C, 1270 Hwy. 65, Hampton, IA 50441; (515) 456-3580. www.heartofiowa.com/wullbrandt/

Fund Raising Idea For 1999!

Commemorative Plates

Our fine Porcelain Potware® is prized throughout the USA for its heirloom quality. Perfect for anniversary celebrations. A gift your church or organization can cherish. Wonderful reunion gift!

Your choice: Full Color, Brown Tone, Black and White

For Free Brochure and Wholesale Price List Call:

1-800-872-1278

PRESTON-HOPKINSON—Since 1949
P.O. Drawer 341
Bedford, Virginia 24523
www.holidayfundraising.com

Call Toll Free! 800-872-1278 Ask for Dept. 2017

PRODUCTS

FREE WOODEN CROSS. Send SASE (2 stamps): Hosanna House, 5467 Greenvillage Rd., Chambersburg, PA 17201.

MINISTRY AIDS

SMALL GROUP MINISTRY FOR CHURCHES. Looking for a program that works? If so, write for a free resource to John Meacham, First Presbyterian Church, 503 Lakeside Drive, Garner, NC 27529.

MINISTRY AIDS

UNDERSTANDING YOUR TEENAGER parenting seminars. Find out how to schedule one at your church. Call (1-800) 561-9309 or visit our website at <http://www.uyt.com>

WWW.SERMONHELP.COM can help maximize your preaching ministry. (Lock in 35 cents a yr. for 2 yrs!)

EDUCATION

FREE! Audio Bible courses by correspondence. Write P.O. Box 233, Washington, KY 41096. USA only.

HOME SCHOOL K-12—$AVE money. 15+ yrs. ministry. Fast service, curriculum, record-keeping, diploma; (1-800) 995-HOPE.

CONFERENCES

CREATION & CREATIVITY

Fingerprints of the transcendent in our world. Forum for thinking people. Aug. 9-16; Stasbourg, France. Information: Wilder-Smith, Roggenweg 8, CH 3646 Einigen, Switzerland; tel/fax: +41 33 654 5408; E-mail: OHWS@theneit.ch; Web site: <http://www.millstatt.org>

REAL ESTATE

MOVING? Call us to find a full time, highly recommended Realtor who:

- *Is committed to utmost integrity and service
- *If requested, will also introduce you to the Christian community, churches and schools

A totally FREE SERVICE (USA/Canada)

The EXODUS Network • 1-800-395-8556

MOVING TO TUCSON? Let a Christian assist in finding a home. Margaret Arveson, Tucson Realty, 5151 E. Broadway, Tucson, AZ 85711; (520) 745-5151.

SERVICES

TECHNICAL TRANSLATION SERVICE FOR GERMAN. Missionary complements 50% of his support through translations English-German. Fred Alius, e-mail: 106370.3020@compuserve.com

ORDINATION. International Ministerial Fellowship, an association of evangelical churches and ministers, offers many services, including ordination, newsletters, networking, ecclesiastical endorsement, consultation in area of legal, accounting, church planting, biblical/theological training, Internet services (FREE Web site and E-mail address) and a missions sending agency. For free information, check out our Web site: www.i-m-f.org or write: P.O. Box 32366, Minneapolis, MN 55432; (612) 571-5967.

ASPIRING WRITERS— Get fired, fired with enthusiasm for developing God-given writing talent. Send for FREE STARTER KIT. Christian Writers Guild, 260-H Fern Lane, Hume Lake, CA 93628; phone: (209) 335-2333; fax: (209) 335-2770; or: NRVrohrer@Juno.com

OUTREACH CENTER MINISTER

If you believe you are called to minister to people in small groups, the National Conservative Christian Church will provide you a course of study, coaching, and assistance to begin a cell group, home church, or an outreach center. Write the N.C.C.C. at 4460 Northgate Court, Sarasota, FL 34234, or phone (941) 365-8115.

SERVICES

Moving Interstate?

The Service and Thrift Relocation Service offers discounted rates and other benefits to reduce your moving cost on moves within the Continental U.S. For a free, no-obligation estimate call Lewis, CORD northAmerican:

1-800-873-2673

ICC# MC 167012

northAmerican.
WAN LINES/AGENT

www.ChurchGrowthToday.com
Networking growing churches of America and the world.

BRITISH-AMERICAN Christian Pen Pal Club. Send age, interests to: P.O. Box 581, Cypress, CA 90630, SASE.

DIABETICS with Medicare or insurance, get your diabetic supplies at no cost. Call (1-800) 337-4144.

TRAVEL

LONDON U.K. Foreign Missions Club, Christian guesthouse. Reductions for missionaries and full-time ministers. 26 Aberdeen Park, Highbury, London N52BJ Fax (011) 071-704-1853

CENTRAL FLA.—Retreats & Vacations. Christian-owned 120-room historic hotel. Friendly site for conferences, retreats, and vacations. Golf, bicycling, nature activities, antiquing. Near major attractions. Groups of 2-250 welcome. For free brochure, call (1-800) 423-5939; www.kenlodge.com

THEODOSIA'S Bed & Breakfast Inn, Bald Head Island, NC. Luxury re-creation. Clergy discount; (1-800) 656-1812; 910-457-6563; <http://www.southport.net/theodosia.html>

JOIN THE INTERNATIONAL Christian Bed & Breakfast Network. Call (1-800) 881-1940, or write to ICBBN, 550-777 Royal Oak Dr., Box 139, Victoria, BC V8X 4V1 Canada.

☒ GOLDEN RULE TRAVEL is a Christian agency specializing in wholesale and bulk rate airline tickets for church and missionary travel. Our services are available to individuals as well as all mission and church organizations. We try extra hard to save you money! Mention this ad for a one-time, 2% discount. Call toll-free (1-888) 950-3273 FARE for pricing.

NEAR GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, MONTANA. 3BR log cabin; secluded. Color brochure: (320) 384-7739.

INSURANCE

Missionaries Worldwide Health Plan
For Missionaries working overseas!

FHI Benefit Plans/Aetna Global Benefits
800-347-9547

www.rfdriver.com/fhigroup.htm

If you are interested in placing an ad in The Marketplace, fax your ad to Karen Booker at (630) 260-9401.

Preach With Power; Teach With Wisdom

We would like for you to join with over 4,000 students currently enrolled at Andersonville Baptist Seminary. Having an international student body with students from 5 different continents, we have preachers all over the world that proclaim that they have learned more from us than from the so-called "major theological institutions." Should you decide to enroll with us, you will receive approximately 80 to 120 hours of lecture on audio cassette tapes (in a typical 30 hour program). For example, 1 John - Jude has 18 hours of tape lecture, and like the great majority of our studies, it is done verse-by-verse! The main textbook is GOD'S HOLY WORD and we teach that IT IS WITHOUT ERROR OR CONTRADICTION! All of our graduate studies require GLA's (Graded Learning Activities) which are practical activities involving research by the student. Our 9,000 graduates have been taught to preach and teach the Word! The exciting part is that you keep all tapes for future use in your ministry. Don't you want the Word to come alive as you get fresh ideas and thoughts to share with your church? Remember, you do not have to leave home, for all work can be completed by correspondence, and when your work is completed, you will receive a beautiful DEGREE (not a certificate) by mail. God bless you as you LEARN THE BOOK and EARN YOUR DEGREE!

Dr. Jimmy L. Hayes, Th.D.
President, ABS

Andersonville Baptist Seminary

P.O. Box 545
Camilla, GA 31730-0545

1-800-525-1611

Qualified and Certified Faculty!
Immediate Phone Evaluation.

Associate - Doctorate
Monthly Payment Plans
Discounted Spouse Education

Accredited by Accrediting
Commission International and by American Association of
Theological
Institutions

Degrees Offered in the Following Areas:

- * Theology
- * Ministry
- * Divinity
- * Christian Counseling
- * Christian Education
- * Religious Education
- * Biblical Studies

Credit for Lifetime Experience
Transfer Credit Accepted
No On Campus Work Required
Work at Your Own Pace

Excellent and Demanding
M. Div. and Ph.D. Programs

International Academic & Administrative Offices
Camilla, GA, USA

Phone: 800-525-1611
Fax: 912-336-7000
Email: abskjv1611@aol.com
Internet:
www.andersonvilleseminary.com

Fear and Faith in the Middle East

As I remember my trip to Lebanon,
I think how easy it is to write about the gospel from my serene perch
in Colorado.

The sky turned first an eerie yellow, then the color of charcoal. A gritty rain began to fall, coating windshields, sidewalks, and clothing with damp spots the color and consistency of white clay. It was Libya we were feeling, its sands swept up in a freak storm, the worst in a quarter-century, and blown across the Mediterranean to be deposited on Cyprus. I was attending a conference of Christians involved in media, and the sandstorm seemed a poignant symbol of the siege mentality of Christians in the region.

To the south and east, Cyprus faces hundreds of millions of Muslims; from the north, Turkey has invaded and now occupies a third of the island. Flags emblazoned with the Muslim crescent flap defiantly over church buildings seized from the hilltops around Nicosia. Only a thin line of UN peacekeepers keeps the two sides from breaking into war again.

Christian workers at the conference had gathered to discuss new ways of reaching the Muslim world. They used pseudonyms to throw off Muslim agents who might be tailing them. In restaurants and public places they spoke in hushed tones and glanced around frequently. They left no notes lying about after their closed meetings.

Like inverted mushrooms, satellite dishes have sprouted on Arab rooftops, and Christian programs are now beaming into places like Saudi Arabia, Iraq, and the slums of Cairo. Syria recently resigned itself to the inevitable, and Internet providers are now bringing Christian Web sites into private homes there. Christian ministries receive letters like this: "Should I tell my parents that I have become a Christian? It is a capital crime here to convert, and they could have me executed. What do you advise?"

The region's largest nation, Egypt, has long tolerated a strong Christian minority. As I visited, evangelicals were celebrating the success of a nontraditional Luis Palau crusade. Unable to rent stadiums for an evangelistic event, they organized hundreds of churches to run proxy crusades by videotape. Palau himself appeared at a large Presbyterian church in Cairo; after a hectic night's work by volunteers, videotapes of that service were shown the next day in churches, halls, and open courtyards at more than 500 sites across Egypt.

Ironically, young Christians see some advantages to living in a Muslim culture. As one told me, "We have restrictions, yes, but we and the Muslims have lived together for centuries. I have gone to the U.S. to study, but certainly I would not want to raise a family there. Here we have no pornography, little premarital sex or alcohol, and I feel safe walking on the streets. As long as I have the freedom to worship, I prefer living in Egypt."

The same young person, though, admitted that he seldom attends the Coptic church in which he was baptized. The service, after all, is conducted in Old Coptic, a language no one in the congregation understands. It lasts several hours, during most of which the congregation stands, and it is filled with obscure iconic symbolism.

Lebanon, like Egypt, was once known for its amicable coexistence of different faiths. That was before religious groups formed private militias and began killing each other. Over 150,000 died in a civil war that lasted 15 years, and the vast majority of buildings in Beirut still bear the scars of shrapnel and bullet holes.

Psychological scars go much deeper. A visiting American told me he attended a basketball game that referees had to interrupt because of fighting—among the opposing fans, not the players. "They cleared the entire arena, except for a handful of us foreigners. The players resumed the game and the fans went into the street to continue their brawl."

A 20-year-old in Lebanon has known little but war. Every time she drives to a church event she must pass through two or three army checkpoints. Even without those reminders, she's not likely to forget the sight of a decapitated head mounted on the hood of a Mercedes, or of a sniper being dragged through the streets, his feet tied to a bumper, his head bouncing grotesquely on the pavement.

"Christian" militias were as notorious for their cruelty as their Muslim counterparts. Today in Beirut the most prevalent Christian shrines are devoted to Elijah. You see the prophet in churches, at intersections, on street corners, always portrayed with a sword in his hand. Pilgrims bring him flowers and kiss the statues. Elijah, after all, slew 850 false prophets (at a site just down the highway). He makes a formidable militia mascot.

In Lebanon I met a woman who had pored over my book Disappointment with God by candlelight in the basement as bombs were destroying her building. And another who is actively trying to apply principles from What's So Amazing About Grace? to her neighbors: "squatters" who commandeered her apartment and who regularly siphon off her water and electricity supplies. As I remember my trip to the Middle East, I think how easy it is to write about the gospel from my serene perch in Colorado, and how hard to put it into practice on its home turf—now the literal frontier of faith. CT

Colson: The Devil in the DNA • Sudan: Christians Under Siege

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

AUGUST 10, 1998

Christianity today

PROCESSED

112 11 1

CTU LIBRARY

TRAINED TO KILL

Are we conditioning
our children to commit murder?

$2.95 CANADA $3.95

09

74470 84052

Alt. Keyword: CT
www.ChristianityToday.net

All you need for a compelling journey into the life, words and world of Jesus and what they mean for us today.

JESUS

The New Way

This is a Biblical series like none other. It presents Jesus as you have never seen him before. For Christians, Jesus has been seen through centuries of doctrinal and creedal formulations. For Jews, Jesus has been seen through a frightful history that understandably creates suspicion. For the indifferent, the question is legitimately, who cares? What difference does Jesus make anyhow? This six-part video curriculum approaches all three responses from a different perspective, from the vantage point of what Jesus meant, indeed, how He understood himself, in his original context, in the setting of first century Judaism. Historian and Biblical scholar Dr. Tom Wright distills the essence of twenty years of his acclaimed research into this video series. A gifted communicator, Wright delivers with clarity and a magnetic vitality. #4264

$79⁹⁵

Plus $3.95 shipping

Dr. N. T. Wright is one of the most engaging and articulate New Testament scholars in the world today. In this video series he takes us back to the "real Jesus" of history and the Scriptures. An excellent resource for pastors, teachers, and all Christians who take their faith seriously. Food for the soul as well as the mind!

Timothy George
Dean, Beeson Divinity School

ORDER TODAY!

BY PHONE:

with a credit card, call toll free

1-800-523-0226

(M-F, 8-5 Eastern time)

BY MAIL:

Send the order form to:

VISION VIDEO

P. O. Box 540

Worcester, PA 19490-0540

BY FAX:

Fax your order to (610) 584-6643

24 hrs/day

Gateway Films
VISION VIDEO

COMPLETE VIDEO CURRICULUM

Six Half-Hour Video Programs

Teacher's Guide

Reproducible Student Worksheets

Program Scripts

HOSTED BY
DR. TOM WRIGHT

PLEASE SEND ME JESUS: The New Way VIDEO SET FOR $79.95

Please add $3.95 for shipping to U.S. and Canada

CT1898

Name _____

Organization _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

Phone (____) _____ Fax (____) _____

☐ Check enclosed

☐ Please bill my credit card

Exp. _____

Signature _____

Send to: Vision Video, Dept. CHM598, PO Box 540, Worcester, PA 19490-0540

"OUR OBEDIENCE TO GOD WILL NEVER BE THE SAME."

Byron MacDonald

Pastor Byron MacDonald
Rolling Hills Covenant Church
Rolling Hills Estate, California $14,728,000 Committed

STEWARDSHIP PROGRAMMING

"How I Became a Better Pastor"

"I wanted to further my education, but I didn't want to leave my ministry, uproot my family, and become a full-time student. Luckily, there was Trinity Theological Seminary. My counselor at Trinity helped me to establish a personalized degree program that allowed me to study at home and still receive an accredited, quality education."

Trinity College and Seminary allows you to complete your education through a personalized, accelerated degree program without a residency requirement. Our traditional off campus program, along with our virtual campus and optional Regional Seminars, lets you choose the method of study that best fits your responsibilities to your family and your personal educational goals.

Contact an Admissions Counselor for more information.

- B.A., M.A., M.Div., Ph.D., D.Min. in Various Disciplines
- Financial Grants are Available
- Off Campus and On-line Degree Programs
- Accelerated Study
- Regional Seminars Optional
- Accredited by the University of Liverpool, England

"Trinity Theological Seminary is a 'God send' to pastors and laymen alike who desire to pursue theological training while remaining in their pastorates or vocational positions. Trinity provides biblically-based and practically-related training programs to meet the need of leaders today."

Dr. Stephen F. Olford

TRINITY
COLLEGE OF THE BIBLE
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
800-457-5510

International Academic and Administrative Offices
Newburgh, Indiana, USA

Fax: 812-858-3235

E-mail: 74777.245@compuserve.com

Visit our website! www.trinitysem.edu

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Volume 42, No. 9
August 10, 1998

A Magazine of Evangelical Conviction

FEATURES

30 Cover Story: Trained to Kill

A military expert on the psychology of killing explains how today's media condition kids to pull the trigger—using the same techniques employed by the armed forces.
By David Grossman

Plus: What a Jonesboro Youth Group Learned

42 In Search of the Lost Churches of Paul

Noah, Abraham, John, Mary, and Paul all walked this land. Now Turkey is inviting Christians to rediscover its biblical legacy. By Wendy Murray Zoba

Plus: Traveling in Turkey

50 In the Word: Pray the Lord My Mind to Keep

To love God simply and fully requires that we love God with our minds. By Cornelius Plantinga, Jr.

54 Special News Report: Can Foster Care Be Fixed?

More than 500,000 at-risk children are mired in an overburdened foster-care system. But churches are testing new ways to place needy kids into Christian homes.
By Art Moore

Plus: Empty Nesters Embrace Second Parenthood

DEPARTMENTS

6 Inside CT: From Russia with Dreams

7 Letters

28 Editorials: Religious Schools Make the Grade; Sentimentally Yours

56 Current Religious Thought: The Perils of Left and Right

60 Conversations: Retiring senator Dan Coats explains why Christians aren't getting their way in Washington

63 Directions: Did Paul Baptize for the Dead?

64 Pop Culture: Why Hollywood Doesn't Like You

66 Books: You Are Who You Eat With

72 Reflections

80 Charles Colson: The Devil in the DNA

NEWS

17 Evangelism: Graham Crusade Bridges Bilingual Canada

18 Higher Education: Schools Question Orthodox Converts

22 Presbyterians: Just Say No to Homosexual Debate

23 Russia: Pastors Gain Graduate-level Training

24 Sudan: Church Grows Despite War, Famine

14 North American Scene

26 World Scene

Senior Editors: George K. Brushaber, Chairman; James I. Packer, Visiting Scholar; Timothy George, Senior Adviser; R. Kent Hughes, Earl F. Palmer, Marianne Meyer Thompson, John D. Woodbridge

Editorial Director Harold L. Myra
Executive Editor David Neff
Managing Editor Michael G. Maudlin
Art Director Carla Sonheim
Associate Editors Richard A. Kauffman
Kevin D. Miller
Timothy C. Morgan
Wendy Murray Zoba

Administrative Editor Carol R. Thiessen
Associate News Editor John W. Kennedy
Book Review Editor John Wilson
Associate Designer June M. Gunawan
Editorial Resident Christine J. Gardner
Editor at Large Philip Yancey
Senior Writer Tim Stafford
Senior News Writer Arthur D. Moore
Arts Editor Karen L. Mulder
Editorial Coordinator Paulette DePaul
Administrative Assistant Lara Badalamenti

Board of Directors: Billy Graham, Chairman; B. Clayton Bell, Sr., Executive Chairman; Harold L. Myra, President; Miriam Adeney, John N. Akers, Jill P. Briscoe, Stephen W. Brown, A. Kenneth Curtis, Susan S. Eames, Robert P. Evans, Eugene B. Habecker, Ben Haden, Pete Hammond, Michael E. Haynes, Oswald C. J. Hoffmann, C. B. Hogue, John A. Huffman, Jr., Edward L. Johnson, Jay L. Kesler, Dennis F. Kintaw, Jack Modesett, Jr., William W. Pendleton, Robert E. Reccord, Paul D. Robbins, W. Fred Smith, Jr., Howard S. Williams

Billy Graham, Founder; Carl F. H. Henry, Editor 1956-68; L. Nelson Bell, Executive Editor 1968-73; Harold Lindsell, Editor 1968-78; Kenneth S. Kantzer, Editor 1978-82; V. Gilbert Beers, Editor 1982-85; George K. Brushaber, Executive Editor 1985-91; Terry C. Muck, Executive Editor 1985-90

Contributing Editors: Miriam Adeney, Nigel M. de S. Cameron, Charles W. Colson, James R. Edwards, Nathan O. Hatch, Kenneth A. Myers, Mark A. Noll, Thomas C. Oden, Ben Patterson, David Schiedermayer, David A. Seamans, Howard A. Snyder, John R. W. Stott

Consulting Editors: Paul M. Bassett, Colin Brown, Harold D. J. Brown, Robert E. Cooley, David S. Dockery, William A. Dyrness, Stanley J. Grenz, Christopher A. Hall, Walter C. Kaiser, Jr., Kenneth S. Kantzer, Donald W. McCullough, Alister E. McGrath, Richard Mouw, Roger E. Olson, Haddon W. Robinson, Stephen A. Seamans, Aida Besançon Spencer, John G. Stackhouse, Jr., Donald A. D. Thorsen, Edwin M. Yamauchi

Corresponding Editors: Tokunboh Adeyemo, V. Elving Anderson, Donald G. Bloesch, Edith L. Blumhofer, Darrell L. Bock, Calvin B. DeWitt, Samuel Escobar, C. Stephen Evans, Ajith Fernando, Richard J. Foster, Vernon Grounds, Allen C. Guelzo, Christopher D. Hancock, Alan F. Harre, Roberta Hestenes, Arthur P. Johnston, Robert K. Johnston, David Livingstone, Paul L. Maier, George M. Marsden, David L. McKenna, Stephen V. Monsma, Leon Morris, Terry C. Muck, Nancy Murphy, Bradley Nassif, Armand M. Nicholi, Jr., Roger Nicole, C. René Padilla, William E. Pannell, Eugene H. Peterson, Richard V. Pierard, Robert C. Roberts, John Rodgers, Vinay Samuel, David P. Scaer, Bruce L. Shelley, Ronald J. Sider, Russell P. Spittler, Elmer L. Towns, Grant Wacker, Robert L. Wilken, J. Rodman Williams

Advisory Editors: Leith Anderson, Myron S. Augsbarger, William Bentley Ball, David B. Barrett, Paul W. Brand, Michael Cromartie, Edward G. Dobson, James Engel, George Gallup, Jr., Charles E. Hummel, Diane L. Knippers, Steven T. McFarland, Dean Merrill, Bryant L. Myers, Richard John Neuhaus, Will Norton, Jr., Michael Novak, Matthew Parker, James W. Reapsome, Beth Spring, Joseph M. Stowell, Warren W. Wiersbe

CHRISTIANITY TODAY, INC.

Harold L. Myra, President, C.E.O.
Paul D. Robbins, Executive Vice President, C.O.O.
Laurie Powell, Executive Assistant
Harry Genet, Executive Administrator
Keith Stonehocker, Senior Vice President
Harold B. Smith, Corporate Vice President
David Hemstreet, Vicki Howard, John C. LaRue, Jr., Kevin A. Miller, David Neff, Linda Schambach, JoAnn Selander, Marshall Shelley, Carol Thompson, Vice Presidents

Advertising: Joyce Bardin, Karen Booker, Joel Carlsen, Lee Cunningham, Heather Dake, Kevin Hanagan, John Grey, Carol Hayes, Daniel Poormon, Kathryn Stephens, Joel Stombres

Circulation: Charlene Perez, Production Director; Jo Ann Rosenbaum, Fulfillment Director; Leslee Baron, Norma Bormann, Bradley Dupuy, Heidi Hall, Jody Harrington, Julie Kaminski, Sherry Kyle, Dianne Lambert, Debra Lane, Jeremy Long, Nancy Nance, Louie P. Parker, Karen Raad, Carol Schaley, Jennifer Stenzel, Elizabeth Tolentino, Bonnie Willman, Joy Windes, Philip Woods

Financial Operations: Terumi Echols, Manager, Cheri Peterson, Credit Manager, Gary Johnson, Sandra Johnson, Judy Van Zanten

Human Resources: Susan Cronk, Manager, Kate Bryant, Fernoni, Rachel Wetzler, Douglas Zimmerman

Internet Online Services: Judy Gill, Manager, Clayton Anderson, Kathy DePue, Sky Findlay, Wendy Harley, Michelle Hayes, Michael Herman, Elisha Hodge, Todd Watermann, Aaron Welch

Market Research: Cynia Solver, Manager, Grace Ferroni, Rachel Wetzler, Douglas Zimmerman

Production: Cynthia Cronk, Manager; Technology: Les Smith, Manager, Jeff DiNanno, Ted Gysan, Kelly Johnson, Theresa Phillips, Rebekah Santos, James Smeenge

Special Sales: Glenn Bushong, Manager; Becki Bustin, Michael Fister, Rodney Heckler, Jared Johnson, Lynn Long, John Ramsell

Editorial/Advertising Offices: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, Ill. 60188 630-260-6200; FAX: 630-260-0114. Advertising in CHRISTIANITY TODAY does not necessarily imply editorial endorsement.

Subscription Services: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, P.O. Box 37060, Boone, Iowa 50037-0060. Customer service: 800-999-1704.

Manuscript Policy: Unsolicited manuscripts are not accepted. A query letter must be sent first, describing a proposed manuscript (poetry is not accepted). Unsolicited manuscripts sent without a self-addressed, postage-paid envelope will not be returned.

Permissions: CHRISTIANITY TODAY grants permission for any original article (not a reprint) to be photocopied for use in a local church or classroom, provided no more than 1,000 copies are made, are distributed free, and indicate the source is CHRISTIANITY TODAY.

Australian Agent: MEDIA/COM, 14 Eton Road, Keswick 5061, South Australia. United Kingdom Agent: MASTERPLAN PUBLISHING CO., 63-67 Kingston Road, New Malden, Surrey KT3 3PB, phone 0181-942-9422.

Indexes: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is indexed in Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature; Christian Periodical Index; Religion Index One: Periodicals, Religious and Theological Abstracts; Book Review Index; and Academic Abstracts and Magazine Article Summaries. ISSN 0009-5753. © 1998 CHRISTIANITY TODAY INC.

Christianity Today (ISSN 0009-5753) is published monthly (semi-monthly in April and October), 14 issues per year, by Christianity Today, Inc., 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188. Periodicals postage paid at Carol Stream, IL, and at additional mailing offices.

Postmaster: Send address changes to Christianity Today, P.O. Box 37060, Boone, IA 50037-0060; 1-800-999-1704. GST Registration Number R126028836. Canada Post Mail Product Sales Agreement #59536. Printed in U.S.A.

Subscription Rates: Regular subscription price: one year $24.95. Outside U.S. add $8.00 postage prepaid U.S. currency. $2.50 per copy.

Subscription Renewals? Gift Subscriptions? Address Changes? Call toll-free 1-800-999-1704.

E-mail: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is available electronically on America Online (keyword: CT); E-mail CHRISTIANITY TODAY at CTedit@aol.com. CT is also on the Web at www.christianitytoday.net. For information on how to enroll in Christianity Online, call 1-800-533-8888.

Study in Israel

it can make all the difference!

- MASTER OF ARTS DEGREES • GRADUATE OR UNDERGRADUATE SEMESTER ABROAD
- SHORT-TERM ACADEMIC STUDY TOURS • CREDITS TRANSFERABLE

Jerusalem University College

an evangelical Christian institution of higher learning celebrating 40 years in Jerusalem

formerly: INSTITUTE OF HOLY LAND STUDIES

For literature and free video: 1-800-891-9408

or (815)229-5900 in North America, all others 972-2-718628

NO ONE BUILDS A BETTER CHAIR THAN BERTOLINI INC.

Unsurpassed Quality: While others use low quality materials like particle board and cheap foam, we use 7 ply marine birch plywood and commercial grade 2 lb. foam. Others offer flat seats and backs, we offer body contoured seating with superior comfort. Simply put, while others try to get by with the bare minimum, Bertolini Inc. builds chairs to last a lifetime. Watch our video and see for yourself.

FREE Fund Raising Program:

Our goal is not just to sell chairs, our goal is to partner in the ministries of local churches. Bertolini Inc. now offers churches FREE fund raising tools and literature to help you afford one of the biggest investments your church will make. Also ask about 100% financing.

Design: We offer over 60 of the most attractive chair designs in the industry today in a wide range of colors and fabrics. Ask about our custom manufacturing capabilities.

Factory Direct: We offer the best prices in the industry because we are the manufacturer, not just the reseller. Tours given daily.

Warranty: We offer the best warranty in the business. We put it in writing and we stand behind it.

Experience: The Bertolini family has over 30 years of chair manufacturing experience. We will be there to service your needs for decades to come. Ask about 100% financing.

SEEING IS BELIEVING

Let us send you our 12 minute video and see for yourself why no one builds a better chair than Bertolini Inc.

1-800-647-7725

Visit our website at bidirect.com

Michael G. Maudlin,
Managing Editor

From Russia with Dreams

INSIDE CT

It's easy to tell that the building used to be a church. The rich red brick is now pocked and broken, but the outline of a Russian Orthodox sanctuary can be discerned. The exposed pipes crudely jutting into the building's side also make it clear it had been converted to a factory during the Stalinist era. But one certainly cannot tell from the street that this is now Saint Petersburg's second-largest and fastest-growing evangelical church, the Temple of the Gospel.

In the basement, the large open room serves as classroom, ministries' headquarters, and restaurant. Upstairs, the sanctuary holds two levels of pews where the Orthodox faithful used to stand. The once magnificent frescoes are now painted over, except for one of the resurrected Christ behind the pulpit and choir. (If the frescoes were fully restored, it is likely the Orthodox would sue to reclaim the church.) This ten-year reclamation project resulted from the vision of a pastor, Sergei Nikolaev, who has also dreamed of a new graduate-level seminary (see "A Fuller for Russia," p. 23).

This church, my first stop in Saint Petersburg, made me feel I was taking a time trip, 50 years back in the history of American evangelicalism—before our institutions were so large, before we had an infrastructure of publishing houses, magazines, and radio and

TV stations for communicating with fellow believers, before it was clear we were going to "make it."

Today it is a real question whether the Russian evangelicals will make it. One pastor estimates there are only 12,000 evangelicals among Saint Petersburg's 5 million. Some Orthodox leaders make life difficult for evangelicals, while others are partners; but the difficulties pale in comparison to the challenge of reaching the nihilistic, secular populace. Some Christians, like Nikolaev, see opportunity, and they dream dreams they believe God has given them. So one church is built; then another. A seminary is inaugurated, a social ministry begun, a radio station built, a television ministry launched, a few more churches started.

Few of us still worry whether evangelicalism will prosper. Yet, a generation ago we were just as dependent on our dreamers. Campus Crusade, Focus on the Family, Willow Creek Community Church, Jesus People USA, World Vision, the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association, all began with young visionaries who thought, "What if . . . ?" At the time, success was far from obvious, and many projects failed.

American evangelicalism still has its dreamers, but we are less dependent on them. But in Russia, dreamers are still critical. Which dreams will become major institutions is uncertain, but what is certain to all involved is that God is at work, because it can only be God at work when your only assets are faith and dreams. CT

Dr. Robert H. Schuller

As a pastor, do you ever feel emotionally & spiritually drained?

Come to a place where you can lay your burdens down and have your needs fulfilled.

With over 40 years of experience, Dr. Robert H. Schuller, founder of the Fuqua International School of Communications, understands the hearts of pastors.

"Since beginning my ministry at a drive-in theater, I have seen a series of miracles that have tested and strengthened my faith."

This five-day accredited program will not only sharpen your preaching skills, but provide you with a renewed faith and personal rejuvenation!

Enrollment is limited to ensure personalized service and all sessions are underwritten to keep tuition low. Call for your FREE catalog! 714.971.4238

www.crystalcathedral.org

Dr. Walter P. Kallestad
will be one of the distinguished faculty of the Sept. 21-25 session.

F U Q U A (formerly ISOCC)
INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL OF CHRISTIAN COMMUNICATIONS

"Covenant means a great deal to me personally.
I am thankful for its existence in this day of confusion."

—Francis Schaeffer
1912-1984

COVENANT
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

and the FRANCIS SCHAEFFER INSTITUTE
Saint Louis, Missouri

Degree Programs:
M.A. / Th.M. / M.A.C. / D.Min. / M.Div.

800-264-8064

Correspondence Study available

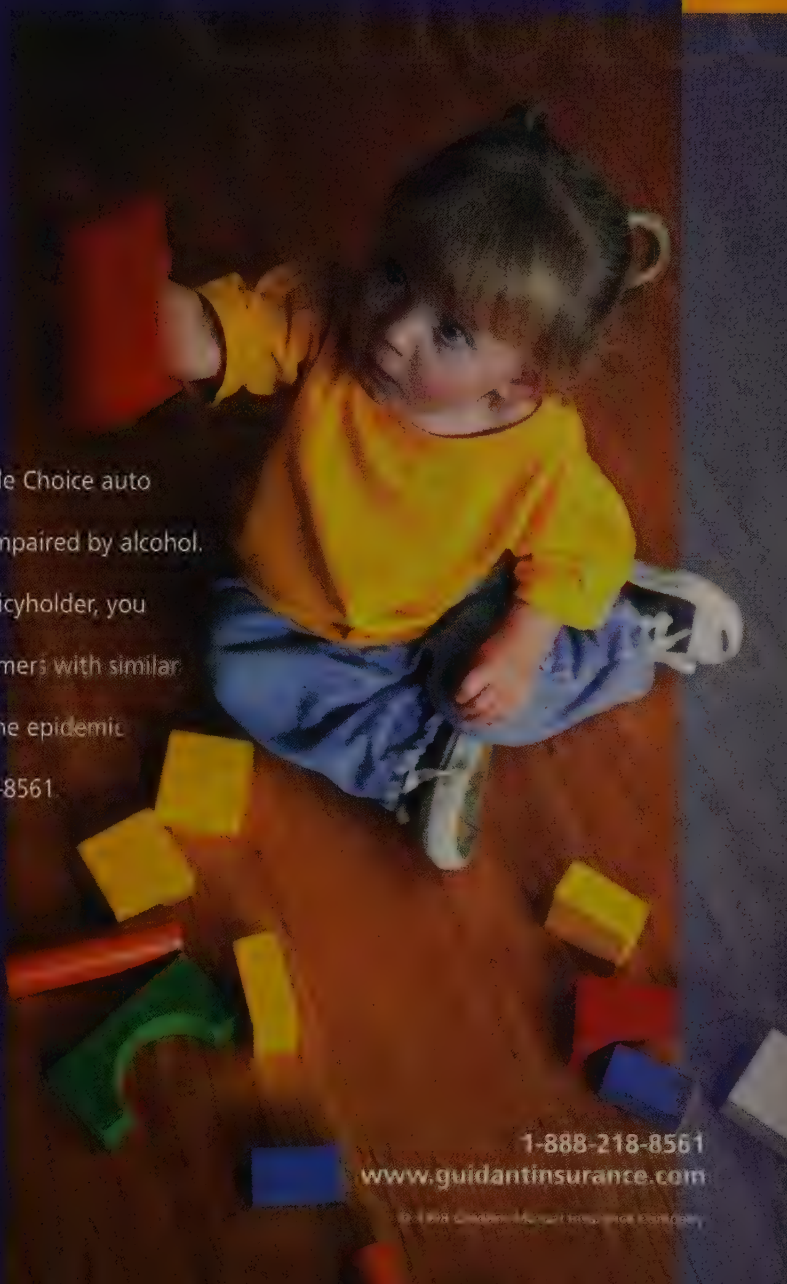

Of all the reasons not to drink and drive,
getting special rates on your insurance is
the least important.

The Guidant Insurance Group

is proud to exclusively offer Responsible Choice auto insurance to people who don't drive impaired by alcohol. By becoming a Responsible Choice policyholder, you join thousands of other Guidant customers with similar values. To join the fight to eliminate the epidemic of drinking and driving, call 1-888-218-8561.

Valuing Customers As Partners

1-888-218-8561

www.guidantinsurance.com

© 1998 Guidant Insurance Group, Inc.

Need a lift?

We're teaming up with some of the most profound Christian leaders to encourage you in your spiritual walk.

Howard Hendricks

Tony Evans

Ravi Zacharias

Joni Earekson Tada

Kay Arthur

Gary Chapman

Jill Briscoe

Crawford Loritts

Tim Smith

Dee Brestin

Erwin Lutzer

Joseph Stowell

- FOUNDER'S WEEK
- WOMEN'S SEMINARS
- PASTORS' CONFERENCE
- MARRIAGE SEMINARS
- MEN'S CONFERENCES
- PARENTING SEMINARS

Moody Bible Institute's Conference Ministries offers conferences and seminars to challenge you and equip you for your Christian walk.

For a listing of an event in your area, call: 1-800-356-6639

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE'S
Conference Ministries

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Objective, Not Sensational

✉ Thank you for the objectivity presented in "Southern Baptists Take Up the Mormon Challenge" [June 15]. As a Latter-day Saint of 31 years, I have read many articles, books, and commentaries that distort the beliefs of my faith. Usually I find sensationalism, half-truths, and misnomers. The recent articles by John W. Kennedy are the most objective take on the Mormon Church that I have ever read. Although he did consult with the infamous anti-Mormons, the Tanners, he showed unusual restraint as he presented a more objective view. The decision of the editors to be objective rather than sensational shows a true Christian attitude.

*Derek White
Orem, Utah*

I wish to applaud John W. Kennedy's balanced and informative article. The statistical projections of Mormon growth in the article—from 10 to 270 million by the year 2080—are conservative. Mormonism is quickly becoming a global challenge to evangelicalism. Outreach to Mormons, like Muslims or Hindus, must be seen as outreach to a larger culture, and not just to a "cult."

I humbly suggest that the larger Christian church look to the cross-cultural approach to Mormons that evangelicals in Utah have used for some time now, with remarkable evangelistic success, which is central to the mission of Salt Lake Seminary.

*Ken Mulholland, President
Salt Lake Seminary
Salt Lake City, Utah*

I enthusiastically applaud the incredible ministry of the Southern Baptists around the world and now their zeal for reaching Mormons. On the other hand, let's not get panicky about Mormon growth or that of other religious movements around the world.

With a flaming arrow pointing skyward, CT dramatizes their projected growth to 267 million adherents by 2080. On the other hand, there is much evidence that evangelicals around the world are growing at a rate of 6 or 7 percent a year. Even if we slowed to just 5 percent average annual growth rate, the current 600 million evangelicals would become more than 30 billion worldwide by that date.

So what's the big deal about 267 million Mormons by AD 2080?

*Jim Montgomery, President Dawn Ministries
Colorado Springs, Colo.*

✉ Your article on Mormonism quotes R. Philip Rogers: "Mormons shamelessly proselytize members of Christian churches, encouraging them to leave their own denomination and renounce the validity of their former group." This is a puzzling statement in light of the SBC's efforts to go door-to-door in Utah, encouraging Mormons to leave their church and renounce its validity. In the same breath, the article "warns Christians not to let door-knocking Mormons enter the house" because such true believers are "susceptible" to being deceived by the people you label "the enemy."

I welcomed the SBC's visit to Utah and was disappointed that they did not knock on my door. Sharing one's faith is never "sheep-stealing" to be feared. Evangelicals and Mormons are not "diametrically opposed" in our common faith in the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ.

Clearly, there is much we have yet to learn about each other. And we will never learn when we are afraid to listen to each other.

*John Williams
Elk Ridge, Utah*

When the Mormon church can address factually and honestly issues [such as] the following, I will consider the group to be credible. Otherwise, the Mormon church is, for me, a sect at best, or a cult at worst.

- Since the production of steel is only a few hundred years old, how was it possible for the Book of Mormon to speak of Nephi and Shule as possessing and having the knowledge to forge steel (1 Nephi 4:9, 16:18; 2 Nephi 5:15; Ether 7:9)?

- Silk became known to the world outside China in A.D. 552. How was it possible for silk to be available to and used by the people of the Book of Mormon (1 Nephi 13:7; Alma 4:6; Ether 9:17; 11:24)?

- How about that compass that worked by faith (1 Nephi 16:10, 28; 18:21)?

The Book of Mormon is a fantasy. Through his fertile imagination and by "borrowing" liberally from other "science fiction" of his day, Joseph Smith created a fanciful history for America. What is so perplexing to me is how so many reasonable, intelligent people can ignore the facts. How the Book of Mormon can be considered to be infallible is a mystery. Evangelicals need to base all dialogue with Mormons on the gospel and the truth of Scripture. There is no reason or room for conversation on any other basis. The similarities existing between me and a Mormon are superficial, not substantive.

Edmond Long Ringgold, Ga.

✉ As a Mormon reading that descriptive article of a Sunday meeting in a ward of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, that's the first and only news article, of hundreds I have read, that actually reports the facts, accurately, and without bias or opinion. Well done! *Mark Dupree
Logan, Utah*

✉ The Mormons can teach us a lot. Here are some of the things they are doing from which we could learn:

1. Rejecting mercenary ministry. In an age of high disposable income and abundant free time, the LDS have built a model in which every leadership function needed by a local congregation can be and is done without pay.

2. Giving primacy to testimony. In addition to the conventional "lecture" format, the LDS place emphasis on the power of ordinary members sharing their faith.

3. Allocating maximum resources to evangelism. Instead of building bureaucracies and careers, the LDS devote all available resources of time and money to the spreading of their message.

4. Emphasizing family values and social responsibility. We, who are the body of Christ, have not matched the LDS at instilling morality, practical living skills, and essential care toward each other.

Your article and personal experience demonstrate that the above approaches go a long way toward explaining the LDS success story.

Jim Vander Spek Escondido, Calif.

Are Catholics Christians?

✉ As an evangelical, or born again, to be exact—saved in a Catholic college while at the same time being an avid member of the Eastern Orthodox Church—I am repulsed by Timothy George's all-inclusive reference to Roman Catholics as our "brothers and sisters" in his article on "What I'd Like to Tell the Pope About the Church" [June 15]. If what constitutes them (or Orthodox, for that matter) Christians is their soteriology, that is, baptism (according to the Pope and the official catechisms of the Roman Church), then those like myself have erred in our understanding of Scripture, need to consider returning to our native nominal "Christian" roots, and question the authenticity of our "new birth experience"—was it the operation created by the regenerating power of the Holy Spirit? This is the ultimate question of ecclesiology.

I fear the direction that George and others are going as leaders, and who may be ignorantly following.

Pastor Gary George Leicester, Mass.

✉ The article by Timothy George contained headings that correspond to the church's attributes described in the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds. I think that fewer than one in three American evangelicals has any knowledge of those great creeds and probably fewer than one in five recites them in worship. The great legitimacy for noncreedal churches really began with the Campbellite Restorationists. Even the Anabaptists had the Schleithem Confession (1527) and the separatists had the Westminster, Savoy, and London Baptist (1689) confessions to appeal to.

Anticreedalism in this country has really harmed Protestantism and evangelicalism a great deal and has paved the way for a new liberalism based on ignorance of the facts, not rejection of them. The seeker-church movement could be the final nail in the coffin for evangelicalism, since it "dumbs down" the understanding of the gospel until it dissipates into total experientialism.

We can't have a worldwide missionary vision without the gospel, and we can't have a gospel to preach without agreement as to what we should teach.

*Edwin B. Couser
Mount Holly Springs, Pa.*

Qualifications for Leadership

✉ Eugene Peterson's contention that "our flawed ideas of leadership need chastening quite as much as our flawed leaders" seems to cloud rather than clarify the biblical perspective ["What Bible Heroes Can Teach Us About Scandals," June 15]. The expectation that our leaders, particularly in the church, will be above reproach and exercise marital fidelity is hardly some overidealized hang-up of American Christians. It is rather the qualification for ecclesiastical leadership that God himself has expressed in his Word (1 Tim. 3:2; Tit. 1:6). When

"There must be some mistake—I haven't had my mid-life crisis yet!"

Peterson notes in the example of David that "morality is not a precondition for salvation," he fails to differentiate between qualifications for salvation and qualifications for leadership. The question Christians must discern is not the salvation status of fallen leaders but the leader's qualifications for continued leadership.

The potential influence leaders exercise over those in their fold means that the consequences of their behavior is that much greater. In a recent Time magazine report (May 15, 1998, p. 52), a few middle-school boys rationalized their sexual exploits by retorting, "If the President can do it, why can't we?" The lesson from the biblical record is not that we should not express shock and disappointment when our leaders fall prey to moral lapses, but that no leaders in their human condition are so strong as to be beyond susceptibility to moral failure, and that consequently we have a great responsibility to uphold their continued integrity and fidelity in our prayers.

Barry Danylak Aurora, Ill.

Castle for a Few?

I read "God's Green Acres" [June 15], with interest, because as a conservationist and farmer, I believe that we can supply the world's material needs and still leave this planet in a better position to serve the next generation. Modern technology has given us the tools to produce much more from our farms and forests and leave the soil and the environment in better condition. Only good soil produces big crops, and big crops leave more residue, which improves the soil.

I applaud those who are working to discover the secrets of nature so that we can live in harmony with the environment, and as a consequence, our generation and those who may follow will have adequate supplies. The Dunn experiment seems to build an environmental castle for a few where the drawbridge can be raised and the serfs outside the mote can mix the asphalt and build the roads and schools and all the other "messy" things that make our modern life possible.

*Enos Heatwole
Denmark, S.C.*

✉ Eugene Peterson catalogs the sins of David, Abraham, Jacob, Moses, Samson, Samuel, Solomon, and pre-Pentecost Peter and concludes, "They turn out to be no better nor worse than the people with whom he [God] works still, the very ones we meet in daily newspapers." But one vital ingredient should make a great deal of difference for leaders today who claim to be Christians. They supposedly have the Holy Spirit to remind them of all that Jesus taught. Hence Americans are rightfully disappointed in Clinton.

*Peter Yuen
Oakland, Calif.*

✉ I enjoyed your profile of Christian environmentalist and Calvin College graduate Calvin DeWitt. DeWitt, a 1957 graduate of Calvin, was one of two men honored as winners of the 1998 Distinguished Alumni Awards at Calvin (the other was Anthony VanZanten, a 1961 graduate who is director of Roseland Christian Ministries in Chicago).

I also enjoyed the piece by Cornelius Plantinga, but I did want to note that he is dean of the chapel of Calvin College, not Calvin Theological Seminary. His duties at the seminary are as a professor.

*Phil de Haan, Director, Media Relations
Calvin College
Grand Rapids, Mich.*

More, Please!

Bravo! and thank you for Cornelius Plantinga's meditation on Psalm 91 ["Can God Be Trusted?" June 15]. I have just used it in our prayer meeting, shared it profitably on a personal level with several individuals, and have personally benefited from his insights. This is the kind of material we need more of in the pages of CT.

*Pastor Jim Kutnow
The Blue Church Springfield, Pa.*

Spong: Comical or Tragic?

In regard to the review of John Shelby Spong's book Why Christianity Must Change or Die [Books, June 15], it is hard to tell if people like Bishop Spong are more comical or merely tragic figures on the fringes of American religion. He reminds me of the last man on the Titanic, crying out, "Get back on the boat! Don't you know it is unsinkable?" The "Father Almighty" God that so offends Spong is the only one who could be changing the lives of sin-hardened sinners in this jail. His new book should be titled Why Spong Must Change—Or Die.

*Chaplain Rick McEver
Good News Jail and Prison Ministry
Bisbee, Ariz.*

While I can agree with Michael Maudlin's assessment of Bishop Spong's theology, I heartily disagree with his view of the Anglican (Episcopal) church. The Anglican church has 70 million members worldwide and is growing, despite the fact that as a church we encompass different views on some matters. We can hardly be compared to the Titanic.

It was unfair and hurtful to have a whole church condemned because of the views of one of its leaders.

*Rector Bill Clarke
Parish of the Rideau
Portland, Ont., Canada*

For the Children's Sake

Thank you for reissuing the call for Christian parents to find a way to stay home with their children [Editorial, "Home Is Where the Parent Should Be," June 15]. As a stay-at-home mom and pastor's wife, I am saddened by the large number of Christians who delegate their

THE MONEY PROBLEM

A Conference on the Financing of American Religion

LOREN B. MEAD

Author of Five Challenges for the Once and Future Church (1996) and Financial Meltdown in the Mainline? (1998), Mr. Mead is Founder and former President of the Alban Institute in Washington, D.C.

MARK CHAVES

Associate Professor of Sociology at the University of Arizona, Mr. Chaves is author of Ordaining Women: Culture and Conflict in Religious Organizations (1997) and co-editor of Financing American Religion (Alta Mira Press, 1998).

ROBERT WOOD LYNN

Mr. Lynn is former Senior Vice President of Religion at Lilly Endowment, Inc. His recent scholarship focuses on the relationship between money and the Christian faith.

For full conference information and registration materials, please see our web page (www.louisville-institute.org) or contact:
The Louisville Institute • 1044 Alta Vista Road • Louisville, KY 40205
502 895-3411, x 487 • FAX 502 894-2286 • Email: info@louisville-institute.org

October
15-16, 1998

Workshops

Conversation

Sponsored by The Louisville Institute, a Lilly Endowment Program for the Study of American Religion based at Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary.

Conference leaders include both scholars and church leaders working in the area of faith and money. A program of plenary presentations, panel discussions, workshops, and worship provides ample opportunities for interaction between conference participants and leaders.

Global Connection

Off Campus and On Line

Without disrupting your family or leaving your present Ministry, you can complete your degree program. With Bethany, you can study off campus and on line via the World Wide Web. At your computer, in your home or office, or whether you use the mail, you can have a dialogue with Bethany's faculty, students, or alumni. Bethany will not take second place when it comes to providing nontraditional education. Bethany...A Seminary of Distinction.

The Bethany Degree Program...

Bachelor's, Master's and Doctorate Degrees in the following areas:

Biblical Studies
Theology, Missions
Pastorial Ministry
Religious Education
Christian Counseling

Bethany is an Independent, Conservative, Affiliated College with a trans-denominational student body. Bethany is designed for educating Pastors, Missionaries, and Evangelists. Bethany accepts the inerrancy and infallibility of the Word of God.

Advanced standing is given for college transfer credit and portfolio Learning Assessment for life experiences. Modest tuition arrangements are possible.

Bethany Worldwide

BETHANY BIBLE COLLEGE AND THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

2573 Hodgesville Road / P.O. Box 1944 / Dothan, AL 36302

Ph: (334) 793-3189 • Fax: (334) 793-4344

E-mail: bethanybc@ala.net

New American Standard Bible

UPDATED EDITION

Then God said, "Let there be light";
and there was light.

Continuing the tradition of Biblical excellence for over 25 years.

About the NASB Update...

Discover the truth in the inspired Word of God by reading the New American Standard Bible. The updated edition continues the NASB's commitment to accuracy while increasing clarity and readability. Vocabulary, grammar, and sentence structure have been carefully updated for greater understanding and smoother reading. The NASB remains the most literally accurate Bible in the English language.

Look for the NASB Update in a variety of formats from these publishers:

Foundation Publications

Moody Press

Oxford University Press

World Bible Publishers

Various software publishers

Ask for the NASB Update at your local bookstore.

I'D LIKE MORE INFORMATION ON THE NASB UPDATE.

NAME
ADDRESS
CITY	STATE	ZIP
PHONE		CT898

For more information contact:

The Lockman Foundation

900 South Euclid Street, La Habra, CA 90631

(714) 879-3055

www.gospelcom.net/lockman

children's care to outside and often non-Christian caretakers.

I am more convinced than ever that we must break out of our current culture that says women are only fulfilled and have self-worth if they pursue a career away from the home. We have a lifetime to pursue the corporate ladder or a second car but only 18 years to develop children of character.

Debbie Hardinger
Lynden, Wash.

Work for Change

Your article concerning the reaction to the acquittal of United Methodist pastor Jimmy Creech neglected a significant point [News, "Verdict Aftershocks," June 15]. The United Methodist Book of Discipline contains not only church law, but also theological and advisory materials, such as the Constitution, Our Doctrinal Heritage and Our Theological Task, and the Social Principles.

Because the Social Principles are advisory rather than binding, they do not carry the authority of church law. The statement Creech violated is in these Social Principles; therefore, he was acquitted. The conservative voices now crying foul need to accept this as fact and work for change in the legal paragraphs pertaining to the ordained ministry if they want a social prohibition across the church on performing same-sex unions. I find a disturbing lack of veracity among conservative United Methodists at points like this.

Pastor Jim Frisbie, Sr.
First United Methodist Church
Twin Falls, Idaho

The removal of Jimmy Creech will not solve the problem of gay marriages nor any other point of dissension. Many church members are fed up with the waffling and indecision on the part of the leadership of the United Methodist Church. Its devotion to "political correctness" has reached the point of no return and has evolved into absurdness.

Unless the UMC returns to biblical doctrine and its strong Wesleyan tradition, there is little hope that effective reform can occur. It will take strong action by the laity to bring this about.

Jimmy R. Cash, Sr.
Fayetteville, N.C.

Greek Orthodox Respond

We respond, respectfully but sadly, to errors and impressions created by the article "Lay Coalition Demands Removal of U.S. Archbishop Spyridon (News, June 15).

First, it states that an incident of sexual harassment at the seminary was covered up. This allegation is false. The archbishop appointed a blue-ribbon committee of lawyers to investigate this charge, and it was completely refuted. Moreover, the article fails to mention (1) our policy against sexual harassment and (2) our record of dealing directly with such incidents by cooperating with legal investigations and then following up on adverse findings, when they occur, with procedures before the spiritual courts of our church.

Second, rather than removing lay oversight of archdiocesan finances, the archbishop has actually acted to give laypeople more control over financial assets of the church. For example, the archbishop, in cooperation with lay boards and trustees, has recently restructured our endowment fund into an exclusively lay-controlled fund.

Third, the author never asked the archdiocese whether the complaint that priests who question diocesan decisions are frequently reassigned is true. In fact, it is false.

We appreciate the opportunity to correct the record.

Mark B. Arey,
Director of Communications
Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of America
New York, N.Y.

Baroness Cox's CSI Team

The article by Baroness Caroline Cox on Nagorno-Karabakh [April 27], which references her team from Christian Solidarity Worldwide (CSW), does not reflect the facts. She made the trip on behalf of Christian Solidarity International (CSI), Switzerland, which paid for this visit to Karabakh and provided most of the administrative support. As CSI-U.K. broke away from CSI-International last September and is now called CSW, readers will assume that the wrong organization was responsible for the action in Karabakh described in that article.

Rev. Hans-J. Stückelberger
Founder and International President
Christian Solidarity International
Binz, Switzerland

Brief letters are welcome. They may be edited for space and clarity and must include the writer's name and address if intended for publication. Due to the volume of mail, we cannot respond personally to individual letters. Write to Eutychus, CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188; fax: 630/260-0114. E-mail: ctedit@aol.com (✉).

Last Minute Budget Programs Don't Work Any Better Than The Sermon You Wrote On Saturday Night.

You know it's coming. So don't do to your annual stewardship drive what you wouldn't do to a sermon. This year, plan ahead to guide your congregation in the privilege of giving. RSI gives you three self-led programs to choose from—each one unique, prepackaged, proven, with detailed instructions . . . everything you need to conduct a successful annual budget campaign.

Call RSI today to order your manual, and mark one big project off your list. You can use the extra time to polish your close.

RESOURCE SERVICES, INC.

12770 Merit Drive, Suite 900

Dallas, Texas 75251

800-527-6824

www.rsi-ketchum.com

FISH FIGHT

Missouri Town in Symbolic Struggle

The town of Republic, Missouri, is fighting a lawsuit filed in federal court July 1 by the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) for having an ichthus, the early Christian fish symbol, in its town logo.

"The symbol is very clearly a Christian symbol," says Dick Kurtenbach, regional ACLU executive director. "They were declaring Republic a Christian community."

A poll indicates 87 percent of residents want to retain the emblem, which appears on the town's flag, trucks, street signs, and stationery.

The ten-member Support Republic Committee, created by the town's board of aldermen and composed of volunteers from the local Assemblies of God, Baptist,

Catholic, Christian, Evangelical Free, and Methodist churches, has raised about $12,500 for legal fees

Unappreciated target: Vandals spray-painted the ichthus on a welcome sign into the city.

through private donations and the sale of T-shirts bearing the logo. Support has come from as far away as New Zealand, says Keith Miller, committee cochair.

Marilyn Shexsnayder, who submitted the winning logo design as part of a local contest eight years ago, says she added the fish to represent the role of faith in the community, which has 8,000 residents and two dozen churches. "I thought the fish was a universal symbol of religion," she told CT. "I think it would be really simple just to change that fish into a halo."

But the fight for the fish has rallied the town's denominationally diverse Christians. "We don't appreciate an organization coming in and telling us what we can and cannot do," says Miller.

Local Christians view the controversy as an evangelistic opportunity. "There is an openness in the city to dialogue about faith in Christ," says Denny Marr, minister of education at Calvary Baptist Church in Republic. "It's been a very positive situation."

By Christine J. Gardner.

Tithe Protection Law Signed

The Evangelical Free Church in New Hope, Minnesota, has finally been vindicated in a six-year legal battle that involved $13,450 in tithes from a couple who had declared bankruptcy. Initially, a judge determined the couple received "no reasonable equivalent value" for their donations to the church. Ultimately, after a $300,000 legal battle, a new federal law prohibits collectors from confiscating donations made by insolvent contributors (CT, May 18, 1998, p. 14).

In June, President Clinton signed the Religious Liberty and Charitable Donation Protection Act. The new law effectively closes a loophole that infringed on the right of religious exercise and allows those who have filed Chapter 13 bankruptcy to contribute up to 15 percent of their yearly income to a religious organization or charity. CT

PUBLISHING

Experiencing God Crosses Over

Canadian pastor Henry Blackaby wrote Experiencing God, a 13-week interactive discipleship workbook, for use in the Southern Baptist Convention. Yet the 224-page course about knowing and doing the will of God is now being used in at least 17 other denominations, including Church of God, Assemblies of God, Roman Catholic, Vineyard, Menonite, and Episcopal churches.

Blackaby, 63, says Christians often ask the wrong question: "What is God's will for my life?" What they should be asking, he says, is, "What is God's will?"

Blackaby developed the material through years of serving as a pastor in rural Canada. Often he had no resources and had to wait on God's provision. The workbook, which emphasizes a deeper relationship with God, teaches that to know God intimately requires knowing his Word.

The Experiencing God (LifeWay Christian Resources) workbook has sold more than 2 million copies, plus another 2.5 million ancillary products, including a specialized Bible.

"It's popular because it's interactive and meets people where they are," LifeWay's Sam House says of the workbook. "Rather than emphasizing a process, Experiencing God emphasizes a relationship with God. Some people go through it two or three times and they get something new every time."

Lutheran pastor Warren D. Freiheit of Peoria, Illinois, says those in his church who have gone through the study have developed a deeper appreciation and understanding of God's work.

"They're also much more active," he says. Freiheit first heard about the study from Kristie Toniny, a layperson in his church who had studied Experiencing God at a local Presbyterian church.

"I had been churchd all of Prayer man: Blackaby wants to see revival.

my life, but I never truly understood what it meant to have a personal relationship with God until I went through this material," Toniny says. "The whole concept of Experiencing God allows it to move easily from one denomination to another."

By Jon Kent Walker.

New Religious Liberty Bill Unveiled

After the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA) suffered defeat in the Supreme Court last year (CT, Aug. 11, 1997, p. 48), lawmakers scrambled to draft a bill that could withstand a constitutional challenge.

Legislators say the recently introduced Religious Liberty Protection Act (RLPA) could do just that. But some Christian groups say the new bill inappropriately links religious liberty with interstate commerce, expanding federal power. RLPA critics say the bill denigrates religion by associating it with commercial enterprise. The new bill is motivated by recent court cases that religious groups say have eroded the free exercise of religion as spelled out in the Bill of Rights.

Bill advocate Steven McFarland, director of the Center for Law and Religious Freedom, says, "The issue is one of civil liberty, whether religion will be the only place not receiving [legal] protection."

Lawmakers have sought to legislate stronger protections for religious freedom by developing the standard that prohibits state interference with religious practice unless there is a "compelling government interest." Also, governments must act in the least restrictive manner in cases involving religious practice.

More than 80 diverse organizations, from the Christian Coalition to the American Civil Liberties Union, support RLPA, introduced by Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) and Rep. Charles Canady (R-Fla.). But a few key conservative family groups that backed RFRA are not supporting the new bill.

"Our major concern is that the bill offers protection only on the basis of federally funded programs and commercial activity," says Concerned Women for America president Carmen Pate. "It minimizes the importance of religion."

*By Walter Ratliff
in Washington, D.C.*

SUPREME COURT

Raucy Art Ruled Unprotected

In an 8-to-1 decision, the Supreme Court ruled June 25 that the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) can refuse to give federal money to artists whose work is considered indecent.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote for the majority, saying the policy "neither interferes with First Amendment rights nor involves constitutional vagueness principles." The law "admonishes the NEA merely to take 'decency and respect' into consideration," she wrote.

Lower courts had struck down the decency standard as too vague and unconstitutional. For many years the NEA has been under attack for funding offensive material at taxpayer expense (CT, Oct. 7, 1997, p. 88). In 1990, Congress restricted funding after the agency sponsored controversial photo exhibits, one of which featured a crucifix immersed in urine.

While many conservative groups are hailing the ruling, some NEA critics doubt there will be much improvement in arts funding. The NEA has a $98 million annual budget. The U.S. House voted 217 to 216 to dismantle the NEA last year, but a Senate panel approved a bill to finance the agency through 2002.

By Greg Clugston in Washington, D.C.

News Briefs

◆ After a yearlong investigation, a federal grand jury on July 2 indicted Henry Lyons, president of the National Baptist Convention USA, on 56 counts, including fraud, conspiracy, and tax evasion. He is accused of extorting millions from corporations, obtaining loans with false documents, and fraudulently soliciting donations to purchase houses, cars, and jewelry (CT, Oct. 27, 1997, p. 102). If convicted, Lyons, 56, of St. Petersburg, Florida, faces a maximum of 815 years in prison and $25 million in fines.

REUTERS/ANS

Too big a Lyons share? National Baptists gave a vote of confidence last fall.

◆ The Salvation Army is cutting three programs and laying off 60 of its 390 employees in San Francisco because of disagreements with the city's domestic partners law. The ordinance approved last year (CT, April 28, 1997, p. 79) redefines the traditional family by requiring employers to give the same medical and retirement benefits to workers' domestic partners as to spouses. Catholic Charities will continue working in the city without officially recognizing the decree by providing "spousal equivalent" benefits to an employee's spouse, sibling, or unmarried housemate.

◆ The Supreme Court rejected an appeal June 26 to lift the ban on the sale of pornography on military bases. The decision reaffirms the Military Honor and Decency Act of 1996, stating the ban does not violate free-speech rights.

◆ The Presbyterian Church in America General Assembly last month agreed to review its doctrinal standards regarding the days of Creation. Some say the Westminster Confession of Faith requires belief that God created the world in six 24-hour days; others say it allows belief in six indefinite periods of time.

◆ The Reformed Church in America's (RCA) General Synod voted June 8 against a proposal to end discipline based solely on a person's sexual orientation. The RCA also agreed to a three-year moratorium on discussions regarding homosexual issues.

◆ Former PTL Ministries head Jim Bakker has joined the staff of the 1,000-member Los Angeles International Church, also known as the Dream Center. Bakker, 58, who spent five years in prison for multimillion-dollar fraud, serves in a full-time, unpaid position with the church's inner-city outreach.

◆ Larry Tomczak, 48, has joined the faculty of the Brownsville Revival School of Ministry in Pensacola, Florida. Tomczak is the cofounder of People of Destiny International, a network of charismatic churches.

◆ Peter Nanfelt, 61, has been elected president of the Christian and Missionary Alliance. Nanfelt has worked in missions for 39 years with the C&MA, most recently as vice president for the Division of Overseas Ministries. He replaces Paul Bubna, who died March 31.

New digs: Bakker has a different perspective.

REUTERS/RNS

"If you're going to study at a distance,
make sure that every step counts."

David Horn is Director of the Shoemaker Center for Church Renewal at Gordon-Conwell. He also directs the Semlink program, as part of our efforts to make the Seminary more responsive and accessible to the church, clergy and laity alike.

SOUTH HAMILTON
Massachusetts

BOSTON
Massachusetts

CHARLOTTE
North Carolina
(800) 600-1212

David Horn

ON

Distance Learning

It can be easy for you to take the first few steps toward an M.Div., since many seminaries offer correspondence classes.

But do you end up taking a few random classes, or do you enter into a structured program that leads to your ultimate goal?

This concern is why we created a new way to begin studying for an M.Div.

Semlink is our commitment to make distance learning more productive. We determined that "at a distance" would no longer mean "at a disadvantage."

That's why we actually reshaped our entire M.Div. curriculum. We lowered the barriers you have to hurdle to get started, without lowering our degree's high spiritual and academic quality.

We made sure that each class was as good as it could be, and that all of the classes worked together in a logical progression toward your degree.

With Semlink, you can take ten courses, a full one-third of your M.Div., before moving on campus.

The program is "high tech," with audio cassette lectures complemented by the emerging use of video, CD-ROM, and internet resources.

But it is also "high touch." You will have a faculty mentor for each course, to assist you via phone, fax, mail, or e-mail.

You will also have a faculty advisor to help you with your overall program.

The Semlink program is responsive to your schedule. Once accepted, you can begin courses at any time during the year! And you can study at your own pace.

It's even more affordable! With Semlink, tuition costs are reduced 50%. That's just one more way to make every step count!

You can register online at www.gcts.edu.

Or call, toll-free: 877-SEMLINK.

736-5465

Gordon-Conwell
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

(800) 428-7329

www.gcts.edu

Graham Unites English, French in Ottawa Crusade

Ottawa, as Billy Graham observed during his recent visit to Canada's capital city, is like a house divided. The geographical division of the Ottawa River between the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec is symbolic of the country's "two solitudes"—English on one side and French on the other.

The church is not exempt from that division. Traditionally, Anglophone Canadians have been largely Protestant, while Francophones have been Roman Catholic. Suspicion of each other has often prevented the two branches from cooperating.

But in the months preceding the June 25–28 Billy Graham mission to the national capital region, an area of about one million people, the barriers between Catholic and Protestant—and to an extent, between French and English—began to dissipate. Out of the 470 area churches that supported the campaign, 60 were Catholic. The Catholic involvement was the most significant of any Graham evangelistic crusade ever.

LONG TIME COMING: Graham's visit to Ottawa marked the first time in 92 years—since Chicago evangelist R. A. Torrey preached—that the city had hosted a major interdenominational outreach.

Mission chair Allen Churchill, a United Church minister, said Christians had been praying about such a unifying event for three decades. "God pulled the blinkers off our eyes," Churchill said.

Division among Protestants constituted a major obstacle in itself, according to Doug Ward, a Baptist pastor on the executive committee. But the greater issue facing the committee concerned determining whether Protestants could work with Catholics. "We crossed that line," Ward said, "and then it was a go."

Receiving an endorsement from the region's Roman Catholic archbishop, Marcel Gervais, helped. In a pastoral letter, Gervais said he supported the evangelism meetings "based on the traditions of the Roman Catholic Church, the spirit of Vatican II, and the teachings of Pope John Paul II."

In the early 1960s, the council of Vatican II, meeting in Rome, concluded, among other things, that the Catholic church should seek increased dialogue with other denominations. Gervais told Graham that Catholics "need to get back to the Bible," and "people are hungry to know what the Bible says and what its message is."

DEEPLY HELD RESERVATIONS: Despite the fact that Gervais is a Francophone, French-speaking Christians—both Protestant and Catholic—expressed reservations about involvement. For the French, the division between Protestant and Catholic is historic and not easily reconciled, explained Richard LaPointe, pastor of a French Pentecostal church and the mission's cochair. French Protestant pastors spoke of reluctance to join the mission if new converts attending would wind up in a Catholic church, which some did. LaPointe said some Catholics "see Protestants as the enemy."

In Quebec, where church attendance has fallen to less than 10 percent of the population during the past 40 years, Protestants are still considered cultic by some Catholics. Yet LaPointe is optimistic about closing that ecumenical divide. As many as 400 people, representing 50 different French-speaking churches, participated in the Christian Life and Witness classes that preceded the Graham crusade.

Reaching youth: Two young Canadians sing hymns before listening to the 79-year-old evangelist.

DEBRA FIEGUTH

"There were small groups of people from most of the French churches represented in the area, even though the pastors as a whole didn't get involved," LaPointe said.

DIPLOMATIC SPECIALIST: Graham, ever the goodwill ambassador, made sure the bridge-building also reached the top level of the country's decision makers, spending a private hourlong meeting with Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chretien, who is a French-speaking Catholic, and attending a reception with opposition leader Preston Manning, an English-speaking evangelical.

Mission organizers took care to represent both French and English during the four nights of meetings. Speakers offered greetings and prayers in both languages. Some of the guest musicians, such as noted tenor Ben Heppner, sang in both French and English, as did Lena Di Paolo, a popular French singer who is largely unknown in English Canada. And to broaden the cultural spectrum represented, the committee also invited Susan Aglukark, an Inuit pop star who sang in both Inuktitut and English.

Audiences averaged 23,500 each night to hear the 79-year-old evangelist at the 18,500-seat Corel Centre (overflow crowds watched a JumboTron in the parking lot). The largest crowd came the night of a "Concert for the NeXt Generation," featuring Christian musicians Jars of Clay and Michael W. Smith. In all, 8,634 people made salvation decisions.

By Debra Fieguth in Ottawa.

Diplomatic ties: Prime Minister Jean Chretien (left) meets with Billy Graham on Parliament Hill two days before the start of the Ottawa campaign.

Universities Question Orthodox Conversions

As Orthodoxy has gained a more visible presence within evangelical colleges and seminaries, new questions have surfaced on whether Orthodox teachings are in conflict with evangelical statements of faith. The Orthodox conversions of at least ten evangelical college faculty have pushed onto the front burner the debate among evangelicals of whether Orthodox teachings are in conflict with essential Protestant theology (CT, Jan. 6, 1997, p. 32).

Faculty and top administrators at evangelical institutions are commonly required to sign a statement of faith. Individuals who are unable to sign the statement might not be hired or could lose their jobs. In recent instances, professors at two schools have faced administrators who questioned the compatibility of Orthodox dogma with the doctrinal statements at those schools.

Edward Rommen, a recent convert to Orthodoxy, says he resigned from Columbia Biblical Seminary at Columbia (S.C.) International University (CIU) at the end of last fall's semester after the university's president asked him to leave.

At Biola University in La Mirada, California, administrators appointed a committee of Talbot Seminary faculty to look into the Orthodox faith after trustees and a student raised questions about whether three Orthodox faculty members, all of them converts, could still subscribe to the school's statement of belief and doctrine.

The Biola committee's report, completed a month before the end of the school year, concluded that the teachings found in Orthodox literature are incompatible with Biola's stated positions on the doctrine of justification and the authority of Scripture. The report found that Orthodox teaching explicitly denies justification by faith alone and that it requires good works and the necessity of sacramental rites for salvation.

Threatened with dismissal after the report, the Orthodox faculty, with two Orthodox theologians who teach at Fuller Theological Seminary, met with Biola administrators and members of the faculty committee two weeks after the report's release. They rejected the report's conclusions, arguing that literature cited by the faculty committee did not reflect the true position of their church and maintained that other Orthodox literature contained views of justification and the authority of Pre-Orthodoxy: Rommen teaches a missions course at a German evangelical seminary.

Scripture compatible with Biola's doctrinal statement.

Following that meeting, Biola provost Sherwood Lingenfelter recommended to president Clyde Cook that the faculty members be retained while the two sides clarify "what theological hurdles must be overcome for further opening of the Biola community to Orthodox Christians."

"These men showed me a dynamic side of the Orthodox church that I hadn't seen in the literature," Lingenfelter told CT. "It seemed to me that the Orthodox church in the U.S. is more open to evangelicals. They seemed much closer on the critical issues than what we'd read in the literature."

UNWELCOME CONVERSION: Former CIU professor Rommen grew up in the Evangelical Free Church and spent nearly 15 years as a missionary and seminary professor for that denomination in Germany. On returning to the United States, he taught at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School in Deerfield, Illinois, for eight years before joining CIU's faculty in 1994.

He joined the Orthodox church in May 1997, even though he detected 10 points of difference between Orthodox theology and CIU's doctrinal statement. According to Rommen, the only substantive difference concerns end-times teaching: the school holds a premillennial position while the Orthodox are amillennial.

When the fall semester began, Rommen, who had signed a five-year contract that went into effect in June 1997, informed seminary dean Ken Mulholland of his conversion. In November, the school agreed to allow Rommen to teach for a two-year trial period.

Rommen says he received strong support from faculty members and students, who urged Mulholland to keep him. But university president Johnny Miller told Rommen to resign at the end of the fall semester or face dismissal at the board of trustees meeting in February.

Though Rommen says he believes the president's primary concerns involved constituency reaction to the presence of an Orthodox professor, Miller says his primary concerns were doctrinal. Miller says that Rommen from the beginning understood the doctrinal issues. Miller says, "I think the same thing would be true for a person who claimed to be an evangelical Catholic—what part is evangelical and what part is Catholic?"

CHARISMATIC CONVERTS: The conversions of evangelical faculty members to Orthodoxy reflect how some disenchanted evangelicals have been drawn to Orthodoxy's ancient liturgy, historic creeds, and family-supportive environment. According to Bradley Nassif, an administrator and adjunct professor of Eastern Orthodoxy at Fuller Seminary, Antiochian Orthodoxy has 200 North American parishes and 350,000 members and has become home to many Orthodox converts. About 75 percent of its clergy are converts, says Nassif, a lifelong Orthodox Christian.

Among the evangelical professors who have converted to Orthodoxy, many are charismatic. Nearly all say they found Orthodox worship more reverent and more God-centered, and they appreciate the emphasis on formalized prayers and strict preparation for worship. "This is not entertainment, not tickling the ears of those who attend," says Rommen.

See HIGHER EDUCATION on page 21

ISRAEL...the Holyland

$1,499.00

1 free for 5

A Special
Ten Day Deluxe
Christian Pilgrimage

Your trip includes:

- ◆ Airfare From New York
- ◆ Paradise Hotel in Jerusalem
- ◆ Ayelet Kibbutz in Galilee
- ◆ Galil Hotel in Netanya
- ◆ All Breakfasts & Dinners
- ◆ All Touring & Entrance Fees
- ◆ Transfers and Porterage

...Israel is a land of ancient wonders and modern miracles, and you will be a part of them all...

Ayelet Tours, Ltd.

Shalom,

Traveling to the Holyland is truly a life changing experience. Ayelet Tours' special Christian pilgrimage tour includes visits to all the Holy sites in Jerusalem, Nazareth, the Galilee and Bethlehem.

To walk in the footsteps of the Patriarchs, Judges, Prophets, Disciples, and to visit the places where Jesus was born, lived and preached is an experience that is inspiring, enriching and unique. A whole new insight into the Bible, into Christianity, and into humanity itself can be gained by visiting the land of Israel.

If you have ever dreamed of traveling to Israel, the Holyland, now is the time to make that dream become a reality. Please call us at the toll-free number below to begin.

Shalom,

Diane Rubtchinsky
Diane Rubtchinsky
President

איילת

21 Aviation Road • Albany New York 12205

(518) 437-0691 • FAX (518) 437-0699 • 800 - 237 - 1517

Call Now...

Ayelet Tours, Ltd.

21 Aviation Road • Albany, NY 12205

(518) 437-0691 • (800) 237-1517

Group Tours to Israel since 1986

— Ask about our... —

Ministers' Familiarization Tour to Israel

February 4-12, 1999

$699 per Minister + $1,499 per Companion

Tough Questions?

NOW THERE ARE ANSWERS!

NEW!

The Quest Study Bible will help you grasp difficult-to-understand words and phrases. You'll benefit from over 100 strategically placed charts and maps that explain the hows, wheres, and whens of troubling topics. You'll read fair summations of controversial passages, explanations of peculiar types of writing (like genealogies, proverbs, and prophecies), and many special articles of pressing interest.

Prepared by respected Bible scholars, and the editors at Christianity Today, Inc., over 6,000 answers in the Quest Study Bible speak to the textual, historical, and theological questions that Christians have pondered down through the centuries. Over 200 articles delve into the most common and provocative questions asked by contemporary readers of the Bible. Order your copy today!

The Quest Study Bible

The truth is, even the most mature Christians have questions. Now there are answers!

How many times have you had questions about the Bible for which there were no apparent answers?

Questions like:

- Does God cause natural disasters?
- Why did the early church suffer so much?
- How much did the Old Testament prophets really know?
- Why doesn't the Bible condemn slavery?
- How did God inspire the writing of the Bible?

Order Today!

BONDED LEATHER RETAILS FOR $64.99; HARDCOVER FOR $37.99; SOFTCOVER FOR $24.99

NO. OF BIBLES	% OFF	BURGUNDY BONDED LEATHER (Q588)		HARDCOVER (Q581)		SOFTCOVER (Q581)		TOTAL COST
		Price	Qty.	Price	Qty.	Price	Qty.
1	15%	$55.25		$32.25		$21.25
2	20%	$51.99		$30.40		$19.99
3-5	40%	$38.99		$22.75		$14.99
6+	50%	$32.49		$18.99		$12.49

I get one FREE burgundy bonded leather Quest Study Bible for each eight ordered (any style). No. free _____

PREPAID ORDERS ONLY, PLEASE! ☐ Check ☐ VISA ☐ MasterCard

Card # _____ Exp. date _____

Signature _____

Name _____

Address _____

City, State, Zip _____

Sub-total _____

Add 10% shipping _____

GRAND TOTAL _____

QE8HD4

MAIL TO: Quest Study Bible, Christianity Today, Inc., P.O. Box 606, Mt. Morris, IL 61054-0606. U.S. FUNDS ONLY. Outside U.S. add 30% shipping. Please allow 4-6 weeks for delivery. Preserve your issue. Make a photocopy of this advertisement.

HIGHER EDUCATION from page 18

Evangelical converts also point out that Orthodox beliefs have remained essentially the same for nearly two millennia. "The Orthodox church hasn't changed," says Oral Roberts University (ORU) engineering professor Dave Baumann, who converted four years ago.

DOCTRINAL DIFFERENCES: Orthodox beliefs and practices differ from evangelicals in areas such as veneration of saints and of Mary, prayers for the dead, the use of icons, church governance, the prominence of church tradition, the process of sanctification, and the Old Testament Canon.

But the statements of faith within many evangelical institutions were created in contrast to Roman Catholicism, secularism, liberal Christian theology, as well as to define further the tenets of evangelicalism.

Biola sociology professor Richard Flory, who has studied the development of evangelical education extensively, says statements of faith for schools not tied directly to a particular denomination tend to be broadly written, glossing over differences on less essential theological points to include faculty members from a cross section of Protestant traditions.

"There was disagreement on some issues, but they were agreed on the major issues—the authority of Scripture, the deity of Christ, salvation," Flory says. As Orthodoxy becomes a more significant influence, Flory predicts schools will be forced to reassess their theological identity. "Schools have to decide," Flory says, "if they want to be only Protestant and evangelical, or if they are going to be open to anyone who believes what the Bible teaches."

A move to map the uncharted territory between evangelicalism and Eastern Orthodoxy is being undertaken at Fuller Seminary, where Nassif is director of academic programs for Fuller's Southern California extension campus. According to Fuller provost Russ Spittler, leaders from Fuller and the Antiochian church are discussing the creation of an Eastern Orthodox studies program at the seminary.

In 1990, Nassif founded and now heads the Society for the Study of Eastern Orthodoxy and Evangelicalism, a scholarly association that explores both religious communities. Nassif hopes the discussions at Fuller will lead to the creation of a degree-track program for aspiring Orthodox priests and other students.

But Spittler expects Fuller to move slowly on that decision. Among the many areas of potential tension are the role of women in ministry and the strained relations between Orthodox and evangelicals in Orthodox-majority countries, such as Russia.

Fuller has firm commitments to women's ordination as well as world evangelization. Orthodoxy does not allow ordination of women. And, in some parts of the world, Orthodox leaders have actively opposed Protestant evangelical outreach. "The behavior of the Orthodox on the grand scene, in other parts of the world, gives us some pause," Spittler says. While Nassif admits that a cooperative educational alliance between American evangelicals and Orthodoxy will be opposed by some on both sides, it is "nevertheless a timely and worthy goal to pursue."

By Scott A. Swanson.

3 easy ways to purchase the "JESUS" film on video for only $19.95!

1 Phone:
1-800-432-1997
Fax: (949)492-0381

2 Internet:
www.jesusfilm.org

3 Mail
Check or Money Order payable to
The "JESUS" Film Project
Add $4.00 for S/H per item
Mail to:
The JESUS Film Project
P.O. Box 72007
San Clemente, CA 92674-2007

Now is your chance to buy the film that has been seen by more than 1.3 billion people worldwide. The most historically accurate movie on the life of Jesus Christ. Translated in more than 450 languages. More relevant for today's world than ever. And it's only a 32¢ stamp or a phone call away!

ACT NOW and you can get the "JESUS" Film audio drama on cassette or CD for a discount price as well!

It's a newly-created, newly-produced audio drama of the book of Luke, with sound effects and multiple actors in Dolby Surround stereo! Ninety minutes of Biblical drama at an affordable price!

$12.95!

The JESUS Film Project
A Ministry of Campus Crusade for Christ
P.O. Box 72007
San Clemente, CA 92674-2007

* Plus shipping/Handling

Moratorium unappreciated: Several Presbyterians protest the cease-fire on discussions of sexual issues.

Presbyterians in Stalemate over Homosexual Ordination

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (PCUSA), at its annual general assembly in June, agreed to a cease-fire of sorts in the debate over homosexual ordination. Still, some outspoken Presbyterians see the effort as doomed because the stalemate is likely to create more ill will and further marginalize Presbyterian homosexuals.

After a week of debate, the denomination rejected, 412 to 92, a proposal that would have reopened the question of whether the church should ordain practicing homosexuals. This leaves standing the denomination's Book of Order, which requires pastors, elders, and deacons to practice chastity in singleness and fidelity in marriage between a man and woman, a 1996 rule aimed in part at keeping active homosexuals from leadership posts.

Earlier this year, the PCUSA announced that regional bodies had rejected by a 2-to-1 margin an effort to loosen official standards on who may be ordained (CT, May 18, 1998, p. 14). Thus, the "fidelity and chastity" amendment passed at last year's general assembly (CT, Aug. 11, 1997, p. 56) remains unchanged.

HALTING LOSSES: The battle over sexuality has occurred against the backdrop of further membership decline, including a drop of 22,000 last year. For some, the divisive sexuality debates have distracted church leaders from focusing on the familiar work of evangelistic outreach and mission projects.

"It really is time to step back," said Richard Hutchison, pastor of First Presbyterian Church in Fort Wayne, Indiana. "I don't mean sweep it under the rug. What we need to be talking about now is how we can live together with our differences . . . as opposed to how we resolve our differences."

Hutchison and the other two candidates for moderator supported the respite, including winner Douglas Oldenburg, president of Columbia Theological Seminary in Decatur, Georgia.

Oldenburg, 63, will lead the denomination for the next year, spending much of his time trying to fire up a 2.6-million-member denomination that has lost 1.5 million members since the Northern and Southern wings of the church merged in 1983.

DUCKING THE ISSUE? While 15,000 Presbyterian leaders opened the convention with worship in North Carolina's Charlotte Coliseum, a group of 50 who favor ordination of homosexuals gathered for prayer outside.

Homer Spencer, 76, a retired pastor and missionary from Lakeland, Florida, said the sabbatical is only allowing the denomination to duck the issue. A supporter of ordaining homosexuals, Spencer has a homosexual son who left the denomination.

Despite the vote to table the homosexual debate, Presbyterians took several steps to facilitate discussion and to discourage sanctions against members who are homosexual. In a resolution, they asked individual presbyteries not to exclude anyone from church membership on the basis of age, race, class, gender, or sexual orientation. "We trust our presbyteries and congregations to determine the fitness of individuals based upon their behavior," said Carol McDonald, chair of the committee that brought the issue to the general assembly floor.

Delegates also agreed to hold a national conference of Presbyterians within the next six months to explore the theological and ethical issues of homosexuality.

LUTHERAN AGREEMENT: With far less division, Presbyterians resolved several other issues. The PCUSA marked the formal beginning of "full communion" with the 5.2 million-member Evangelical Lutheran Church in America.

After three decades of study, and ratification by presbyteries after last year's general assembly, the agreement recognized in Charlotte forges deeper ties between the two denominations, as well as with the United Church of Christ and Reformed Church in America.

Presbyterians and Lutherans will now be able to take Communion at each others' churches. Presbyterian congregations may hire Lutherans to be their pastors, and Lutherans may hire Presbyterians. Members may start joint churches. The agreement will be sealed at an October 4 worship service at the University of Chicago.

In the heart of tobacco country, Presbyterians voted to approve a resolution urging Congress to set a tax of at least $1.10 per pack on cigarettes. In addition, the resolution also urged the elimination of cigarette vending machines.

Presbyterians also passed a resolution calling on members to remove handguns and assault weapons from their homes. While supporting gun control before, the resolution is the first to urge members actually to remove their weapons.

Philadelphia minister Bernice Warren said, "I have been to too many funerals of young people, particularly young black men, who have been killed by handguns."

By Ken Garfield in Charlotte.

A Fuller for Russia

A new home is dedicated for the nation's only graduate-level Protestant seminary.

Beware when giving advice. That is the lesson Arthur DeKruyter learned after completing a preaching tour in the Soviet Union in 1986. DeKruyter, the founding pastor of the megasized Christ Church Oak Brook (Ill.), visited churches at the invitation of the All-Union Council of Evangelical Christian-Baptist Churches. Meeting Russian clergy caused the Chicago-area cleric to tell Union officials that their leaders needed better theological training. "So help us build a seminary," they responded.

And so he did. On June 20, the new 35,000-square-foot building for the Saint Petersburg Theological Academy, the only graduate-level Protestant seminary in Russia, was dedicated. In operation since 1990, shuffling between church basements and rented classrooms, the school has issued more than 300 degrees, ranging from associate's to a pre-master's certificate, the latter accredited by Fuller Theological Seminary in Pasadena, which allows students to receive an M.A. with only one year of additional study in the United States. Within the next few years, the school hopes to bestow an M.A. without students having to leave Russian soil. Fuller provides four faculty members a year, each undertaking a two-week stint of six-hour lectures, six days a week.

NEAR-DEATH VISION: The idea for the academy arose from a dramatic event in the life of Sergei Nikolaev, an evangelical minister from Saint Petersburg. Nikolaev suffered multiple fractures in a car accident in Norway in 1988. While near death, he says he was visited by the Lord, who told him to follow a three-pronged strategy for his ministry in Saint Petersburg: not only was he to build a church (the Temple of the Gospel Church, which quickly grew to 2,000 members), but also a mission (New Life Mission, the evangelistic and social ministry arm of the church) and a seminary.

Nikolaev did not just want a Bible college, either, even though he recognized that as the most immediate need. Few pastors have undergraduate degrees because Christians were hindered from attending college during the Soviet era. But Nikolaev, now 49, looked to the future: "I think it's very important to have a school like this not only to prepare ministers but also to prepare theologians who can start the cross-religious, cross-denominational, and cultural dialogue which is so crucial today in Russia."

New era for Russia's Protestants: A procession behind a medieval Russian Bible and ribbon-cutting mark the achievement of Arthur DeKruyter (left) and Sergei Nikolaev in building the graduate seminary in Saint Petersburg.

As it turned out, Nikolaev's educational vision matched what DeKruyter wanted to pursue. After some false starts in Moscow, where leaders insisted on correspondence schools or a Bible college format, DeKruyter matched up with Nikolaev, who shared his vision of building a "Fuller seminary for Russia."

THE RIGHT MATCH: In many ways DeKruyter, now 72 and retired from pastoral responsibilities, was the perfect man for the job. His Dutch Reformed heritage gave him a passion for theological education; his connection as a board member of Fuller Seminary for the past 27 years provided academic resources from which to draw; and being the pastor of a large church in one of the wealthiest suburban communities in America gave him a donor base.

DeKruyter studied how other American-Russian partnerships had failed and strove to avoid those pitfalls. The academy is fully owned and controlled by Russians. It is financed by a foundation in Oak Brook that DeKruyter set up, which also provides administrative consulting. The budget, salaries, and expectations are defined on a Russian scale versus an American one. As quickly as possible, he and Nikolaev are having Russians be trained for the teaching positions so the school is not dependent on visiting faculty. Four master's graduates now teach at the academy. Their dream is for the academy to be financially independent by 2006.

To his surprise, DeKruyter discovered that Americans are almost useless when teaching on subjects of practical ministry. "We tried bringing pastors and professors over, teaching homiletics and pastoral counseling, but it was not adequate," he says. "Only the Russian Christians know their culture and what works here." Visiting faculty concentrate on core academic subjects, including Bible and systematic theology.

RESULTS OF FREEDOM:

More than 200 people, including evangelical leaders from throughout Russia, jammed the chapel for the dedication service. Yet Nikolaev says in the early years he had few friends. Despite a position on the All-Union Council and his distinction as the translator for Billy Graham's two Russian speaking tours, other Protestant leaders opposed Nikolaev's vision for two reasons: many felt the graduate-level program wasted resources and was too ecumenical for a Protestant seminary (the faculty now includes three Russian Orthodox monks as adjunct staff).

Since the fall of communism in 1989, the government-enforced unity of Protestants has fallen apart. First the Mennonites left the All-Union Council, then the Pentecostals pulled out, and now there is fighting between Baptists and evangelicals (though it is hard for outsiders to understand exactly what distinguishes these two groups).

Nikolaev hopes to transcend those disputes by providing a seminary open to all strands of Protestants in Russia, which he has done. "We had a Baptist student who didn't think Pentecostals were Christians," Nikolaev says. "Now he asks his two Pentecostal friends from his seminary class to help him preach at his church's revival services." He adds, "Now that we have the building, we have many friends."

By Michael G. Maudlin in Saint Petersburg.

Sudanese Christians Bloody, but Unbowed

Santino Manut, a one-legged former southern Sudanese soldier, sits on a stool in a small room where artificial legs are manufactured. A health assistant washes what remains of his leg, amputated at the knee. Soon the 24-year-old Manut will be fitted with an artificial limb.

Manut is one of hundreds of war victims admitted to the International Red Cross hospital in Lokichoggio, the logistical center for humanitarian agencies working in southern Sudan.

Manut, a Christian, had to have his leg amputated after a gunshot wound became infected. Nevertheless, he is determined to see southern Sudan liberated. Although his church teaches peace and reconciliation, Manut believes he must fight to reclaim what has been stripped from his people. "I am not giving up until we get our rights." Manut realizes he cannot return to the battlefield, but he still longs to fight, which he has done for a decade—since age 14. "I wish God can perform a miracle and give me back my leg; I would go back to fight again."

According to head nurse Toril Perelius, there are 570 patients at Lokichoggio, nearly all Sudanese war victims. Many, such as Manut, have lost legs. Up to 80 new patients arrive from the interior each week, says Perelius during a tour of the eight wards. Some patients in the intensive care unit are still unconscious, having just emerged from surgery, fresh blood seeping through the dressings.

MUSLIM-CHRISTIAN CONFLICT: Sudan, the largest country in Africa, is divided between the predominantly Muslim north, including the capital, Khartoum, and the primarily Christian south. Civil war between the two regions has destabilized the country for the past 15 years (CT, April 4, 1994, p. 80) and led to the slavery of Christians (CT, April 29, 1996, p. 52). Southern rebels, the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA), have waged guerrilla warfare against the Muslim government, which has been carrying out jihad, or holy war of forced Islamization of the animists and the 4 million Christians in southern Sudan. In June, for instance, government troops shot Episcopal deacon Abraham Yac Deng to death in the village of Ayien and burned 400

Nomadic existence: Displaced civilians whose homes have been destroyed pass an SPLA soldier (above) as a mother cradles her severely malnourished teenager while waiting for food at a Sudanese feeding center.

Bibles that had just been delivered by Voice of the Martyrs (VOM).

In addition to war, drought and famine have plagued the country since 1996. The government lifted a 14-month flight ban for humanitarian agencies in April. Now relief organizations such as World Vision are operating emergency food and distribution centers in Bahr-el-Ghazal, the province of southern Sudan with the most suffering.

On July 15, the SPLA declared a three-month cease-fire in Bahr-el-Ghazal to allow for emergency food to be delivered.

But the region is still dangerous. Two dozen aid workers had to flee the Upper Nile region east of Bahr-el-Ghazal June 29 due to clashes between government-supported factions and the SPLA. War and starvation have resulted in 1.5 million deaths in the past 15 years. Another 4 million people have been displaced, and nearly a million are depending on humanitarian food aid in order to survive.

FEEDING CAMP REFUGE: Despite bullets and bombs, starvation has become the chief threat to many civilians. In the community of Tonj, a crowd of about 600 people waits anxiously for food. Many are infected with skin and eye diseases. They look distraught, hungry, and gaunt.

Moses Adjuek Bec, a tall, lanky, devout Christian in his thirties, is a school teacher in Tonj and an Episcopal evangelist. He works side by side with evangelical Catholics, and the two denominations share a church building. "In our situation, only God can help us not preach denominations or traditions."

Bec has baptized 3,000 new believers in the past three years. However, the food shortage keeps many from attending church. "People spend the whole day searching for akuol leaves," Bec says. "Only during the feeding days do they come here and attend Scripture-reading services and worship." School attendance is also low.

"Mothers fear their children may be attacked, and the children are weak from hunger," Bec says.

Fighting had been commonplace in Tonj until the SPLA triumphed in May 1997—a result, Bec believes, of persistent Christian prayers. Today many of the buildings—the ones not destroyed by shelling—have holes in the walls.

CELEBRATING SUSTENANCE: In another camp in Thiet, 900 people are camped out waiting for food in a decaying primary school that no longer has a roof. One tiny girl approaches and points to her dry mouth and sunken abdomen. A small boy displays his protruding ribs. Virtually all children under 15 are naked.

Garvase Yak, a Christian for 33 years, sits with a few other elderly men. His legs are infected by guinea worms, yet he is singing and dancing in gratitude to the Lord because of the food that will be distributed.

In the feeding center, a woman pacing around will occasionally scream. For months she has led a nomadic life, ever since her village was devastated by war. Residents explain that she had a mental breakdown after all her children and husband were killed.

Martyr: The late Deng had only one New Testament before VOM's May delivery.

Outside the camp, small groups of people sit under trees. They have fled from war zones and have walked up to 50 miles seeking shelter and food.

LIVING WITH TERROR: At Panacrier, another 900 starving people, including many elderly disabled, wait at a food-distribution center. Morris Agany Wek explains that the area has endured sporadic raids by armed gangs who burn houses, kill men, rape women, and abduct children.

The current population consists of those who have dared to return or were too frail to flee in the first place. Danger is always lurking. Government planes dropped bombs only 220 yards from the feeding camp on June 10. All the churches in Panacrier have burned down, and residents are too weak—and scared—to rebuild.

In the past, Bahr-el-Ghazal has produced some of the country's best leaders, including politicians, pastors, and academicians. But how can Christians keep the faith in the face of starvation, homelessness, and war? Ironically, more people are converting to Christianity now than in the more peaceful times before the Muslim government expelled missionaries from the country 35 years ago.

"Tremendous growth has taken place during the last ten years of war and severe suffering," says Mike Wall, executive director of ACROSS (Association of Christian Resource Organizations Serving Sudan), a consortium of evangelical missions agencies.

Abe Enosa of the New Sudan Council of Churches says Christianity is growing more rapidly in southern Sudan than anywhere else in Africa. Although they lack theological training, Enosa says, Christians in southern Sudan have gone forth with Bibles and a vision to evangelize their neighbors.

Omina Leo, an evangelical Catholic priest in the diocese of Torit, says that despite the church's limited resources, it can provide encouragement to those who are suffering. "People are firm in their beliefs," Leo says. "Even in hunger they hold on to faith and keep hoping."

"We in the church pray and work for peace daily," says Paride Taban, overseer in the diocese. "While we are waiting for this to come about, though, long-term development must still go ahead."

The fighting notwithstanding, the diocese has opened schools and health centers, dug holes for wells, and assisted in agricultural development. Recently, the diocese completed preparing its five-year strategic plan. And in spite of the physical hardships they face daily, they have put pastoring their community as their highest priority.

By Connie Kisuke in southern Sudan.

THE INCLUSIVE LANGUAGE DEBATE

A PLEA FOR REALISM

D.A. CARSON

0-8010-5835-X
$13.99 paper

"...fair-minded wisdom on Bible translation..." — J. I. Packer

"...one of evangelicalism's ablest linguists..." — Carl F. H. Henry

"...valuable overview of translation complexities..." — Gretchen Gaebelin Hull

"...best and most balanced treatment of this controversy..." — Kenneth L. Barker

"Wise and scholarly..." — Luder G. Whitlock

BAKER

Available at your local bookstore.

Visit the Baker Book House web site at www.bakerbooks.com.

SAUDI ARABIA

Christians Jailed, Abused, Deported

Saudi Arabia began freeing a group of 20 imprisoned expatriate Christians in the capital of Riyadh on July 14. Some had been jailed for more than a month.

Arrests of the Christians, primarily Filipinos, began June 5 and continued for several weeks. Authorities also released them in stages, beginning with the expulsion and deportation of four Filipinos and a Dutch national.

The Christians had been suspected of distributing Christian materials or attending private worship meetings. Under Saudi Arabia's strict interpretation of Islamic law, any religious worship not Islamic is illegal.

Saudi authorities detained pregnant Yolanda Aguilar, 31, after her husband, Rufino, fled to the Philippines June 11 to avoid arrest. She gave birth on June 17 after undergoing many hours of intense questioning. After the baby's delivery, police resumed questioning.

The four Filipino prisoners released first said they had no advance indications that they would be freed. They were deported to Manila without a formal trial.

Wim den Hertog, a 35-year-old Dutch businessman, returned to Amsterdam on July 14 after being held incommunicado from diplomatic access. He had been kept in solitary confinement for the first two days, and questioned for many hours during the initial 17 days of his detention. After his Packed house: Christian assemblies, such as this one showing the Jesus film, are increasingly becoming stealth activities in many Middle Eastern countries.

transfer to another cell, one Muslim inmate tried to convert him so he could "preach Islam in the Netherlands."

Some of the prisoners had been tortured to reveal the names of other Filipinos living in Riyadh who are practicing Christians, the Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines reported.

According to the Vatican news service Fides, Filipino prisoner Gaudencio Lorenzo "suffered several broken bones and multiple wounds" after 14 days of interrogation and efforts to force him to convert to Islam.

"Freedom of religion does not exist," the U.S. State Department's 1997 Human Rights Report on Saudi Arabia states. "Islam is the official religion, and all citizens must be Muslims. The government prohibits the public practice of other religions."

By Barbara G. Baker,
Compass Direct news service.

THEOLOGY

Lutherans, Catholics Step Closer

The Lutheran World Federation (LWF), which represents 57 million Lutherans around the world, on June 16 adopted the Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification in an attempt to bridge the 400-year-old rift with Roman Catholics (CT, June 15, 1998, p. 12).

The doctrine of justification teaches how sinful humanity is reconciled to a holy God. Historically, the dispute between Lutherans and Catholics has centered on the Lutheran assertion that God's justification of sinners is by faith alone and consists in his declaring them righteous. Catholics, on the other hand, have reasoned that when God justifies believers, he not only declares them righteous but makes them increasingly righteous by infusions of grace that bring about meritorious good deeds.

In the joint declaration on justification, Lutherans clarify that while God's declaration of pardon is to be distinguished from humankind's subsequent renewed life of good works, it is not separate from it. Catholics make it clear that while God works in people to bring about good works, salvation is in no way merited by those works.

The 48-member LWF Council, the governing body for 124 international Lutheran groups, voted unanimously in Geneva to approve a 44-point statement that ends mutual condemnations.

"For the first time since the Reformation, the Roman Catholic Church and the Lutheran churches have responded at the highest international levels to a commonly developed statement," said LWF General Secretary Ishmael Noko.

Justification for celebration? Lutheran World Federation Council members sing "Now Thank We All Our God" after the vote in Geneva.

Pope John Paul II on June 28 called the declaration "an important ecumenical achievement" that he hopes will "encourage and reinforce the declared aim that Lutherans and Catholics pursue the achievement of visible full unity." A formal signing of the joint declaration is expected to occur this fall.

The agreement does not open the door for Catholics and Lutherans to take Communion together. And the two groups also remain far apart on issues such as papal authority, women's ordination, and a celibate clergy. [C]

Dalai Lama, Evangelical Leader Talk

In an effort to seek broader support for ending the religious persecution of Christians worldwide, Johan Candelin, director of the World Evangelical Fellowship's (WEF) Religious Liberty Commission, invited the Dalai Lama, the exiled leader of Tibet, to an unprecedented meeting in Helsinki on June 20.

The discussion focused on the persecution of Christians in Sri Lanka by Buddhists. The Dalai Lama said that any Buddhist who persecutes Christians "misunderstands the true nature of Buddhism," though he acknowledged his influence in Sri Lanka is limited because Buddhists there practice an earlier form of Buddhism from the Theravada school, while his followers are mostly from the Mahayana school.

Violence against Christians, including church arson, has increased by 230 percent this past year in Sri Lanka, an island nation south of India, where 70 percent of the 18.5 million inhabitants are Buddhists (CT, Feb. 9, 1998, p. 87). Candelin says Sri Lankans associate Christianity with the "religion of the oppressor," stemming from the nation's 450-year history of colonial rule by the Portuguese, Dutch, and British.

Although agreeing on the principles of religious liberty, the two leaders disagreed on the role of evangelism. Instead of trying to convert Buddhists, the Dalai Lama said, "Christians should concentrate on truly living out their own faith."

In April, the Dalai Lama attended a conference in Japan with other Buddhist leaders to discuss ways to curb the conversion of Buddhists in Southeast Asia to Christianity and Islam. "Every day we are losing our youth to Christianity," says K. Sri Damanda Maha Thera, a Buddhist priest from Malaysia who attended the conference. Buddhism is on the rise worldwide, but its growth is primarily limited to the West and China.

Both Candelin and the Dalai Lama agreed to continue their dialogue on religious liberty and share information on countries where both Christians and Buddhists are threatened, such as China, Laos, and Vietnam.

By Christine J. Gardner.

Dalai Lama

News Briefs

◆ Despite the recent Northern Ireland peace agreement (CT, July 13, 1998, p. 18), three Catholic children burned to death in a July 12 arson attack on their Belfast home. Threats of violence marked the annual July parades of the Protestant fraternal organization, Orange Order, in Portadown. Several hundred marchers camped out at Drumcree Church in a standoff with British police, who blocked the parade from reaching the mostly Catholic Garvaghy Road. Protestant rioters in Belfast objected to the blockade by torching vehicles and throwing stones at police.

Protestant protest: Orange Order marchers are stopped by a barbed-wire barricade near Garvaghy Road July 5.

REUTERS/ANS

◆ The British House of Commons voted June 22 to lower the age of consent for homosexual acts from 18 to 16, the same as the age of consent for heterosexuals. Most Britons opposed the measure, according to opinion polls. Martyn Eden, public affairs director of the Evangelical Alliance, believes the government has ignored morality in the legislation. "The law may decide when is an age of consent for these acts, but that doesn't make it right," Eden says.

◆ Four missionaries with the Mennonite-affiliated Nueva Vida, or New Life, in Guatemala were released unharmed just hours after being abducted June 29 near Sayaxche, about 150 miles north of Guatemala City. The kidnappers, who demanded $334,000 in ransom, released the Mennonite hostages, Otto Dueck, 19; Jenny Glick, 23; Barbara Stoltzfus, 57; and Stoltzfus Cosigua, 27, before escaping during a shootout with police.

◆ In a move to end weeks of racial and political violence (CT, April 27, 1998, p. 22), Guyana president Janet Jagan and opposition leader Desmond Hoyte signed an agreement July 2 calling for constitutional reforms as advocated by some of the country's top religious leaders. The changes will create a commission on race relations and provide a larger role for the opposition in the South American country's government. [CT]

MOROCCO

Four Convicted of Bible Smuggling

A Moroccan judge last month upheld the convictions of four Christians for smuggling Bibles into Morocco to avoid customs charges. On May 30, police arrested Graham Hutt, a 51-year-old British yachtsman, who has sailed to Morocco for more than 20 years, in M'diq near Tangier.

Earlier, authorities detained Kelly Viinikka, a Canadian who had transported Arabic Bibles by motorcycle from Hutt's yacht to the apartment of French citizen Serge Dechoz. After searching Hutt's yacht and the apartment, police confiscated 1,200 New Testaments and 500 Bibles. They arrested Hutt, Dechoz, Viinikka, and another Canadian, Antero Ylikangas.

The four were subjected to lengthy interrogations during two days without food or water. They were not allowed to contact a lawyer, and were Confiscated: Authorities seized Hutt's yacht.

COMPASS DIRECT

confined to a dank cell. Police released them after they each posted $1,000 bails on June 1. At a June 5 trial, a Tetouan Court suspended two-month prison sentences, but fined the defendants $42,000 and impounded Hutt's yacht, valued at $250,000.

Hutt told Compass Direct news service that Bibles can be imported and sold legally under Moroccan law, and that he and his friends had been charged only with a customs offense, amounting to a $60 fine for importing Bibles without paying customs duties. However, the only document produced in court was a falsified police report accusing them of illegal entry into the country and endangering national security. [CT]

Religious Schools Make the Grade

Give Wisconsin an A for saying no to secularist nonsense.

Some very bad ideas about the relation of church and state have been hanging around schoolyards for many years. In June, the Wisconsin State Supreme Court had the courage to expel those ideas. In Jackson v. Benson, the court weighed complaints against a key experiment in school vouchers and declared that they flunked.

The original Milwaukee Parental Choice Program (MPCP) had allowed only 1.5 percent of the students in the Milwaukee Public Schools to attend a private "non-sectarian" school of their choice at taxpayer expense, as long as their family income did not exceed 1.75 times the federal poverty level. But the law was amended in 1995 to raise the ceiling to 15 percent of MPS students. It also shifts the flow of funds from direct-to-schools payments to vouchers that require parental endorsement, limits how much tuition the state will pay, and—here's the rub—no longer restricts the program to "nonsectarian" schools.

Entrenched school bureaucracies in urban centers will be opposed to any expansion of school choice that allows students and tax money to flow elsewhere. But striking the word nonsectarian from the law has moved them from just wagging their jaws to gnashing their teeth.

Opponents of the amended MPCP confronted the Court with two tired and hoary arguments: that any money that ultimately flows to religious schools constitutes an establishment of religion; that government neutrality toward religion means dealing with secular schools only.

The Wisconsin court used criteria developed by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1971 to test these challenges. Those criteria, known as the Lemon test, include three questions: Does the law have a secular purpose? Will its principal effect neither enhance nor inhibit religion? Does it create excessive entanglement between government and religion? After a judicious look at the amended MPCP, the Wisconsin court found that the legislature had carefully designed the program to avoid constitutional problems.

Does the law have a secular purpose? Yes: "To provide low-income parents with an opportunity to have their children educated outside of the embattled Milwaukee Public School system."

Does the law's primary effect enhance religion? No. The Wisconsin court traced the development of this criterion in the thought of the U.S. Supreme Court, and found two key themes: neutrality and indirection. The Milwaukee voucher system was neutral, said the court, because all low-income parents (of whatever religion or no religion) and all private-sector schools (of whatever religion or no religion) were eligible. Besides, tax monies would reach religious schools indirectly because it was parental decisions that channeled the monies, not the decree of the government.

This is clearly different from what the U.S. Supreme Court objected to in the 1973 Nyquist case. Unlike the Milwaukee program, which excludes most students already in private schools, in Nyquist the state of New York sought to keep children in parochial schools by making tuition grants that would help relieve their parents' financial burden. The plan in Nyquist was clearly neither neutral nor indirect, and it had the primary effect of aiding religious schools. That was "parochialism." The Milwaukee program is "parent aid."

In deciding that parental choice was the key to neutrality in dealing with religious schools, the Wisconsin Court remarkably affirmed parental responsibility. Citing an 1899 decision, written long before the creation of the nanny state, the Court declared that parents are "the persons under natural conditions having the most effective motives and inclinations and being in the best position and under the strongest obligations to give to such children proper nurture, education, and training." This affirmation is a welcome tonic to parental confidence in an era when their competence is regularly undermined by "experts."

Does the law create an excessive entanglement of government and religion? While parochial schools (like all schools) would have to be monitored to make sure they met minimum safety, curricular, and instructional standards, the amended MPCP would not create an excessive entanglement, said the court, because the state already monitors parochial schools in this way. Since the amended MPCP passed the three tests and the critics' objections failed, the court gave the law a clear two thumbs up.

Rich in experience

Besides sweeping away specious arguments, the Wisconsin court opened the door to a rich deposit of educational experience and wisdom. There is no history of experience to match that of churches—especially Lutherans, Adventists, and Catholics—in running elementary and high schools.

According to James Traub, writing in the New York Times, “impoverished minority children were significantly likelier to graduate, and to go on to college, if they attended Roman Catholic rather than comparable public schools.” Traub approvingly cites University of Michigan scholar Valerie Lee’s argument that it is not freedom from bureaucratic control (as economic conservatives often aver) that makes these schools more effective. Rather, it is “the ideology of Catholic schools”—“a communitarianism founded on a vision of the common good.” Teachers caring and teaching others to work for the good of all make individual students successful.

Given this communitarian vision, it is indeed curious that voucher opponents often characterize choice programs as having “no apparent interest in building community out of diversity”—so says People for the American Way. Those critics must be confronted with facts: such as the fact that in one study of 13 New York City schools, the Catholic schools were found to be racially diverse (like the public schools), but they graduated 95 percent of their students compared to 50 percent in the public schools. To attack programs designed to help disadvantaged students for lack of diversity is sheer perversity!

Programs like Milwaukee’s won’t be able to serve all children who could benefit from them. And politicians should not use them as an excuse not to address the systemic problems of urban public schools. Yet, opening the door to successful schools is good news for children who would otherwise be trapped in failing school systems. Having a state supreme court approve a carefully thought-out way for religious schools to help foundering communities is good news for America. CU

Sentimentally Yours

In June, the American Film Institute released a list of the 100 best American movies. Quite apart from arguments over the comparative merits of this or that film, the list is valuable for what it reveals about the mindset of the entertainment industry and the public it serves. Beneath the surface variety, a clear pattern emerges. Two kinds of films dominate the list: the sentimental—for example, Gone with the Wind (4); and the nihilistic—Pulp Fiction (95). The nihilism provides a flattering thrill—“We’re giving it to you straight!”—and a warrant to ignore the inconvenient moral absolutes, which, the movies are telling us, are just a polite fiction anyway. The sentimentalism offers emotional, even kitschy, comforts at the expense of ethical and intellectual concerns.

As Christians, we are used to hearing jeremiads about the increasing depravity of the entertainment industry, and of movies in particular. We hear thundering denunciations of the “cultural elites” who are out of touch with the values of the American mainstream. And what happens? The next weekend, half the congregation heads to theaters to watch Titanic for the third time, while the other half goes to Blockbuster to pick out a video or three.

What is noteworthy about the AFI list is not only the heavy doses of violence and sex. No, it’s also that overpowering sentimentality: sweet, sometimes bittersweet, and oh so seductive—designed to paralyze the critical faculties. Certainly Christian leaders are right to point to the corrupting influence of violent and perverse entertainment. But equally pervasive, and just as destructive—if more subtle in its effects—is the influence of sentimentality.

Sentimentality is the unremarked common denominator between American popular culture and the evangelical subculture. Sentimentality offers powerful emotional satisfactions abstracted from genuine human context: abstracted from the relational and ethical complexities of real life. So movies from Doctor Zhivago to Titanic offer illicit sex packaged like one of those flavored “European” coffees (“it tastes so good, it must be right”).

Sentimentality is destructive because it is unreal. It severs emotions from their holistic context. And the more it is indulged, the more it has the power to exploit and twist genuine feeling. Hymns and praise songs that speak of an intimacy with Jesus can be vehicles of worship, but when the congregation merely mouths the words dreamily, never testing the depth of their commitment to Jesus’ commands, worship becomes merely sentimental, with emotions savored for their own sake.

When you walk into a typical Christian bookstore, you won’t see a calendar featuring naked models. That’s good; there is a lot of slime that Christians are warned to avoid. But you will find products that exude a yucky, artificial “niceness” radically at odds with the life of Jesus. Sentimentalism is our blind spot, the largely unnoticed entry point where the world infiltrates the church.

Too often Christian books, music, radio, and TV serve to invite us to dwell in an artificial gated community. In this sentimental kingdom, where we regale each other about our battles with the world and savor stories about victories over our enemies “out there,” something else is missing too: the texture of everyday life in which Christians are to be salt and light to the world, as Jesus was, dining with tax collectors.

Christian media critics should begin rating movies (and books) with an S, connecting the sentimentality that scores big at the box office with a prevailing tone of the evangelical subculture. Maybe in the process they will provoke us to ask whether the comforts of fuzzy emotionalism should be what guides Christians rather than the hard edge of Scripture, the jarring example of Christ, and the deep wisdom of the Holy Spirit. CU

Trained to Kill

A military expert on the psychology of killing explains how today's media condition kids to pull the trigger.

DAVID GROSSMAN

Why are kids shooting their classmates?

David Grossman is a military psychologist who coined the term killology for a new interdisciplinary field: the study of the methods and psychological effects of training army recruits to circumvent their natural inhibitions to killing fellow human beings. Here he marshals unsettling evidence that the same tactics used in training soldiers are at work in our media and entertainment. CT thinks that parents, the church, scholars, and the government must come together to study this question more intensely:

Are we training our children to kill? ►

ROGER ALLEN LEE / SUPERSTOCK

I am from Jonesboro, Arkansas. I travel the world training medical, law enforcement, and U.S. military personnel about the realities of warfare. I try to make those who carry deadly force keenly aware of the magnitude of killing. Too many law enforcement and military personnel act like "cowboys," never stopping to think about who they are and what they are called to do. I hope I am able to give them a reality check.

So here I am, a world traveler and an expert in the field of "killology," and the largest school massacre in American history happens in my hometown of Jonesboro, Arkansas. That was the March 24 schoolyard shooting deaths of four girls and a teacher. Ten others were injured, and two boys, ages 11 and 13, are in jail, charged with murder.

My son goes to one of the middle schools in town, so my aunt in Florida called us that day and asked, "Was that Joe's school?" And we said, "We haven't heard about it." My aunt in Florida knew about the shootings before we did!

We turned on the television and discovered the shootings took place down the road from us but, thank goodness, not at Joe's school. I'm sure almost all parents in Jonesboro that night hugged their children and said, "Thank God it wasn't you," as they tucked them into bed. But there was also a lot of guilt because some parents in Jonesboro couldn't say that.

I spent the first three days after the tragedy at Westside Middle School, where the shootings took place, working with the counselors, teachers, students, and parents. None of us had ever done anything like this before. I train people how to react to trauma in the military; but how do you do it with kids after a massacre in their school?

I was the lead trainer for the counselors and clergy the night after the shootings, and the following day we debriefed the teachers in groups. Then the counselors and clergy, working with the teachers, debriefed the students, allowing them to work through everything that had happened. Only people who share a trauma can give each other the understanding, acceptance, and forgiveness needed to understand what happened, and then they can begin the long process of trying to understand why it happened.

Virus of violence

To understand the why behind Jonesboro and Springfield and Pearl and Paducah, and all the other outbreaks of this "virus of violence," we need to understand first the magnitude of the problem. The per capita murder rate doubled in this country between 1957—when the FBI started keeping track of the data—and 1992. A fuller picture of the problem, however, is indicated by the rate people are attempting to kill one another—the aggravated assault rate. That rate in America has gone from around 60 per 100,000 in 1957 to over 440 per 100,000 by the middle of this decade. As bad as this is, it would be much worse were it not for two major factors.

First is the increase in the imprisonment rate of violent offenders. The prison population in America nearly quadrupled between 1975 and 1992. According to criminologist John J. Di-Iulio, "dozens of credible empirical analyses . . . leave no doubt that the increased use of prisons averted millions of serious crimes." If it were not for our tremendous imprisonment rate (the highest of any industrialized nation), the aggravated assault rate and the murder rate would undoubtedly be even higher.

The second factor keeping the murder rate from being any worse is medical technology. According to the U.S. Army Medical Service Corps, a wound that would have killed nine out of Children don't naturally kill; they learn it from violence

in the home and,
most pervasively,
from violence
as entertainment in television, movies,
and interactive video games.

ten soldiers in World War II, nine out of ten could have survived in Vietnam. Thus, by a very conservative estimate, if we had 1940-level medical technology today, the murder rate would be ten times higher than it is. The magnitude of the problem has been held down by the development of sophisticated lifesaving skills and techniques, such as helicopter medevacs, 911 operators, paramedics, CPR, trauma centers, and medicines.

However, the crime rate is still at a phenomenally high level, and this is true worldwide. In Canada, according to their Center for Justice, per capita assaults increased almost fivefold between 1964 and 1993, attempted murder increased nearly sevenfold, and murders doubled. Similar trends can be seen in other countries in the per capita violent crime rates reported to Interpol between 1977 and 1993. In Australia and New Zealand, the assault rate increased approximately fourfold, and the murder rate nearly doubled in both nations. The assault rate tripled in Sweden, and approximately doubled in Belgium, Denmark, England-Wales, France, Hungary, Netherlands, and Scotland, while all these nations had an associated (but smaller) increase in murder.

This virus of violence is occurring worldwide. The explanation for it has to be some new factor that is occurring in all of these countries. There are many factors involved, and none should be discounted: for example, the prevalence of guns in our society. But violence is rising in many nations with draconian gun laws. And though we should never downplay child abuse, poverty, or racism, there is only one new variable present in each of these countries, bearing the exact same fruit: media violence presented as entertainment for children.

Killing is unnatural

Before retiring from the military, I spent almost a quarter of a century as an army infantry officer and a psychologist, learning and studying how to enable people to kill. Believe me, we are very good at it. But it does not come naturally; you have to be taught to kill. And just as the army is conditioning people to kill, we are indiscriminately doing the same thing to our children, but without the safeguards.

After the Jonesboro killings, the head of the American Academy of Pediatrics Task Force on Juvenile Violence came to town and said that children don't naturally kill. It is a learned skill. And they learn it from abuse and violence in the home and, most pervasively, from violence as entertainment in television, the movies, and interactive video games.

Killing requires training because there is a built-in aversion to killing one's own kind. I can best illustrate this from drawing on my own work in studying killing in the military.

We all know that you can't have an argument or a discussion with a frightened or angry human being. Vasoconstriction, the narrowing of the blood vessels, has literally closed down the forebrain—that great gob of gray matter that makes you a human being and distinguishes you from a dog. When those neurons close down, the midbrain takes over and your thought processes and reflexes are indistinguishable from your dog's. If you've worked with animals, you have some understanding of what happens to frightened human beings on the battlefield. The battlefield and violent crime are in the realm of midbrain responses.

Within the midbrain there is a powerful, God-given resistance to killing your own kind. Every species, with a few exceptions, has a hardwired resistance to killing its own kind in terri-

While the U.S. is the most violent, all Western nations have experienced a significant increase in aggravated assault rate between 1977 and 1993.

© DAVE GROSSMAN (ADAPTED); USED WITH PERMISSION.

Murder rates in the U.S. between 1957 and 1992 have not risen as dramatically as aggravated assaults and the rate of imprisonment.

torial and mating battles. When animals with antlers and horns fight one another, they head butt in a harmless fashion. But when they fight any other species, they go to the side to gut and gore. Piranhas will turn their fangs on anything, but they fight one another with flicks of the tail. Rattlesnakes will bite anything, but they wrestle one another. Almost every species has this hardwired resistance to killing its own kind.

When we human beings are overwhelmed with anger and fear, we slam head-on into that midbrain resistance that generally prevents us from killing. Only socio-paths—who by definition don't have that resistance—lack this innate violence immune system.

Throughout human history, when humans fight each other, there is a lot of posturing. Adversaries make loud noises and puff themselves up, trying to daunt the enemy. There is a lot of fleeing and submission. Ancient battles were nothing more than great shoving matches. It was not until one side turned and ran that most of the killing happened, and most of that was stabbing people in the back. All of the ancient military historians report that the vast majority of killing happened in pursuit when one side was fleeing.

In more modern times, the average firing rate was incredibly low in Civil War battles. Patty Griffith demonstrates that the killing potential of the average Civil War regiment was anywhere from five hundred to a thousand men per minute. The actual killing rate was only one or two men per minute per regiment (The Battle Tactics of the American Civil War). At the Battle of Gettysburg, of the 27,000 muskets picked up from the dead and dying after the battle, 90 percent were loaded. This is an anomaly, because it took 95 percent of their time to load muskets and only 5 percent to fire. But even more amazingly, of the thousands of loaded muskets, over half had multiple loads in the barrel—one with 23 loads in the barrel.

In reality, the average man would load his musket and bring it to his shoulder, but he could not bring himself to kill. He would be brave, he would stand shoulder to shoulder, he would do what he was trained to do; but at the moment of truth, he could not bring himself to pull the trigger. And so he lowered the weapon and loaded it again. Of those who did fire, only a tiny percentage fired to hit. The vast majority fired over the enemy's head.

During World War II, U.S. Army Brig. Gen. S. L. A. Marshall had a team of researchers study what soldiers did in battle. For the first time in history, they asked individual soldiers what they did in battle. They discovered that only 15 to 20 percent of the individual riflemen could bring themselves to fire at an exposed enemy soldier.

That is the reality of the battlefield. Only a small percentage of soldiers are able and willing to participate. Men are willing to die, they are willing to sacrifice themselves for their nation; but they are not willing to kill. It is a phenomenal insight into human nature; but when the military became aware of that, they systematically went about the process of trying to fix this "problem." From the military perspective, a 15 percent firing rate among riflemen is like a 15 percent literacy rate among librarians. And fix it the military did. By the Korean War, around 55 percent of the soldiers were willing to fire to kill. And by Vietnam, the rate rose to over 90 percent.

The methods in this madness: Desensitization

How the military increases the killing rate of soldiers in combat is instructive, because our culture today is doing the same thing to our children. The training methods militaries use are brutalization, classical conditioning, operant conditioning, and role modeling. I will explain these in the military context and show how these same factors are contributing to the phenomenal increase of violence in our culture.

Brutalization and desensitization are what happens at boot camp. From the moment you step off the bus you are physically and verbally abused: countless pushups, endless hours at attention or running with heavy loads, while carefully trained professionals take turns screaming at you. Your head is shaved, you are herded together naked and dressed alike, losing all individuality. This brutalization is designed to break down your existing mores and norms and to accept a new set of values that embrace destruction, violence, and death as a way of life. In the end, you are desensitized to violence and accept it as a normal and essential survival skill in your brutal new world.

Something very similar to this desensitization toward violence is happening to our children through violence in the media—but instead of 18-year-olds, it begins at the age of 18 months when a child is first able to discern what is happening on television. At that age, a child can watch something happening on television and mimic that action. But it isn't until children are six or seven years old that the part of the brain kicks in that lets them understand where information comes from. Even though young children have some understanding of what it means to pretend, they are developmentally unable to distinguish clearly between fantasy and reality.

When young children see somebody shot, stabbed, raped, brutalized, degraded, or murdered on TV, to them it is as though it were actually happening. To have a child of three, four, or five watch a "splatter" movie, learning to relate to a character for the first 90 minutes and then in the last 30 minutes watch helplessly as that new friend is hunted and brutally murdered is the moral and psychological equivalent of introducing your child to a friend, letting her play with that friend, and then butchering that friend in front of your child's eyes. And this happens to our children hundreds upon hundreds of times.

Sure, they are told: "Hey, it's all for fun. Look, this isn't real, it's just TV." And they nod their little heads and say okay. But they can't tell the difference. Can you remember a point in your life or in your children's lives when dreams, reality, and television were all jumbled together? That's what it is like to be at that level of psychological development. That's what the media are doing to them.

The Journal of the American Medical Association published the definitive epidemiological study on the impact of TV violence. The research demonstrated what happened in numerous nations after television made its appearance as compared to nations and regions without TV. The two nations or regions being compared are demographically and ethnically identical; only one variable is different: the presence of television. In every nation, region, or city with television, there is an immediate explosion of violence on the playground, and within 15 years there is a doubling of the murder rate. Why 15 years? That is how long it takes for the brutalization of a three- to five-year-old to reach the "prime crime age." That is how long it takes for you to reap what you have sown when you brutalize and desensitize a three-year-old.

"Few researchers bother any longer to dispute that bloodshed on TV and in the movies has an effect on kids who witness it."

(Time, April 6, 1998)

Today the data linking violence in the media to violence in society are superior to those linking cancer and tobacco. Hundreds of sound scientific studies demonstrate the social impact of brutalization by the media. The Journal of the American Medical Association concluded that "the introduction of television in the 1950's caused a subsequent doubling of the homicide rate, i.e., long-term childhood exposure to television is a causal factor behind approximately one half of the homicides committed in the United States, or approximately 10,000 homicides annually." The article went on to say that "... if, hypothetically, television technology had never been developed, there would today be 10,000 fewer homicides each year in the United States, 70,000 fewer rapes, and 700,000 fewer injurious assaults" (June 10, 1992).

Classical conditioning

Classical conditioning is like the famous case of Pavlov's dogs you learned about in Psychology 101: The dogs learned to associate the ringing of the bell with food, and, once conditioned, the dogs could not hear the bell without salivating.

The Japanese were masters at using classical conditioning

NEWS UPDATE

What a Jonesboro Youth Group Learned

While some of his 13-year-old friends are having fun this summer behind home plate in shorts and T-shirts, Mitchell Johnson is behind steel bars in an orange jump suit at the Craighead Juvenile Detention Center near Jonesboro, Arkansas. In jail since March 24, Johnson, accused along with an 11-year-old boy of shooting and killing four classmates and a teacher in the worst episode of schoolyard violence in American history, awaits trial on murder and weapons charges.

Johnson's youth pastor, Chris Perry, is one of the few outside the prison system granted access to him, even though it is limited to 30-minute intervals through a thick glass barrier. Last fall, Johnson attended the youth group at Central Baptist Church for about two months and showed a growing openness to Christian faith. But Perry saw no warning signs indicating that trouble lay ahead.

LOOKING TO THE FUTURE: When Perry, 37, arrived at the scene after the shootings, he was welcomed as a familiar face, not as an outsider. For years, Perry has sought to be a visible presence as a youth pastor in all areas of the community. "It's very important to build meaningful relationships with the community, the police, the judicial community, the schools," Perry says. "When a crisis strikes, a friend has access that a stranger doesn't."

Since the shooting, Perry has motivated his youth group attendees to see themselves as a buffer within the public-school system, encouraging them to break out of their church subculture and be more intimately involved in the life of their schools.

"I have a heightened sense of the responsibility of the youth group to be a spiritual immunity system on campus for when a little evil hops in," says Perry.

In the aftermath of the killings, the youth of Jonesboro found themselves preoccupied with life-and-death discussions. "The teenagers were concerned about their safety, asking, Could it happen again?" Perry says. "There was a sense of responsibility among some that they should have reported dialogue that they had heard before the shooting."

One especially sensitive area was how Perry's youth group would relate to Monte Johnson, Mitchell's 12-year-old younger brother. Monte Johnson told Perry that he had no friends and he feared returning to school. Perry says the youth group faced the matter head-on.

"We spent time talking about an emotional safety net," Perry says. "Could we be the kind of youth group that a hurting teen can come to and find comfort and hope and love?" At one of the youth group's meetings, 80 teens gathered around Monte to show their support and let him know they cared about his well-being.

Youth Pastor Perry

Perry says Christian teens at school should focus on setting a good example for others as well as reporting to authorities behavior by their peers that might suggest serious underlying emotional problems.

In search of outside resources, Perry contacted Rick Lawrence, editor of Group magazine for youth ministry leaders. Lawrence says, "We don't recommend that youth ministers get in over their heads in counseling kids with serious problems." He believes that youth pastors are "incredibly resourceful people" who usually show good instincts in dealing with crisis situations.

But recognizing the need for outside assistance is critical. Lawrence says, "Perry had started a networking group with other youth ministers in the town so they were able to come together in the crisis. Perry was smart and wise about seeking help."

Perry told Group magazine, "I've tried to lead our students into what it means to be discerning in terms of immunity and protection. Our group is now realizing in light of what happened at Westside that they need to tangibly express their Christian faith by being safety nets and immunity systems."

By Mary Cagney.

with their soldiers. Early in World War II, Chinese prisoners were placed in a ditch on their knees with their hands bound behind them. And one by one, a select few Japanese soldiers would go into the ditch and bayonet "their" prisoner to death. This is a horrific way to kill another human being. Up on the bank, countless other young soldiers would cheer them on in their violence. Comparatively few soldiers actually killed in these situations, but by making the others watch and cheer, the Japanese were able to use these kinds of atrocities to classically condition a very large audience to associate pleasure with human death and suffering. Immediately afterwards, the soldiers who had been spectators were treated to sake, the best meal they had had in months, and to so-called comfort girls. The result? They learned to associate committing violent acts with pleasure.

The Japanese found these kinds of techniques to be extraordinarily effective at quickly enabling very large numbers of soldiers to commit atrocities in the years to come. Operant conditioning (which we will look at shortly) teaches you to kill, but classical conditioning is a subtle but powerful mechanism that

After the Jonesboro shootings, one of the high-school teachers told me how her students reacted when she told them about the shootings at the middle school. "They laughed," she told me with dismay. A similar reaction happens all the time in movie theaters when there is bloody violence. The young people laugh and cheer and keep right on eating popcorn and drinking pop. We have raised a generation of barbarians who have learned to associate violence with pleasure, like the Romans cheering and snacking as the Christians were slaughtered in the Colosseum.

The result is a phenomenon that functions much like AIDS, which I call AVIDS—Acquired Violence Immune Deficiency Syndrome. AIDS has never killed anybody. It destroys your immune system, and then other diseases that shouldn't kill you become fatal. Television violence by itself does not kill you. It destroys your violence immune system and conditions you to derive pleasure from violence. And once you are at close range with another human being, and it's time for you to pull that trigger, Acquired Violence Immune Deficiency Syndrome can destroy your midbrain resistance.

Operant conditioning

The third method the military uses is operant conditioning, a very powerful procedure of stimulus-response, stimulus-response. A benign example is the use of flight simulators to train pilots. An airline pilot in training sits in front of a flight simulator for endless hours; when a particular warning light goes on, he is taught to react in a certain way. When another warning light goes on, a different reaction is required. Stimulus-response, stimulus-response, stimulus-response. One day the pilot is actually flying a jumbo jet; the plane is going down, and 300 people are screaming behind him. He is wetting his seat cushion, and he is scared out of his wits; but he does the right thing. Why? Because he has been conditioned to respond reflexively to this particular crisis.

When people are frightened or angry, they will do what they have been conditioned to do. In fire drills, children learn to file out of the school in orderly fashion. One day there is a real fire, and they are frightened out of their wits; but they do exactly what they have been conditioned to do, and it saves their lives.

The military and law enforcement community have made killing a conditioned response. This has substantially raised the firing rate on the modern battlefield. Whereas infantry training in World War II used bull's-eye targets, now soldiers learn to fire at realistic, man-shaped silhouettes that pop into their field of view. That is the stimulus. The trainees have only a split second to engage the target. The conditioned response is to shoot the target, and then it drops. Stimulus-response, stimulus-response, stimulus-response—soldiers or police officers experience hundreds of repetitions. Later, when soldiers are on the battlefield or a police officer is walking a beat and somebody pops up with a gun, they will shoot reflexively and shoot to kill. We know that 75 to 80 percent of the shooting on the modern battlefield is the result of this kind of stimulus-response training.

Now, if you're a little troubled by that, how much more should we be troubled by the fact that every time a child plays an interactive point-and-shoot video game, he is learning the exact same conditioned reflex and motor skills.

I was an expert witness in a murder case in South Carolina offering mitigation for a kid who was facing the death penalty. I teaches you to like it.

Every time a child plays an interactive video game, he is learning the exact same conditioned reflex skills as a soldier or police officer in training.

This technique is so morally reprehensible that there are very few examples of it in modern U.S. military training; but there are some clear-cut examples of it being done by the media to our children. What is happening to our children is the reverse of the aversion therapy portrayed in the movie A Clockwork Orange. In A Clockwork Orange, a brutal sociopath, a mass murderer, is strapped to a chair and forced to watch violent movies while he is injected with a drug that nauseates him. So he sits and gags and retches as he watches the movies. After hundreds of repetitions of this, he associates violence with nausea, and it limits his ability to be violent.

We are doing the exact opposite: Our children watch vivid pictures of human suffering and death, and they learn to associate it with their favorite soft drink and candy bar, or their girlfriend's perfume.

tried to explain to the jury that interactive video games had conditioned him to shoot a gun to kill. He had spent hundreds of dollars on video games learning to point and shoot, point and shoot. One day he and his buddy decided it would be fun to rob the local convenience store. They walked in, and he pointed a snub-nosed .38 pistol at the clerk's head. The clerk turned to look at him, and the defendant shot reflexively from about six feet. The bullet hit the clerk right between the eyes—which is a pretty remarkable shot with that weapon at that range—and killed this father of two. Afterward, we asked the boy what happened and why he did it. It clearly was not part of the plan to kill the guy—it was being videotaped from six different directions. He said, "I don't know. It was a mistake. It wasn't supposed to happen."

In the military and law-enforcement worlds, the right option is often not to shoot. But you never, never put your quarter in that video machine with the intention of not shooting. There is always some stimulus that sets you off. And when he was excited, and his heart rate went up, and vasoconstriction closed his forebrain down, this young man did exactly what he was conditioned to do: he reflexively pulled the trigger, shooting accurately just like all those times he played video games.

This process is extraordinarily powerful and frightening. The result is ever more homemade pseudosociopaths who kill reflexively and show no remorse. Our children are learning to kill and learning to like it; and then we have the audacity to say, "Oh my goodness, what's wrong?"

One of the boys allegedly involved in the Jonesboro shootings (and they are just boys) had a fair amount of experience shooting real guns. The other one was a nonshooter and, to the best of our knowledge, had almost no experience shooting. Between them, those two boys fired 27 shots from a range of over 100 yards, and they hit 15 people. That's pretty remarkable shooting. We run into these situations often—kids who have never picked up a gun in their lives pick up a real gun and are incredibly accurate. Why? Video games.

Role models

In the military, you are immediately confronted with a role model: your drill sergeant. He personifies violence and aggression. Along with military heroes, these violent role models have always been used to influence young, impressionable minds.

Today the media are providing our children with role models, and this can be seen not just in the lawless sociopaths in movies and TV shows, but it can also be seen in the media-inspired, copycat aspects of the Jonesboro murders. This is the part of these juvenile crimes that the TV networks would much rather not talk about.

Research in the 1970s demonstrated the existence of "cluster suicides" in which the local TV reporting of teen suicides directly caused numerous copycat suicides of impressionable teenagers. Somewhere in every population there are potentially suicidal kids who will say to themselves, "Well, I'll show all those people who have been mean to me. I know how to get my picture on TV, too." Because of this research, television stations today generally do not cover suicides. But when the pictures of teenage killers appear on TV, the effect is the same: Somewhere there is a potentially violent little boy who says to himself, "Well, I'll show all those people who have been mean to me. I know how to get my picture on TV, too."

Thus we get copycat, cluster murders that work their way across America like a virus spread by the six o'clock news. No matter what someone has done, if you put his picture on TV, you have

REALITY CHECK

Sixty percent of men on TV are involved in violence; 11 percent are killers. Unlike actual rates, in the media the majority of homicide victims are women. (Gerbner 1994)

In a Canadian town in which TV was first introduced in 1973, a 160 percent increase in aggression, hitting, shoving, and biting was documented in first- and second-grade students after exposure, with no change in behavior in children in two control communities. (Centerwall 1992)

Fifteen years after the introduction of TV, homicides, rapes and assaults doubled in the United States. (American Medical Association)

Twenty percent of suburban high schoolers endorse shooting someone "who has stolen something from you." (Toch and Silver 1993)

In the United States, approximately two million teenagers carry knives, guns, clubs or razors. As many as 135,000 take them to school. (America by the Numbers)

Americans spend over $100 million on toy guns every year. (What Counts: The Complete Harper's Index © 1991)

TOP 10 NONVIOLENT VIDEO GAMES

The following list of nonviolent video games has been developed by The Games Project. These games are ranked high for their social and play value and technical merit.

1. Bust a Move
2. Tetris
3. Theme Park
4. Absolute Pinball
5. Myst
6. NASCAR
7. SimCity
8. The Incredible Machine
9. Front Page Sports: Golf
10. Earthworm Jim

For descriptions, publishers, and prices for these games, including a searchable database for additional recommendations, check The Games Project Web site at: <http://www.sentex.net/games/>. This list is updated periodically. Others are encouraged to make recommendations in their "Add your favorites" section.

made him a celebrity, and someone, somewhere, will emulate him.

The lineage of the Jonesboro shootings began at Pearl, Mississippi, fewer than six months before. In Pearl, a 16-year-old boy was accused of killing his mother and then going to his school and shooting nine students, two of whom died, including his ex-girlfriend. Two months later, this virus spread to Paducah, Kentucky, where a 14-year-old boy was arrested for killing three students and wounding five others.

A very important step in the spread of this copycat crime virus occurred in Stamps, Arkansas, 15 days after Pearl and just a little over 90 days before Jonesboro. In Stamps, a 14-year-old boy, who was angry at his schoolmates, hid in the woods and fired at children as they came out of school. Sound familiar? Only two children were injured in this crime, so most of the world didn't hear about it; but it got great regional coverage on TV, and two little boys in Jonesboro, Arkansas, probably did hear about it.

And then there was Springfield, Oregon, and so many others. Is this a reasonable price to pay for the TV networks' "right" to turn juvenile defendants into celebrities and role models by playing up their pictures on TV?

Our society needs to be informed about these crimes, but when the images of the young killers are broadcast on television, they become role models. The average preschooler in America watches 27 hours of television a week. The average child gets more one-on-one communication from TV than from all her parents and teachers combined. The ultimate achievement for our children is to get their picture on TV. The solution is simple, and it comes straight out of the suicidology literature: The media have every right and responsibility to tell the story, but they have no right to glorify the killers by presenting their images on TV.

Unlearning violence

What is the road home from the dark and lonely place to which we have traveled? One route infringes on civil liberties. The city of New York has made remarkable progress in recent years in bringing down crime rates, but they may have done so at the expense of some civil liberties. People who are fearful say that is a price they are willing to pay.

Another route would be to "just turn it off"; if you don't like what is on television, use the "off" button. Yet, if all the parents of the 15 shooting victims in Jonesboro had protected their children from TV violence, it wouldn't have done a bit of good. Because somewhere there were two little boys whose parents didn't "just turn it off."

On the night of the Jonesboro shootings, clergy and counselors were working in small groups in the hospital waiting room, comforting the groups of relatives and friends of the victims. Then they noticed one woman sitting alone silently.

A counselor went over to the woman and discovered that she was the mother of one of the girls who had been killed. She had no friends, no husband, no family with her as she sat in the hospital, stunned by her loss. "I just came to find out how to get my little girl's body back," she said. But the body had been taken to Little Rock, 100 miles away, for an autopsy. Her very next concern was, "I just don't know how I'm going to pay for the funeral. I don't know how I can afford it." That little girl was truly all she had in all the world. Come to Jonesboro, friend, and tell this mother she should "just turn it off."

Another route to reduced violence is gun control. I don't want to downplay that option, but America is trapped in a vicious cycle when we talk about gun control. Americans don't trust the government; they believe that each of us should be responsible for taking care of ourselves and our families. That's one of our great strengths—but it is also a great weakness. When the media foster fear and perpetuate a milieu of violence, Americans arm themselves in order to deal with that violence. And the more guns there are out there, the more violence there is. And the more violence there is, the greater the desire for guns.

We are trapped in this spiral of self-dependence and lack of trust. Real progress will never be made until we reduce this level of fear. As a historian, I tell you it will take decades—maybe even a century—before we wean Americans off their guns. And until we reduce the level of fear and of violent crime, Americans would sooner die than give up their guns.

Fighting back

We need to make progress in the fight against child abuse, racism, and poverty, and in rebuilding our families. No one is denying that the breakdown of the family is a factor. But nations without our divorce rates are also having increases in violence. Besides, research demonstrates that one major source of harm associated with single-parent families occurs when the TV becomes both the nanny and the second parent.

Work is needed in all these areas, but there is a new front—taking on the producers and purveyors of media violence. Simply put, we ought to work toward legislation that outlaws violent video games for children. There is no constitutional right for a child to play an interactive video game that teaches him weapons-handling skills or that simulates destruction of God's creatures.

The day may also be coming when we are able to seat juries in America who are willing to sock it to the networks in the only place they really understand—their wallets. After the Jonesboro shootings, Time magazine said: "As for media violence, the debate there is fast approaching the same point that discussions about the health impact of tobacco reached some time ago—it's over. Few researchers bother any longer to dispute that bloodshed on TV and in the movies has an effect on kids who witness it" (April 6, 1998).

Most of all, the American people need to learn the lesson of Jonesboro: Violence is not a game; it's not fun, it's not something that we do for entertainment. Violence kills.

Every parent in America desperately needs to be warned of the impact of TV and other violent media on children, just as we would warn them of some widespread carcinogen. The problem is that the TV networks, which use the public airwaves we have licensed to them, are our key means of public education in America. And they are stonewalling.

In the days after the Jonesboro shootings, I was interviewed on Canadian national TV, the British Broadcasting Company, and many U.S. and international radio shows and newspapers. But the American television networks simply would not touch this aspect of the story. Never in my experience as a historian and a psychologist have I seen any institution in America so clearly responsible for so very many deaths, and so clearly abusing their publicly licensed authority and power to cover up their guilt.

Time after time, idealistic young network producers contacted

Reprints of this article may be obtained by writing to CT Reprints, Attn.: Paulette DePaul, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188, or by e-mailing PDePaul@aol.com and requesting "Trained to Kill." The cost (including postage and handling) is $8 for 10 copies, $18 for 25 copies, $32 for 50 copies, $57 for 100 copies, $105 for 500 copies, $165 for 1,000 copies. Prices good for one year from the date of this issue.

me from one of the networks, fascinated by the irony that an expert in the field of violence and aggression was living in Jonesboro and was at the school almost from the beginning. But unlike all the other media, these network news stories always died a sudden, silent death when the network's powers-that-be said, "Yeah, we need this story like we need a hole in the head."

Many times since the shooting I have been asked, "Why weren't you on TV talking about the stuff in your book?" And every time my answer had to be, "The TV networks are burying this story. They know they are guilty, and they want to delay the retribution as long as they can."

As an author and expert on killing, I believe I have spoken on the subject at every Rotary, Kiwanis, and Lions Club in a 50-mile radius of Jonesboro. So when the plague of satellite dishes descended upon us like huge locusts, many people here were aware of the scientific data linking TV violence and violent crime.

The networks will stick their lenses anywhere and courageously expose anything. Like flies on open wounds, they find nothing too private or shameful for their probing lenses—except themselves, and their share of guilt in the terrible, tragic crime that happened here.

A CBS executive told me his plan. He knows all about the link between media and violence. His own in-house people have advised him to protect his child from the poison his industry is bringing to America's children. He is not going to expose his child to TV until she's old enough to learn how to read. And then he will select very carefully what she sees. He and his wife plan to send her to a daycare center that has no television, and he plans to show her only age-appropriate videos.

That should be the bare minimum with children: Show them only age-appropriate videos, and think hard about what is age appropriate.

The most benign product you are going to get from the networks are 22-minute sitcoms or cartoons providing instant solutions for all of life's problems, interlaced with commercials telling you what a slug you are if you don't ingest the right sugary substances and don't wear the right shoes.

The worst product your child is going to get from the networks is represented by one TV commentator who told me, "Well, we only have one really violent show on our network, and that is NYPD Blue. I'll admit that that is bad, but it is only one night a week."

I wondered at the time how she would feel if someone said, "Well, I only beat my wife in front of the kids one night a week." The effect is the same.

"You're not supposed to know who I am!" said NYPD Blue star Kim Delaney, in response to young children who recognized her from her role on that show. According to USA Weekend, she was shocked that underage viewers watch her show, which is rated TV-14 for gruesome crimes, raw language, and explicit sex scenes. But they do watch, don't they?

Education about media and violence does make a difference. I was on a radio call-in show in San Antonio, Texas. A woman called and said, "I would never have had the courage to do this two years ago. But let me tell you what happened. You tell me if I was right."

"My 13-year-old boy spent the night with a neighbor boy. After that night, he started having nightmares. I got him to admit what the nightmares were about. While he was at the neighbor's house, they watched splatter movies all night: people cutting people up with chain saws and stuff like that.

"I called the neighbors and told them, 'Listen: you are sick people. I wouldn't feel any different about you if you had given my son pornography or alcohol. And I'm not going to have anything further to do with you or your son—and neither is anybody else in this neighborhood, if I have anything to do with it—until you stop what you're doing.'"

That's powerful. That's censure, not censorship. We ought to have the moral courage to censure people who think that violence is legitimate entertainment.

One of the most effective ways for Christians to be salt and light is by simply confronting the culture of violence as entertainment. A friend of mine, a retired army officer who teaches at a nearby middle school, uses the movie Gettysburg to teach his students about the Civil War. A scene in that movie very dramatically depicts the tragedy of Pickett's Charge. As the Confederate troops charge into the Union lines, the cannons fire into their masses at point-blank range, and there is nothing but a red mist that comes up from the smoke and flames. He told me that when he first showed this heart-wrenching, tragic scene to his students, they laughed.

He began to confront this behavior ahead of time by saying: "In the past, students have laughed at this scene, and I want to tell you that this is completely unacceptable behavior. This movie depicts a tragedy in American history, a tragedy that happened to our ancestors, and I will not tolerate any laughing." From then on, when he played that scene to his students, over the years, he says there was no laughter. Instead, many of them wept.

What the media teach is unnatural, and if confronted in love and assurance, the house they have built on the sand will crumble. But our house is built on the rock. If we don't actively present our values, then the media will most assuredly inflict theirs on our children, and the children, like those in that class watching Gettysburg, simply won't know any better.

There are many other things that the Christian community can do to help change our culture. Youth activities can provide alternatives to television, and churches can lead the way in providing alternative locations for latchkey children. Fellowship groups can provide guidance and support to young parents as they strive to raise their children without the destructive influences of the media. Mentoring programs can pair mature, educated adults with young parents to help them through the preschool ages without using the TV as a babysitter. And most of all, the churches can provide the clarion call of decency and love and peace as an alternative to death and destruction—not just for the sake of the church, but for the transformation of our culture. CI

Lt. Col. Dave Grossman, an expert on the psychology of killing, retired from the U.S. Army in February. He now teaches psychology at Arkansas State University, directs the Killology Research Group in Jonesboro, Arkansas, and has written On Killing: The Psychological Cost of Learning to Kill in War and Society (Little, Brown and Co., 1996). This article was adapted from a lecture he gave at Bethel College, North Newton, Kansas, in April.

Every parent in America desperately needs to be warned of the impact of TV and other violent media on children. But the TV networks—our key means of public education in America—are stonewalling.

Are You a True Believer?

Well Join the Club!

Since 1964 the Conservative Book Club has had one mission: to bring to market the books needed to combat the creeping socialism and secularism that has plagued this country for decades. It was for you, the true believer, the believer in Truth, that this club was founded. So please join today by choosing your first 3 books for just $1 each.

For a free copy of the fascinating history of The First Prayer in Congress, a copy of the prayer itself and information on how to obtain a top-quality print, please check the box on the reply coupon.

THE FIRST PRAYER IN CONGRESS.
BY JAMES W. MASON. 1876. THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The Historical Jesus

Prof. Gary Habermas gives a rigorous defense of the accuracy of the Gospels, based solely on extrabiblical evidence. Here are the facts that support the biblical Jesus, from His birth through His resurrection and ascension.

Item #4561 Retail $13.99

A History of the American People

In a single sweeping volume (1,136 pages): the American story in full — as it's never been told before. Paul Johnson's conservative outlook reverses a half-century of liberal mythmaking on everything from America's founding principles to the achievements of Ronald Reagan.

Item #4840 Retail $35.00

The Children's Book of Heroes

Bestselling author, William Bennett captivates us with 200 tales of heroic deeds, both real and fictional, to inspire your children.

Item #4836 Retail $21.00

The Coming Conflict with China

Bernstein and Munro present overwhelming documentary evidence that communist China has targeted the U.S. as its chief global adversary and is aggressively pursuing a well-mapped plan for achieving dominance.

Item #4573 Retail $23.00

The Blood and the Shroud

New discoveries reveal the truth about the Shroud of Turin. Ian Wilson is an internationally acclaimed Shroud expert and lifelong researcher of the Shroud's amazing story. His latest findings will send the skeptics running for cover.

Item #4891 Retail $25.00

Domestic Tranquility

"F. Carolyn Graglia, a lawyer before she became a homemaker, makes an unassailable case for feminism... [She] holds feminism up to the light and reveals its anti-female and anti-human nature." — Dan Neyer, club reviewer

Item #4830 Retail $29.99

The Glory of Heaven

Dr. John MacArthur takes you through the Scriptures to expose you to the truth about where you'll spend eternity. After this joyous study of your eternal future your own heart will anticipate — and long for — Heaven.

Item #4583 Retail $19.99

Spin Cycle

Is this liberal journalist part of the "vast right-wing conspiracy" or is he just telling the truth about the Clinton White House? Howard Kurtz, reporter for the Washington Post, gives the first behind-the-scenes account of the Clinton White House as it attempts to package and control the news by manipulating, misleading, and intimidating the press.

Item #4906 Retail $25.00

The Secret Life of Bill Clinton

From the reporter the White House most fears — and with good reason — comes an astonishingly documented exposé of the crimes that have characterized Clinton presidency as the most corrupt in history.

Item #4756 Retail $24.99

Jesus, Who Is He?

This book is for every doubter or believer who wants to know more about the man who has had so great an influence on civilization.

Item #20479 Retail $18.99

The New Age Movement and the Biblical Worldview

What makes the New Age movement so dangerous to your family? Dr. John Newport uncovers every area of this many-sided movement and explains the need for Christians to understand the New Age threat and how it differs from Christianity.

Item #4915 Retail $35.00

Boy Clinton

Blockbuster exposé by the publisher of The American Spectator. R. Emmett Tyrell has unearthed the truth about the real Bill Clinton — including facts that have never been revealed before.

Item #4367 Retail $24.99

David

Best-selling author, Charles R. Swindoll helps you link the events of your life to the timeless lessons revealed in the life of David.

Item #20539 Retail $19.99

Darwin's Black Box

Biologist Michael Behe demonstrates that the complexity of the lowest forms of life prove that life was created according to an intelligent design.

Item #4387 Retail $25.00

Slouching Towards Gomorrah

Robert Bork, one of the nation's most distinguished conservative scholars, assails the unprecedented decline of morality in America, and points a finger at the culprit — modern liberalism.

Item #4427 Retail $25.00

Unlimited Access

Former FBI Special Agent Gary Aldrich takes you inside a counter-culture White House and shows how Clinton and his cronies dismantled security protocols to allow drug users, drug dealers, gun runners and foreign campaign donors full access.

Item #4368 Retail $24.95

Nearer, My God

Explore conservatism's Christian soul in William F. Buckley's moving autobiography of faith. "The greatest conservative figure of our age relentlessly probes the ultimate question: God. And gives us a stirring, at times deeply personal defense of his Catholic faith."

— Charles Colson

Item #4780 Retail $24.95

Spirit Wars

Peter Jones, professor at Westminster Seminary, ties the apparently disparate movements of feminism, homosexuality, multiculturalism, civil rights, abortion, euthanasia, mystical spirituality, and moral relativism. His basic thesis: Judeo-Christian America became an incubator of revived paganism.

Item #4740

Retail $18.95

The Vision of the Anointed

What are the consequences of a nation coerced into a mind set? Leading black conservative Thomas Sowell explains how America was brainwashed with the myth that liberals are always right and conservatives are always wrong.

Item #4215 Retail $25.00

America in Black & White

Two liberal heretics rock the civil rights establishment with "the most important book on race this decade." An unanswerable study that refutes traditional civil rights strategies and rhetoric and exposes the well-kept secrets of the liberal media.

Item #4821 Retail $32.50

The End of Sanity

Even if you're already convinced about America's moral decay, Martin Gross will open your eyes to the litany of leftist evils that now dominate American institutions, from medicine to the military, from education to the workplace.

Item #4823 Retail $24.00

The Book of Virtues

In a time where smut, violence, and immorality pervade the media, this inspiring collection of fables, poetry, stories, and other readings is a lesson in morality, and a must-read for our nation's families! This #1 bestseller by Ronald Reagan's Secretary of Education will provide a solid foundation of morality for you and your family.

Item #3884

Retail $30.00

Take 3 Books for just $1 Each!

GET A 4TH
FOR ONLY
$4.95

Burden of Truth

Charles Colson shows how to confront the deceptions of the world with God's Word on topics as diverse as medical ethics, education, crime, science, pop culture, family, art, and government.

Item #4796 Retail $19.99

Defeating Darwinism

Finally, a survival guide for Christians battered by the creation/evolution debate. Phillip Johnson, Darwinism's most respected critic, helps you grasp the essentials of the dispute and gain confidence in upholding and defending the truths of God's Creation.

Item #4665 Retail $15.99

In Defense of Miracles

14 distinguished evangelical scholars "...undertake the arduous task of philosophically justifying rational belief in miracles...an impressive display of the best sort of intellectual work now emerging in the evangelical world." — Brad Stetson, First Things

Item #4764 Retail $17.99

BENEFITS OF MEMBERSHIP AND HOW THE CLUB WORKS

TANT SAVINGS! Join today and get 3 books for just $3, plus shipping and handling. Then take up to two years to buy four more books at regular Club prices (20-50% below retail!), or three books over two years, you've selected the New Member Bonus. After you have paid for your books, your membership can be ended by you or the Club. Plus you will get opportunities to buy from our list of Superbargain books that the Club regularly offers. These books are offered at 70-90% discounts!! Sorry, Superbargain books don't count toward your book commitment.)

THE BULLETIN! Up to 15 times a year you will receive the Club Bulletin packed with the kind of books you will want to read and own. Each Bulletin describes a Featured Selection chosen just for our members. Also included are a number of alternate selections about politics, religion, homeschool and other areas of interest to conservatives.

SHOP AT HOME CONVENIENCE! When you receive your Bulletin you will have the chance to examine the many books of interest and read reviews of each. If you want to receive the Featured Selection, do nothing and it will be sent to you. If you don't want the Featured Selection or you would prefer an alternate selection, simply indicate your wishes on the handy card enclosed with your Bulletin and return it before the deadline date. CBC is the easy way to build your conservative library from the comfort of your home.

100% SATISFACTION GUARANTEED! If you are not completely satisfied with any book, return it and receive a complete credit. Plus, you will always have at least ten days to make your decision to receive the Featured Selection. If you ever have less than ten days, you simply return the book at Club expense for a full refund. One membership per household please.

SEND NO MONEY NOW!

☐ YES! Please enroll me as a Preferred Member of the Conservative Book Club under the terms outlined in this ad. Send me the three books I've indicated and bill me just $3, plus shipping and handling. I then need to buy only four additional books at regularly discounted Club prices over the next two years. Please write book numbers here:

#

C0478-A-Y

☐ YES! I want to take advantage of the New Member Bonus! Please send me a 4th selection as I've indicated below. I understand I will be billed an additional $4.95, plus shipping and handling. I then need to buy only three additional books at regular Club prices over the next two years. Please write book number here: #

C0478-A-X

☐ PLEASE, send me my FREE copy of the history of The First Prayer in Congress, a copy of the prayer itself and information on obtaining a print.

Name

Address

City State Zip

Signature

Prices slightly higher in Canada. Membership subject to approval by the Conservative Book Club

Fill out this coupon and mail to:

CONSERVATIVE BOOK CLUB

P.O. Box 97196 • Washington, DC 20090-7196

Christian ghosts: The ruins of Pisidian Antioch bear witness to Turkey's Christian past (top), while an Orthodox priest keeps the tradition alive in Istanbul. Santa Claus greets tourists in Saint Nicholas's hometown (left).

WENDY MURRAY ZOBA

In Search of the Lost Churches of Paul

Turkey is inviting Christians to discover its biblical legacy.

“When local merchants wanted to meet Saint Paul, they asked the Christians where to find him,” recounted our tour guide during a recent trip to Turkey. “The Christians said, ‘Go out on the way to Lystra and look for a man of short stature, with a crooked nose, hollow eyes, and a face like an angel.’”

We were also “on the way” to see Paul. Not to Lystra, but to modern-day Konya (formerly Iconium, near Lystra)—another of the apostle’s haunts. And the Christians on our tour, like those first-century merchants, wanted a glimpse of Paul’s world. That’s not easily done in this country where minarets pierce the skyline in places where Paul’s footprints have long since disappeared.

Paul and Barnabas fled to Konya after a successful ministry tour in Pisidian Antioch (Acts 13). They “spent considerable time there, speaking boldly for the Lord” and performed “miraculous signs and wonders” (Acts 14:3, NIV). But you’d never know it from the tourist’s point of view: The main attraction in Konya is the sema—the mystical trance-inducing dance of the “whirling dervishes,” an Islamic sect. But the Christians on our tour wanted to see something related to Paul in Konya, so with a coveted free hour we made a spontaneous visit to the Church of Saint Paul.

We arrived unannounced in the early evening (the first building we had seen enclosed behind a security gate).

Mass, we learned, was being held inside for the five Christians who attended the church, but the overseeing nun was so pleased we had come that she invited us to hold our impromptu service in the garden. (The fact that this was a Catholic church was beside the point for us Protestants; we were thankful for any sort of a Christian presence.)

Withering marigolds and snapdragons served as our stained-glass windows, and tomatoes left too long unharvested, our greeters. Father Michele (from the Vatican) gathered us around the plastic patio table and read from the Psalms. Father Luis (from Spain) read in Spanish from Hebrews, and Father Jean Claude (from France) read in French from Genesis. Pastor Bob (my husband)—the Baptist—read in English from Mark.

Our worship, strained as it was by the language barriers, competed with the roar of motorbikes and the blaring of horns from the streets of Konya. As we stood outside this rundown church—the only Christian presence in Konya—struggling to understand and be understood above the din of the traffic, under the arbor where dead grapes dangled on the vine, we proclaimed the cross of Jesus in this land of Muhammad’s sword. My heart ached that Paul’s labors had come to this: one small, deteriorating building, an unkempt garden, shriveled grapes, five worshipers. We held forth the name of Christ, but I stood there for Paul, too. I wanted to call to him in heaven and say (as he once exhort-

Photographs by Dave Bartruff

A checkered past: The "fairy chimneys" in Cappadocia saved Christians fleeing persecution in early centuries. Icons, minarets, and little girls with veils (or without) reflect Turkey's complicated history. Pilgrims stand where Paul stood in Pisidian Antioch, reading his word from Acts (below).

ed the Corinthians): "Your labors were not in vain!"

How could so rich a Christian heritage be so strikingly disenfranchised? Turkey is second only to Israel in the number of biblical sites it offers to Christian pilgrims. Noah's ark landed here! (Mount Ararat commands pride of place in the mountains of eastern Turkey.) Turkey was once the land of the Hittites, which the Lord promised to Joshua (1:4). Many who gathered in Jerusalem for Pentecost when the Spirit gave birth to the church had traveled from what is today Turkey ("Cappadocia, Pontus, and Asia, Phrygia and Pamphylia," Acts 2:9-10). Peter's first epistle—addressing the suffering Christians "scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia"—went to Turkey. Paul was born here; he spent the majority of his active ministry here. The apostle John lived the latter part of his life here and, tradition says, buried Jesus' mother here in Ephesus. When the Lord gave him the vision in Revelation, with a message for the "seven churches" (Rev. 1:11) exhorting them to "overcome," all of these congregations were located in what is now Turkey.

Beyond the biblical heritage, the early church fathers bequeathed a rich Christian legacy to Turkey. Polycarp, a direct link to the apostle John, became bishop of Smyrna (modern Izmir) in the early second century; Irenaeus, probably a native of Smyrna, sat under Polycarp and emigrated to Lyons where he became bishop in the late second century. In the third century, Gregory the Wonder Worker was appointed bishop of Pontus (northern Turkey); in A.D. 325 the Nicene Creed was fashioned in Nicea (present-day Iznik); in A.D. 330 Constantine moved the seat of the empire to Constantinople (Istanbul); in the late fourth century Basil of Caesarea, his brother Gregory of Nyssa, and friend Gregory of Nazianzus (a.k.a. "the Cappadocian fathers") brought final shape to the doctrine of the Trinity (helping to overthrow the Arian heresy); in A.D. 398 John Chrysostom was reluctantly consecrated archbishop of Constantinople; and the original "Santa Claus"—Bishop Nicholas of Myra—made his home on Turkey's southern Mediterranean coast, also during the fourth century.

Christians fleeing persecution in these early centuries found shelter in the rugged Cappadocian "fairy chimneys" in central Turkey. Inside these bizarre jutting rock formations—eroded tufa and volcanic ash enveloped in basalt that look like something out of Star Wars—magical frescoes, carved archways, baptismal pools, dining tables, and living quarters have been cut out of the rock. Christians also set up house in "the underground city" elsewhere in Cappadocia, a seven-story inverted "skyscraper" where they lived during some of the worst seasons of persecution.

But the present-day abundance of Turkish carpets, minarets, and Qur'anic calligraphy that I saw everywhere compelled me to conclude painfully that Paul's congregations, the seven churches in Revelation, and the suffering Christians in hiding evidently did not "overcome."

Secular versus religious

The Turkish government is offering Paul's lost legacy a chance for resurrection. It has been posturing itself for admission into the European Union (EU) and trying to win acceptance in the West generally. Turkey's leaders recognized the importance of projecting their society as fully democratic, tolerant, and embracing of all forms of belief—particularly those identified with the West, which includes Christianity. Their hopes were dashed last December when the EU blocked Turkey's admittance, citing (among other things) its inability "to overcome serious human rights problems."

Despite rejection by the EU, Turkey is still a virtual gold mine for tourist dollars. Europeans have long indulged themselves vacationing along the country's still pristine Mediterranean coastline. But the Turkish government has only recently tapped the tourist potential their biblical sites promise. As the Israel Government Tourist Office will attest, Christians make great tourists in the land of the Bible. And as Turkey's ministry of tourism is waking up to that fact, Christians are being beckoned to come to Turkey and recover their lost legacy. Ertuğrul Dokuzoğlu, the governor of Isparta, where the ruins of Pisidian Antioch are found, asked us as we left the ruins of the synagogue where Paul preached: "What do you feel, being here where Saint Paul was?"

One woman had been so overcome with emotion when my husband read from Acts amidst the ruins of the synagogue that she burst into tears. Father Michele expressed frustration that, after being so overtaken by emotion, Christians had no place to go where they could respond in worship.

The governor seemed genuinely affected. "We agree that there is no building for the Christians to pray. That is because no Christians live here. But there are two churches [nearby] waiting to be rebuilt. I want them to be rebuilt and used and visited." (He then invited and challenged us to come back to do so.) Ibrahim Gürdal, the Turkish government's minister of tourism, echoed the governor's sentiment: "We want you [Christians] to see your past. You are our brothers and sisters."

But this is where Turkey's ideological war with itself asserts itself and betrays its contradictions. Prospective Christian tourists are assured, says Gürdal, that people of faith are welcome and have complete freedom. They are "brothers and sisters." Yet Christianity still makes many squirm. The government's aggressive commitment to secularization has resulted in policies outlawing "propaganda" and "missionary" activity of a religious nature. Christians (and fundamentalist Muslims) have acutely felt this pressure. The government has resisted the pleas of the Ecumenical Patriarch (Bartholomew I, archbishop of Constantinople, New Rome) to reopen the only Orthodox seminary (closed in 1971). In January, a second violent assault against Eastern Orthodox holy sites occurred in Istanbul, this time involving the murder of a custodian. Since then, some Orthodox Christians, including the archbishop, are questioning the government's commitment to protect their presence. And beyond this, save for a single administration in Turkey's modern history, that of Damad Ferit Pasha, the government has yet to acknowledge the Armenian genocide (1915-16), which remains a bitter point of hostility between them and their Armenian Christian "brothers and sisters."

Turkey's premier historical monument, Hagia Sophia, serves as a metaphor for this country's conflicted identity. The 1,460-year-old "crowning glory"—at one time the central church in the Byzantine empire and later a great mosque where the Ottoman sultans were crowned—is now listed by the World Monument Watch on the list of "the world's most endangered heritage sites." Its dome and pillars and priceless mosaics remain in a state of steady deterioration, due either to a lack of funds or a lack of will to restore it (admission fees go straight to Turkey's capital, Ankara, for general expenses). Says Stephen Kinzer in the New York Times, the Hagia Sophia "is at the heart of battle that . . . still burns in the minds of many people in the eastern Mediterranean: Who owns Istanbul, Christians or Muslims?"

The road to secularization

This cultural schizophrenia has arisen, as noted, out of the country's wrenching history. A museum on Turkey's southern Mediterranean coast offers a visible lesson in this conflicted history. The first room yields rustic pots and jars, pins and coins from the Old Stone Age and the Hittite period. This quickly gives way to expansive galleries of armless, sometimes headless, marble ghosts of Greece and Rome. Beyond this, and off to the side, there is a small darkened room where the relics of Saint Nicholas, from nearby Myra, are housed along with Byzantine icons and ornate Bibles. Then everything changes when the visitor enters room upon room of carpets, Qur'anic calligraphy, sultans' gowns, and swords. (You could almost hear the hoofbeats of the Seljuk and Ottoman Turks.)

The defeat of the Ottoman Empire at the end of World War I meant that the proud, fierce Ottomans were forced to relinquish portions of their territory (including Istanbul) to the British, French, Italians, and Greeks. This excited the dormant nationalist impulse in Turkey, which military hero Mustafa Kemal ("the only hero the Turks had left") seized upon. General Kemal, recognizing his country's weakened and demeaned position, gathered a cohort of like-minded thinkers, aroused nationalistic sentiment, consolidated military support, and renounced rank and titles to set up his makeshift government in Ankara. He was determined to secularize the nation and break Islam's stranglehold on the culture.

He convened the first meeting of the Grand National Assembly (GNA) in April 1920. After solidifying his standing as the new leader (sending the last of the sultans into exile) and eventually wresting the territories from their foreign occupants, Kemal secured Turkey's sovereignty in a peace treaty signed in Lausanne in July 1923. (The event was covered by a Toronto Star journalist named Ernest Hemingway.)

A few months later the GNA unanimously endorsed the proclamation for the Republic of Turkey, and Kemal began the herculean task of dismantling the Umma (the strict Muslim identity) and building a new, secular nation.

This required a "new interpretation" of Islam. Kemal abolished the caliphate (the sultans) and banished all males of the royal family; secularized education, banning convents run by religious sects (including "the whirling dervishes"); discarded the Arabic script for the Roman alphabet; banned the turban and the fez (the headgear of officials); encouraged women to enter the professional class; and made the adoption of surnames obligatory. The GNA gave him the surname "Atatürk" (father of Turks).

Turkey has followed the trajectory toward modernization ever since, though Atatürk's methods have been modified over time. (His one-party government made strides toward a more democratic system in the 1950s when a multiparty system was introduced.) But they are still experiencing "growing pains." In elections in 1996, the extreme right-wing Muslim Welfare party candidate, Necmettin Erbakan, won with only a 21.3 percent plurality. Fearing a resurgence of Islamic fundamentalism, the military quickly forced him from office, and Mesut Yilmaz of the Motherland party now serves as prime minister.

This intentional secularization has resulted in a strange concoction of moderate Islam mingled with fierce Islamic nationalism (not to be confused with "fundamentalism"). From a religious vantage point, the more developed areas of the country embrace Islam nominally—more culturally than religiously. Our guide said (to my shock), "Islam means nothing." And in its effort to keep modernization on track, the government encourages this nominalism and, in fact, limits certain religious expressions. Last March the government proposed legislation that would curb radical Islam by limiting the building of mosques and creating harsher penalties for violating the secular dress code.

This has resulted in a surprising show of force and solidarity by progressive Islamic women, many of whom are professionals and would be considered "modern," but who are demanding the right to wear—of all things—their headcoverings (presently forbidden in many public places, like the university). "Instead of a symbol of subservience to men, many Islamic feminists view the scarf or the veil as a guard against the intruding eyes of men and as a sign that their first allegiance is to God—not to their husbands or fathers," writes Philip Smucker in U.S. News & World Report.

The first principle of the Turkish government is to maintain internal stability at all costs. This has meant that there remains a fierce unwillingness to allow any "extreme" religious expressions to flourish for fear of introducing political instability. In that sense, "the Kurds, the communists, the Islamic fundamentalists, and the Christians are often all lumped together," notes Andy Jackson, founder of the International Turkey Network of Phoenix, Arizona. All threaten internal stability.

The lukewarm religiosity has also incited the fervor of the traditional, or "extreme," Muslims, who compose 5 to 6 percent of the population (another source puts them closer to 10 or 20 percent). As the 1996 elections demonstrated, they are a force to be reckoned with.

All of this has conspired to keep the Christian population negligible. The Greek, Armenian, Syrian, and Arab Christian populations together make up less than 1 percent of the population (maybe 50,000 out of more than 65 million people). The number of "evangelical" Christians is even harder to calculate. Roger Maldsted, who has worked in Turkey since 1961, estimates that there have been about 750 Turkish converts to Christ in the 30-plus years he has been there, with 500 of those conversions occurring within the last five or six years. Andy Jackson estimates that the number of Turkish believers who belong to some form of regular indigenous fellowship (where Turks with Muslim backgrounds, not missionaries, are the leaders) hovers around 600. He estimates there are approximately 14 indigenous Turkish fellowships, with 50 to 60 members each. The "secretive" believers who have not publicly affiliated themselves with a church number anywhere from 1,000 to 3,000.

Small as these numbers are, it is a vast improvement over the number of converts 30 years ago when there was only a

Time marches on:

Travel in Turkey promises a lesson in one country's conflicted history and exotic identity—and time to reflect upon Christian churches that did not overcome. The author sits amid the ruins of the synagogue where Paul preached in Pisidian Antioch.

Traveling in Turkey

Hoş geldiniz! ("Welcome to Turkey")—"the dividing line between the Orient and Occident." Since the dawn of civilization, this land mass of mountains, plateaus, and river valleys has been integral to the rise and fall of many nations. The scope of touring possibilities in this mysterious and multifaceted landscape is endless, especially for the Christian pilgrim. Below are some helpful travel tips.

- Language. Thanks to Atatürk's reforms, the Turkish language uses the Roman alphabet (with an abundance of Ks, Zs, and curious additional markings), so reading signs and navigating roadways can be managed with the help of a phrasebook or dictionary. Many Turks have undertaken an independent study of English, but an English-speaking guide is a must.

- Money. Exchanging American dollars for Turkish lira (TL) can be a formidable challenge. The exchange rate (at the time of publication) is 270,000TL to the dollar. You can't get by without a calculator—and even then your head will spin at the first several attempts at purchasing.

- Size. Turkey encompasses 300,000 square miles, 3 percent in Europe and 97 percent in Asia. The Black Sea lies to the north, with the Mediterranean to the south. Greece and Bulgaria border Turkey to the northwest, Georgia and Armenia to the northeast, Iran to the east, and Iraq and Syria to the southeast.

- Biblical and historical sites. Istanbul (still called Constantinople by the Orthodox Christians) once stood as the center for Christendom under Constantine. The seven churches of Revelation (in the western and central portions) include modern-day Bergama (Pergamum), Akhisar (Thyatira), Alaşehir (Philadelphia); Sart (Sardis); Pamukkale (Hierapolis, which is near Laodicea); Efes (Ephesus); and Izmir (Smyrna). Mount Ararat is in the east, Paul's birthplace of Tarsus, along with Myra and Patara (the birthplace and home of Saint Nicholas), are on the Mediterranean coast. Pisidian Antioch and Iconium, two haunts of Paul's, are found in central Turkey (Yalvaç and Konya, respectively), and the Cappadocian fairy chimneys, also in central Turkey, offer a glimpse into the life and struggles of the early church.

- Be warned. The cliché "He smokes like a Turk" is well-deserved. "No Smoking" sections seem not to exist in Turkey—or on Turkish Airlines.

handful of evangelical Christians (some estimates put it between 10 and 50). The first Protestant church was registered in 1988, and in 1995 the government officially recognized evangelical churches. So the gospel is making inroads, even if at a tortuously slow pace.

At the same time, many younger, more modernized Turks are looking for spiritual answers. One young Turk told me: "Nominal Islam is pervasive because Arabic is used in the mosques and most young people can't read it. Our Qur'an is in Arabic, but young people want to learn it in Turkish." Nevertheless, many of the younger Turks who want to learn the Qur'an in Turkish are not interested in a strict interpretation of Islam: "We don't have this kind of Islamic concept," he said. "I believe in God, but I do not have much sympathy for Islam."

Western ideas are also infiltrating the culture (for better or worse), which is similarly eroding Islamic allegiances. Our guide told us about his sister, who was studying at Bryn Mawr College in Pennsylvania. He lamented (shaking his head): "All that women's liberation stuff has made her very tough."

The disillusionment with nominal Islam, the encroaching Western ideas, and general spiritual hunger have given the up-and-coming generation of Turks new ears with which to hear the good news of the gospel. The religious orientation they have been reared in, nominal though it may be, has aroused, but not satisfied, their search for spiritual answers.

Where from here?

Christian tourism will not provide answers to all their questions. In fact, as Turkey awakens to the economic gold mine that Christian pilgrims can generate, there is the potential for harm to the efforts of some long-termers. Andy Jackson says that "tourism will draw in a lot of Christian crackpots who will not be incarnating the gospel" and who could adversely affect those Christians already in Turkey who are struggling to plant churches and nurture spiritual maturity in these young believers. Our guide told me he was baptized during one tour simply to allay the zealous Christians' unrelenting badgering.

But encouraging Christian tourism, says Jackson, will ultimately help the struggling church in Turkey. It will create a less hostile, more welcoming environment to Christians generally and will put the government on the record as celebrating Christians as "brothers and sisters" (such as Minister Grdal did before our group). In addition, it will mean more and more tour guides will have to study the New Testament in order to know the history their guests are interested in, and the Turkish government will have to produce Christian materials for pilgrims. So, on that level, Christian tourism can be God's tool to break up the hardened ground of Turkey's anti-Christian ethos and to prepare for seeds of the gospel to be planted and nourished by indigenous believers.

Paul reborn

The Reconciliation Walk project, sponsored by Youth with a Mission, has inaugurated a four-year international effort to seek forgiveness for atrocities committed in the name of Christ during the Crusades. Representatives have been surprisingly well received in Turkey. Says Matthew Hand in Charisma, who drafted the written apology that is read to any who will listen: "We accept the blame for something we didn't do, just like Jesus did." Many Turks find that hard to fathom.

One person recounts that, after speaking for 45 minutes with a Turk named Rafad and reading him the document of confession, he said, "Please don't touch my heart. It is very thin, and it will break. I want to go cry in the mosque."

The Walk is an example of the Turkish government's willingness to welcome Christians as part of their larger desire to become a welcomed partner in the West. Perhaps, too, it could serve as a model to help them overcome aspects of their history that have inhibited their acceptance by the West—like their less-than-sparkling human-rights record (particularly with regard to Kurds in the east) and the lingering cloud of the Armenian genocide.

Christian worker George Bellas, who has ministered to the Turkish Kurds for nine years, thinks that a public confession and corporate repentance for past sins such as has been exhibited in the Reconciliation Walk may be beyond the scope of possibility at this stage of Turkey's evolution as a modern nation. "The Muslims do not have the basic Judeo-Christian concept of making restitution," says Bellas. The Turks do not understand the notion of accepting blame for something they themselves didn't do and certainly not based on doing something "just like Jesus did."

That is because they are only just beginning to hear about what Jesus did—an irony, since so many of the New Testament churches were born here and so much of the theological foundation of the faith was established here.

But hearing it all over again for the very first time is better than not hearing it at all. Regardless of their profit motive, the Turkish government wants Christians to come. And for all its potential complications and theological hazards, Christian tourism is helping to create an environment for this country—with its checkered history and fragmented identity—to rediscover its Christian heritage.

I thought of Paul another time when I was in Konya as I talked with a young Turk in a spot not far from where Paul himself stood when he "preached boldly about the grace of the Lord" (Acts 14:3). The young man was assailing me with a battery of questions about Christianity.

"Do Christians believe in reincarnation?" he asked.

I told him about the Christian belief in resurrection.

"How is this possible?" he asked.

I explained how Jesus made it possible for everyone.

"How did he do this?" he asked.

"Well," I said, "after he was executed his friends buried him in a cave, but they had to rush because the Sabbath was about to start. So they waited another day, and then went back to the grave on the third day, to finish the burial preparations.

"When they approached, they noticed that the grave entrance was open. So they went in and saw that the body was gone."

"Where was it?" he asked.

"He came back to life," I said. "He wanted everyone to understand that he, alone, was sent by God. He appeared to hundreds of people."

The young man's eyes burned with astonishment.

"Did this really happen?" he said.

John Brown University Proudly Introduces Dr. Gary Oliver and The Center for Marriage and Family Studies

Dr. Gary Oliver

The Executive Director of John Brown University's new Center for Marriage and Family Studies is Dr. Gary Oliver. Dr. Oliver is a husband, father, lecturer, seminary professor, psychologist and clinical director with over 30 years of experience in strengthening family relationships across the country and has had an extensive nationwide teaching ministry.

The master's degree program in Marriage and Family Therapy will produce licensed counselors. Personal lives of individuals will be healed and strengthened.

In addition to its graduate students, the Center for Marriage and Family Studies will benefit undergraduates, who will be better equipped to build and sustain healthy relationships.

Individuals, couples and families will benefit from professional counseling services made available through the Center for Marriage and Family Studies.

The Center will be a source of quality Christian counselors who will be equipped to serve in communities and churches across the nation. In addition, the Center will be a valuable source of information to further the advance of marriage and family studies.

Graduate Degree

The Center for Marriage and Family Studies will provide biblical, enriching events for couples and churches across the nation. These will include retreats, seminars, and lectures on marriage and family issues by nationally recognized authorities. Pastors and lay ministers will also benefit greatly from the tools and training the Center for Marriage and Family Studies will offer.

Educational Opportunities

Counseling Clinic

Center for Marriage and Family Studies
JOHN BROWN UNIVERSITY

Now accepting enrollment applications in undergraduate and graduate studies in marriage and family therapy.
For more information call toll free 1-877-JBU-INFO or see us on the web at www.jbu.edu

PRAY THE LORD MY

[Jesus] said to him, "You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind."

—MATTHEW 22:37

CORNELIUS PLANTINGA, JR.

Bruno Walter was once rehearsing a choir for a performance of Bach's Saint Matthew Passion. He was trying to get the choir to sing the main chorale a certain way. (Think of the hymn "O Sacred Head, Now Wounded," and you'll have the music.) Walter kept rehearsing the choir, and they kept trying; but they weren't giving him the sound he wanted.

So he called a halt and said something like this: "Your singing is talented, but it's not right for this music. You need to sound more like a congregation. You've got to sing this chorale more simply and deeply." Walter told some of his boyhood memories of going to church in Germany and the way people sang there. Then he said to the choir: "Now sing this chorale as if you were back in my childhood church."

So they sang again. They sang with simple depth, with deep simplicity. Of course, they didn't sound exactly like a congregation. They probably couldn't have sounded like that if they had tried. They brought all their musical understanding to the singing of the chorale and thus sang it with an educated simplicity, with a second simplicity, with a simplicity that lay beyond complexity.

We all know this phenomenon. According to a famous story, the great Swiss theologian Karl Barth was once asked to sum up the thousands of pages of his dense theology in one sentence. He paused. Then he said, "Jesus loves me! this I know, for the Bible tells me so."

It's one thing for a child to recite these words and quite another for Barth to say them. It's one thing to fool around at a piano by plunking out the notes of "Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star" with your index finger; it's another thing to hear that tune as a reprise, as a recap just after a fine pianist has played Mozart's variations on it. As a reprise, the tune seems loaded.

Second simplicities lie beyond complexities and incorporate them.

And so it is with loving God. A child can love God. In some ways, a child can become our teacher in doing it. But there are also adult ways to love God, and these take some time to learn. Adults learn to love God considerably. Adults learn to love God with all the powers of an educated mind. Adults bring to God a love that has all the law and the prophets compacted in it.

"You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind," says our Lord (Matt. 22:37). In other words, you shall love God with everything you have and everything you are. Everything. Every longing, every endowment, each of your intellectual gifts, any athletic talent or computer skill, all capacity for delight, every good thing that has your fingerprints on it—take all this, says Jesus, and refer it to God. Take your longing, and long for God; take your creaturely riches, and endow God; take your eye for beauty and appreciate God. With your heart and soul and mind, with all your needs and splendors, make a full turn toward God.

That is the great commandment, and Deuteronomy and Matthew give it to us in two versions. In Matthew's gospel a lawyer asks Jesus what may have been a trick question, "Which is the greatest commandment?" Jesus replies by quoting Deuteronomy 6:5, words that were on the lips of pious Jews morning and evening, words as familiar as "Now I lay me down to sleep."

Jesus responds, "You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind" —not with all your strength (that's Deuteronomy), but with all your mind (that's Jesus).

Here is a change worth a little gasp. What if a four-year-old prayed one night: "Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray the Lord my brain to keep"? You would notice.

Love God with all your mind, says our Lord. Take it as a charter for Christian intellectual life. What is the project for Christians engaged in this pursuit? What is the big idea within it? The simple answer is that we are trying to become better lovers. We want to love God with all our mind. Of course we want to offer our hearts to God, and we want to do it promptly and sincerely. And the same with our souls. But we are also intellectual beings, and Jesus Christ calls us to mindful love; he calls us to intellectual love.

Love with all your mind. The command sounds simple, but it requires from us a second simplicity, a simplicity that incorporates a good deal of complexity.

So what does the command mean? To love God intellectually is to become a student of God—a student who really takes an interest in God. Have you ever noticed that a fair number of Christians are not particularly interested in God? Some of them are ministers. These are people who don't ask about God, don't talk about God, and maybe don't even think about God unless they really have to. Their interest in God seems merely professional.

MIND TO KEEP

Isn't this strange? Shouldn't we be somewhat preoccupied with God? Lovers get preoccupied with their beloved, they notice things about the one they love.

And isn't there quite a lot to notice about God? Isn't God remarkable, after all—so surprisingly fierce, so surprisingly tender? The Scriptures give us a portrait of God we would never have guessed. Sometimes the portrait makes us squirm. Think of some of the biblical images for God: God is lion and lamb, church and home, fire and water. God is not only a leopard, eagle, and bear, but also a moth; not only a parent, but also a child; not only a king and a warrior, but also a barber and a whistler (Isa. 7).

To love God with all one's mind means taking an interest in God and in the peculiarities of God. It means letting God be God. This is mere courtesy toward God, and you cannot have love without it. The idea is that God gets to write his own autobiography. God gets to write his own drama of life with us, including his own character description. Our calling is not to rewrite the script, but to find our role there and fill it.

Mindful love of God means other things, too. Dietrich von Hildebrand once observed that lovers give their beloved a good-sized benefit of the doubt. Thus, if our beloved acts well, we look upon the action as typical. If our beloved acts badly, we look upon the action as an aberration. To love somebody is to give that person a big line of moral and spiritual credit.

So with our love of God. God does not act badly, and if we really thought he did, then we ought to give up our religion. But it sometimes looks as if God acts badly. It looks as if God goes off duty while children in Romania become hookers and while masses of Africans starve so wretchedly. It looks as if God blesses many of the wrong people and ignores many of the right ones. It looks for all the world as if God has a lot of explaining to do. That's what Job thought, and Job is in the Bible.

GIRAUDON/ART RESOURCE, NY. REMBRANDT. THE PHILOSOPHER IN MEDITATION. 1632.

How do you love God when, for a while, you can't make any sense out of God? This question is bigger than I am, but I think we have to trust Jesus Christ.

Even before his crucifixion Jesus suffered a lot more than most of us, and he says we ought to love God with everything we have. He clears the way to love God with a second simplicity. Doesn't God deserve at least the same benefit of the doubt that we give to anyone we love? It's a matter of faithfulness, of intellectual humility, of mere loyalty.

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Web Site Directory

Calvin College (Alumni)
www.calvin.edu
Fasting & Prayer '98
www.fastingprayer.net/awm
Food for the Hungry
www.fh.org
Gordon Conwell Theo. Seminary
www.gcts.edu
Wycliffe Bible Translators
www.wycliffe.org

To list your Web address in a Computing Today Web directory
phone (630) 260-6202 x239.

Check Us Out Online!

Keyword: CO
on AMERICA ONLINE

One of the top
50 sites on
America Online

- Community Interactivity.
Constantly packed chat rooms, dozens of weekly events, hundreds of message board topics to meet any interest.
- Current News & Magazines.
Including: Christianity Today, Today's Christian Woman, Computing Today, plus daily news updates.
- Music & Media • Resource Center • Church, Bible & Reference • Marketplace • & More

Use AOL's integrated Web browser to access Christianity.Net, Christianity Today, Inc.'s exciting new Web site.

www.christianity.net

A member of Christian Community Network
www.christcom.net

- NET/SEARCH.
One of the most comprehensive Christian Internet directories on the Web with nearly 5,000 links to Christian Web sites.
- Church Locator.
A searchable database of over 4,000 links to church Web sites from around the world. Add a FREE link to your church's Web site.
- Newsstand • Message Boards • & More

Get unlimited access to America Online and the Internet for $19.95 a month.
Call 1-800-633-8888 for a free start-up kit.
To advertise online call (630) 260-6202 x 239

oving God intellectually means taking an interest not only in God, and in the peculiarities of God, but also in the works of God. I'm thinking of creation in all its strength and majesty; creation in all its stupendous variety; creation in all its unguessable particularity. I'm thinking of humanity itself in all its multi-cultural riches. For, of course, God loves not only humankind, but also human kinds, and it's our delight to love what God loves.

To respect creation is to show love for its Creator. How do you respect creation? You give it room to be itself. You let it unfold before your watchful eye. You search it and know it with the preoccupation of a lover. Then you tell the truth about the actual state of creation, including not only its bird songs, but also its terrible carnivorousness; including not only the way purple and coral impatiens thicken into great mounds of color in a cool September, but also the way lions in Kenya beard themselves with the blood of fawns. You tell the truth even when you have to tell it about us—human creatures who look so much like God, and act so little like God, and have fallen so far from God.

To hear in the world both the song of God and the groaning of all creation, to prize what is lovely and to suffer over what is corrupt—to ponder these things and to struggle to understand them and God's redeeming ways with them—these are ways of loving God with all our minds. Becoming a real student of God and of the works of God—becoming alert, respectful, and honest in your studies—is an act of flagrant intellectual obedience because it is an act of flagrant intellectual love.

Where must all this love lead? Intellectual love must lead us out into the lives and habitats of other human beings in order to do them some good. Even that—doing people some good—sounds simpler than it is, of course. It's another of those second simplicities. Isaiah 1 tells us that we have to learn to do good, suggesting that good in a fouled-up world is often elusive and ambiguous. The point is that we need to think and reflect lest we unwittingly do a half-cooked good, a dangerous good, a ruthless good.

Love the Lord your God with all your mind. This is our job. Our job is to become better lovers. Taking into account all the questions and complexities, all the obstacles and ambigu-ities, all our growing pains, we have to love God with the second simplicity of grownup children—a deep simplicity, an educated simplicity, a simplicity that lies beyond complexity.

Love the Lord your God with all your mind. Let this command defeat every anti-intellectualism. What a sin this is, and how much of the Christian church happily commits it! Anti-intellectualism is anti-Christian. Never give in to it. Never concede anything to it. Never quit fighting against it. Anti-intellectualism is

Anti-intellectualism is anti-Christian. Never give in to it.

the sin of lazy people or of fearful people who content themselves with first simplicities and who resist the pain it takes to grow beyond them.

Love the Lord your God with all your mind. Let this command also defeat every selfish intellectualism, every worldly intellectualism, every idolatrous intellectualism. Let it remind us that the life of the mind has nothing to do with carving a niche for ourselves, or making a name for ourselves, or conquering some field of study as if it were an enemy. The life of the mind is an act of love, an act of reverence. It is an act in which we get pulled out of our nervous little egoisms and combine together in a kingdom project so much bigger than any of us, so much grander than all of us that we cannot help getting stretched by this move.

Intellectual love of God is thus the antidote to proud, envious, and angry scholarship—and to all the other deadly sins of scholarship. Intellectual love sets us free from anxious striving and opens the way for intellectual joy, the kind of joy that you can see in a fresh-faced nine-year-old.

Love the Lord your God with all your mind. Whether we are nine years old or ninety, whether students or professors or lifelong students, our job is to think more deeply, observe more alertly, research more thoroughly, and write more clearly—all in the service of loving God. It's a matter of mere obedience.

Let us begin.

CT

Cornelius Plantinga, Jr., is dean of the chapel at Calvin College, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Church Chair Industries, Inc.

Cathedral Stacker

Now Only
$24.25
100+

Free Chair Test Compare
(100+)

Plush, tall backs over 1/2" plywood.

Free Lumbar Back Support

Royal Stacker

Now Only
$26.25
100+

Design Stacker #1

DESIGN PATENT NO.
DES. 333,7333

Plush 4 & 5" deep foam
seats over 1/2" plywood.

Call 1-800-331-5411
For Free Catalog & Steel
Frame Sample Chair

GREAT PEW LIKE CHAIRS OAK OR STEEL FRAMES
LOCKS TOGETHER TO FORM A CONTINUOUS BENCH

Oak Pew Chair

OPTIONS

Arms
Kneelers
Book & Card Pockets

Can Foster Care Be Fixed?

Churches partner with parents to care for at-risk children.

ART MOORE

Angelica Hubbard's six-year odyssey—from a Los Angeles emergency room, where she arrived eight weeks after birth with broken bones and brain damage, to the security and nurture of her adoptive family—reveals in stark detail how the foster-care system can harm as much as it helps.

"Over the past 20 years a whole state of limbo has come into existence where no judgment is made, where the child is neither fish nor fowl," says Patrick Fagan, senior fellow in family and cultural issues at the Heritage Foundation in Washington, D.C. "He's neither, as it were, the proper child of his parents who are raising him well, nor has he become the adoptive child of somebody else who is going to raise him well. Instead he's the ward of the courts, and he's bounced frequently from one foster home to another to another."

In 1991, Los Angeles County placed Angelica through a private agency in the home of Doug and Kathy Hubbard, an American Baptist youth minister and his wife. The couple gingerly embraced Angelica for the first time in a hospital room, where tests revealed bone fractures and neurological damage. For the next five years, Angelica was at the mercy of a state system, which put the rights of her birth parents ahead of her needs.

Eventually, Angelica's Hispanic birth parents satisfied state requirements and she returned to her original home at age two. But six months later, Angelica was back in a hospital, malnourished and with bruises and bite marks. From jail, her birth mother telephoned her case worker and pleaded for Angelica to be sent to the Hubbards. The agency rejected her appeal and placed the child with another Hispanic family. "To Angelica we were Mommy and Daddy, but their answer was, She's already been placed; we can't tell you any more," Kathy Hubbard says.

Yet the Hubbards were determined and contacted the new foster family, offering free baby-sitting. Within four months, Angelica returned to them. And last year, they adopted Angelica, ending her bruising journey through the foster-care system.

KIDS' NEEDS FIRST: New federal legislation has changed the way states are supposed to handle foster care and adoption so that what is best for children is to be uppermost in the minds of case workers.

The federal Adoption and Safe Families Act (ASFA), enacted in January, aims to double the number of adoptions by 2002. The new law speeds up the procedure to place foster children into adoptive families, giving states, placement agencies, and ministries strong incentives to put the needs of children first.

Although Angelica's story has an upbeat ending, the same cannot be said for many of the other 500,000 foster children in America. Historically, the foster-care system has focused on keeping families together, even if children pay the price physically and emotionally.

Foster-care adoptions are up sharply where aggressive community outreach programs have been initiated. Churches are increasingly viewed as a prized asset in that effort. Christians have cared for orphans since the first century. But the contemporary breakdown of the nation's foster-care system, burdened by bureaucracy, politics, and underfunding, has given church leaders fresh opportunities to care for foster children and to stimulate adoption in innovative ways.

"Foster parenting is more appealing when it's the responsibility of a community rather than just the two parents," says Ted Kulik, assistant director of the Institute for Children in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

While there is no conclusive research on what motivates people to care for a foster child, according to University of California at Berkeley researcher Richard Barth, it is very clear "that foster and adoptive parents have very high degrees of religiosity."

Kulik points to Child Share of Glendale, California, as an example of a small but growing number of Christian organizations working within the system. They have an enviable track record for introducing stability into troubled young lives. Two out of three Child Share children stay with the same family until they are either reunited or adopted. The average foster child lives in four different homes.

Child Share links public and private agencies with foster and adoptive families. Some 250 congregations representing 20 denominations participate. Church members may serve with varying degrees of commitment, from baby-sitting and respite care to foster and adoptive parenting.

Nationwide, about 200,000 foster children are either presently or potentially available for adoption, though each year only about 20,000 are placed in permanent homes. Increasingly, private and public workers alike acknowledge that without community involvement the new federal law will not achieve its goal of dramatically increasing resolution of foster-care cases.

BLACK CHURCH INVOLVEMENT:

Minority children make up 64 percent of the foster-care population and remain in care longer than any other group. African Americans have always adopted children of their own race at a higher rate than white families, according to Rita Simon of American University in Washington, D.C.

African-American churches and the state of Texas are successfully partnering in the recruitment of families for foster care and adoption. Project Hustle, a program to place hard-to-adopt children, develops teams from community groups who use their networks to find families and provide them with support.

"The use of the churches was critical because of the history of the relationship between the black church and the black community," says Helen Grape, regional placement program director for the Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services in Fort Worth. The response from churches is greater than from other organizations.

"Businesses usually must offer an incentive, such as time off or insurance, to recruit people," Grape says. "The ministers say, There is a need, so come and do it, and people will more than likely follow through."

Each community group is assigned 20 to 25 children for whom they have the responsibility to help guide through the process to, ideally, a permanent, safe home.

It is a multidimensional process that Grape helps orchestrate. "You have to forget this sequential kind of planning," Grape says. "It has to be concurrent; you have to work with the family at the same time that you identify options, support systems, judges, and court people who have to be ready to do what is necessary to free kids or get kids where they need to be."

Cooperation is essential to make the new legislation effective, Grape says. "Now, more than at any other time, public and private agencies must work together to identify families, to train together, recruit together."

A similar recruiting effort that started in Chicago has been in place since 1980. One Church, One Child is a special program designed to connect African-American families, churches, and needy kids.

Peaceful environment: With the help of Child Share's Joanne Feldmeth (far left), the Hubbards have given Angelica (far right) a more stable home.

One Church, One Child identifies adoptive families and single parents for children in need of permanent homes and has now placed 90,000 children nationwide. The vision of One Church, One Child was to recruit at least one African-American family or single parent per church to adopt at least one child.

RACIAL TENSIONS: Transracial adoption remains a highly sensitive issue, exposing ongoing ethnic tensions within American culture. In 1972, the National Association of Black Social Workers condemned transracial adoption as "cultural genocide." But laws enacted in 1994 and 1997 prohibit using race as a determining factor in adoption. Nevertheless, bias against transracial adoption remains.

"There is a very aggressive movement within the social services system that a black child in need of adoptive parents will not be permitted to be adopted by white couples," Fagan says. "That is their putting a race-cultural issue ahead of the actual needs of a particular child."

Critics claim that children lose their identity and become "spiritual and cultural orphans." But a 20-year study of Midwest families by Simon challenges that notion. Most parents work hard—perhaps even too hard—she says, at teaching their children about their cultural heritage.

"The joke among these children was that not every dinner conversation has to be a discussion of black history or whether Jesse Jackson is going to run for public office," says Simon. Children were more interested in discussing basketball or dating.

As the parents of three mixed-race children, James and Karen Stobaugh of Downingtown, Pennsylvania, have more of a personal stake than most in the debate. James Stobaugh says, "At times we've struggled with our society's subtle and not-so-subtle racism." The Stobaughs relocated after racists burned crosses at a nighttime rally on the edge of their property. A firm supporter of transracial adoption, Stobaugh says, "The U.S. is home to nearly 200 people groups. To think they can or should be kept separate is totally untenable. And the people who end up paying the price are innocent children."

MORE HOMES NEEDED: Regardless of the number of foster children available for adoption, there are still not enough adults signed up to be foster or adoptive parents. A common belief is that the most needy children are not adopted from foster care because adoptive white parents are interested only in healthy newborns. That is a myth, according to Conna Craig, director of the Institute for Children. She points to the Children with AIDS Project in Phoenix, which has recruited more than 1,000 parents to adopt AIDS orphans and HIV-positive babies.

Craig concedes that the longer a child is in the system, the more the likelihood of adoption dwindles. But Craig emphasizes that the notion that nobody wants older children or children with emotional and physical problems is untrue. Research indicates that no child is unadoptable, says Craig. Her organization commissioned a study by the Polling Company, which found that 71 percent of adults would, if deciding to adopt, consider a child who had spent time in foster care.

Fagan says, "We have no major national efforts going on in adoption, and there are potentially up to 2 million who would be willing to adopt if asked."

To increase adoptions, one public perception in need of change is the belief that the foster-care system is too intimidating. Don Simkovich, director of church relations for Child Share, says, "This system walks into your living room—attorney, birth parents, birth parents' attorney, judge, social workers, social worker's supervisor. It takes an adventurous spirit to work through the system."

As foster parents, Richard and Lisa Pferdner of Chatsworth, California, have placed themselves in the crossfire between parents and the state. The casualty rate for foster parents is extremely high. Many drop out within a year when they witness the painful battle over children in the system. Most important to the Pferdners now is the support their faith and Christian community provides in their demanding role as foster parents to Taylor, who came to them one year ago at the age of six months.

Even though Taylor's birth mother said from the beginning that she does not want to work toward reunification, Taylor remains in a holding pattern while the court gives a legitimate opportunity for blood relatives to seek custody.

Meanwhile, the Pferdners' dual task is to work toward family reunification even as they hold themselves out as Taylor's potential adoptive parents. Once a week they take Taylor to his birth mother, who the Pferdners say loves her son. But she has drug-related problems that make her an unreliable parent. Parental abuse of alcohol and other drugs is a factor in the placement of more than 75 percent of all children in care, according to the U.S. General Accounting Office. "It's so easy to look at the dysfunctional parents and say, 'I could give this person a better home,'" Richard Pferdner says.

Pferdner compares foster parenting to foreign missionary work. "Being a foster parent is on that level of intensity, being in the trenches in direct spiritual warfare, having your faith completely tested."

Under the new federal law, foster parents are being given greater powers in determining the fate of foster children in their care. Foster parents must now be notified every time the court schedules a hearing and be given the opportunity to voice their opinion on the child's status.

Child Share executive director Joanne Feldmeth believes that new legislation will take time to be applied at the local level. "It's an enormous change, and because people aren't ready, because social workers have been schooled in the old line of thought that family reunification was the only way to go, it's going to take a long time for it to filter out."

CUTTING THE COST OF WAITING: Foster care has the reputation for being the kiss of death for an at-risk child's mental and emotional well-being.

Connecticut officials estimate that 75 percent of youths in the state's criminal justice system have been in foster care at some point in their lives. Experts say that placement in three or more foster families is the highest risk factor for a child who ultimately ends up in prison.

Studies also show that former foster-care wards make up a substantial portion of the nation's homeless. A 1991 national study found that 25 percent of foster-care wards had been homeless at some point.

Fagan says that too many foster children are needlessly delayed in being permanently placed into adoptive families. National statistics show that the number of foster children has increased by 65 percent over the past decade. Fagan calls delay of permanent placement "child abuse by the child protective services."

Until the ASFA legislation, states had a disincentive to place children in adoptive homes, in part because budgets were based on the number of foster children under state care. This disincentive results in children bouncing in and out of multiple foster homes, triggering many educational and emotional problems.

The ASFA plan to make foster care temporary gives federal money to each state that places more children into adoption. It aims to double—to 54,000 annually, within the next four years—the number of children adopted out of foster care and to reduce status hearings from a maximum of 18 months to 12 months.

NEW MINISTRY MODELS: As churches have partnered with families, agencies, and governments, new models of ministry are emerging.

There is a new willingness by churches and some of their never-married single members to open their homes to needy kids. Gale Parker, 39, of Canoga Park, California, quickly lost her naïve optimism about ministry to troubled children when she became a single foster parent. "Before I became a foster parent, I was idealistic," Parker says. "I thought, I'm going to take them in, they're going to love me. It's going to be great."

She sees it as a calling and understands why some two-parent families in her church say they would not consider foster parenting until after their kids are grown. "You have to have your life and your family in order, because the demands are so great that it could tear your family apart," she says. "You need to have your strength from the Lord—and to have the time."

Another attempt to expand care for foster children is a small, but growing back-to-orphanage movement. Most American orphanages closed more than 30 years ago due to high costs and the perception that institutional life is psychologically damaging.

But today's orphanages tend to be smaller and based on a homelike atmosphere. Advocates say they provide a sense of permanence, security, structure, and camaraderie that is superior to being bounced from family to family through the foster-care system. Many of the new orphanages, as with their predecessors, have been founded by Christians.

"If the church really responded, we would solve the problem in our county," says JoAnne Morris, who, with her husband, runs Mission to Children at Risk, which places foster children in Santa Clara County, California, through a network of 700 churches.

Morris says she encounters many Christians who find the cost in dealing with the state and a troubled family too high.

"I see Christians saying, I'm going to go through a private agency, because I'm not interested in dealing with the kids that come with all that baggage."

Some church leaders are reluctant to

Empty Nesters Undertake Second Parenthood

Child-rearing is but a distant memory to most married couples well into their retirement years. But Nathaniel Odom, 83, and his wife, Zady, 73, are busy attending Boy Scout meetings, participating in parent-teacher conferences, and leading vacation Bible school.

Seven years ago, Nathaniel, a retired Chicago-area builder, and Zady, who worked as a school-bus driver for 20 years, adopted three siblings: Sable, 5; Ronald, 2; and Theo, two months. By that time, they had already raised six sons, then between ages 26 and 36, all of whom had married and had children of their own. Three years later, the Odoms adopted two-year-old Diamond.

The Odoms' interest in adoption began after they had been unable to have children their first eight years of marriage. The couple adopted a four-month-old boy from the Chicago Foundlings Home in 1955. They then had four biological sons, followed by another adopted son.

"After they were grown up, the nest was pretty empty," says Zady Odom, who, like her husband, had seven siblings.

By the time Sable, Ronald, and Theo joined the Odoms in their Glen Ellyn, Illinois, home, the couple had raised ten foster children in addition to their six sons. They did not intend to adopt the trio of siblings, but after nearly three years of providing foster care, they decided to make it permanent when no other families came forward. "It's so sad to see children begging to be adopted," says Odom. "It's something about us, when we get a child, we just can't let go."

Odom says she and her husband are simply trying to live out their faith by caring for children who have no other caregivers. "It's our way of paying back some of the blessings God has given us," she says.

"Some people think because you are old, you don't have anything to offer a child," says Odom. Federal law does not limit older adults from becoming foster or adoptive parents, but states are allowed to set their own standards regarding age. State agencies agreed to the Odoms' latest round of adoptions with no qualms, but their grown children expressed reservations because of their parents' ages. Now, says Odom, her older children believe adoptive parenting is helping her stay young.

Keeping up with four young children and 15 grandchildren who all live in the Chicago metropolitan area is a challenge. But Odom adds they would adopt more children if they had a larger house. "I cannot say no when I've asked the Lord to be able to help," she says.

Odom wishes more Christians, especially retirees, would consider foster and adoptive care. She sees age as an advantage because senior adults are home during the day and can spend more time dealing with children's needs.

"There are so many children out there who need the love of anyone," she says. "You could be old, young, single. We need to see children as a blessing, not a burden."

By Christine J. Gardner in Glen Ellyn.

No time to retire: Odom and her younger family.

become involved because they are afraid of the negative impact on their congregation. "One church told us that they were sorry, but they didn't want to expose their families to the kind of sin that these kids have come from," Morris says. "When you bring these children into your church, they're going to teach the other kids things that they've never heard of before."

Yet, families such as the Pferdnerns are eager to learn and respond to the needs that Christians are uniquely poised to meet. "It takes tremendous grace to be a foster parent," says Richard Pferdnern. "I don't understand how non-Christians can do it without the resources of the Lord." CT

The Perils of Left and Right

Evangelical theology is much bigger and richer than our two-party labels.

John G. Stackhouse, Jr.

There are two kinds of people in the world: those who divide the world into two kinds of people, and those who do not. In his new book, Postmodernizing the Faith: Evangelical Responses to the Challenge of Postmodernism (Baker, 160 pp.; $14.99, paper), Millard J. Erickson divides contemporary evangelical theologians into two kinds of people: those who resist postmodernism and those who are more positive toward it.

In a recent article in these pages (CT, Feb. 9, 1998, p. 40), Roger Olson writes that he is willing to risk "gross oversimplification" in order to undertake a similar task. He argues that there are two kinds of contemporary evangelical theologians: traditionalists and reformists. The former are those who "value traditional interpretations and formulations as binding and normative and [look] with suspicion upon doctrinal revisions and new proposals." The latter are those who value "the continuing process of constructive theology seeking new light breaking forth from God's Word."

Olson says he means nothing pejorative by these labels; his concern, he insists, is to make peace between these two types. Erickson also writes with an evident desire to analyze his colleagues fairly and give credit where it may be due all round. His new book does present a spectrum of opinion on postmodernism. Still, the spectrum is divided into two discrete halves, and it is hard to see such dividing as anything other than divisive.

Erickson's new book follows his slim volume The Evangelical Left: Encountering Postconservative Evangelical Theology (Baker). Here again he is in harmony with a Roger Olson article, this one appearing in the Christian Century (May 3, 1995) on so-called postconservatives. The term is virtually synonymous with Olson's "reformist" label and carries an unhappy resonance, as "postconservative" sounds a lot like "postliberal."

Erickson compounds the terminological difficulties in the earlier book by lumping in Clark Pinnock, Stanley Grenz, Bernard Ramm, and Gregory Boyd, among others, into what he calls simply the evangelical Left. In the more recent book, Erickson discusses evangelicals who have responded negatively to postmodernism in contrast to those who have made a positive response. In both books, David Wells and Thomas Oden are cited as representative of those who have resisted the sirens of the Left and the blandishments of postmodernism.

The trouble with such typologies is that they presuppose a uniform conservative theology against which postconservatives can define themselves; a traditional theology that reformists want to alter; and an evangelical center or Right in comparison with which all of the theologians in question are definitely to the Left. It is this general assumption, as well as the questionable grouping of quite disparate theologians onto one side or the other of a divide, that mars such maps of contemporary evangelical thought.

Two crucial misunderstandings afflict such schemes. The first is a caricature of the Enlightenment and the modernity it is said to embody; the second is an ahistorical narrowing of the evangelical tradition.

According to this caricature, the Enlightenment placed reason above every other route to knowledge; believed that knowledge gained through reason was objective and certain; and held that the rational, free individual was ideally capable of coming to such truth.

Reformists/postmodernists, so the story goes, reject these convictions in favor of the following: a championing of experience as well as reason (and perhaps revelation as well); an appreciation of knowledge as personal, subjective, and provisional; and a recognition that we each do our investigating and thinking in communities, coming up with what one might call "tribal" narratives and ideologies to understand the world. Once we recognize our situation as postmoderns, we no longer should claim the status of absolute and comprehensive truth for our ideas.

The problem with this scenario is that it is overly simple and so misconstrues our intellectual history. When we speak of the Enlightenment, we need to specify which one. According to American historian Henry May's oft-cited typology, there were actually several Enlightenment varieties. Indeed, few Enlightenment figures subscribed strictly to the definition offered above. For one thing, even rationalist thinkers such as Descartes and Kant made room for experience in their thought, and the empiricist stream associated with Bacon and Locke prized it greatly. Furthermore, John Wesley and Jonathan Edwards were demonstrably Enlightenment figures who valued reason and experience as gifts of God that nonetheless were to be subjected to the light of God's revelation in the Spirit-illuminated Scriptures.

Enlightenment confidence, moreover, did not lie in the conviction that reason provided certainty here and now, but rather in the conviction that the project of investigating the world in this way would yield progressively better results. And this project was a public one engaged in by the community of fellow thinkers, not a private one for the enlightened individual (Descartes in his closet and Kant on his afternoon walks notwithstanding). The whole point of founding a Royal Society, the whole point of publishing one's ideas, was to submit hypotheses to one's peers for their testing. The scientific method was, after all, a major inspiration for the Enlightenment and includes in its basic premises that knowledge is achieved by the independent confirmation of others.

Postmodernists, then, are more accurately characterized as those who do not share this confidence in the Enlightenment project, who see human perception and theorizing as so limited and distorted by our individual and corporate qualities that we can only tell our own stories, perhaps listen to those of others for what additional insight they can offer, and muddle through as best we can.

So where does evangelicalism figure in this more nuanced historical narrative? Evangelicalism indeed developed in the Enlightenment context, but that was a context in which Wesley and Edwards could preach, not just one in which Voltaire and Jefferson could declaim. Moreover, evangelicalism as we encounter it today is the multifarious product of more than two centuries of cultural change and adaptation (as David Bebbington has brilliantly shown in his history of British evangelicalism), not a "flash-frozen" specimen of the Enlightenment that merely requires thawing out in each successive generation.

There are many types of evangelical: some still marked deeply by Enlightenment qualities; some more in a confessional Reformational, or historic Puritan, or Romantic style; some expressing the historical consciousness of nineteenth-century movements; and still others articulating the gospel in a bewildering range of twentieth-century modes, whether process, liberation, feminist, or charismatic—not to mention increasing varieties of theology arising beyond the developed West.

It does not help us to understand each other, much less work theologically together, if traditional evangelical theology is seen in terms of a simplistic sketch of the Enlightenment. Evangelical theology has indeed been scholastic and rigid at times, but it has also been supple, experiential, vital, and humbly open to God's revelation. Indeed, it seems that what many of Olson's reformists—and many of Erickson's postmodernists—are reacting against is not modernity but dogmatism, a nasty trait that appears in every age.

Nor is the diversity of evangelical theology adequately represented by schemas such as those proposed by Olson and Erickson. It is simply arbitrary, for instance, to place Donald Bloesch—a fan of Barth's and yet an opponent of gender egalitarianism—on one "side" or the other of the Olson/Erickson line. And Stan Grenz, who is indeed open to some aspects of postmodernism, cannot be grouped easily with Clark Pinnock and others who are exploring the so-called openness of God. The theological landscape is too variegated for a "two-party system," as Olson puts it—which encourages this Canadian to wonder how much American binary politics lies behind this sort of typologizing!

There are not just two kinds of culture: modern and postmodern. There are not just two kinds of evangelical theologian. Perhaps in God's imaginative and adaptive Providence, in fact, he has led different theologians to different conclusions (on nonessential matters) in order to reach different kinds of people evangelistically, instruct them theologically, guide them ethically, and motivate them spiritually. Some of us benefit more from Lewis Sperry Chafer than Francis Schaeffer, some more from C. S. Lewis than B. B. Warfield, and some more from postmodern theology than modern theology. At the core of evangelical commitment and identity is neither "a theology to die for" (as some traditionalists might put it) nor personal experience of Jesus (as some postconservatives are saying), as if these two were separable things, but the good news of knowing God in Christ, a gospel primarily transmitted via the Scriptures by the Holy Spirit. Evangelicals past and present have agreed on this fundamental.

Instead of trying to sort out who is on whose side, then, let's continue to affirm that evangelicalism is much bigger and richer than any of our schemes—because our God is bigger and richer. By no means should we abandon theology and the disputation that is necessarily a part of it. Many of these issues matter, and argument can be mutually beneficial to all who engage in it rigorously and respectfully—as both Erickson and Olson do. Let us beware, however, of fixing great gulfs between us, which we suppose no one can cross. For there are many who do cross them.

To pick up an image from historian Martin Marty, such divides in evangelicalism are, in fact, wonderfully crisscrossed with alliances on other matters: opposition to abortion, support of evangelism, opposition to religious persecution, support of justice for the poor. These are blessed ties that bind us to each other and to our common Lord. What God has joined together, therefore, let no theological scheme, however well meant, put asunder. CT

John G. Stackhouse, Jr., is Sangwoo Youtong Chee Professor of Theology at Regent College in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada. He is the author most recently of Can God Be Trusted? Faith and the Challenge of Evil (Oxford University Press).

It is hard to see such dividing as anything other than divisive.

The Politics of Patience

Retiring senator Dan Coats explains why Christians aren't getting their way in Washington.

In 1952, when Dwight Eisenhower swung through Jackson, Michigan, on a campaign tour, a nine-year-old boy waited in the crowd at the railroad station, hoping to meet the general. When Ike finally walked by, the boy thrust his hand through the line and touched the coat of the man who would soon be President. It was Dan Coats's first brush with politics.

Today Coats is a seasoned U.S. senator from Indiana, a post he has held since 1988 when he fulfilled the term left vacant by the election of Dan Quayle to the vice presidency. A graduate of Wheaton College (where he met his wife, Marcia), Coats was first elected to the House in 1980. This followed a stint in the military and a law practice in Fort Wayne, Indiana. During this time, he heard a talk by Chuck Colson that changed the direction of his life. "It was as if the other people in the room melted away," Coats says of the effect of the talk. He went home and, with Marcia at his side, dedicated himself to serving God fully in his career.

During the two decades of public service that followed, Coats, a Republican, has supported such conservative goals as a balanced budget, low taxes, a robust military, and strong families. He also authored a set of bills called "The Project for American Renewal." These initiatives emphasize what Coats calls a compassionate "shifting of power, money, and influence out of Washington" back to private organizations and religious charities.

Coats surprised the political world last year when he announced he would not seek re-election when his term expires in January of 1999. Instead, he would seek to further his goals through nonprofit and faith-based organizations. Robert Schwarzwald, a member of the senator's staff from 1991 to 1994, talked with Coats at his Capitol Hill office about his inside view on issues ranging from Clinton and China to evangelicals, abortion, and the Supreme Court.

How has your faith influenced your conduct in office?

Pretty dramatically. When you go into a situation where so much of what you do is critiqued by your political opponents and the press, it's important that you understand the role your faith is going to play. You have to have a solid foundation of faith, because this is a tough business. You're subject to so many pressures. The public and press are fickle. You can be liked or disliked from one day to the next. It's easy for people to misinterpret your votes. It makes you realize faith is the only real constant in your life.

You have been a pro-life leader in Congress. What lessons have you learned in the fight for unborn life?

All of my training and study—at Wheaton, in church, in my personal study of Scripture—has led me to an unshakable conviction that all of life is God's creation, and so the sanctity of life should be one of the unalienable truths of our system. Still, Christians have often confused principle with strategy. I have tried to express my convictions while developing an effective strategy to translate my convictions into reality.

Sometimes we have to use incremental approaches. Sometimes we have to recast the debate. In the early eighties, the entire debate was on the Human Life Amendment. It just simply was not possible to gain the necessary two-thirds majority in the House or Senate to pass the amendment. We then focused our strategy on taxpayer-funded abortion, which had some success. Now we are working on banning partial-birth abortion.

Some people would have said this was a compromise, that we should accept nothing but a constitutional amendment banning abortion. If we ban partial-birth abortion, will that eliminate abortions? No, it would only limit a tiny fraction of them, but this issue has helped us refocus the debate and has put the pro-choice people on the defensive.

Some Christians have concluded that I've not been true to the faith. That's been difficult, one of the greatest challenges I've had to face.

How do you respond to attacks from other Christians as well as from political opponents?

On occasion, I've had some sharp exchanges in the Senate with some of my colleagues. There is a temptation to label someone a personal, not just a political, enemy. My goal is to maintain my position, to state my convictions without personalizing my criticisms, to have a relationship with my opponent based on respect. Christ's teaching and his conduct set the example.

Sometimes it makes people uncomfortable when you raise the moral side of the issue. But I think we're not here just to always avoid the difficult issues.

How have you used moral arguments to advance legislation?

Scripture—God's Word—is the source of all truth. But approaching public policy from an explicitly Christian perspective is counterproductive. It is wiser to approach it from the standpoint of the moral foundation that undergirds our society—the moral framework found in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. The principles in these documents show how to relate moral truth to the issues at hand.

Not every issue has a moral foundation. But foreign policy, issues of war and peace, life and health—all have profound moral implications. On many issues there is less clarity. Consider Most Favored Nation [MFN] trade status for China. Persecution of Christians in China is real, and it is wrong. But I've received letters from Christians within China saying that if MFN is rescinded, they'll experience repression. If we stay engaged with China, we can promote democratization.

Recently, Focus on the Family's James Dobson has threatened, in his words, to take as many of his listeners away from the Republican party as he can unless there is greater progress on social issues. Other conservative Christian leaders, like Richard D. Land of the Southern Baptist Convention's Ethics and Religious Liberty Commission, echo these sentiments. How do you respond?

"Some Christians have concluded that I've not been true to the faith. That's been difficult, one of the greatest challenges I've had to face."

—Dan Coats

I understand a little of their frustration. They and the people they represent have invested a great amount of energy, finances, and other resources to address through the political process serious social and cultural issues they think are having an extraordinarily negative effect on the country. They are frustrated that the Congress hasn't been as responsive and successful as they would like.

But often that frustration has translated into criticizing and condemning the very people who share the same goals and who often are as frustrated as they are but, because of the nature of the political process, haven't been able to succeed in a way that those people want to succeed. This doesn't mean that they're not on the same team. It means that they're facing hurdles and obstacles I'm not sure people outside the system have an appreciation for. Bombastic rhetoric from people in elective office may please people outside, but it doesn't accomplish the goal and often makes achievement of our goals more difficult.

The response of some Christian activists is, "We gave you a majority in 1994." No, they didn't. Even though we have a Republican Senate, there is not a majority of Republican senators who agree with every issue that the Christian Right advocates, and even if there were, in the Senate it takes 60 to pass laws, and we have only 55 Republican senators. The country re-elected Bill Clinton President, so it takes 67 votes to override the President's veto.

Social conservatives are frustrated we've been able to score only some first downs, but we haven't been able to score all the touchdowns we'd like.

But that doesn't mean that we have walked off the field. We're out there sweating and bleeding. To capsize the issue, it's a matter of rhetoric versus results. Just going to the floor doesn't translate into legislative success.

Though there are serious questions about the President's personal life, many voters seem to feel that if he fulfills his official duties well, his private conduct is secondary and should, perhaps, even be ignored.

Character counts, integrity matters, and personal responsibility is important. Leaders need to model these, but we're not getting any of those qualities out of this President. I think it sets a terrible example for the American people, particularly for future generations. It is a reflection of decades of relativism that defines truth as whatever the individual thinks it is. We're not paying an economic price right now, and that seems to be, unfortunately, dominating public opinion about the President's performance. But we're paying a terrible moral and spiritual price that is more destructive than any economic recession could impose on our nation. I'm very concerned

THE DIGITAL HYMNAL

NEW VERSION CP

Now With Acoustic Grand Piano Plus Over 650 New Titles Previously Unavailable

- Instantly plays thousands of new praise and worship music, contemporary selections, traditional hymns, gospel favorites, kid's titles plus wedding, graduation and memorial selections - already stored inside - and indexed to page numbers of popular hymn books
- Acoustic grand piano, pipe organs, choir, strings and brass plus other exciting instruments already stored inside for instant use
- You choose the key, number of verses and style
- Completely self contained - no costly keyboards or disks needed
- Includes remote control and built-in speakers, or use PA system - CD quality sound
- Rechargeable NiCad battery available
- Pre-program an entire service in memory mode

Ask for cassette demo, master list of song titles and color brochure

 Gulbransen, Inc.
800-677-7374

2102 Hancock Street, San Diego, CA 92110 • FAX: 619-296-7157

- CONGREGATIONAL SINGING
- OUTDOOR MEETINGS
- HOME USE
- SOLOS AND CHOIR REHEARSAL

about the implications for our society and the implications particularly for the next generation.

You're already president of Big Brothers/Big Sisters, a civic organization that is not explicitly Christian or religious. What message are you sending by filling this position?

Big Brothers/Big Sisters is an organization that helps children without fathers. It promotes mentoring and operates on volunteerism, one on one, bringing an adult into a child's life. We continue to see positive results from that approach.

But that's only one of the things I'm going to do. I intend to create a foundation for American renewal basically for the purpose of promoting nongovernmental, nonprofit, and primarily faith-based volunteer organizations that will address some of our most fundamental social issues. I'm doing so because I believe the root of the solution is spiritual. These institutions, as opposed to government, are constituted to bring the spiritual renewal I believe will transform society by transforming individuals from the inside out rather than from the outside in.

You've been in public service for more than two decades. What counsel do you have for evangelicals as they approach politics?

I encourage evangelicals to be involved in the political process, to be involved in community affairs, whether that be the PTA or neighborhood associations or city council. I think we can bring a perspective that's very important.

I'm concerned about individuals and organizations that, while they wouldn't profess this, behave as if our salvation lies in the election of a certain President, a certain Congress, or passage of a certain law. Their energies, efforts, and even their beliefs are directed more substantially to that rather than fulfilling Christ's commands to love God and love others as ourselves.

We should never lose sight of a higher calling that transcends politics and all human endeavors. That higher calling is a commitment to serve God and to share the good news of the gospel. That ought always to be our number-one priority. CI

Robert Schwarzwaldner is communication director for a business association in Springfield, Virginia.

TRULY A BIBLICAL ALTERNATIVE THE REFORMED EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Church Growth Office
211 Byrne, Houston, TX 77009

For over 122 years, the Reformed Episcopal Church has remained faithful to the inerrant word of God, powerfully proclaiming the unchanging Gospel of Jesus Christ and worshipping Him in Spirit and Truth using the biblical and time-honored Book of Common Prayer.

The Reformed Episcopal Church is rapidly expanding her witness throughout the United States and the whole world.

FOR INFORMATION CALL:
1-800-REC-3433

SERVE YOUR COUNTRY WHILE STILL IN SEMINARY.

The Army needs ministers and seminary students to meet the spiritual needs of America's soldiers and their families.

The Army and Army Reserve have even developed a special program for seminary students that won't interfere with your studies. It's called the Army Chaplain Candidate program. And it enables you to use your summer vacation to minister to the diverse needs of America's troops here in the U.S. or overseas.

The need is great, but the rewards are even greater. For specific information call 1 800 USA ARMY or visit the Army Chaplain website at www.goarmy.com

ARMY CHAPLAIN CORPS
BE ALL YOU CAN BE

Did Paul Baptize for the Dead?

Q: I've heard Mormons criticized for getting "baptized for the dead," but in 1 Corinthians 15:29, Paul writes: "Now if there is no resurrection, what will those do who are baptized for the dead? If the dead are not raised at all, why are people baptized for them?" (NIV). Did Jews or early Christians practice this? Why do we believe it's wrong to practice it today?

—Janice Showalter
Flint, Michigan

The most plausible interpretation is that some in Corinth were getting baptized vicariously for the dead.

A: In Mormon doctrine, no one can enter the "celestial" heaven without being baptized. But those who have died can gain admittance if others are baptized for them. Today, Mormon doctrine requires that the dead person for whom someone else is baptized must be named (hence their interest in genealogical research), and proxy baptism is considered one of the most important elements of Mormon "temple work." So it is surprising to discover that the Book of Mormon never mentions the doctrine—even more so knowing that the Bible and the Book of Mormon are between them believed to contain "the fullness of the gospel" and that the Book of Mormon ostensibly contains "the fullness of the everlasting gospel." Still, this does not prevent the Mormon's Doctrines of Salvation from boldly asserting, "The Prophet Joseph Smith declared, 'The greatest . . . commandment given us, and made obligatory, is the temple work in our own behalf and in behalf of our dead.'" Presumably, this is the biblical basis for 1 Corinthians 15:29.

Mormon teaching aside, how should we understand this verse? Christian leaders have long been leery of imposing on the consciences of believers as being crucial what is mentioned in only one verse. It's not that something becomes "truer" or more binding if it is repeated many times. Rather, when something is mentioned only once, it cannot be given the same weight of importance as the central themes of Scripture. (One of the marks of heterodoxy is that, while central truths are skirted, relatively peripheral matters become life-and-death issues.) More important, when something is mentioned only once, there is more likelihood of misinterpreting it, whereas matters repeatedly discussed are clarified by their repetition in various contexts.

We can see this problem in the more than 40 interpretations of 1 Corinthians 15:29 that B. M. Foschini catalogued 50 years ago in Catholic Biblical Quarterly. They included that Christians in Corinth were being "baptized into the ranks of the dead" by martyrdom (thinking of "baptism" in the light of Mark 10:38; Luke 12:50), that this was ordinary Christian baptism that took place "over" the grave of the dead, or that new Christians were baptized to "replace" Christians who had died. Though interesting, these proposals lack credibility. The most plausible interpretation is that some in Corinth were getting baptized vicariously for the dead. Several factors, however, put this into perspective. Although Paul does not explicitly condemn the practice, neither does he endorse it. Several writers have offered the following analogy. Imagine a Protestant writing, "Why do they then pray for the dead, if the dead do not rise at all?" No one would take this as an endorsement of the practice of praying for the dead; it is a criticism of the inconsistency of praying for the dead while holding that the dead do not rise. To make this rhetorical question an endorsement of the practice of praying for the dead, one would expect, "Why do we then pray for the dead?" Likewise, in 1 Corinthians 15:29 Paul preserves the more distant they. After all, his primary concern in 1 Corinthians 15 is the defense of the Christian doctrine of resurrection. His rhetorical question in verse 29 may simply be pointing out the inconsistency of those who deny the final resurrection, granted their rather strange baptismal practices.

And they were strange. There is no good evidence for vicarious baptism anywhere in the New Testament or among the earliest apostolic fathers. By the same token, there is no hint that this vicarious baptism (if that is what it was) was intended by the Corinthian believer to cover as many deceased people as could be named. If the practice existed at all, it may have been tied to a few people or special cases—for example, when a relative died after trusting the gospel but before being baptized. We really do not know. If it were something like that, one could understand why Paul does not make a federal case of it.

In any case, Paul's clear emphasis is that people are justified by grace through faith, which demands a personal response. Christian baptism is part of that personal response, even as it is a convenantal pledge. In contrast, baptism on behalf of someone who has not exercised such faith sounds like magic—of something far from Pauline thought. CT

By D. A. Carson, research professor of New Testament at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois. Send questions to be answered by evangelical scholars to Directions, at CTedit@aol.com or Christianity Today, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

Why Hollywood Doesn't Like You

As a Christian and a Hollywood screenwriter who has lived in Los Angeles since the 1970s, Coleman Luck understands both sides of the cultural clashes between evangelicals and Hollywood—and he tries to bridge these unfriendly worlds as he communicates spiritual concepts in his television productions. Luck was co-executive producer for the action/adventure series The Equalizer on CBS from 1985 to 1989, cocreator and executive producer of Gabriel's Fire in 1991–92, and executive producer for the more recent television adventure series The Burning Zone (United Paramount Network). His latest screenplay,

The Touch, is based on Charles Williams's concept of Christians bearing one another's burdens. Luck, 52, talked with CHRISTIANITY TODAY's Mary Cagney while attending an ethics conference at Wheaton College in Illinois.

Why is there such a standoff between Hollywood and evangelicals?

Both groups underestimate the importance the other places in its system of faith. Hollywood's faith is in the First Amendment right to free speech. I think evangelicals cannot believe Hollywood is motivated by anything other than money.

While money is a factor, most people in Hollywood believe passionately in the films and television they make.

Does Hollywood particularly dislike Christianity?

I would rather say Christianity is to some degree feared in Hollywood. The only forms of Christianity Hollywood understands are Catholicism and right-wing conservative politics dressed in religious terminology. Also, there is a large Jewish community in Hollywood, and Christians don't have a spotless record when it comes to anti-Semitism. These Jewish filmmakers have understandable reasons to be afraid of institutionalized Christianity. This fear influences the attitudes of Hollywood.

Did evangelicals overreact to the film The Last Temptation of Christ a number of years ago?

It's too easy simply to criticize Hollywood for producing films that aren't culturally or spiritually sensitive. For example, consider how Bill Bright's organization, Campus Crusade for Christ, uses the Jesus film in cultures that have never seen films before. I've watched video footage of little children viewing the Jesus film. We may say, "Look at the emotion in these children and look how the film is moving them." But just remove the religious context of Jesus being nailed to the cross and you're left with a film about a man being tortured—something we are appalled at if Hollywood shows our children. I am not saying we should never use the Jesus film. The point is it's easy to be insensitive when crossing cultures, whether from Christian America to Pakistan or from Hollywood to the evangelical community.

The much-publicized attempt by Bill Bright to buy the negatives for Last Temptation was interpreted by folks in Hollywood as a slap in the face to their integrity. To them it implied: "You people are just whores, and the only thing you care about is money—so here's the money."

What do you think of Christians boycotting Disney?

I think boycotts like this have very little long-term effect. Disney is having a very successful year, even with the current boycott. Furthermore, I know from experience that heavy-handed techniques build resistance in Hollywood. They feel they will lose their integrity if they bow to that kind of pressure.

On a more personal level, they also wonder what the Bible has to do with such arm-twisting. Our theologians may justify it, but the nuances are lost on the executives of the entertainment industry. I remember during The Last Temptation of Christ I was working with Universal Television, and thousands of people began picketing outside our studios. For us inside, it was frightening. I remember driving with a friend through a crowd of people who were shoving placards with "John 3:16" written on them in front of our car. These were Christians, but believe me, they didn't look very loving. My friend, who was not a Christian and was a producer for Equalizer, turned to me and said, "I would hate these people if I didn't know you."

What are Hollywood's faults?

Hollywood is guilty of ugly and cheap stereotypes of people of faith. If they tried those stereotypes with sexual orientation or gender or race, they would be justifiably castigated. It goes all the way back to Elmer Gantry (1960), which was a watershed film of that sort. There's a current example of this in the movie Contact. It's a very good film overall, but who is it that's destroying all the scientific work that has been built up in order to contact this civilization in Vega? A Christian fanatic. These are cheap, easy villains for Hollywood to deal with. It is unconscionable for them to stereotype us in this way.

Screenwriter Coleman Luck: "The only forms of Christianity Hollywood understands are Catholicism and right-wing conservative politics dressed in religious terminology."

DAVID JOHANSON

SIGN OF THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A GOOD DEAL AND A CUT-RATE LOAN.

Church financing from Bank of the West comes with a wealth of experience and a bond of commitment that has served religious organizations for a decade and a half. No other bank has been as single-minded in its dedication to church lending. Churches are the only customers we serve in our Religious Organizations Lending department.

It's why we are the market leader among banks in religious lending. In the last 15 years, we've committed more than half a billion dollars to the religious community, nationwide.

We understand how to work with stewardship campaigns so you can keep construction moving without costly delays. We can help you with the intricacies of environmental law. We know what's realistic to expect in construction costs, schedules and quality, and how to ensure you get full value for your money. And we're experienced in church refinancings, land acquisition, renovation and expansion loans, as well as underwriting construction projects.

Lending to religious organizations isn't something new that we're "trying out." Unlike some banks, we haven't jumped in and out of church lending as the economy changed. We don't think of this as something to sandwich in between loans to multinational conglomerates, high-flying technology companies or foreign governments. We think of it as our mission.

Because we're a full service bank, we can do more for you — leases or loans for sound systems, church furnishings, computers, vehicles, and more. And our service extends to cash management, deposit services and investments. We can introduce you to recognized professionals who specialize in working with churches in the fields of construction and stewardship development.

We made our commitment to support churches, their schools and ministries a decade and a half ago. We've been fulfilling it every day since, with dedicated professionals whose sole mission is to deliver financial services to the religious community.

So, if you really want the best team for a successful outcome for your project, look beyond short term rate-cutters. Look to building a relationship with a financial partner that knows how to help, and is committed to doing so, long-term.

That's what you'll get with Bank of the West. Give us a call at 1-800-405-2327.
And get a good deal more for your money.

Member FDIC © 1997 Bank of the West

BANK OF THE WEST

Systematic Theology, Vol. 3
By Wolfhart Pannenberg

The Violence of Love
By Oscar Romero

BOOKS

You Are Who You Eat With

A kosher keeper teaches us about the religious meaning of food.

Miriam's Kitchen: A Memoir, by Elizabeth Ehrlich (Viking, 370 pp.; $24.95, hardcover). Reviewed by Lauren F. Winner, Kellett Scholar at Clare College, Cambridge University.

On occasion, I have joked to my boyfriend Andrew that our grandchildren will do things—culinary things—that they will not understand. They will have long forgotten—if in fact they ever knew—why they make braided whole wheat loaves every Friday, and why they eat meringues around Easter. For although I have, in becoming Christian, put aside most of the symbols and accouterments of my Jewish childhood, the ones that will not go are related to the kitchen. I have folded up and tucked away my prayer shawl, donated my Mikraot Gedolot to a local synagogue, taken to driving on Saturdays, removed the mezuzah from my doorpost. But I still bake challah every Friday afternoon, and I still concoct the crisp, unleavened cookies every Passover. It does not make any sense. Often I am not even home on Friday night to eat this challah, and it gets turned into French toast for Sunday brunch after church. But baking that bread is almost as automatic as brushing my teeth.

I have given Andrew Miriam's Kitchen to read. In fact, whatever the book's weaknesses, I felt as if it were a godsend. Literally. I have been praying that Andrew will somehow come to understand something he does not: not just why I continue to bake challah, but why my father, a good cultural Jew, is so distraught that I have become an Anglican and that therefore his descendants will not be Jewish. Why he is so troubled that his daughter is dating the son of a priest. Why I quietly fumble with the clasp at my neck and slip my cross into the pocket of my jeans when I pull into my father's driveway.

"But he doesn't believe any of it," wails Andrew. "So why does he care?" I cannot really explain why he cares any better than I can explain why I insist on eating mediocre cookies that send my cholesterol skyrocketing every spring. Miriam's Kitchen will explain it.

Elizabeth Ehrlich will probably be surprised that among her most vociferous cheerleaders is a mumar, the rabbinic term for Jews turned apostates. For her book is not a story about a movement away from Judaism, but about just the opposite. Miriam's Kitchen chronicles Ehrlich's struggles to keep a kosher kitchen. Along the way, she enrolls her children in Jewish day school, begins attending synagogue, and goes to the mikvah, the ritual bath that observant Jewish women go to every month, a week after their period ends. So keeping a kosher kitchen is the metaphor that conveys Ehrlich's growing—if at times ambivalent—commitment to observant Judaism, but it is also an end in itself.

To observe kashrut—the Jewish dietary laws—is to be reminded every day that the mundane mingles with the sacred. Keeping kosher, you really do sometimes feel as though you've sanctified this most basic aspect of daily life in a way that no brief grace before meals can manage to accomplish. But keeping kosher is also a colossal pain in the neck.

The dietary laws find their origins in the Old Testament, in Leviticus and Deuteronomy. Fish must have fins and scales, otherwise they are tref—not kosher. No scallops, shrimp, lobster, mussels, or crabs. Land animals must have cloven hooves and chew their cud. No pigs or rabbits. Also no birds of prey, no snails, no creepy-crawly insects.

"You shall not boil a kid in its mother's milk," says Deuteronomy 14:21, and through the centuries of rabbinic exegesis that verse came to dictate a complete separation of all dairy products from all meat products. No cheeseburgers or chicken parmesan—but also no eating a steak on a plate that once held a grilled cheese sandwich.

The four best pages in Miriam's Kitchen come early on, where Ehrlich tells us "How to Keep a Kosher Kitchen":

You need a lot of things. Meat dishes, dairy dishes, coffee cups two ways. You need ladles for cream soup and ladles for beef stew, knives for steak and knives for butter. A cutting board for cheese, and a different one for turkey. You need a lot of cupboards if you're going to have a kosher kitchen. . . . The pots have their essences. These cannot be denied. Cook vegetable soup in a meat pot, and that soup itself becomes practically fleyschik, a thing of flesh. You must eat it with a fleyschik spoon. You may not dust it with grated cheese. That soup is branded by its provenance, until the end, the moldy end two weeks from now in a plastic container marked MEAT. If you want a soup to be neutral, neither dairy nor meat, you'd better have a separate pot that you call pareve, and a ladle and a stirrer and containers to match. It's not utensils only. You need distinctive tools to clean with. You can't use the sponge that wiped out sour cream at luncheon to scrub beef drippings from the broiler pan that night. You need a separate meat sponge for the broiler pan. While you're at it, get another broiler pan.

Does Ehrlich really want to do all this? "It's a lot of work," she notes. "Who wants a kosher kitchen? I do. I mean I might. I'm thinking maybe I'll try."

Food, and rituals surrounding its preparation and consumption, are central to most religions. I was not surprised when, a few weeks before I was baptized, my priest told me that in the early church nonbaptized folks could attend church but had to leave before the Eucharist. And although in 1997 I was permitted to stay in the church while my baptized neighbors received Holy Communion, it is still the act of eating that separates the insiders from the outsiders: eating the bread that makes all believers one body.

For food is not merely about nourishment, nor about delighting in a favorite salmon mousse or chocolate torte. The Jewish dietary laws regulate not only what goes into your body, but, de facto, who else you put it in with. The most strict observers of kashrut would not eat at any nonkosher restaurant, nor would they do more than sip a glass of water or maybe munch an apple in the home of someone whose observance of the dietary laws did not meet their standards.

Elizabeth Ehrlich knows that it is this, and not the annoyance of having three sets of dishes, that is the hardest part of keeping kosher. "I want to be of the world," she says. She does not want to make a nuisance of herself at her friends' dinner parties, asking only for a salad. She is somewhat gratified and somewhat disconcerted when, at a Christmas fete, her five-year-old son pipes up, "Is the chicken kosher?"

On the day that she is helping her parents pack to move, the neighbor, Mrs. Henderson, prepares for Elizabeth's family a pot roast, some stringed beans and mashed potatoes, and peach cobbler. "I thought you folks would be starving," Mrs. Henderson says. "Probably nothing to eat at home. . . . Moving day is like that." The roast, of course, is tref. The peach cobbler probably contains butter and was baked in a dish that once held shepherd's pie. The string beans might have been cooked with a bit of bacon for flavor. "I don't want the burden of a Jewish palate," writes Ehrlich, "if this drives a wedge between . . . me" and Mrs. Henderson.

I have always thought that of all Jesus' shockingly radical acts, the most radical was breaking bread with those people he should not have been eating with. Ehrlich agrees:

Kashrut, I believe, gave Jesus his great opening. He ate with the common people in their homes, when other learned teachers wouldn't. Poor folk might not have had enough

A series of 24, available individually or in a boxed set (ISBN 0-7363-0136-4)

New believers earnestly desire to know the Lord Jesus in a deeper way. They have a hunger for the Word of God and long to understand and fully experience the reality of salvation. In twenty-four simple yet profound messages, Watchman Nee guides new believers through some of the most pressing issues that they face, helping them to mature in the Lord and to be built up with other believers.

Topics in this series include:

Baptism Confession with the Mouth
Terminating the Past If Anyone Sins
Witnessing Separation from the World
Leading Men to Christ Consecration
Confession and Repentance Prayer
Reading the Bible Seeking God's Will
Forgiveness and Restoration Meeting
Rising Early The Discipline of God
Governmental Forgiveness Our Life
Deliverance Withstanding the Devil
Loving the Brothers The Priesthood
The Discipline of the Holy Spirit
The Body of Christ

Now Available
at Christian Bookstores from Living Stream Ministry
through Spring Arbor

GET RESULTS!

We'll expand your job search!

Interchristo will put you in touch with current job leads in the United States and
overseas.

If you're interested in using your job skills in Christian service and are open to relocating, call Interchristo
now at

1-800-426-1342

www.jobleads.org

or return the coupon below

The Christian Career Specialists
19303 Fremont Ave N
Seattle, WA 98133-3800

Name

Address

City State Zip

BOOKS

wooden bowls, ceramic vessels, and cooking implements to adhere perfectly to dietary laws. They might not have enough knowledge or resources to make their kitchens kosher enough for the standards of a truly learned man. Jesus swallowed his own squeamishness, perhaps, sat down and broke bread. You can get to heaven without all of this, he taught. I can see the appeal.

Memoirs have begun to run together a bit these days, and Ehrlich's bears the marks of the newly popular genre. Those writing memoirs about religious journeys are handed a very useful way to structure their books: the calendar. It was according to rhythms of the church calendar that Kathleen Norris structured The Cloister Walk, as did Frederica Mathewes-Green in Facing East. So too Elizabeth Ehrlich in writing Miriam's Kitchen, which starts and ends in September, the month in which Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year, usually falls.

Miriam's Kitchen could also be placed in the subgenre of literary food writing. Ehrlich is no M. F. K. Fisher, but we do get treated to a few recipes in each chapter—her grandmother's chocolate sour cream cake, her mother-in-law's lukshn mit leybern (chicken liver with noodles), fried cauliflower, and apple cake. (Ehrlich wisely leaves off those hallmarks of contemporary recipes, the notations of calories and fat content, knowing that Miriam's pineapple chocolate-chip cake and potato latkes probably wouldn't make the cut.)

This isn't a book to read straight through at one sitting. It is episodic, each chapter comprising a series of shorter reflections (again, like Norris's Cloister Walk). Every kitchen I have ever been in in Ehrlich's Westchester County is equipped with a modest telephone desk in the kitchen, and one can envision Ehrlich sitting down at her kitchen desk in between kashering her silverware and stirring a great pot of soup to jot down her reflections on whether or not it really matters that her knives and spoons have been scrubbed clean and then boiled, whether it was worth the bright red burn she had just acquired on her thumb from handling those too-hot forks, whether the rabbis who dreamed up all of these rules and regulations ever themselves set foot in a kitchen.

But Miriam's Kitchen is not merely a gathering of loosely connected reflections. It is the record of a quest. Elizabeth Ehrlich is different from most of the kosher-keeping Jews I know. She is doing it neither because she grew up doing it and therefore feels guilty every time she's tempted to eat a piece of pepperoni pizza, nor because she believes that God revealed the commandments, and their rabbinically elaborated minutiae, to Moses on Mount Sinai.

In fact, Ehrlich is not even sure she believes in God, period. She waffles. She hopes her friends, who "serve secular humanism at mealtime," will not ask. She would be a little embarrassed to admit that she, sophisticated daughter of a solidly Marxist, atheist Jewish father, might, maybe, believe in God.

And Ehrlich certainly does not experience herself as being in a commanded, covenantal relationship with this God who may or may not exist. She conveniently translates mitzvah—commandment—as "good deed," which makes the whole thing more palatable: God's commands become those that make sense to us, like tithing, and we neglect those that don't make as much sense, such as refraining from flicking light switches on the Sabbath.

Ehrlich even found a way to transform the dietary laws from commandments that are prima facie inexplicable into good deeds that make sense in the nineties:

If you are going to slaughter an animal for food, respect it. Never forget that it lived and breathed, a mammal like yourself. Here is a way of reminding, respecting—eat the animal separate from the milk. Thus the tradition comes to terms with human appetite, but demands consciousness. And I had come of age in vegetarian times.

She will try observing these laws, she says. A trial run of keeping her meat dishes separate from her dairies. "So far with no sense of obligation, no sense of commandment. I will recite prayers, but to What or Whom?"

So if Elizabeth Ehrlich is not motivated by guilt, and she is not motivated by a sense of being commanded, then what pushes her forward in this quest to go to synagogue and light Friday night candles and root out clams from her kitchen?

It was, initially, symbolic. The thought of feeding her "new, pristine" babies hamburger and milk just didn't sit well. Then, as Ehrlich learned that keeping kosher involved a lot more than merely serving her kids juice when they ate burgers, she learned that her motives went beyond the aesthetic. "It wasn't about dishes, or law, or a way of life. It was only a way of feeling. Without any particular sense of obligation, I felt Jewish, I felt a valuable if occasional differentness, and I wanted to pass that on. I wanted my children to eat stuffed cabbage, then yearn for strudel, not ice cream or flan."

That is what Miriam's Kitchen will explain to my boyfriend. Along the way, it might also explain to him why my father is sad. And it will challenge even those of us, secure in our faith, who think we may not have very much to learn from a Jewish woman in Westchester and her "wishy-washy version of deism." CI

There's More to Church than Proclamation

Wolfhart Pannenberg's sacramental theology.

Systematic Theology, Vol. 3, by Wolfhart Pannenberg (Eerdmans, 640 pp.; $49, hardcover). Reviewed by Donald G. Bloesch, emeritus professor of theology, University of Dubuque Theological Seminary. His book Jesus Christ: Savior and Lord (InterVarsity) is the fourth volume in a projected seven-volume systematic theology.

In this third volume of his much-acclaimed Systematic Theology, Wolfhart Pannenberg gives an in-depth treatment of the doctrines of the church, the sacraments, and the kingdom of God. He presents a high view of the church, regarding it as the locus of the Holy Spirit's action in relating those who believe to Jesus Christ, but he is adamant that the church not be confounded with the kingdom of God. The church is an anticipation and sign of the perfect fellowship of love that belongs to the eschatological consummation. The church does not build the kingdom, nor does the church control the salvific action of the Spirit in the preaching of the Word and the celebration of the sacraments. In a Barthian manner, Pannenberg steadfastly holds that God alone builds his kingdom, but the church can witness to this fact. He is deeply critical of liberation theology for calling Christians to bring in the kingdom through revolutionary political action.

The catholic side of Pannenberg's thought is particularly prominent in his discussion of the sacraments. He vigorously defends baptismal regeneration and the real presence of Christ in Communion. "In baptism there takes place our regeneration by the Holy Spirit." He also contends in a way that will invite criticism from evangelicals that, without baptism, faith in the gospel "is not yet saving faith in the full sense." At the same time, he is convinced that baptism without faith cannot effect salvation and that personal confession belongs to the act of baptism. He is also insistent that conversion to Christ is a prerequisite for sharing in the Lord's Supper.

Throughout this work Pannenberg engages in dialogue with Roman Catholicism and tries to build bridges wherever he can. He acknowledges that the doctrine of justification as enunciated in the Council of Trent, where justification becomes a lifelong process of inward purification, is in basic conflict with the Reformation discovery of justification as the gratuitous act by which God grants us remission of sins. Yet he commends Trent for associating justification with baptism, since baptism effects our entry into the mystical body of Christ. He is willing to make a place for apostolic succession and papal leadership among Christians. He entertains the possibility that the Petrine office of the bishop of Rome could become "a visible sign of the unity of the whole church to the degree that by theological reinterpretation and practical restructuring the office is subordinated to the primacy of the gospel."

In the area of eschatology, he sees no guarantee of an ultimate universal reconciliation, though he is firm in his hope of a cosmic renewal of the world that will include the vast mass of humanity. He

RISK-FREE TRIAL OFFER

History comes alive with Christian History magazine. Each vibrant issue highlights a particular figure or theme from the past with colorful illustrations, maps, and charts that make each copy a collector's treasury.

☐ YES! Please send me the current issue of Christian History and an invoice for $19.95. After reading this issue, I'll decide whether or not I want to keep Christian History coming. If I do, I'll return your invoice with my payment and receive three more quarterly issues, a full year in all. If not, I'll write "cancel" across the invoice and return it. I'll keep the first issue regardless.

E8HD4

Name

Address

City, State, Zip

E-mail

Outside U.S. add $6/year for delivery (U.S. funds only). Please allow 4-6 weeks for delivery.

Clip and mail coupon to:
CHRISTIAN HISTORY • Subscription Services
 P.O. Box 37060 • Boone, IA 50037-0060

CLERGY MOVE CENTER®

Serving clergy and members of all Christian ministries

Significant Interstate Discount
Guaranteed Price Estimates
Customized Personal Move Counseling
International Relocation Management
Financing for: Homes, Church Construction & Remodeling
Quality Service Since 1905

For total peace of mind, call our certified move counselors
 Vicki Bierlein, Jean Warnemuende, Lynne Sizick, Jim Stevens

BEKINS

1-800-248-8313

STEVENS

allows for the threat of eternal damnation and hell and even makes a place for purgatory, though not as an intermediate state for departed souls whose fate is partly in the hands of the church. He strives to hold together an open future in which real decisions can be made and confidence in the God who moves and guides history toward its final destination. He rejects the millennial idea of a special lordship of Christ in salvation history that will be superseded by the lordship of the Father.

Pannenberg is critical of the idea prevalent in Catholic mysticism that Christian love primarily concerns our relationship to God and only secondarily our relationship to our neighbor insofar as that person reflects God's love. Agape love means that God loves us for our own sakes and we love our neighbors for their own sakes. Yet Pannenberg wishes also to allow a positive role for eros love, maintaining that such love can lead to the worship of the Creator. There is no antithesis between eros and agape, for we can assume that Christian love is present in many forms of eros.

One can discern a rationalizing thrust in Pannenberg, though at the same time a respect for mystery and transcendence. He is critical of those who describe faith as the sacrifice of the intellect since real faith is based on knowledge of the gospel and assent to the fact of the resurrection. Faith involves both belief and trust (fidelucia), but the essence of faith is the latter. Pannenberg's conversation partners in this book from the side of philosophy are Hegel and Kant. There is scant mention of Pascal and Kierkegaard, who are decidedly more reserved concerning the role of philosophy in theology.

Pannenberg can be appreciated for seeking to maintain the biblical and historical moorings of the faith. He is committed to the faith affirmations of the Reformation, yet he is ready to subject these affirmations to the higher criterion of Holy Scripture. He is remarkably open to the wisdom of the Catholic church through the ages but makes clear that his loyalty is to the church of the Reformation so long as that church remains open to reform in the light of Scripture. He sees the church as a creation of the Spirit as well as of the Word, claiming that an emphasis on the Word alone can lead to "a theocracy of proclamation." He rightly stands against current theological eudemonism in his contention that faith frees us from a striving for our own happiness.

Some evangelicals, including this author, will raise the question whether Pannenberg's theology could lead to a new sacramentalism and ritualism that would subordinate the Word to the sacraments. Is the spiritual reality present in the sign, as he maintains, or does not the transcendent reality break into the sign and the sacramental celebration from the beyond? Does the sacrament effect what it signifies, or does not the Spirit of God reach out to us through the sacramental sign?

Pannenberg can say that in baptism and the Lord's Supper the sign is not distinct from what it signifies, but this is to bind the freedom of God to the rites of the church in a way that compromises the biblical doctrine of divine sovereignty. It also denies the infinite qualitative difference between the divine and the creaturely.

Such questions need to be pursued in depth, and Pannenberg's work clearly merits that level of engagement. Its publication in English translation is particularly timely, given the ecumenical dialogue that is now going on in evangelical circles as well as in the mainline churches. CI

Romero Outside the Box

The archbishop's homilies reveal a heroic biblical witness rather than the poster boy of liberation theology.

The Violence of Love, by Oscar Romero; compiled and translated by James R. Brockman; foreword by Henri Nouwen (Plough, 216 pp.; $14, paper). Reviewed by John Wilson.

On April 26, 1998, Bishop Juan José Gerardi was murdered in Guatemala, beaten to death with a concrete block, his head smashed in. Gerardi had just released a massive report on human-rights abuses during Guatemala's 36-year-long civil war.

Bishop Gerardi's death brings to mind another killing in Central America: the murder of Archbishop Oscar Romero of San Salvador on March 24, 1980. Romero, like Gerardi, was compelled by his faith to speak the truth, even at the cost of his life. Named as archbishop in 1977, Romero often denounced the selfishness of El Salvador's wealthy elite and the wanton brutality of its death squads. He defended the right of the poor to rise up against their oppressors—but he was also quick to condemn the excesses of the leftist guerrillas and their materialistic, Marxist dogmas. Above all, he was a witness to the love of Christ.

The Violence of Love, drawn mostly from Romero's homilies, is not a book of fully developed sermons but rather a gathering of pithy exhortations. Romero's words are simple but powerful, and the compiler and translator, James Brockman, has arranged many of the entries like poems on the page:

There can be no true liberation until people are freed from sin.

All the liberationist groups that spring up in our land
should bear this in mind.
The first liberation to be proposed by a political group that truly wants the people's liberation
must be to free oneself from sin.
While one is a slave of sin—
of selfishness, violence, cruelty, and hatred—
one is not fitted for the people's liberation.
MARCH 2, 1980

As this passage suggests, those who portray Romero as a convert to liberation theology are guilty of distorting his witness. The Romero who is a hero to many on the Left is a Romero created in their own image. But that does not give the Right an excuse to gloat. Why is it that we virtually never hear Romero mentioned in "conservative" quarters? Could it be that his message is simply too uncomfortable for many American Christians? For Christians of every stripe, whatever our political instincts, whatever our faith community, The Violence of Love is a challenge to be attentive to the Spirit's leading. CI

User Friendly

Having a hard time making the most of your personal or family devotions? Turn to The Student Bible – the easy-to-use study Bible with all the extras to help you get more out of the most important part of your day. Its reading style, comprehensive subject guide, and three-track reading plan help you better understand each passage.

The Student Bible is the perfect choice, whether you're a seasoned Christian or a new believer. Inside you'll discover easier ways to absorb the Bible, day after day. Choose the most popular and dependable Bible around. The Student Bible – for the student in all of us.

Choose from three updated designs – slim leatherbound, soft cover or hard cover.

A great gift for Sunday School classes, Bible studies, youth groups, friends, family or new believers!

ORDER
YOURS
TODAY AND SAVE UP
TO 50%

MAIL THIS COUPON TO:
The Student Bible • Christianity
Today, Inc. • P.O. Box 606 •
Mt. Morris, IL 61054-0606
(Coupon may be photocopied.)

BONDED LEATHER RETAILS FOR $49.99; HARDCOVER FOR $27.99; SOFTCOVER FOR $19.99

NO. OF BIBLES	% OFF	BONDED LEATHER		HARDCOVER NBN		SOFTCOVER NBS1			TOTAL COST
		PRICE	QTY	PRICE	QTY	PRICE	QTY NIV	QTY KJV
1	15%	$42.49		$23.79		$16.99
2 to 5	20%	$39.99		$22.39		$15.99
6 to 10	35%	$32.49		$18.19		$12.99
11 +	50%	$24.99		$13.99		$9.99

FOR PURCHASED LEATHER BIBLES, choose: Navy ☐ Burgundy ☐
(NBN) (NBB)

I get one FREE leather NIV Bible for EACH twelve ordered (any style). No. free _____

Prepaid orders only, please. ☐ Cash ☐ Visa ☐ MasterCard

Card No. _____ Card expires on _____

Signature _____

Name _____

Address _____

City _____

State _____

Zip _____

E-mail Address _____

Subtotal
Add 10% shipping
GRAND TOTAL

U.S. funds only. Please allow 4-6 weeks for delivery. Outside U.S. add 30% shipping.

NE8HD4

REFLECTIONS

Classic and contemporary excerpts

Human "Rights"

Once and for all, we must put out of our minds that the purpose of life here is to enjoy ourselves to have a good time to be happy to make money and to live in ease and comfort. That is not what life is all about.

You were put here for a purpose, and that purpose is not related to superficial pleasures.

No one owes you a living—not your parents, not your government, not life itself.

You do not have a right to happiness.

You have a right to nothing.

I believe that God wants us to be happy—but it is not a matter of our right, but of His love and mercy.

—Peter Marshall in John Doe, Disciple

Living Faith

It is your living faith in the adequacy of the One who is in you, which releases His divine action through you.

—W. Ian Thomas in
The Saving Life of Christ

Too Much of a Good Thing

Vanity is a subtle temptation to all of us. At first we may be ever so humble and unobtrusive, but success and substance can replace lowliness of heart with a lofty lordliness; when life becomes sweet with some honey of honor or harvest we are to take heed lest we take too much for ourselves.

—V. Raymond Edman in Sweeter Than Honey

Worse Than Ignorance

[T]hough one may be a competent art critic without ever having handled a brush or a chisel, and may legitimately pass judgment upon a book which one could not have written oneself, in the life of the soul there are no such privileges: there is no knowledge at all unless it is also and equally action, and if it is not that, then it is worse than ignorance.

—John Baillis in
A Diary of Ressling

Opposing Agendas

Our agenda is to fix the world until it can properly take care of us. God's agenda is to bring all things together in Christ until every knee bows before him.

—Larry Crabb in Finding God

Cooperation with God

If God has left some things contingent on man's thinking and working why may he not have left some things contingent on man's praying? The testimony of the great souls is a clear affirmative to this: some things never without thinking; some things never without working; some things never without praying! Prayer is one of the three forms of man's cooperation with God.

—Harry Emerson Fosdick in
The Meaning of Prayer

Just Ask

Heaven is full of answers to prayers for which no one ever bothered to ask.

—Billy Graham, quoted in Encounter Weekly online

God's Dwelling

Do you wish to pray in the temple? Pray in your own heart. But begin by being God's temple, for He will listen to those who invoke Him in His temple.

—Saint Augustine in
Johann. Evang., tract XV.6

I'm Okay? You're Okay?

We sit at the piano of life and insist that every note we strike is right—because we struck it.

We justify want of faith by saying, "I don't go to church, but I am better than those who do"; as one might say, "I don't pay taxes or serve the nation, but I am better than those who do."

If each man is his own judge and standard, then who shall say he is wrong?

—Fulton Sheen in Peace of Soul

Still in School

Our growth in prayer may be to us the test of our growth in all other respects. "Lord, teach us to pray," is a prayer for the young beginner and for the more advanced disciple; it is a suitable petition for us all, for we have none of us yet learned to the full the sacred art of supplication.

—Charles H. Spurgeon in Let It Begin with Me

Old Math

God is not found in the soul by adding anything, but by a process of subtraction.

—Meister Eckhart, quoted in Sacred Moments

God's View

Delight is keener, suffering is richer, thought is more exciting, love and friendship are deeper, steadier in the long perspective of God.

—Barbara Spofford Morgan in Skeptics' Search for God

"They put it in after your sermon on temptation."

Interested in a Bible Education?

ANDERSONVILLE BAPTIST SEMINARY

Over 6,000 students earning degree in Bible fields such as
Theology and Ministry.

CALL TODAY FOR A FREE
CATALOG & EVALUATION:

1-800-525-1611

Andersonville Baptist Seminary
P.O. Box 545
54 S. Butler St.
Camilla, GA 31730

Phone: 1-800-525-1611

Fax: 1-912-336-7000

Internet:

www.andersonvilleseminary.com

Even though as Christians we are required to study our Bibles, Bible study can seem at times to be a difficult task. But Andersonville Baptist Seminary can help give your studies guidance and purpose. All ABS students are working towards earning their degrees in fields such as Theology, Ministry, or Christian Counseling. Some are enjoying courses such as Galatians, Romans, and Ephesians verse-by-verse, while others are involved in Homiletics, Grief Counseling, Missions, and Ministry Preparation. ABS has been training Bible students for over 16 years, and we are waiting for you...

Join thousands today and earn your degree!

- Monthly Payment Plans
- Preacher's Discounts
- NCCA Christian Counseling Program
- Fundamental & Conservative
- Lifetime Credit
- Transfer Credit Accepted
- Associate Through Doctorate Degrees

ANDERSONVILLE
BAPTIST SEMINARY

THE MARKETPLACE

Cost: 46 cents per character (each space & punctuation counts as a character); avg. 45 characters per line. Min. $39.10 (85 characters). CT blind box number available at $6 each insertion; checkmark box [✓] $14 each insertion. Supply permanent street address and phone number. Ads set display style: $276/column inch. Combination package available for CHRISTIANITY TODAY, CHRISTIAN READER, & YOUR CHURCH: 2 magazines—44 cents per character per insertion; 3 magazines—42 cents per character per insertion. Display style: 2 magazines—$263 per insertion; 3 magazines—$252 per insertion. All classified ads will now be automatically placed on CHRISTIANITY ONLINE at no additional charge. IMPORTANT: Prepayment & written confirmation required to process ads. Visa, MasterCard, or personal check accepted; fax (630) 260-9401. Employment ads are given priority. All other ads will be placed in first available issue. Deadline for reservation or cancellation is seven weeks prior to actual issue date. Address correspondence to: Classified Advertising, Christianity Today, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

DIRECTOR OF MUSIC MINISTRIES

The Old Cutler Presbyterian Church (PCA) is searching for a Director of Music Ministries. Old Cutler is a dynamic, growing congregation of 1,000 in Miami, Florida. The ministry now has approximately 200 people involved in chancel choir, praise and worship teams, orchestra, worship band, children's and youth music. We desire a leader who shares in a heart for worship and a willingness to see the gospel applied to music in the church. We work as a team and enjoy the ministry of Christ in a city that reaches the world. If interested, send résumé, references, and any tapes to: The Old Cutler Presbyterian Church, 14401 Old Cutler Road, Miami, FL 33158, c/o Rev. Mike Khandjian.

EAGLE BOOK CLUBS, INC., a division of Eagle Publishing, owns and operates three negative-option book clubs: Conservative Book Club, Christian Family Book Club, and Movie/Entertainment Book Club. We are looking for a number of talented individuals to join our team and help us continue our dramatic growth. We are located on Capitol Hill in Washington, DC, near Union Station. Marketing Director: We are looking for a hard-charging, experienced direct marketer to lead our marketing efforts for the Christian Family Book Club. Direct marketing (8+ years), book club, and Christian market experience are required. Duties will include: managing the marketing staff, all acquisition marketing activity, including results analysis, back-end marketing programs that maximize lifetime value, and meeting budgeted goals. Position reports to the general manager of Eagle Book Clubs, Inc. Please send or fax résumé and salary history to: Eagle Book Clubs, Attn: B. Lewis, One Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, DC 20001, or fax: (202) 216-0614.

THRIVING EVANGELICAL CHURCH, over 2,000 in attendance in eight years, looking for energetic, spirit-led worship director. Our emphasis is on Bible teaching and participatory singing. We want to sing as though we are at Promise Keepers. If you have the proven ability to lead a congregation in worshiping exuberantly, please apply. If you can demonstrate this, please send videotape. Contact Steve Evisz at (513) 459-0800 ext. 317 or email: steve@hope-church.org

WE ARE AN EVANGELICAL and conservatively charismatic church of 250+ people who seek a well-qualified individual for a full-time position as Pastor of Youth. This person should have a passion for ministry to youth and a vision for enabling them to grow toward mature Christian adulthood. This person must meet the qualifications of an elder and work well with a "team approach" to ministry. Interested individuals should send inquiries and résumés to: Youth Pastor Search Committee, Grace Covenant Church, 4502 Starkey Road, Suite 5, Roanoke, VA 24014.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

PASTOR OF CELL MINISTRIES

Northern Indianapolis C&MA church is transitioning to a purpose-driven cell paradigm. Area is 78% unchurched, state's fastest growing and highest per capita income. Candidate must have experience in cell-group ministry, strong relational and outreach skills, and be a team player. Send résumé to Pastor Tom Brunner, Hope Church, 2500 E. 98th St., Indianapolis, IN 46280; fax: (317) 846-6836; www.hopechurchindy.com

DIRECTOR OF CHILDREN'S EDUCATION The Church of the Holy Spirit, located in Virginia's Roanoke Valley, is a growing 500+ member evangelical Episcopal church with a young congregation and a plethora of children. We are in search of an experienced individual who can take our children's ministry to the highest level possible. A master's degree in Christian education or a related field is preferable. Must be a born-again believer with proven leadership and organizational skills coupled with superior creativity. Send résumé to DCE Search Committee, The Church of the Holy Spirit, P.O. Box 21038, Roanoke, VA 24018 prior to August 31.

FULL-TIME CHILDREN'S PASTOR

First Baptist Church of Everett, WA, a multi-staffed, evangelical congregation, is seeking a person with gifts and passion to oversee a ministry to children in nursery through 5th grade. Send résumé to: Search Committee, 1616 Pacific Ave., Everett, WA 98201 or e-mail: bharpell@fbc-everett.org

CHURCH BUSINESS MANAGER

Noroton Presbyterian Church, a large, vibrant congregation in western Connecticut, seeks business manager for financial and properties management. Must live in the greater New York/CT area. Send résumé to: Dr. George Cladis, Noroton Presbyterian Church, P.O. Box 3401, Darien, CT 06820.

CHRISTIAN WEB SITE design company seeks independent acct. reps to sell our Internet services. High commission, flex hrs. Box 8022, Saddle Brook, NJ 07663.

SENIOR PASTOR

Far Hills Baptist Church is the largest Southern Baptist Church in Ohio with 8 full-time ministers and a weekly attendance of over 1,500. Our vision is to build a church that makes a difference in the lives of individuals, the community, and the world by using the most effective traditional and innovative approaches for making disciples. Having purchased 40 acres in a prime location, we are preparing to grow into the 21st century. We are seeking a senior pastor who is a gifted biblical preacher with strong communication skills and a proven leader with a passion for reaching the unchurched. Please send résumé to: Far Hills Baptist Church, Attn: Pastor Search Committee, 5200 Far Hills Ave., Dayton, OH 45429.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

SENIOR PASTOR

Pastor needed for Pacific-Islands Bible Church. (Nondenominational, evangelical, 200 people.) Send résumé, pictures, and audio/video tapes to: 95-075 Waikalani Drive, Mililani, HI 96789.

FACULTY POSITION

Evangelism and Global Mission Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary is seeking a faculty member to teach in the areas of evangelism and global mission. This person will occupy the William A. Benfield Professorship of Evangelism and Global Mission. Applicants should have a Ph.D. or comparable degree in missiology or another appropriate field of theological study. Applications will also be considered from degree candidates who are in the final stages of their work. Applications from women and from minority racial-ethnic candidates are especially encouraged. This person will be expected to teach M.Div., M.A., M.A.C.E., M.A.M.F.T., Th.M., and D.Min. students. This faculty member should be able to relate the history and theology of evangelism and global mission to contemporary issues confronting the church's witness in the United States and other parts of the world. Parish experience in this country and/or in other countries is strongly desirable. This person should have a strong interest in preparing candidates for the Christian ministry. This person should be committed to helping students understand the church's evangelical and ecumenical calling and to relating evangelism and global mission with other areas of theological curriculum. Rank is negotiable on the basis of experience; appointment will begin in the fall of 1999. Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary follows EEO guidelines and affirmative action procedures. Send dossiers and a list of references to President John M. Mulder, 1044 Alta Vista Road, Louisville, KY 40205. Deadline: October 1, 1998.

MINISTRY POSITION AVAILABLE. Associate Pastor of Music and Ministry Development, Mansfield Baptist Church, Port Murray, NJ; (908) 689-3272, fax: (908) 689-3280. Call for job description.

PASTOR OF COMMUNITY LIFE

Village Church of Gurnee, a fast-growing church of 1,300+, is looking for an experienced pastor who has a vision and passion for developing community through small groups and for developing a biblically based lay counseling ministry. We are an evangelical church in a growing far northern suburb of Chicago that is making a conscious shift to become a church "of" small groups. Skills needed: Proven ministry experience; strong leader who is gifted in shepherding, training, team building, vision casting, counseling, and equipping lay counselors. M.Div. and five years ministry experience preferred. Send résumé to: Village Church of Gurnee, Box 110, 1319 N. Hunt Club Road, Gurnee, IL 60031.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

FACULTY POSITION

Westminster Theological Seminary, Box 27009, Philadelphia, PA 19118. Westminster Theological Seminary announces an opening in the Department of Practical Theology with a specialty in missions. This is a full-time, tenure-track position that begins July 1, 1999. Responsibilities include teaching M.Div., M.A.R., and graduate-level (D.Min.) courses (14-16 semester hours per academic year), and various committee assignments. Applicants should have an earned doctoral degree and show strong evidence of scholarly writing and quality teaching. Commitment to biblical inerrancy, Reformed theology, and Presbyterian church government, as shown by subscription to the Westminster Standards and significant involvement in the life of a Presbyterian or Reformed church, is required. All qualified applicants are urged to apply. Salary will be commensurate with rank. Candidates are urged to send curriculum vitae with name and address of two references immediately. Contact Dr. William Barker, Vice President for Academic Affairs.

PRIEST ASSOCIATE

Lively, loving Episcopal church seeks FT priest associate to equip congregation for ministry, especially youth, eventually adults also. Oversight responsible for youth and education, assist rector in worship. Must be ordained or soon to be. Life experience desirable. Send app. letter & résumé to: D. McKnight, Messiah Episcopal, 1631 Ford Pkwy., St. Paul, MN 55116.

SENIOR PASTOR

Small, independent evangelical church seeks a senior pastor. Primary doctrinal statement is the Baptist Confession of 1689. Amillennial, contemporary worship style, noncessationist with respect to the gifts of the Spirit. Compensation package very competitive and based on experience. Send résumé to: Search Committee, 104 Leicester Terrace, Hampton, VA 23666.

BOOKSTORE MANAGER

Covenant Bookstore, Chicago, IL. Combination Christian retail and university bookstore seeks manager with experience in book buying and returns, gift buying, inventory management, marketing and promotions, motivating and training employees, and excellent customer service. Medical insurance and other benefits. Compensation commensurate with skill level and experience. Direct letter of application and résumé to: Don Meyer, Evangelical Covenant Church, 5101 N. Francisco Avenue, Chicago, IL 60625; fax: (773) 784-4366.

PASTOR OF CHILDREN & FAMILY MINISTRIES

Do you have a heart for children and a strong vision for developing ministries for children and families? Do you have a passion to shepherd, train, and develop children's ministry leaders and workers? Village Church of Gurnee, a fast-growing church of 1,300+, is looking for an experienced pastor to give overall leadership to our children's ministry directors and shepherd 160+ leaders and workers. We are an evangelical church in a growing northern Illinois community that ministers to many young families. Skills needed: proven ministry experience; strong leader who is gifted in shepherding, team building, and teaching. M.Div. and five years ministry experience preferred. Send résumé to: Village Church of Gurnee, Box 310, 1319 N. Hunt Club Road, Gurnee, IL 60031.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

DIRECTOR OF CELEBRATION MINISTRIES sought for a growing, nondenominational, evangelical church in Albany, NY. Qualified applicants should have keen administrative abilities, an ability and a desire to create and mobilize multiple teams of lead worshipers, be highly relational in leadership style, and have proven experience as a worship leader. Will need to recruit, train, and oversee volunteer personnel, coordinate and be involved in multiple subministries while planning and implementing expansion of celebration ministries. Negotiable salary. Please send a video sample of your worship leading along with a résumé to: Dave Triller, c/o Grace Fellowship, 3 Cerone Commercial Dr., Albany, NY 12205.

DIRECTOR OF YOUTH MINISTRIES

Village Seven Presbyterian Church, Colorado Springs, CO, is seeking an energetic, visionary, committed, and highly motivated person as Director of Youth Ministries to guide and aid young people in growing and developing mentally, physically, and spiritually. Ministry program will support the purpose statement of the church: "We envision Village Seven Presbyterian Church to be a life-giving and reproducing church according to the Word of God and for His glory." Elements of this vision are worshiping, teaching, nurturing, praying, and reaching. Candidates must have a strong Reformed faith with previous experience in a successful youth program. This is an exciting opportunity in a large growing church at the foot of Pikes Peak in the Colorado Rockies. Send résumé and ministry data form to: Mr. William C. Stephens, Director of Administration, Village Seven Presbyterian Church, 4050 Nonchalant Circle S., Colorado Springs, CO 80917.

FACULTY POSITION

Westminster Theological Seminary, Box 27009, Philadelphia, PA 19118. Westminster Theological Seminary announces an opening in the Department of Systematic Theology. This is a full-time, tenure-track position that begins July 1, 1999. Responsibilities include teaching M.Div., M.A.R., and graduate-level (Th.M, Ph.D.) courses (14-16 semester hours per academic year), and various committee assignments. Applicants must hold the Ph.D./Th.D. or be in the final stages of doctoral work and show strong evidence of scholarly writing and quality teaching. Commitment to biblical inerrancy, Reformed theology and Presbyterian church government, as shown by subscription to the Westminster Standards and significant involvement in the life of a Presbyterian or Reformed church, is required. All qualified applicants are urged to apply. Salary will be commensurate with rank. Candidates are urged to send curriculum vitae with name and address of two references immediately. Contact Dr. William Barker, Vice President for Academic Affairs.

ACADEMIC BOOK MARKETING SPECIALIST

One of the world's largest Christian publishers is seeking a Marketing Specialist responsible for developing, implementing, and managing the overall marketing promotion and sales strategies for all Broadman & Holman academic books. Bachelor's degree required with a specialization in marketing, advertising, or communications. Seminary degree a plus. If qualified and interested, mail or fax your résumé to: LifeWay Christian Resources of the Southern Baptist Convention, Human Resources Dept., MSN 121, 127 9th Ave. North, Nashville, TN 37234-0121; fax: (615) 251-5017.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

DIRECTOR OF YOUTH sought for 1,700+ member Lutheran congregation in near west suburban Chicago to serve teens through relational ministry. Please send letter of inquiry and résumé to: Youth Director Search Committee, Grace Lutheran Church, 7300 W. Division, River Forest, IL 60305.

FACULTY POSITION

Westminster Theological Seminary, Box 27009, Philadelphia, PA 19118. Westminster Theological Seminary announces an opening in the Department of Old Testament. This is a full-time, tenure-track position that begins July 1, 1999. Responsibilities include teaching M.Div., M.A.R., Th.M., and Ph.D. courses and various committee assignments. Applicants must hold the Ph.D./Th.D. or be in the final stages of doctoral work and show strong evidence of scholarly writing and quality teaching. Commitment to biblical inerrancy, Reformed theology and Presbyterian church government, as shown by subscription to the Westminster Standards and significant involvement in the life of a Presbyterian or Reformed church, is required. All qualified applicants are urged to apply. Salary will be commensurate with rank. Candidates are urged to send curriculum vitae with name and address of two references immediately. Contact Dr. William Barker, Vice President for Academic Affairs.

looking for pastoral staff?
seeking a new ministry?

www.ministrysearch.com

e-mail version also available:
info@ministrysearch.com

TEACH IN JAPAN

Evangelical church reaching out to the Japanese through teaching English as a second language. Mission-minded single female person needed; 2-year contract. Support and accommodations. Write Shukugawa Bible Church, 7-12 Aioi-cho Nishinomiya-city, 662-0063 Japan; phone: 011-81-798-72-6055; fax: 011-81-798-72-4128; e-mail: scc@msg.biglobe.ne.jp

PASTOR OF ADULT EDUCATION

Village Church of Gurnee, a fast-growing church of 1,300+, is committed to developing an intentional process for discipleship, opportunities for spiritual gift discovery, various adult educational opportunities, and programs for leadership development. We are looking for an experienced pastor with an exceptional passion for developing mature Christians and effective leaders. He will build and lead teams of ministry directors who will develop these areas. Skills needed: Proven ministry experience; strong leader who is gifted in teaching and administration; solid theological understanding of Christian growth and ministry. M.Div. and five years ministry experience preferred. We are an evangelical church in a growing northern suburb of Chicago. Send résumé to: Village Church of Gurnee, Box 210, 1319 N. Hunt Club Road, Gurnee, IL 60031.

SEEK ENERGETIC, enthusiastic, creative, proven leader to pastor a visionary congregation with a challenging opportunity to expand with a booming community. Send PIF to Phil Carmack, Big Cove PC, Camp Ground Road, Brownsboro, AL 35741.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

YOUTH MINISTER

Help Jr. High, Sr. High, and college students develop faith in Jesus, a growing understanding of Scripture, and healthy relationships. Applicant needs relational, communication, teaching, and organizational skills. Contact First Baptist Church, 1340 K St., Lincoln, NE 68508; phone: (402) 477-4198 or e-mail: LincolnFBC@aol.com

One of these IT jobs could be the answer to your prayers.

We're one of the world's largest TV ministries and our IT division is ranked 29th nationally by PC Week. We have the technology and a mission. These are the committed people we need.

Business Systems Analysts Client/Server Developers
Internet Developers
GUI Developers
Database Specialists
Network Engineers
Project Managers

Excellent salary and benefits, including relocation. Resumes

E-mailed to employment@cbn.org

Fax to 757-226-3899.

Request application at 1-800-888-7894

Check out our website at <http://www.cbn.org>

The Christian Broadcasting Network, Inc.

DUE TO GROWTH AND EXPANSION, Belhaven College seeks those faculty who are excited to serve in the following areas at a college which prepares students to serve Christ Jesus in their occupation, relationships, and in the world of ideas.

- Business Administration Faculty in Memphis (DBA or PhD required)
 - Director of Libraries (Librarian Masters required)
 - History Faculty (Fall 1999, PhD required)
 - Mathematics Department Chair (PhD required)
 - Sports Medicine Faculty (PhD & Athletic Training Certification required)
 - Theatre Department Chair (MFA required)
- Send vita to Daniel C. Fredericks, Provost, 1500 Peachtree St., Jackson, MS 39202. Minorities are encouraged to apply.

ACMC PRESIDENT

ACMC (Advancing Churches in Missions Commitment) is an organization with a vision to increase the passion of the American church for world evangelization. We are looking for a godly servant leader with ten years of progressive management experience and a desire to stimulate local churches to reach across cultures with the gospel. Previous experience in working with and/or through local churches regarding missions is essential. Demonstrated skills in these areas are desired: supervision, strategic/tactical/financial planning, resource development. Fax résumés to: Dale Folsom at (316) 265-2052; e-mail: DaleFolsom@aol.com or mail to: 501 Springlake Lane, Wichita, KS 67230.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

NEW MAJOR GIFTS PROGRAM

The Salvation Army offers a superb opportunity for the right mission-driven development professionals. We are looking for nine such candidates in the Southeastern United States. Candidates will have a record of successful major donor work, be responsible to develop an annual plan, have strong written and verbal skills, and be self-motivated. The focus of these positions is to develop long-term relationships with key individuals, foundations, and corporate donors while representing the mission of The Salvation Army. EOE. Please send a cover letter, résumé, and salary requirements to: Paul Curnow, The Salvation Army, 1424 Northeast Expressway, Atlanta, GA 30329-2088.

SENIOR PASTOR

Independent evangelical church seeks experienced pastor to serve as senior pastor with a diverse congregation. The candidate must have the passion and ability to preach the entire Word of God. Applicants must have college and seminary degrees. Duties include: preaching and leading Bible studies, expanding missions and outreach programs, visitation, and developing church growth. Inquiries to Northside Congregational Church, 820 W. Mt. Pleasant Rd., Evansville, IN 47711, Attn: Pulpit Committee.

DIRECTOR OF DEVELOPMENT for Pioneer Clubs, dedicated to Christian education of children. Need experienced professional to manage total fundraising program. Must have experience with various acquisition techniques and planned giving. Experience with Pioneer Clubs a plus! Salaried with benefits. Send résumé to Mary Hackman, Pioneer Clubs, Box 788, Wheaton, IL 60189.

CHILDREN'S MINISTER

Casas Adobes Baptist Church, a large, contemporary Southern Baptist church in Tucson, AZ, needs a Minister to Children. Administrative gifts and leadership skills required to oversee programs serving 700 1st to 5th graders. Résumés to: Gary Siefers, 2131 W. Ina Rd., Tucson, AZ 85741.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES: Advent Group Ministries, a Christian social service agency located in San Jose, CA, seeks resident counselors, night counselors, summer interns for adolescent residential treatment programs. Competitive salary, benefits. Residential positions provide room & board. Contact Deborah Norris: (408) 281-0708; (1-800) 98ADVENT; fax: (408) 281-2658.

MINISTRY PLACEMENT for pastors & associates or churches. Call (503) 357-7830 or Believer's Dynamics, POB 596, Forest Grove, OR 97116. Since 1977.

NATIONAL CHURCH PLACEMENT SERVICE Churches and Ministers are connecting with CMPN, P.O. Box 1132, Barre, VT 05641; (802) 476-8902.

ASSOCIATE PASTOR FOR ADULT MINISTRIES sought for dynamic 560+-member Evangelical Covenant church for ministry with small groups, singles, adult education, discipleship, and family life. Responsive, visionary, and enthusiastic pastoral staff and congregation; strong lay leadership. Prefer broad church-based experience with strong leadership, organizational, and people skills. Require master's degree and eligibility for Covenant ordination. Reply to: Search Committee, Hillside Covenant Church, 2060 Magnolia Way, Walnut Creek, CA 94596.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

DIRECTOR OF MARKETING for Pioneer Clubs, dedicated to Christian education of children. Need marketing professional with 5 years experience, including sales, direct mail, and telemarketing, proven management abilities, with a broad-based understanding of the protestant evangelical church. Christian education background and club experience a plus. Submit cover letter and résumé to Mary Hackman, Pioneer Clubs, Box 788, Wheaton, IL 60189.

NEW TESTAMENT STUDIES

Fuller Theological Seminary's School of Theology invites nominations and applications for a tenure-track faculty appointment in New Testament Studies, at the rank of assistant or beginning associate professor, available beginning September 1, 1999. Requirements: Ph.D. in New Testament; strong interest in New Testament exegesis and theology; promise in research, publication and teaching; commitment to theological education in the service of the church. M.Div. desirable. Responsibilities include: teaching New Testament core and elective courses at the M.A./M.Div. level. Applications, including letter of intent and curriculum vita, should be addressed to: Dean William A. Dyrness, School of Theology, Fuller Theological Seminary, 135 N. Oakland Ave., Pasadena, CA 91182 or e-mail: <theology@fuller.edu>

MISSION PASTOR/DIRECTOR

Energetic, 2,400-member suburban congregation in Seattle area seeks a person with demonstrated ability in promoting, developing, and leading mission efforts. Clear commitment to Christ and biblical mission mandate required. Significant leadership experience with local community and cross-cultural outreach activity important. Send résumé to: Jack Roos, APNC chair, First Presbyterian Church of Bellevue, 1717 Bellevue Way NE, Bellevue, WA 98004.

DEVELOPMENT/DIRECTOR

Experienced professional to head young department in growing 50 year-old ministry to disabled. Great opportunity to build own department. Minimum 2 to 5 years professional development experience. Create department vision, utilize every appropriate method, take department to next level, capital campaign experience helpful. Competitive salary, benefits. Résumé to Dave Rowland, Christian League for the Handicapped, Box 948, Walworth, WI 53184.

MAKE A CHANGE! Teach English, business, or computers in China, Russia, Muslim Asia, or C. Europe. Call ESI at: (1-800) 895-7955. All college majors/degrees welcome.

WORSHIP/MUSIC PASTOR WANTED

St. Louis suburban area Baptist (CBA) mid-sized church, looking for a full-time minister of worship and music. Candidates must appreciate various music styles and have a pastor's heart. This multi-staffed church is located in a small community in the metro area, a wonderful place for raising a family. To learn more, please send résumés to Mr. Wally Fedder at 723 St. Louis Rd., Collinsville, IL 62234 or fax to (618) 344-0831 or e-mail to: fbc_collinsville@juno.com

TEACH IN JAPAN: Reach Asians for Christ. Teach in English. Several K-12 & ESL teacher openings. Mission school of 400; 2-year contracts. Must raise partial support. Write Dr. Bob Greninger, Okinawa Christian School, P.O. Box 14250, Gainesville, FL 32604; (1-800) 446-6423.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

An Evangelical Free Church in northwest suburban Chicago seeks Pastor of Worship and Music to provide leadership in worship, to direct the music program of the entire church, and to shepherd those involved in worship and music ministries. Music degree with advanced training preferred. Previous experience in worship and music ministry required. We are a growing body of over 600 with a diverse age and interests profile. This is a senior level staff position and compensation will include commensurate salary, health care, vacation, continuing education and retirement benefits. For an information packet and application, please reply to Worship and Music Pastor Search Committee, The Village Church of Barrington, 1600 E. Main Street, Barrington, IL 60010. Phone: (847) 381-5221; fax: (847) 381-5288; e-mail: vcb-davc@juno.com

CHILDREN'S PASTOR

Large Midwestern church seeks children's pastor to oversee the church's ministries to children and their families. Applicants should possess good leadership, administrative and relational skills, ability to develop volunteer leaders, and administer a large multi-faceted children's ministry. Understanding of cultural issues facing children and families and enthusiasm for outreach to children and parents are essential. Advanced degree and large-church experience preferred. Send résumés to: Children's Pastor Calling Committee, P.O. Box 24414, Minneapolis, MN 55424.

YOUTH PASTOR

Shady Grove Presbyterian Church (PCA), located in Montgomery County, MD, north of Wash. D.C., is a 180-member congregation seeking a full-time Youth Pastor to develop its ministry to teens. Candidates should possess a commitment to the Reformed faith, a relational/discipleship orientation to youth ministry, and the proven ability to equip volunteers. Compensation commensurate with experience. Direct inquiries to: Search Committee, Shady Grove PCA, 16911 Redland Rd., Derwood, MD 20855; (301) 330-4326.

FULLER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY's School of Theology invites nominations and applications for the Arthur DeKruyer/Christ Church Oak Brook Chair of Preaching, a tenure-track appointment at the rank of full or associate professor, beginning September 11, 1999. Requirements: doctoral degree, M.Div. or equivalent, ordination, with some teaching experience. Gifted preacher with pastoral experience. Research interests supportive of teaching specialty. Strong commitment to theoretical and practical aspects of biblical preaching. Sensitive to ecumenical and cultural issues, to the urban world and its pressures, to difference theological traditions. Publication record and ability to contribute to shaping advanced degree program desirable. Responsibilities include: basic instruction in preaching with heavy involvement in practicum work. Applications, including letter of intent and curriculum vita, should be addressed to: Dean William A. Dyrness, School of Theology, Fuller Theological Seminary, 1356 N. Oakland Ave., Pasadena, CA 91182 or e-mail: <theology@fuller.edu>

INVEST YOUR SKILLS, vocation, and experience ministering physically and spiritually to the hurting, broken, and lost in the 10/40 Window. HOW? Contact: Mission to Unreached Peoples, toll free at (1-888) 447-6950, or E-mail: mupinfo@mup.org or HTTP://www.mup.org/mupinfo/

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

CHRISTIANITY TODAY, INC. is growing and is looking to fill various newly created positions. Our mission is to communicate, primarily through 13 outstanding periodicals, the depth and transforming power of the Gospel as it penetrates all spheres of life. We are looking for editors, graphic designers, direct mail marketing and circulation professionals, advertising sales manager, computer support technician, and various administrative support staff who would like to combine career with ministry. Send résumé and cover letter with salary history to: CTi, HR Dept.-CT, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188; fax: (630) 260-0114; email: CTiHRDept@aol.com

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

CHRISTIAN BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY. Call 24 hrs/day (1-800) 585-5873, Option 3, to receive a free info packet. Leave my I.D. #11085.

ISN'T IT TIME YOU BECAME YOUR OWN BOSS?

Profit from people watching TV! Multimedia company looking for partners interested in profiting from TV, Internet, travel, & home shopping. Earn bonuses & residual income for life. Call 24 hrs. Mon-Sat. (1-888) 285-7887.

THRIVING EVANGELICAL CHRISTIAN SCHOOL (interdenominational) in Florida City has been given 11 acres of prime land to develop a new plant. Looking for a philanthropist to become a major partner in this exciting project. For details, write: CT Classified Ads, Box 216, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188

DYNAMIC INDUSTRY

Please call if interested in a business in your area involving state-of-the-art technology. Excellent profit, repeat national accounts, no competition, complete training and ongoing marketing support. Let us help you change your life with this perfect family business. Full- or part-time. Investment guaranteed, financing available. Call Greg at (1-800) 366-1104.

RETIRED PASTOR/ENTREPRENEUR/LAY LEADER type. Build a lucrative business with cutting-edge technology. My average managers earn $80K/yr. and other perks: cars, travel, profit sharing, & more! Investment required, 0 interest financing for credit-worthy candidates. Sales experience a plus. North America is your territory. If you're success minded, call Doug at Action Jackson Marketing, Inc. (1-888) 426-6826.

ASSEMBLE PRODUCTS at home for best companies. Great extra income idea! (1-800) 377-6000, ext. 8290.

DRAMA

☒ CHRISTIAN DRAMA. Hundreds of plays for adults and youth. Free catalog. Eldridge Publishing: (1-800) 95-CHURCH, or http://www.95church.com.

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

THE HOUSE CHURCH MOVEMENT—a catalog of books and tapes available on this fresh, new, revolutionary movement. P.O. Box 285, Sargent, GA 30275; (1-800) 645-2342.

THE LIBRARY OF SPIRITUAL CLASSICS. The greatest literature on the deeper Christian life ever penned. Free catalog. Spiritual Classics, 1275 Hwy. 16 W, Newnan, GA 30263; (770) 254-9442.

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

6,000 GOOD USED BOOKS FOR SALE. Get monthly free book list from Pastor Wayne, 3940 Winewood Ct. SE, Grand Rapids, MI 49508; E-mail: 73223.2010@compuserve.com

EVANGELISTIC MATERIAL IN ARABIC: books, tracts, cassettes. In English: The Bible and Islam ($4.95 U.S./$5.95 Canada). Write: Arabic Dept., Back to God Hour, 6555 W. College Dr., Palos Heights, IL 60463.

BAKER BOOK HOUSE buys libraries, large & small. Phone: (616) 957-3110; fax: (888) 263-7310; E-mail: used.books@bakerbooks.com. Grand Rapids, MI 49546.

SHORT-RUN BOOK PUBLISHING! We can publish your book professionally in quantities as low as 250 books for less than $1,200 U.S.! Take advantage of the Canadian dollar: For free info contact: Essence Publishing, 103B Cannifton Rd., Belleville, ON, Canada K8N 4V2; (1-800) 238-6376; fax: (613) 962-3055; www.essence.on.ca

200,000 USED BOOKS. Libraries purchased. Kregel Used Books, Box 2607, Grand Rapids, MI 49501; (616) 459-9444; fax: (1-888) USD-BOOK; Web: www.Kregel.com

WHAT DOES THE BIBLE say about the end days? Revival or apostasy? Free cassette, HBF, 4002 W. 42nd St., Tulsa, OK 74107.

PUBLISH YOUR BOOK NOW! Your book can be produced and promoted by the leading subsidy book publisher. Send for free booklet P-53. Vantage Press, 516 W. 34th St., New York, NY 10001.

FROM AUGUSTINE TO C. S. LEWIS: LEGACIES OF THE FAITH, by Dr. Ed Emy. Daily devotional readings collected from over 30 years, of great Christian literature. Subject index aids ministers, evangelists, and Christian workers. Order your copy/ies now for only $8 plus $1.25 (U.S.) P/H per copy from the OMS International Bookstore, P.O. Box A, Greenwood, IN 46142-6599.

MANUSCRIPTS WANTED. ALL TYPES. Publisher w/ 75-year tradition. Author's Guide to Subsidy Publishing: (1-800) 695-9599.

PRODUCTS

SANDBLASTED redwood church signs, banners, door, parking lot, and lighted signs. Brochure: (1-800) 583-0317.

EDUCATION

SEMINARY DEGREES: HOME STUDY Theological Education Center, 4701 88th Ave. N. #103, Pinellas Park, FL 33782. Online catalog http://www.harborcity.org/tec/ or send $2. Phone: (504) 296-7531.

FUNDRAISING

GREAT FUNDRAISING IDEA! Need a fundraising project for your church or group? Call (1-800) 872-1278 now for a free color brochure on full-color commemorative plates offered by Preston-Hopkinson, P.O. Box 1, Lynchburg, VA 24505. Ask for brochure 2020.

FREE INFO. Your church etched on beveled glass suncatcher/ornaments. Low min. Wullbrandt Studio C, 1270 Hwy. 65, Hampton, IA 50441; (515) 456-3580. www.heartoftiowa.com/wullbrandt/

COMPUTER/VIDEO PROGRAMS

COMPUTER SOFTWARE for church membership, contributions, and accounting. PowerChurch Plus is the most widely used church-administration software package. Call or write today for free information. F1 Software, Dept. CT, 208 Ridgefield Dr., Asheville, NC 28806; (1-800) 486-1800.

MINISTRY OPPORTUNITIES

MINISTRY SERVICE, matching ministers/ministries. Connect with CCRS, P.O. Box 398, Sheffield, MA 01257. Phone: (413) 229-3627; e-mail: churchrectr@juno.com

RIPE for HARVEST, INC. ASSISTS MISSIONARIES!

Write or call Tim Smith, D.Min, President of this independent evangelical mission. PO Box 182184, San Diego, CA 92178-2184; phone/fax: (619) 435-0432.

VISIT PRISON IN AN ENVELOPE. By writing an inmate you can fulfill the Lord's command to remember those in prison. Contact Prison Fellowship Ministries (CT), P.O. Box 17500, Washington, DC 20041; (703) 478-0100, x590; <http://www.pfm.org>

PREACH CHRIST to nations via shortwave radio. (561) 697-4547; www.flinet.com/~grlmin

COUPLES NEEDED. Boys averaging in age from 12 to 16 need you to create a loving, caring, nurturing home. Become a House Parent at the Omaha Home for Boys. You'll get training in our nationally recognized treatment program, enjoy full benefits, including health insurance, and know you're making a difference in young people's lives. Starting salary of $29,000 plus free housing, meals, and utilities. For information, call Kevin Orr (1-800) 408-4663 Monday-Friday or visit our Web site: www.omahafreenet.org/boyshome. The Omaha Home for Boys, 4343 N. 52nd Street, Omaha, NE 68104, An Equal Opportunity Employer.

MISSION NANNYS. Women 50+ travel and help missionaries with domestic duties. P.O. Box 609, Edgewater, MD 21037

MINISTRY AIDS

✓ SERMONHELP.COM offers: Full text sermons, sermon ideas, worship helps, Scripture notes, children's stories, and more. Lectionary based or topical. Visit www.sermonhelp.com for exceptional value. Mention CT for 5% discount.

SMALL GROUP MINISTRY FOR CHURCHES. Looking for a program that works? If so, write for a free resource to John Meacham, First Presbyterian Church, 503 Lakeside Drive, Garner, NC 27529.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR TEENAGER parenting seminars. Find out how to schedule one at your church. Call (1-800) 561-9309 or visit our website at <http://www.uyt.com>

REAL ESTATE

MOVING? Call us to find a full time, highly recommended Realtor who:

- *Is committed to utmost integrity and service
- *If requested, will also introduce you to the Christian community, churches and schools

A totally FREE SERVICE (USA/Canada)

The EXODUS Network - 1-800-395-8556

INSURANCE

Missionaries Worldwide
Health Plan
For Missionaries working overseas!

FHI Benefit Plans/Aetna Global Benefits
800-347-9547
www.rfdriver.com/shigroup.htm

SERVICES

DEPRESSION. Share your experience in a book to help others recover. All entries confidential. A New Day, Inc., P.O. Box 1837, Cedar Hill, TX 75106.

JOIN the Christians' network of online business owners FREE at <http://christians.net>

ASPIRING WRITERS—Get fired, fired with enthusiasm for developing God-given writing talent. Send for FREE STARTER KIT. Christian Writers Guild, 260-H Fern Lane, Hume Lake, CA 93628; phone: (209) 335-2333; fax: (209) 335-2770; or: NVRohrer@Juno.com

DIABETICS with Medicare or insurance, get your diabetic supplies at no cost. Call (1-800) 337-4144.

Moving Interstate?

The Service and Thrift Relocation Service offers discounted rates and other benefits to reduce your moving cost on moves within the Continental U.S. For a free, no-obligation estimate call Lewis, CORD northAmerican:
1-800-873-2673
ICCA MC 167012

northAmerican.
VAN LINES/AGENT

OUTREACH CENTER MINISTER

If you believe you are called to minister to people in small groups, the National Conservative Christian Church will provide you a course of study, coaching, and assistance to begin a cell group, home church, or an outreach center. Write the N.C.C.C. at 4460 Northgate Court, Sarasota, FL 34234, or phone (941) 365-8115.

ORDINATION. International Ministerial Fellowship, an association of evangelical churches and ministers, offers many services, including ordination, newsletters, networking, ecclesiastical endorsement, consultation in area of legal, accounting, church planting, biblical/theological training, Internet services (FREE Web site and E-mail address) and a missions sending agency. For free information, check out our Web site: www.i-m-f.org or write: P.O. Box 32366, Minneapolis, MN 55432; (612) 571-5967.

www.ChurchGrowthToday.com
Networking growing churches of America and the world.

PUBLICATIONS

CRUCIAL END TIME knowledge! Send SASE, $3 to Brothers in Christ, Box 9054, Wichita Falls, TX 76708.

TRAVEL

NEAR GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, MONTANA. 3BR log cabin; secluded. Color brochure: (320) 384-7739.

TRAVEL

HAWAII: Intimate Inn for Promise Keepers and wives. Vacation/honeymoon/retreat. www.pixi.com/~kauai or (800) 826-6733, Princeville, Kauai.

✓ GOLDEN RULE TRAVEL is a Christian agency specializing in wholesale and bulk rate airline tickets for church and missionary travel. Our services are available to individuals as well as all mission and church organizations. We try extra hard to save you money! Mention this ad for a one-time, 2% discount. Call toll-free (1-888) 950-3273 FARE for pricing.

THEODOSIA'S Bed & Breakfast Inn, Bald Head Island, NC. Luxury re-creation. Clergy discount; (1-800) 656-1812; 910-457-6563; <http://www.southport.net/theodosia.html>

JOIN THE INTERNATIONAL Christian Bed & Breakfast Network. Call (1-800) 881-1940, or write to ICBBN, 550-777 Royal Oak Dr., Box 139, Victoria, BC V8X 4V1 Canada.

POSITIONS WANTED

PASTOR: 20 years experience. Special gifts in preaching, teaching, counseling. Looking for position with Reformed, evangelical congregation. Rev. Anderson, 9300 Collegeview Rd. #313, Bloomington, MN 55437; (612) 820-8225.

EXPERIENCED MINISTER wants church to pastor or revivals. Prayer for the lost and the sick. If you want an experienced pastor or revival, write today to: 240 E. Ruth Avenue, Suite 201, Phoenix, AZ 85020.

FINANCE

MONEY TROUBLES? Overdue bills? Reduce interest, cut monthly credit card payments, restore credit. Nonprofit agency can help. Call (1-800) SAVE-ME-2.

Our Job Leads Open Doors To Ministry. Let Intercristo Be The Key.

Intercristo's Christian Placement Network matches your interests, skills and background with current job openings in Christian organizations in the U.S. and overseas. Let Intercristo be the key to opening doors for you in ministry.

Call Intercristo toll free at 1-800-426-1342

www.jobleads.org

Or return the coupon below.

Intercristo
The Christian Career Specialists
19303 Fremont Ave. N.
Seattle, WA 98133-3800

Name

Address

City State Zip

S H O W C A S E

THE JESUS CRISIS

The Inroads of Historical Criticism into Evangelical Scholarship

Robert L. Thomas and
F. David Farnell, Coeditors
Foreword by John F. MacArthur
Kregel Publications
800/733-2607

Many evangelical students are being taught that historical criticism is a valuable method for studying the Synoptic Gospels, that there's no need to believe that biblical details are historically accurate. The Jesus Crisis explains how this methodology leads to the same critical conclusions most evangelicals claim to reject and is creating a crisis in evangelical scholarship.

ISBN 0-8254-3811-X

384 pages, paper, $16.99

DISMISSING GOD
Modern Writers'
Struggle Against Religion

by D. Bruce Lockerbie
Baker Book House
www.bakerbooks.com

For many writers God is a stranger, if not dead—Christian readers encounter this all too often. In Dismissing God, D. Bruce Lockerbie explores the role of unbelief and disbelief in the lives of leading writers from the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

Lockerbie reveals how writers dismiss God in different ways by examining the lives, beliefs, and works of more than twenty authors. Writers covered include: Dickinson, Whitman, Twain, Lawrence, and Hemingway.

ISBN 0-8010-5804-X

Paper, $15.99

SEXUAL OFFENDING AND RESTORATION

by Mark Yantzi
Herald Press
800/759-4447

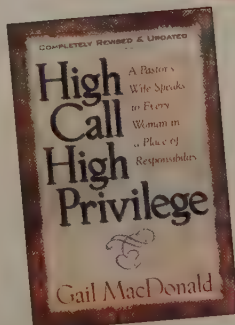

Mark Yantzi provides the perspectives of victims and offenders. By facilitating their interaction, he points out new ways to provide hope to those who have been abused, to the abusers, and to their families. Yantzi's unique method and approach are illustrated through many case examples and candid dialogue among members of the Book Reference Group. Readers can hear the authentic voice of those most affected by sexual abuse and share in the process toward healing and growth.

ISBN 0-8361-9081-5

240 pages, paper, $12.99;
in Canada $18.75

HIGH CALL,
HIGH PRIVILEGE
A Pastor's Wife
Speaks to Every Woman in a Place of Responsibility

by Gail MacDonald
Hendrickson Publishers
800/358-3111

Learn biblically based principles for ministering to people and living a ministry life from seasoned ministry wife Gail (Mrs. Gordon) MacDonald. There's something here to fit just about everyone's ministry world—the excitement, struggles, blessings, and consequences. The work is completely revised and updated from the author's best-selling 1981 book, and includes study guide questions and a book resource list for further study. Essential reading for ministry wives, pastors, and anyone in a place of spiritual leadership.

ISBN 1-56563-367-9

232 pages, cloth, $16.95

The Devil in the DNA

Richard Dawkins, the flamboyant British biologist who gave us the phrase “selfish genes,” now offers a genetic explanation for President Clinton’s alleged foibles with les femmes. Our evolutionary ancestors were harem builders (like seals), Dawkins explains, instead of monogamous (like Canadian geese). Any male monopolizing power and wealth also monopolized the females, thus ensuring the survival of his genes. Clinton’s behavior is simply a fossilized remnant from our genetic past.

Well, Dawkins’s Just-So story may be good for a chuckle. But reducing human behavior to genetics is serious business these days. The latest fad is an updated version of sociobiology known as evolutionary psychology, which seeks explanations for human behavior in our genes. Surprising numbers of liberals and conservatives are eagerly claiming it as support for their own political philosophies.

Why is evolutionary psychology so popular? It promises to fill a gap in the Darwinist world-view: the need for a workable morality. Ever since Darwin, many have recognized that evolution leads to moral nihilism. For example, Cornell biologist William Provine (himself a loyal Darwinist) acknowledges that Darwinism implies “no free will” and “no ultimate foundation for ethics.”

But we all experience the angst of facing moral choices, so evolutionists keep trying new ways to fit morality into the picture. Evolutionary psychology claims that by examining our evolutionary history, we can identify which behaviors have been selected for their adaptive value. These provide the basis for a genuinely scientific morality.

Does this new theory succeed in rescuing evolution from moral nihilism? No. The first problem is that any behavior practiced anywhere can be judged to have survival value—after all, it has survived—including behavior widely considered immoral.

In a recent article in the New York Times, Steven Pinker, a telegenic science popularizer, urges us to “understand” teenage girls who kill their newborns, arguing that “the emotional circuitry of mothers has evolved” by natural selection to include “a capacity for neonaticide.” Infanticide is built into our “biological design,” and we can’t blame people for doing it.

Pinker’s article triggered outraged responses, and even he backs away from his own conclusions: In the same article he unexpectedly writes, “Killing a baby is an immoral act.” So which is it? Either evolution provides a moral guide or it doesn’t.

The same contradiction runs through Dawkins’s article, which explains harem building as a product of natural selection. Sensing his readers might take this as justification for immorality, Dawkins confides that he has made the “un-Darwinian personal decision” to be “deliberately monogamous.” But if the Darwinian process provides a moral guide, why should anyone need to make “un-Darwinian” decisions? For that matter, how could anyone?

The second problem with evolutionary psychology is its genetic determinism. It claims to base morality on the genes that govern our behavior. But if genes really do that, moral choice is an illusion.

In The Moral Animal, Robert Wright spends hundreds of pages denouncing freedom as an illusion and describing human beings as “robots,” “machines,” and “puppets” of our genes. Then he turns 180 degrees, arguing that we are free to choose moral ideals contrary to the “values” of natural selection.

These fatal contradictions make hash of every effort to derive morality from biology—and Christians need to press the point in our classrooms and living rooms. Evolutionary psychology is being dished up to an anxious public via magazine and newspaper articles. In an era dogged by declining morality and social decay, it offers the soothing promise of a morality buttressed by the certitude of science.

Make no mistake. The goal of evolutionary psychology is utterly radical: to replace traditional religious morality with a new scientific morality. The strategy is to debunk traditional morality by reducing it to genetic self-interest. Wright is typical: He unmasks all “thoughts and feelings,” all “moral values,” as “stratagems of the genes.” Even Jesus’ teachings are nothing but ideologies serving his “evolutionarily ingrained interests.” Evolutionary psychology proposes to base morality frankly on “selfish genes.”

Some Christians have hoped to make peace with Darwinism as long as it is restricted to biology. But evolutionary psychology demonstrates that there is an inexpugnable imperialism in Darwinianism—a compulsion to reduce all society to material mechanisms. Just as Darwinist theory in biology aims to replace divine design with natural processes, so in ethics it aims to replace revealed morality with a naturalistic morality. Sociologist Howard Kaye observes evolutionary psychology is nothing less than a secularized natural theology—an attempt to use nature to justify a secular world-view.

Exactly 100 years ago in his Princeton lectures, Dutch statesman Abraham Kuyper argued that Christians are not up against individual theories but comprehensive world-views. The only sure defense is to frame Christianity as an equally comprehensive world-view. Only then will genetic Just-So stories be relegated to the storybooks, where they belong. CL

The strategy of evolutionary psychology is to debunk traditional morality by reducing it to genetic self-interest.

Still Surprised by Lewis • Return of the Jewish Church

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

SEPTEMBER 7, 1998

True, no archaeological evidence exists for Abraham, Joseph, or Moses. Revisionist scholars say this means the Bible stories of Israel's origins are fiction. Yet we have only recently discovered King Solomon's seal , King David's name  in stone, and a bull the Canaanites worshiped . Now two leading Egyptologists are marshaling evidence  from the land of the pharaohs  to answer the question:

DID THE EXODUS NEVER HAPPEN?

$2.95 CANADA $3.95

AOL Keyword: CT
www.ChristianityToday.net

Chart a higher course

with new, diverse faculty members, including:

CHURCH HISTORY:

DOUGLAS A. SWEENEY, Ph.D., Assistant Editor,
The Works of Jonathan Edwards, Yale University, New Haven, CT

PRACTICAL THEOLOGY (Part-time):

CRAWFORD W. LORITTS, JR., DST, Associate Director U.S. Ministries, Campus Crusade For Christ, Atlanta, GA

PETER T. CHA, Ph.D. Candidate, Northwestern University, Evanston, IL

NEW TESTAMENT:

DAVID PAO, Ph.D., Harvard University, Cambridge, MA

MISSION AND EVANGELISM:

TITE TIENOU, Ph.D., President and Dean, Faculté de Théologie
Evangelique de l'Alliance Chrétienne, Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, West Africa

BIBLICAL AND SYSTEMATIC THEOLOGY:

KEVIN J. VANHOOZER, Ph.D., Senior Lecturer, Theology and Religious Studies, New College, Edinburgh University, Edinburgh, Scotland

TO CHANGE YOUR COURSE. CALL 800.345.TEDS

DEGREE PROGRAMS CERTIFICATE IN BIBLICAL STUDIES • MASTER OF DIVINITY:

APOLOGETICS, BIOETHICS, CHRISTIANITY AND CONTEMPORARY CULTURE, CHURCH HISTORY, CHURCH PLANTING, EDUCATIONAL MINISTRIES, ETHICS, EVANGELISM, MISSION, PASTORAL COUNSELING, PREACHING, URBAN MINISTRY, AND YOUTH MINISTRY • MASTER OF ARTS: CHILDREN'S MINISTRY, CHRISTIAN THOUGHT, CHURCH HISTORY, COUNSELING MINISTRIES, EDUCATIONAL MINISTRIES, EVANGELISM, MISSION, NEW TESTAMENT, OLD TESTAMENT, OR YOUTH MINISTRIES • MASTER OF ARTS IN RELIGION • MASTER OF THEOLOGY: CHURCH HISTORY, MISSION AND EVANGELISM, NEW TESTAMENT, OLD TESTAMENT, PASTORAL COUNSELING AND PSYCHOLOGY, PRACTICAL THEOLOGY, AND SYSTEMATIC THEOLOGY • DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY: EDUCATIONAL STUDIES, INTERCULTURAL STUDIES, THEOLOGICAL STUDIES • DOCTOR OF MINISTRY: BIOETHICS FOR THE CHAPLAINCY, CHURCH MANAGEMENT & LEADERSHIP, MISSIOLOGY, PREACHING, PASTORAL COUNSELING, PASTORAL MINISTRIES • NOT ALL DEGREES OFFERED IN ALL LOCATIONS.

Trinity
Evangelical Divinity School The Divinity School of
Trinity International University

DEERFIELD/CHICAGO • MIAMI • EXTENSION LOCATIONS
800.345.TEDS • 847.317.8000 • tedsadm@tiu.edu • www.tiu.edu

It Only Looks More Expensive.

Since Bertolini began manufacturing quality stackable chairs, over 30 years ago, our name has become synonymous with superior craftsmanship and subtle elegance. Leading the industry in both durability and innovation, Bertolini is pleased to unveil our latest model: the APEX stacker™. With a wide selection of handsome fabrics, and no unsightly exposed metal frames marring the chair's unique wide back, the attractive

APEX chair enhances auditoriums and sanctuaries of all sizes. Designed to meet even the most challenging of seating requirements, our chairs' unique structure allows for maximum seating capacity, while offering your congregation and assemblies extended comfort. And with the most rigorous quality standards in the industry, Bertolini chairs are guaranteed to remain comfortable and elegant, for many years to come.

We invite you to have a seat.

HAVE A SEAT! FOR FREE! CALL TODAY,
AND WE'LL SEND YOU A COMPLIMENTARY BERTOLINI CHAIR.

20 Year Frame Warranty

5 Year Fabric Warranty

CHINO, CALIFORNIA • TUPELO, MISSISSIPPI

CALL US TOLL-FREE AT 1.800.647.7725

Good Reasons to Earn Your Degree At Home

Balancing the needs of your ministry with the needs of your family isn't easy. But furthering your ministry through education doesn't have to disrupt your home life. You can study for your bachelor's, master's, or doctorate and still continue your ministry through the external studies program at Trinity.

Trinity College and Seminary allows you to complete your education through a personalized, accelerated degree program without a residency requirement. Our traditional off campus program, along with our virtual campus and optional Regional Seminars, lets you choose the method of study that best fits your responsibilities to your family and your personal educational goals.

Contact an Admissions Counselor for more information.

- B.A., M.A., M.Div., Ph.D., D.Min. in Various Disciplines
- Financial Grants are Available
- Off Campus and On-line Degree Programs
- Accelerated Study
- Regional Seminars Optional
- Accredited by the University of Liverpool, England

800-457-5510

International Academic and Administrative Offices
Newburgh, Indiana, USA

Fax: 812-858-3235

E-mail: 74777.245@compuserve.com

Visit our website! www.trinitysem.edu

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Volume 42, No. 10
September 7, 1998

A Magazine of Evangelical Conviction

FEATURES

44 Cover Story: Did the Exodus Never Happen?

How two Egyptologists are countering scholars who want to turn the Old Testament into myth.

By Kevin D. Miller

Plus: "King David Was Here"

54 Still Surprised by Lewis

Why this nonevangelical Oxford don has become our patron saint. By J. I. Packer

62 The Return of the Jewish Church

In 1967, there were no Messianic Jewish congregations in the world. Today there are 350. Who are these believers?

By Gary Thomas

72 Special News Report: Voucher Victory

School-choice advocates win in Wisconsin, but can the movement gain momentum? By Ted C. Olsen

76 God Is in the Blueprints

Our deepest beliefs are reflected in the ways we construct our houses of worship. By Tim Stafford

DEPARTMENTS

6 Inside CT: The Last Temptation of Moses

7 Letters

42 Editorial: When Lies Become News

84 Matters of Opinion: Take the Pledge

88 Reflections

90 Directions: Denominations: Divided We Stand

92 Frederica Mathewes-Green: Gaggling on Shiny, Happy People

94 Books: A Library in a Book

120 Philip Yancey: The Fox and the Writer

NEWS

22 Dialogue: Pentecostals, Catholics Discover Common Ground

24 Germany: Sects May Not Be Dangerous

28 Greek Orthodox: Archbishop's Support Weakens

32 Anglicans: African Bishops Just Say No

34 Higher Education: Colleges Study Dropouts

40 Latter Day Saints: Reorganized Church Modifies Key Doctrines

19 North American Report

26 World Report

Bob Davies of Exodus International

Scholarship Committed

The academic reputation of Wheaton College Graduate School is no accident. Distinguished faculty, outstanding graduates, and renowned authors have made it what it is today—an educational experience that challenges students to integrate personal faith with academic discipline.

What you may not know is that Wheaton College Graduate School is dedicated to providing students with the knowledge and skills to help build the church, confront social problems, and bring a Christian perspective to any endeavor, anywhere in the world. This vision for Christian ministry is not only shared in the classroom, but lived out in the lives of our professors.

We believe that academic theory—like Christian faith—is meaningless without practical application. For more information about the graduate programs at Wheaton College please call, 1-800-888-0141 or e-mail us at: gradadm@wheaton.edu. Check out our website at: www.wheaton.edu.

Since 1860
For Christ and
His Kingdom

GRADUATE SCHOOL

WHEATON, ILLINOIS

to Servanthood

Wheaton College Graduate School has programs designed to prepare students for responsible service and effective leadership. Call 1-800-888-0141 for specific details about any one of them.

Master of Arts degree in • Biblical Archaeology
• Biblical and Theological Studies* • Teaching
• Clinical Psychology • Educational Ministries
• Evangelism • Interdisciplinary Studies
• Missions and Intercultural Studies*

Doctoral degree in Clinical Psychology (PsyD)

Certificate programs in • Advanced Biblical Studies
• Leadership and Camp Ministry
• Teaching English as a Second Language

*Distance Learning option available

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Founded 1956

Senior Editors: George K. Brushaber, Chairman; James I. Packer, Visiting Scholar; Timothy George, Senior Adviser; R. Kent Hughes, Earl F. Palmer, Marianne Meye Thompson, John D. Woodbridge

Editorial Director Harold L. Myra
Executive Editor David Neff
Managing Editor Michael G. Maudlin
Art Director Carla Sonheim
Associate Editors Richard A. Kauffman
Kevin D. Miller
Timothy C. Morgan
Wendy Murray Zoba

Administrative Editor Carol R. Thiessen
Associate News Editor John W. Kennedy
Book Review Editor John Wilson
Associate Designer June M. Gunawan
Editorial Resident Christine J. Gardner
Editor at Large Philip Yancey
Senior Writer Tim Stafford
Senior News Writer Arthur D. Moore
Arts Editor Karen L. Mulder
Editorial Coordinator Paulette DePaul
Administrative Assistant Lara Badamenti

Board of Directors: Billy Graham, Chairman; B. Clayton Bell, Sr., Executive Chairman; Harold L. Myra, President; Miriam Adeney, John N. Akers, Jill P. Briscoe, Stephen W. Brown, A. Kenneth Curtis, Susan S. Eames, Robert P. Evans, Eugene B. Habecker, Ben Haden, Pete Hammond, Michael E. Haynes, Oswald C. J. Hoffmann, C. B. Hogue, John A. Huffman, Jr., Edward L. Johnson, Jay L. Kesler, Dennis F. Kinlaw, Jack Modesett, Jr., William W. Pendleton, Robert E. Record, Paul D. Robbins, W. Fred Smith, Jr., Howard S. Williams

Billy Graham, Founder; Carl F. H. Henry, Editor 1956-66; L. Nelson Bell, Executive Editor 1966-73; Harold Lindsell, Editor 1968-78; Kenneth S. Kantzer, Editor 1978-82; V. Gilbert Beers, Editor 1982-85; George K. Brushaber, Executive Editor 1985-91; Terry C. Muck, Executive Editor 1985-90

Contributing Editors: Miriam Adeney, Nigel M. de S. Cameron, Charles W. Colson, James R. Edwards, Nathan O. Hatch, Kenneth A. Myers, Mark A. Noll, Thomas C. Oden, Ben Patterson, David Schiedermayer, David A. Seamands, Howard A. Snyder, John R. W. Stott

Consulting Editors: Paul M. Bassett, Colin Brown, Harold O. J. Brown, Robert E. Cooley, David S. Dockery, William A. Dyrness, Stanley J. Grenz, Christopher A. Hall, Walter C. Kaiser, Jr., Kenneth S. Kantzer, Donald W. McCullough, Alister E. McGrath, Richard Mouw, Roger E. Olson, Haddon W. Robinson, Stephen A. Seamands, Aida Besançon Spencer, John G. Stackhouse, Jr., Donald A. D. Thorsen, Edwin M. Yamauchi

Corresponding Editors: Tokunboh Adeyemo, V. Elving Anderson, Donald G. Bloesch, Edith L. Blumhofer, Darrell L. Bock, Calvin B. DeWitt, Samuel Escobar, C. Stephen Evans, Ajith Fernando, Richard J. Foster, Vernon Grounds, Allen C. Guelzo, Christopher D. Hancock, Alan F. Harre, Roberta Hestenes, Arthur P. Johnston, Robert K. Johnston, David Livingstone, Paul L. Maier, George M. Marsden, David L. McKenna, Stephen V. Monsma, Leon Morris, Terry C. Muck, Nancey Murphy, Bradley Nassif, Armand M. Nicholi, Jr., Roger Nicole, C. René Padilla, William E. Pannell, Eugene H. Peterson, Richard V. Pierard, Robert C. Roberts, John Rodgers, Vinay Samuel, David P. Scaer, Bruce L. Shelley, Ronald J. Sider, Russell P. Spittler, Elmer L. Towns, Grant Wacker, Robert L. Wilken, J. Rodman Williams

Advisory Editors: Leith Anderson, Myron S. Augsburger, William Bentley Ball, David B. Barrett, Paul W. Brand, Michael Cromartie, Edward G. Dobson, James Engel, George Gallup, Jr., Charles E. Hummel, Diane L. Knippers, Steven T. McFarland, Dean Merrill, Bryant L. Myers, Richard John Neuhaus, Will Norton, Jr., Michael Novak, Matthew Parker, James W. Reapsome, Beth Spring, Joseph M. Stowell, Warren W. Wiersbe

CHRISTIANITY TODAY, INC.

Harold L. Myra, President, C.E.O.
Paul D. Robbins, Executive Vice President, C.O.O.
Laurie Powell, Executive Assistant
Harry Genet, Executive Administrator
Keith Stonehocker, Senior Vice President
Harold B. Smith, Corporate Vice President
David Hemstreet, Vicki Howard, John C. LaRue, Jr., Kevin A. Miller, David Neff, Linda Schambach, JoAnn Selander, Marshall Shelley, Carol Thompson, Vice Presidents

Advertising: Joyce Bardin, Karen Booker, Joel Carlsen, Lee Cunningham, Heather Dake, Kevin Flanagan, John Grey, Carol Hayes, Daniel Poormon, Kathryn Stephens, Joel Stombres

Circulation: Charlene Perez, Production Director; Jo Ann Rosenbaum, Fulfillment Director; Leslee Baron, Norma Bormann, Bradley Dupuy, Heidi Hall, Jody Harrington, Julie Kaminski, Sherry Kyle, Dianne Lambert, Debra Lane, Jeremy Long, Nancy Nance, Louie P. Parker, Karen Raad, Carol Schaley, Jennifer Stenzel, Elizabeth Tolentino, Bonnie Willman, Joy Windes, Philip Woods

Financial Operations: Terumi Echols, Manager, Cheri Peterson, Credit Manager, Gary Johnson, Sandra Johnson, Judy Van Zanten

Human Resources: Susan Cronk, Manager, Kate Bryant, Bert Davidson, Philip DiCicco, Lew Radabaugh

Internet Online Services: Judy Gill, Manager, Clayton Anderson, Kathy DePue, Sky Findlay, Wendy Harley, Michelle Hayes, Michael Herman, Elesha Hodge, Todd Watermann, Aaron Welch

Market Research: Cynia Solver, Manager, Grace Ferroni, Rachel Wetzler, Douglas Zimmerman

Production: Cynthia Cronk, Manager; Technology: Les Smith, Manager, Jeff DiNanno, Ted Gysan, Kelly Johnson, Jason Olthoff, Theresa Phillips, Rebekah Santos, James Smeenge

Special Sales: Glenn Bushong, Manager; Becki Bustin, Michael Fister, Rodney Heckler, Jared Johnson, Lynn Long, John Ramsell

Editorial/Advertising Offices: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, Ill. 60188 630-260-6200; FAX: 630-260-0114. Advertising in CHRISTIANITY TODAY does not necessarily imply editorial endorsement.

Subscription Services: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, P.O. Box 37060, Boone, Iowa 50037-0060. Customer service: 800-999-1704.

Manuscript Policy: Unsolicited manuscripts are not accepted. A query letter must be sent first, describing a proposed manuscript (poetry is not accepted). Unsolicited manuscripts sent without a self-addressed, postage-paid envelope will not be returned.

Permissions: CHRISTIANITY TODAY grants permission for any original article (not a reprint) to be photocopied for use in a local church or classroom, provided no more than 1,000 copies are made, are distributed free, and indicate the source is CHRISTIANITY TODAY.

Australian Agent: MEDIA.COM, 14 Eton Road, Keswick 5051, South Australia. United Kingdom Agent: MASTERPLAN PUBLISHING CO., 63-67 Kingston Road, New Malden, Surrey KT3 3PB, phone 0181-942-9442.

Indexes: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is indexed in Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature; Christian Periodical Index; Religious Index One; Periodicals, Religious and Theological Abstracts; Book Review Index; and Academic Abstracts and Magazine Article Summaries. ISSN 0009-5753. © 1998 CHRISTIANITY TODAY INC.

Christianity Today (ISSN 0009-5753) is published monthly (semi-monthly in April and October), 14 issues per year, by Christianity Today, Inc., 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188. Periodicals postage paid at Carol Stream, IL, and at additional mailing offices.

Postmaster: Send address changes to Christianity Today, P.O. Box 37060, Boone, IA 50037-0060; 1-800-999-1704. GST Registration Number R126028836. Canada Post Mail Product Sales Agreement #59536. Printed in U.S.A.

Subscription Rates: Regular subscription price: one year $24.95. Outside U.S. add $8.00 postage prepaid U.S. currency. $2.50 per copy.

Subscription Renewals? Gift Subscriptions? Address Changes? Call toll-free 1-800-999-1704.

E-mail: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is available electronically on America Online (keyword: CT); E-mail: CHRISTIANITY TODAY at CTedit@aol.com. CT is also on the Web at www.christianitytoday.net. For information on how to enroll in Christianity Online, call 1-800-633-8888.

*Earn While You Learn!
Graduate Without Debt*

Cranmer Theological House

Cranmer Theological House offers a reasonable path to the ministry on your own effort, not by any gruesome labor but by work at a livable wage. You can support your family adequately, while at the same time receiving proper training in the Anglican tradition.

Cranmer Theological House is an outstanding opportunity for residential study with leading Christian scholars. Our programs lead to ministry in various orthodox dioceses in America and around the world.

There are paths to the Master of Divinity for ordination, the Master of Theological Studies for educational ministries, and the Doctor of Philosophy for ordination and teaching. The doctorate is offered by Brighton University of Brighton, England, while the residential research is done here.

P.O. Box 52591, Shreveport, LA 71135-2591

E-mail: rsutton@morrisdickson.com

http://www.cranmerhouse.edu

For more information call (800) 732-0910

Michael G. Maudlin,
Managing Editor

The Last Temptation of Moses

INSIDE CT

I remember being surprised in 1995 when Time published its “Is the Bible Fact or Fiction?” cover story. In it they “reported” on how Abraham, Joseph, and Moses never existed. No new evidence had come to light to question anew traditional interpretations. They just thought the most important news event that week was that there was still no independent confirmation of Israel’s “mythic” origins.

But that’s not what surprised me. I was surprised because weeks earlier I had lunched with Richard Ostling, Time’s senior correspondent and a former CT news editor. In a Chinese restaurant down the street from the Time-Life building, he excitedly told me how he had just reported on the work of Egyptologist James Hoffmeier, from Wheaton College, who in a recent book had marshaled all the evidence consistent with the Hebrews’ sojourn in and evacuation from Egypt. It was going to be a cover story.

Surprise! The story morphed after it left his hands. Time’s assembly line of editors and writers, acting as the arbiters of what is intellectually acceptable, turned the thesis 180 degrees from what Dick envisioned.

When the makers of the animated film The Prince of Egypt (to be released in December) interviewed the same experts as Time and used similarly educated professionals, the results were very different. God is back in, and not only does Moses exist, but he makes the sea part, turns a stick into a snake, and calls down serial plagues.

Is Hollywood more faithful than New York? I don’t think so. Rather, the media companies’ goals are different. Instead of wanting to appear intellectually stylish and “daringly” skeptical, the movie studio DreamWorks wants to sell movie tickets. And a nonexistent, or even a de-miracled, Moses does not make the cash registers buzz or beep. (Anyone for The Last Temptation of Moses?)

What is CT’s angle?

First, we wanted to bring you the story that Time missed. After executive editor David Neff heard Hoffmeier talk at a convention of Bible scholars, he assigned associate editor Kevin D. Miller to follow up the story. And second, we believe in pursuing truth—which entails some risk. When we explore whether the Exodus really happened (see p. 44), we have something to lose (and that something is more precious than reputations or revenues). Still, as Kevin shows in his report, when Christians practice good scholarship (pursuing truth rather than careers) and humbly recognize the limits of human knowledge while being faithful to what God has revealed in his Scriptures, we find that truth is not opposed to faith. Indeed, they are partners. And that’s our angle. CT

Youth Ministry:

*“Our desire for God can be our greatest gift to young people.
A grant from the Lilly Endowment is making this vision a reality.”*

—Mark Yaconelli, co director,
Youth Ministry and Spirituality Project

1-800-447-8820
admissions@sfts.edu
www.sfts.edu

SAN FRANCISCO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

China's Tragedy and Triumph

President Clinton's recent visit to China has motivated many editors to publish articles on the state of religious freedom in that country. In the blur of ink and paper, the article in the July 13 edition of CHRISTIANITY TODAY—"A Tale of China's Two Churches," by Timothy C. Morgan—afforded your readers one of the best and most comprehensive accounts of the extraordinarily complex mix of tragedy and triumph that characterizes the situation in China today.

As your article correctly noted, Rabbi Yechiel Eckstein and the International Fellowship of Christians and Jews is at the forefront of the "prodding engagement" approach to China. Our Presidential Appeal for Religious Liberty in China was crafted specifically to show President Clinton that numerous religious leaders nationwide, hailing from a variety of faiths, strongly support a firm yet fruitful dialogue with the Chinese leadership that presses for greater freedom of religion for the Chinese people.

Our course in China is clear. We must provide both carrot and stick to the Chinese if we are to gain even a reasonable hope of effecting change. We must acknowledge and praise the changes that have taken place in regard to religious freedom—and many have—but we must never forget the religious believers who are unjustly serving lengthy prison sentences for the "crime" of following their consciences in worshipping Almighty God.

The policy of "prodding engagement" has already begun to work; now we must continue to pray and work—and give it the time it needs to bear fruit. Articles such as Morgan's provide nurture to the greater cause—care for those persecuted for their faith—and strengthen and inform the broad-based coalition that has been forged, and for that, we thank you.

*Christopher Meidl, Executive Director
International Fellowship of Christians and Jews
Chicago, Ill.*

Just read your piece on China. A very good joy indeed! I am a member of the Union Church here in Hong Kong. We have helped build a couple of churches as well as a school, the second school in the country that was handed from the state back to the church. That school is in Bei Wan in Guangdong Province. We also built a dorm as some of the students travel 2-4 hours each way just to get an education.

*Mac Overton
Hong Kong*

If only our church leaders had the humility and integrity of Dr. Han (p. 36), that they might say: "We also have to confess that we have done some things wrong to our brothers and sisters. A divisive church cannot be very strong for our Lord, especially in America. Yet we fight each other."

I suggest that CT print the names of the top (20? 100?) political leaders of China, so that Christians and churches could covenant to pray daily for one of them, for a year, that God would express Christ's grace, mercy, and peace to and through that person.

*Philip W. Gilman
Freehold, N.J.*

An Honest Opinion

I appreciated the article in the July 13 issue of CT entitled "Karla Faye's Final Stop." What I liked most is that it wasn't inflammatory to one side or the other; it was just an honest opinion from someone who wanted to show an inside look.

I have carried a strong opinion to one side of this issue but have backed off in recent months, and it was nice to see the approach Ms. Owens took.

Keep up the good work in supplying thought-provoking articles that are done in good taste.

*D. J. Weiss, Associate Minister
St. Louis Church of Christ
St. Louis, Mich.*

Virginia Stem Owens can turn a phrase like few others, but she doesn't have any remote idea what she's talking about. How many years did she serve in solitary? How many serial killers and child rapists and chain-saw murderers has she personally been in prison with?

Gene Neill Lake Placid, Fla.

Certainly it is wrong to glory in the execution of someone. But does Virginia Stem Owens need to be "distressed" about application of Genesis 9:6? Too many persons arguing the Karla Faye Tucker case said that she didn't deserve to die but rather that she deserved mercy. Yet by definition, mercy is undeserved.

For the Christian this debate must address the Noahic covenant and the issue of desert. This article did neither.

*Robert A. Daniels
Associate Professor of Sociology
Mount Vernon Nazarene College
Mount Vernon, Ohio*

Thank you for such a richly troubling article on capital punishment. As an evangelical and an Episcopal rector, I too have been unable to find a street corner on Pastor Polnow wasn't impressed with how the men of his flock came back from Promise Keepers.

THE CALVIN EXPERIENCE

Lift Every Voice

An excellent Christian liberal arts education is like a symphony — composed of many parts, many voices and grace notes.

At Calvin College, new voices and harmonies are being lifted high through the gifted teaching and scholarship of Charsie Sawyer in music...and Ed Miller in Spanish...and Michelle Loyd-Paige in sociology...and Randal Jelks in history. They are part of the mosaic of God's creative genius at work in an ever more diverse campus community gathered around a common purpose.

What makes a Calvin education so distinctive and life-shaping for thousands of questing students each year? The experience and excellence of Christ-centered professors who love to teach.

Michelle R. Loyd-Paige

Ph.D. from Purdue University; board member of Grand Rapids Urban League; host of Abundant Living, a weekly radio show on WQWQ in Muskegon; member of the Children's Agenda Project in Muskegon County; professor of sociology at Calvin.

Randal M. Jelks

Ph.D. candidate at Michigan State University; M.Div. from McCormick

Theological Seminary; board member for Grand Rapids Symphony; member of Grand Rapids Council for the Humanities; history instructor and director of academic multicultural affairs at Calvin.

Edward Miller Jr.

Ph.D. from Indiana University; former Spanish instructor at Wake Forest University; former steering committee member of the North American Association of Christian Foreign Language Teachers; professor of Spanish and chair of Calvin's Spanish department.

Charsie Randolph Sawyer

DMA from University of Michigan; award-winning vocalist who has performed nationally with orchestras, opera companies, oratorio societies and choirs; member of National Association of Teachers of Singing; associate professor of music at Calvin.

LETTERS

which I felt I belonged.

In her refreshing refusal to capitulate to the rhetoric of (even Christian) politics, Owens embodies "gospel vulnerability" to the anguish of all parties. By demonstrating a willingness to tolerate intense ethical ambiguity in the midst of an unwavering commitment to Christ, she has given us a model for approaching many other such complex, emotionally wrenching issues.

While I have been unable to determine that the death penalty accomplishes its intended purpose in meting out justice, satisfying victims' families, atoning for crimes, or even serving as a deterrent, Owens's many personal stories from Huntsville brought me to my knees for the arrogance of my own ideas and attitudes.

The biggest thing missing in my personal position on capital punishment? Prayer.

*Rev. Hillary R. Bercovici
St. Mary's Church of Scarborough
Scarborough, N.Y.*

Refreshing Yet Convicting

Bravo to Spencer Perkins for telling it like it is! A man of God, a man of grace taking an incredible risk to be honest ["Playing the Grace Card," July 13]. How refreshing, yet convicting.

What person exists who hasn't been hurt by others, and who hasn't hidden behind, "they haven't asked me to forgive them"? We may never voice such feeble excuses, masked as we might be by pleasant demeanor. But the ugliness of a bitter spirit is vivid to the Lord, with whom we have to do and to whom we have to answer. Deep within he tells us as he did the apostle, "My grace is sufficient for you."

Thank you, Brother Perkins. May your legacy be men and women of grace.

Dan Lofgren Bonney Lake, Wash.

God and Hell

I have to question the veracity of any Christian who shares the view of the author of "Brimstone for the Broad-Minded" [July 13] and has no problem with the concept of hell. Have you ever looked in the eyes of a loved one suffering from excruciating pain? Have you ever imagined your loved one suffering not for a year, or two years or ten, or even for a lifetime, but for eternity? If mortal human beings with a limited capacity to love can feel such anguish over the pain and suffering of a loved one whose pain will someday come to an end, how is it that the God who defines him-

CALVIN

Grand Rapids, Michigan 616-957-6142 www.calvin.edu

lord...yes!

here am i ... send me.

ONCE you've heard someone say Lord ... Yes!, don't put it on hold. It's their spiritual wake-up call. It's your opportunity to point them to a cross-cultural SHORT-TERM MISSION with LONG-TERM IMPACT ... for them, for your church, for the Kingdom.

FIND OUT HOW GOD USES SHORT-TERM MISSION TO PRODUCE LONG-TERM IMPACT. And find out why so many are talking about World Servants.

CALL TODAY FOR YOUR FREE COPY OF THE NEW WORLD SERVANTS' VIDEO LORD ... YES!

it's free

hear it.

call us.

"World Servants makes an impact! ... What began as a way for our people to serve Christ caused our whole church to seriously consider Jesus' words, 'Whatever you did for the least of these, you did for me.'"

MIKE WARMAN, DIRECTOR OF YOUTH MINISTRIES,
WATERFORD COMMUNITY CHURCH, WATERFORD, MICHIGAN

1(800)881-2170
lordyes@worldservants.org
www.worldservants.org

Who better than Jesus to share the Gospel?

Find out how God has used the JESUS film to save 46 million worldwide, and is now using it to save America, one neighbor at a time.

There is no tool more powerful in any ministry than the Word of God.

There is no medium more powerful in our world today than film.

The JESUS video joins the power of both. It's the straight Gospel of Luke on film.

Some pictures are worth a thousand words. This one's worth 46 million personal commitments.

Over 46 million individuals worldwide have declared their commitments to Jesus Christ as a direct result of watching the JESUS movie. Right now, we're focused on reaching America's neighborhoods.

There are over 100 million homes in America to reach

Our goal is to get JESUS in every home. That means there are over 100 million reasons for you to say "Yes!" to help the rest of America see the most true-to-the-Word film about Jesus ever made.

Your FREE "JESUS Video Vision Kit" makes it easy for you to convince others to partner with you in continuing the awesome work God has begun with the JESUS Video Project in your local community.

Why is this film so powerful, and so important?

It's pure, it's precise, it's compelling, and it is a very well crafted film.

The JESUS film is the result of thousands of people working together towards one vision: Show the Word. A team of 500 Christian scholars and leaders worked together for five years to insure the film to be archaeologically, historically, and theologically accurate.

Millions of Americans have seen the JESUS video. Hundreds of thousands have professed their decisions for Christ as a result. Find out how you can help reach the rest in your neighborhood.

Witness the pure Gospel of Luke at work in the JESUS video

- Call or write now for your free JESUS Video Vision Kit.
- The JESUS Video Vision Kit includes a 12-minute video explanation of the simple and easy-to-use process that has proven to be incredibly effective in getting, showing and helping bring individuals to Christ with the JESUS video in your local community. It's yours for the asking. Will you ask?
- Make the call to the JESUS Video Project (a ministry of Campus Crusade for Christ). Then watch God use JESUS to make the Call to eternal life.

Pastors, Church Leaders: call now, toll-free, to 1-888-JESUS31 (537-8731) ext. #873

Or write to: the JESUS Video Project, Dept #873,
(a ministry of) Campus Crusade for Christ,
24600 Arrowhead Springs Rd., San Bernardino, CA 92414

© 1998 Campus Crusade for Christ. All rights reserved.

LETTERS

self as love can bear the thought of abandoning his own creatures to a state of unbearable torture never to look upon them again? Does God want people driven to him out of fear or drawn to him by his love?

I'm not denying that hell exists, but I will not deny my confusion about it. Hell as it is portrayed in the Bible is much more than righteous indignation. It is hell, and not even the word hell can capture its eternally tormenting furor! I'm sure I am not the only Christian who struggles with this concept. Let's not cover our confusion or dismay with theological clichés. The world does not look to us to provide pat answers to plaguing questions, but to be honest with ourselves about things that just don't make a great deal of sense from our limited human understanding of things.

Bruce L. Thiessen
Sacramento, Calif.

The problem with this article is that it assumes that the view of hell as eternal conscious torment is true. No wonder so many people have a problem with this view; it suggests that God will grant (or already has granted) immortality to sinful people and, after judgment, will subject them to the most perverse and sadistic of punishments: never-ending existence in miserable torment. Although this view may be traditional, anyone who does a thorough, unbiased study on hell will discover that this position is not and never was what the Bible truly teaches.

The true, literal view is not that God will unjustly subject sinners to eternal conscious torture in hell, but rather that he will justly destroy them in hell—with no hope of restoration. Jesus clearly stated this in Matthew 10:28.

Dirk A. Warren
Warren, Ohio

What kind of a God would ask, even command us, to forgive seventy times seven in a day and to go the second mile, while he himself is willing to forgive mankind only in this short span of life?

Richard W. Rundell
Haskell, Okla.

Heavenly Rulers

I agree with nearly all of what Chuck Lowe points out in "Do Demons Have Zip Codes?" (July 13); it provides a needed corrective to much contemporary practice. But I was surprised that a discussion of territorial spirits omits much about Paul's heavenly "rulers and authorities"

*"As the pulpits go,
the nation goes."*

— Dr. Stephen F. Olford

"... from this school will go out preachers to every part of the earth. I thank God for the many years I sat on the board of this school. I thank God for the thousands of young people who have gone out to the mission field. I thank God for the exhorters. I thank God for the teachers... I have a great burden for preachers."

— Dr. Stephen F. Olford

Dr. Stephen F. Olford (right)
with Dr. Donald L. Hamilton,
first appointee to the Stephen F. Olford
Chair of Biblical Preaching.

COLUMBIA BIBLICAL SEMINARY announces the establishment of the Stephen F. Olford Chair of Biblical Preaching

Has God called you to be a committed, dynamic, convincing expositor of His word?

Dr. Olford's passions are:

- Expository Preaching - Restoring Spirit empowered expository preaching to the pulpits of our land, bringing revival to the church.
- Incarnational Preparation - Preparing preachers who flesh out the truth they proclaim.
- Evangelism - Sending "flaming preachers, flaming prophets of God" to the far ends of the earth.

Call Columbia Biblical Seminary & Graduate School of Missions at

1.800.777.2227

Columbia Biblical Seminary
& Graduate School of Missions

A division of Columbia International University

7435 Monticello Rd. • P.O. Box 3122 • Columbia, SC 29230-3122
803 . 754 . 4100 • Toll Free 1 . 800 . 777 . 2227 • www.ciu.edu

Preparing World Christians To Know Him And To Make Him Known

How You Learn Will Determine How You Lead.

Life's most memorable leadership lessons aren't the ones you read in books. They're experienced firsthand at the side of a Godly leader. So if you're seeking a mentor, don't just look for one who'll share his knowledge. Find one who'll share his walk.

REFORMED
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

A Mind for Truth, A Heart for God

FOR MORE INFORMATION, CALL REFORMED THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY IN JACKSON AT 800.543.2703, IN ORLANDO AT 800.752.4382, IN CHARLOTTE AT 800.755.2429 OR ON THE INTERNET AT RIS@RIS.edu

(Eph. 1:20-21; 6:12), which I think most scholars understand as heavenly authorities behind the earthly ones (similar to Daniel 10). Was this possibly cut short due to space constraints or possibly in the editing process?

Craig Keener
Wynnewood, Pa.

Our Lives Are Not Our Own

The editorial entitled "Lies We've Heard Before" made an extremely vital point concerning the deceptive nature of such issues as abortion and physician-assisted suicide—that we often falsely afford to ourselves more liberty than we have. Where in the world have we come up with the idea that we are autonomous and our lives are ours to do with whatever we please? This article speaks of falsehoods when dealing with this topic. I understand that patients may be in a great deal of pain, a situation in which we all express fear. Regardless of that fact, we do not have a right to do what we may with our lives. Neither do we have the wisdom to make decisions concerning such issues. That is why so much confusion exists around these issues. We are treading in an area in which we do not belong. An era of rights for the individual has made us lose sight of the truth. Our lives are not our own but have been given to us by and belong to God.

Kyle Castens
St. Louis, Mo.

✍ The fact is that this nation, despite all the intentions of the founders, Supreme Court, People for the American Way, and others, has a national religion of paganism. Included in this national religion is a creation myth taught in the public schools as fact, institutionalized hedonism, sex and fertility cults, sexual obsessions which seek to justify the lowering of the age of consent to preteen ages, polytheistic and pantheistic spirituality, and a mass human sacrifice cult through our escalating violence on the streets, the schoolyards, homes, and abortion/infanticide and PAS. These forms of alternative spirituality, violence, and human sacrifice then are presented in the form of entertainment so that the surrounding culture is desensitized and rendered irrelevant in our protests. What used to be "first do no harm" medicine has evolved (or devolved) into "first check the approved provider list in your HMO and then do as much harm as you wish." And of course, call it "choice," a favorite rubric of modern paganism.

Pastor Wm. Drew Mountcastle
Free Methodist Community Church
New Middletown, Ohio

THE DIGITAL HYMNAL

NEW VERSION CP

Now With Acoustic Grand Piano Plus Over 650 New Titles Previously Unavailable

- Instantly plays thousands of new praise and worship music, contemporary selections, traditional hymns, gospel favorites, kid's titles plus wedding, graduation and memorial selections - already stored inside - and indexed to page numbers of popular hymn books
- Acoustic grand piano, pipe organs, choir, strings and brass plus other exciting instruments already stored inside for instant use
- You choose the key, number of verses and style
- Completely self contained - no costly keyboards or disks needed
- Includes remote control and built-in speakers, or use PA system - CD quality sound
- Rechargeable NiCad battery available
- Pre-program an entire service in memory mode

Ask for cassette demo, master list of song titles and color brochure

 Gulbransen, Inc.
800-677-7374

2102 Hancock Street, San Diego, CA 92110 • FAX: 619-296-7157

Dr. Robert H. Schuller

Dr. Walter P. Kallestad
will be one of the distinguished faculty of the Sept. 21-25 session.

As a pastor, do you ever feel emotionally & spiritually drained?

Come to a place where you can lay your burdens down and have your needs fulfilled.

With over 40 years of experience, Dr. Robert H. Schuller, founder of the Fuqua International School of Communications, understands the hearts of pastors.

"Since beginning my ministry at a drive-in theater, I have seen a series of miracles that have tested and strengthened my faith."

This five-day accredited program will not only sharpen your preaching skills, but provide you with a renewed faith and personal rejuvenation!

Enrollment is limited to ensure personalized service and all sessions are underwritten to keep tuition low. Call for your FREE catalog! 714.971.4238
www.crystalcathedral.org

F U Q U A (formerly ISOCC)
INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL OF CHRISTIAN COMMUNICATIONS

Commemorating Over A Century of Christian Social Teaching

The Legacy of Abraham Kuyper and Leo XIII

October 30–31, 1998 • Calvin College,
Grand Rapids, Michigan

The past one hundred years have witnessed a renaissance of reflection on social issues from both Protestant and Catholic thinkers. To commemorate the promulgation of Rerum Novarum by Pope Leo XIII in 1891 and Abraham Kuyper's 1898 Stone Lectures at Princeton Theological Seminary, the Acton Institute and Calvin Theological Seminary are sponsoring a two-day academic conference assessing the legacy of the past century of Christian social thinking and charting a course for Christian social ethics for the next hundred years.

FEATURED SPEAKERS INCLUDE: Keynote: Very Rev. M. Ziebe, O.P., Superior of the Dominican Order in Poland • Dr. John Bolt, Calvin Theological Seminary • Rev. Avery Dulles, S.J., Fordham University • Dr. Mark Noll, Wheaton College • Mr. Michael Novak, American Enterprise Institute • Dr. Russell Hittinger, University of Tulsa • Dr. Nicholas Wolterstorff, Yale Divinity School

Co-sponsored by the Acton Institute for the Study of Religion and Liberty and Calvin Theological Seminary

For more information about the conference, please contact:

Acton Institute, 161 Ottawa Ave. N.W., Ste. 301, Grand Rapids, Michigan 49503 • phone: 616/454-3080 • fax: 616/454-9454 info@acton.org • www.acton.org

Bill Likely to Die

The concern of CHRISTIANITY TODAY over the new "antimissionary" bill now before the Israeli Knesset is understandable ("New Bill Threatens Freedom of Speech, Religion," July 13). But this new "more punitive bill" is likely to encounter the same fate as its predecessors. Despite appearances to the contrary, this bill, like hundreds of others brought up every year, will die, in all likelihood, in committee and never come up for a vote in the general assembly. Even if that were to happen, it must be voted on three times before becoming law.

Your writer quotes Chuck Kopp, president of the National Council of Churches in Israel, as expressing dismay over the yes vote of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, which Kopp says violates Netanyahu's "written commitment to Christian leaders that he would oppose such legislation." Kopp should realize that Netanyahu passed the bill along to the committee as a professional courtesy to a member of his party, which politically savvy readers will recognize as standard policy in political circles and is certainly the tradition in Israel. His actions should not be interpreted as his agreement with the bill.

Christians need to keep in mind the historically justified suspicion among the Jewish people—in Israel and around the world—that their Christian neighbors wish to associate with them for no reason other than to bring about their conversion. Regardless of whether such bills are an appropriate response, sensitive Christians might continue to be mindful to these concerns. Doing so would greatly reduce the likelihood that more "antimissionary" bills will be introduced in the future.

*Rabbi Yechiel Eckstein
Founder and President
International Fellowship of Christians and Jews
Chicago, Ill.*

A Cause for Mourning

Imagine my surprise to see Philip Harmon pilloried for his business failure and loss of millions of his family's and friends' money ["Unsuspecting Christians Bilked of Millions," July 13].

CHRISTIANITY TODAY, I believe, has lost credibility with readers who know the complexity of the truth. A dedicated Christian brother, Harmon has served with distinction on the boards of numerous ministries. His life has been fruitful in many evangelistic endeavors. His fall is a cause for mourning.

TORCH TRINITY GRADUATE SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY

The faculty, consisted of professors from Korea and other countries, will be supplemented by visiting professors from Trinity Evangelical Divinity School in Deerfield, Illinois, USA.

Degrees offered: M. A., M. Div., & Th. M.

Employment opportunities: Seeking for full-time evangelical professors in Old & New Testaments, Systematic, Historical & Practical Theology, Christian Counseling, and Missions.

School Address: 55 Yangjae-dong, Sucho-ku, Seoul, Korea 137-130
Tel: 82-2-570-7372 Fax: 82-2-570-7379 Email: ttmklee@unitel.co.kr

After much financial success, Harmon retired in the 1970s. Gradually he was coaxed into new businesses by the needs of his family and friends. By the early 1990s the businesses were experiencing cash flow problems.

As his businesses difficulties grew, he refused to accept failure and borrowed from many who could not afford the risk. He says he was blinded by his pride and in denial, failing to admit to the gravity of his financial situation.

When he could no longer carry the debt burden, he sought help. Some Christians attempted to solve the problem in a scriptural way by taking care of the needy and liquidating the remaining assets. Others decided the matter should be given to the government and contacted the U.S. attorney.

The whole spectrum of human response to a tragedy has been exposed by this situation, from unmerited forgiveness to merited hatred. Unfortunately, CT chose to publish one extreme, ignoring the lessons of grace and forgiveness taught elsewhere in the magazine.

*Ted W. Engstrom, President Emeritus World Vision
Monrovia, Calif.*

Clarification

The North American Scene item "Church Nearly Closed After Lawsuit" (July 13) contained three items that Paul Biegner of the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod's Minnesota North District has asked CT to clarify: (1) Daniel Reeb was not fired from a pastorate in the Bahamas but "expelled from the clergy roster of the Missouri Synod as unfit for ministry." (2) Reeb's expulsion occurred before the verdict in the David Samarzia trial after he was confronted with depositions from victims and had admitted to the sexual abuse. (3) Samarzia bought the contents of Redeemer Lutheran Church at a sheriff's auction; however, the congregation refused to deed the building and land to Samarzia. He then offered to "take $200,000 with the congregation's apology that 30 years before leaders of the congregation 'knew or should have known.'"

Brief letters are welcome. They may be edited for space and clarity and must include the writer's name and address if intended for publication. Due to the volume of mail, we cannot respond personally to individual letters. Write to Eutyclus, CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188; fax: 630/260-0114. E-mail: ctedit@aol.com (✉).

THE MONEY PROBLEM

A Conference on the Financing of American Religion

LOREN B. MEAD

Author of Five Challenges for the Once and Future Church (1996) and Financial Meltdown in the Mainline? (1998). Mr. Mead is Founder and former President of the Alban Institute in Washington, D.C.

MARK CHAVES

Associate Professor of Sociology at the University of Arizona, Mr. Chaves is author of Ordaining Women: Culture and Conflict in Religious Organizations (1997) and co-editor of Financing American Religion (Alta Mira Press, 1998).

ROBERT WOOD LYNN

Mr. Lynn is former Senior Vice President of Religion at Lilly Endowment, Inc. His recent scholarship focuses on the relationship between money and the Christian faith.

October
15-16, 1998

Workshops

Conversation

Sponsored by The Louisville Institute, a Lilly Endowment Program for the Study of American Religion based at Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary.

Conference leaders include both scholars and church leaders working in the area of faith and money. A program of plenary presentations, panel discussions, workshops, and worship provides ample opportunities for interaction between conference participants and leaders.

For full conference information and registration materials, please see our web page (www.louisville-institute.org) or contact:
The Louisville Institute • 1044 Alta Vista Road • Louisville, KY 40205
502 895-3411, x 487 • FAX 502 894-2286 • Email: info@louisville-institute.org

Raytheon

Kwajalein Republic of the Marshall Islands

Range Systems Engineering, a Raytheon company, has an immediate opening for the following position at the Kwajalein Memorial Chapel.

PROTESTANT CHAPLAIN

The Island Memorial Chapel is seeking a Protestant Chaplain for an interdenominational community on Kwajalein, Republic of the Marshall Islands. The primary responsibilities are pastor, teacher, and counselor to married couples, singles, and youth. The candidate must have 10 years' experience, be ordained, and have a personal commitment to Jesus Christ. Please include a one page (or less) statement of belief with your resume.

Kwajalein offers a beautiful tropical environment, great schools, year-round water sports and many other recreational activities. Private automobiles are not allowed. US Citizenship is required. If interested, please mail or fax your resume to: Raytheon Range Systems Engineering, Code, CT98 PO Box 622, APO AP 96555, Fax: (805) 355-3962.

An Equal Opportunity Employer

Raytheon
EXPECT GREAT THINGS

"Helping needy children is a Boone family tradition."

— Debby Boone

My parents, Pat and Shirley Boone, sponsored a needy child through World Vision while I was growing up. Now my husband and I are carrying on the "Boone family tradition."

Sponsoring needy children has given us the chance to pass along an important lesson in Christian compassion to our children.

Will you join us as a World Vision sponsor?

World Vision urgently needs sponsors for children around the world. Through their Child Sponsorship program, your gift of $22 a month will help to provide a needy child with improved health, nutrition and educational opportunities, as well as the chance to know the love of Jesus.

Your sponsorship gifts will also help your child's entire community become more self-sufficient.

To become a World Vision Child Sponsor, just complete and mail the coupon below. You will receive information and a photograph of a child who needs help.

I believe that there is no better time than right now to start your own "family tradition" of helping needy children.

Your life can be deeply touched by this experience—and the life of a needy child can be changed forever!

As my way of saying "Thank you," I want you to receive my album Be Thou My Vision, which features many favorite hymns.

Your free gift when you sponsor today!

World Vision's ministry reaches across the globe to be the "hands and heart of Jesus" to suffering children. A charter member of the Evangelical Council for Financial Accountability, World Vision is the largest Christian international child sponsorship organization, improving the lives of over 1 million sponsored children in 43 countries.

1 800 448-6437

SPONSOR A CHILD TODAY

<http://www.worldvision.org>

In Canada write: P.O. Box 2500,
Mississauga, Ontario L5M 2H2
Phone: 1 800 268-1650

1650696

I want to help a needy child!

I prefer to sponsor a ☐ boy ☐ girl living in ☐ Africa ☐ Asia ☐ Latin America ☐ Middle East ☐ where the need is greatest.

☐ Here is my first monthly gift of $22 to help improve the quality of life for my child and their entire community.

☐ Check (payable to World Vision)

☐ Bill my monthly sponsorship payment to my credit card:

☐ VISA ☐ MasterCard ☐ American Express ☐ Discover

No. _____ Exp. Date _____ Signature _____

☐ Please bill me later.

☐ I cannot sponsor a child right now, but would like to give a gift of $ _____, 1300

☐ Please send me a ☐ CD (54) or ☐ cassette (53) of Debby's album, Be Thou My Vision.
Your gift is tax deductible less the value of the CD ($14.95) or cassette ($10.95).

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY/STATE/ZIP _____

PHONE (____) _____

A98AYA

MAIL TODAY TO:

World Vision

Child Sponsorship

P.O. Box 70050

Tacoma, WA 98481-0050

1 800 448-6437

WORLD VISION

Acting on faith

Need a lift?

We're teaming up with some of the most profound Christian leaders to encourage you in your spiritual walk.

Howard Hendricks

Tony Evans

Ravi Zacharias

Joni Earekson Tada

Kay Arthur

Gary Chapman

Jill Briscoe

Crawford Loritts

Tim Smith

Dee Brestin

Erwin Lutzer

Joseph Stowell

- FOUNDER'S WEEK
- WOMEN'S SEMINARS

- PASTORS' CONFERENCE
- MARRIAGE SEMINARS

- MEN'S CONFERENCES
- PARENTING SEMINARS

Moody Bible Institute's Conference Ministries offers conferences and seminars to challenge you and equip you for your Christian walk.

For a listing of an event in your area, call: 1-800-356-6639

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE'S
Conference Ministries

BRINGING TRUTH TO LIFE.

If you want a more vital union with God, a richer relationship with others, and a deeper sense of personal wholeness, let Inside Out help you discover how God works real, liberating change when you live from the inside out. $12

Feeling overwhelmed? In this book, Dr. Richard Swenson offers a prescription for The Overload Syndrome, examining the nature of this common problem and offering definite hope for managing overload in the most foundational areas of life. $18

These fun devotionals are the perfect gift for avid sports fans. Each short devotional highlights an element of the sport, applying a spiritual truth and lesson for life. Great for gift giving! The One That Got Away and Avoiding the Blütz $10 each

THE MESSAGE Looking for a new kind of devotional? His Unfolding Grace weaves together Bible passages on relevant topics and provides space for journaling. Based on The Message, this devotional is one you'll come back to again and again. $12

Recapture the joy of being a child and apply it to your relationship with God! If you're looking for the joy and freedom of faith, Dangerous Wonder will open your eyes and your life to the possibility of an exciting adventure in relationship with God. $17

THE MESSAGE Topically arranged from the text of The Message, Sayings of Jesus presents Jesus' words on a variety of subjects, giving readers a clear understanding of what Jesus said and clear direction for what action to take. $12

NAVPRESS
BRINGING TRUTH TO LIFE
www.navpress.com

Get your copies today at your local bookstore, or call (800) 366-7788 and ask for offer #2116.

HOMOSEXUALITY

Ad Campaign Ignites Firestorm

Janet Folger thought she had seen enough of what she describes as hostility and intolerance. The new national director of the Center for Reclaiming America, a ministry founded by D. James Kennedy, had witnessed the public ridicule of notable conservatives—such as Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott and football star Reggie White—who dared to call homosexuality a sin.

The final straw came when White House press secretary Mike McCurry derided those who called homosexuality sinful “backward.”

So Folger, 35, got on the phone and within two weeks had enlisted support from 14 other Christian organizations for a series of newspaper ads based on the theme that homosexuals can change their orientation.

“People have been intimidated into silence,” Folger told CT. “The ads were designed to open discussion on the other side.”

Folger coordinated the first phase of the “truth in love” campaign, which spent $206,000 for full-page ads in USA Today, the New York Times, and the Washington Post. Groups participating included the Christian Coalition, Concerned Women for America, Family Research Council, and American Family Association.

The most debated ad pictured former lesbian Anne Paulk with the headline “I’m living proof that Truth can set you free.” She is married to John Paulk, a former homosexual who is an analyst for Focus on the Family and board chair of Exodus International, a Seattle-based ministry to former homosexuals.

Another ad, containing a photo of some of the 850 former homosexuals who gathered at a recent Exodus conference, declares, “We’re standing for the truth that homosexuals can change.”

The ads highlight reformed lives through Christ. But the Human Rights Campaign (HRC), the largest homosexual lobby, quickly enlisted financial support from nine other groups to put an ad in USA Today showing a church-going Republican couple who are “proud and happy” of their lesbian daughter.

“The far Right does not have a monopoly on family values and religion,” says HRC executive director Elizabeth Birch. “Gay people are no less religious or family-oriented than anyone else.”

“I’ve never felt closer to God,” says HRC senior policy advocate Tracey St. Pierre, who says she knows from 15 years of trying that “ex-gay” ministries do not work. “I prayed, I spoke to church counselors,” she says. “I begged God to change me.”

Reformed lives: John and Anne Paulk with son, Timmy.

held moral and religious beliefs,” Davies says. “They know that homosexuality is not God’s intent for their lives.”

By John W. Kennedy.

In addition, an interfaith association of more than a dozen homosexual-rights groups representing mostly mainline denominations criticized the ads for using Scripture in attempting to change sexual orientation. “We will no longer be silent when our sacred texts are misused and manipulated,” says Meg Riley of the Unitarian Universalist Association.

But Exodus International director Bob Davies says tens of thousands have successfully made the switch, proving that homosexuality is not innate and irrevocable. “Most of those contacting us are Christians who are in deep conflict with their most deeply

TELEVISION

Viewers Get Double Dose of Faith

Beginning September 21, WB Network viewers will receive a double dose of 7th Heaven. On Monday nights, the network will air new episodes of the faith- and family-friendly drama, now in its third season. On Sundays, WB will repeat episodes from the first season, which aired before the program found an ardent audience.

7th Heaven features a functional and fun-loving family headed by Eric Camden, the minister of a non-descript Protestant church (CT, Nov. 17, 1997, p. 74). Stay-at-home mom Annie is equally adept at repairing the home and raising the couple’s five children, who range in age from seven to eighteen.

“The show has a very loyal following because there isn’t anything like it on TV,” says WB spokesperson Brad Turell. “This show is a response to the conservative Christians who are out there saying, ‘Family values, family values, family values.’” With ABC canceling both Soul Man, about an Episcopal rector who is a single father, and Nothing Sacred, a controversial program about an iconoclastic Catholic priest, Eric Camden is prime time’s reigning reverend.

With a surge in the ratings last spring—which led the network to the unprecedented decision to show reruns in prime time—7th Heaven is WB’s second most popular show after Dawson’s Creek, a risqué teen drama.

By Steve Rabey.

Family viewing: Stephen Collins and Catherine Hicks play the Camden parents.

CHURCH GROWTH

Falwell Plans Biggest Sanctuary

Liberty University founder Jerry Falwell says a new 12,000-seat Thomas Road Baptist Church, projected to have the largest seating capacity of any church in North America, will be completed in Lynchburg, Virginia, by Christmas 1999.

"We think our drawing power for the church will extend many miles in many directions," he says. "With the growth of the church and a student body that will reach 10,000 in the next six years, we feel a 12,000-seat church is more realistic." Thomas Road's existing sanctuary, built in 1969, has 3,300 seats.

The new church will be five miles away on the city's Candler's Mountain near Liberty University, which Falwell founded in 1971. Construction will cost at least $20 million, and Falwell expects four unnamed—and as yet unsecured—benefactors to contribute $5 million apiece.

Financial problems have long plagued Liberty (CT, Dec. 9, 1996, p. 62), and the school fell $110 million in debt in 1990. But thanks to multimillion-dollar gifts from friends such as term life insurance titan A. L. Williams (CT, Dec. 8, 1997, p. 61), Liberty's debt has been reduced to $10 million.

"This will be the biggest thing we've done since building the university," Falwell says. The sanctuary will be part of the first phase of a new $200 million project planned for the 1,400-acre site. Future phases will include athletic facilities, a television studio, an outdoor amphitheater, a retirement village, a recreational vehicle park, and a conference center.

Off the ground: Construction will begin this fall on the largest sanctuary in the country. When finished it will seat 1,700 more than Crenshaw Christian Center in Los Angeles, where Frederick K. C. Price is pastor.

Despite the colossal size, Falwell says the sanctuary will be cozy. "You've got to have a balcony and keep everybody close in," Falwell says. "Eye contact is very important."

Falwell started Thomas Road in 1956 with 35 members. The church now has 22,000 members and 7,500 weekly attendees. Church officials have discussed the move to a new sanctuary since 1981. Previously $7 million had been raised to purchase land and for architectural plans.

Falwell, who turned 65 in August, says the new church will be his last hurrah as he begins to hand over control to associate pastors, including son Jonathan. "That would be my last major project," he says. "I'd like to get that done and have it paid for before I pass [the ministry] to somebody else."

*By Christopher Calnan
in Lynchburg*

Charitable donation: The church and surrounding grounds on Dixie Trail in Raleigh is a prime piece of real estate.

Dying Church Bequeaths Sanctuary to Anglicans

John Lancaster, rector of Saint George's Anglican Church in Raleigh, North Carolina, had started to lay the groundwork for a $250,000 capital campaign to construct a sanctuary. Instead, his congregation received an entire church—and parsonage—for free.

Saint George's formed in April 1997 with 64 members after splitting from the mainline Episcopal Church over issues of women's ordination and use of the 1979 Book of Common Prayer. It is now part of the Anglican Church in America.

Initially congregants met in an orthodontist's office. The congregation started sharing space with Sunset Hills Christian Church last December.

Sunset Hills built the church that seats 160 in 1956, a result of a church split. The congregation at first had 120 attendees, but the number had dwindled to 13 by the time Randal Klocke became pastor in 1990. Although attendance grew to 45 at one point, it fell to 16 last November when the congregation withdrew from the Disciples of Christ because members felt the denomination had become too liberal in areas such as homosexuality.

Nevertheless, the church retained the title to the property-

ty. Klocke, who supplemented his pastor's salary as a pizza-delivery driver, felt the Lord telling him to give the facilities to Saint George's outright. The remaining attendees concurred, and the transfer took place in June at a joint service.

"It's a mindboggling act of generosity that really caught us dumbfounded," Lancaster says. "The most amazing thing is this happened between two divergent traditions."

"This was God's plan to bless them," Klocke says. "Sunset Hills Christian Church was not faithful with what the Lord had given."

The three acres are situated on prime real estate and valued at $750,000. Klocke earlier had been ordained a Southern Baptist and he is now director of counseling and outreach at Main Street Baptist Church in China Grove, North Carolina.

Biblical Job Training Succeeds

In the aftermath of welfare reform (CT, April 7, 1997, p. 46), Jobs Partnership is proving that the Bible has much to say about the value of work and how it should be done—values that are beginning to transform some communities with chronic unemployment problems.

Jobs Partnership began three years ago as a way of matching business leaders with pastors of different denominations and races to develop a program teaching a biblically based work

One achiever is Gerald Simms, a 22-year-old Richmond former drug dealer now employed as a brick mason. "Just because you live in the inner city doesn't mean you have to have the mind of the inner city," Simms says. "If you have the Lord, you can do anything."

Jobs Partnership uses a biblically based weekly training curriculum to establish new attitudes toward work. The curriculum covers such topics as integrity, stewardship, communication, conflict resolution, and attitude in the context of honoring God. The program also offers a hands-on biblical human-resources development component, which teaches participants how to devise a résumé, complete a job application, and prepare for an interview. Each participant is assigned a mentor for up to two years, a relationship that bridges race and geography. Materials are free.

Long says, "Our goal is going from welfare to getting well—it's not just about getting a job." Raleigh United Church of Christ minister Donald McCoy and highway construction company executive Chris Mangum cofounded Jobs Partnership.

By Carolyn McCulley.

Building lives: Simms believes hard work will pay off for him and his son, Jordan.

ethic to the under- or unemployed. Today, groups in 22 cities nationally and 10 North Carolina counties are part of the program. Jobs Partnership national director Skip Long expects that 40 new groups—including ones from Ireland, Uganda, and Trinidad and Tobago—will start within the next year. The success rate is solid. In Raleigh, North Carolina, where the program began, 178 of the 190 people who completed the 12-week training course at least two years ago are in full-time jobs.

In Brief

◆ The Lutheran Church—Missouri Synod (LCMS) has expressed "deep regret and profound disagreement with" recent ecumenical actions taken by the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA). In July in Saint Louis, the 2.6 million-member LCMS, at its triennial convention, criticized the ELCA for establishing full communion with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Reformed Church in America, and United Church of Christ (CT, Oct. 6, 1997, p. 81). Delegates also found fault with the joint declaration on the doctrine of justification between the ELCA and Roman Catholic Church (CT, Aug. 10, 1998, p. 26).

◆ Regent University founder Pat Robertson on July 16 instructed the school to return a $1,000 grant awarded by the Virginia Commission for the Arts after learning that the state panel received $523,000 last year from the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA). The Virginia Beach school had used the funds to help produce Pavel's Chariot, a film about the Holocaust. A day earlier, the Robertson-founded Christian Coalition had called for an end to government funding of the NEA.

◆ Dove Award winner O'Landa Draper, 34, died July 21 of kidney failure at a Nashville hospital. The gospel musician, who led the 60-member singing group the Associates, had been nominated for Grammy album of the year five times.

◆ David Wells, 59, became the dean of Gordon-Conwell Theological Seminary's Charlotte, North Carolina, campus in July. Wells will continue as a theology professor at Gordon's campus in Hamilton, Massachusetts. He replaces Wayne Goodwin, 57, who will continue as ministry professor in Charlotte. CT

TV DOCUMENTARY

Faith and Science in Dialogue

Are scientists within the bounds of morality as they pioneer genetic engineering? Did the Creator's creative activity include a "big bang"?

Such questions are posed in "Faith & Reason," a one-hour documentary airing on most PBS stations September 11. Hosted by science writer Margaret Wertheim, the program touches on the historical link between religion and the work of scientists. It also takes viewers into the modern laboratories of controversial scientific disciplines, such as genetics, to examine the connections and conflicts between science and faith.

But Wertheim says the primary purpose of "Faith & Reason" is to document an emerging dialogue between theologians and scientists.

The program argues that the often-antagonistic post-Darwin relationship between Christianity and science is yielding to a new model in which believers are more open to the idea of God working through natural processes and in which scientists are more amenable to spiritual perspectives.

Wertheim says the discourse between scientists and people of faith has been taking place for two decades but has picked up momentum recently. She notes that evangelicals, who had been largely absent from the dialogue, are beginning to join the conversation in greater numbers. One, Nancy Murphy of Fuller Theological Seminary, is featured in the documentary.

By David Baird.

Conversation or Competition?

Pentecostals, Roman Catholics in long-standing talks to resolve conflicts, discover some commonalities.

Papal exchange: Cecil Robeck, Jr. (left) meets with Pope John Paul II at the Vatican.

In recent months, meetings between evangelicals and Catholics to discuss social issues and the historic joint declaration between Catholics and Lutherans on the doctrine of justification (CT, Aug. 10, 1998, p. 26) have attracted much attention. Meanwhile, few have noticed a more than quarter-century-long discussion between Roman Catholics and Pentecostals, which has generated several surprising and significant documents.

"Within the Pentecostal tradition, and within the evangelical tradition, there's been a reticence to talk about dialogue with Roman Catholics," says Cecil M. Robeck, Jr., a Pentecostal who has participated in the International Roman Catholic-Pentecostal Dialogue since 1985. He presented a summary of the group's accomplishments to the pope last year.

Robeck, an ordained Assemblies of God minister and a church history and ecumenics professor at Fuller Theological Seminary in Pasadena, California, acknowledges that it is more common to hear charismatics talk about competition, or even open warfare, with Catholics, particularly in Latin America, where sometimes violent altercations with Catholics have accompanied the rapid growth of Pentecostalism.

Observers say that by 2005 Guatemala will have more Pentecostals than Roman Catholics. In the 30 years after that, Robeck says, half a dozen Latin American countries will have a Pentecostal majority. "We have the potential of a Northern Ireland throughout Latin America if we don't watch ourselves."

FOCUSING ON CENTRAL TRUTHS:

But Catholic-Pentecostal dialogue is more than a regional matter, because the two groups are Christendom's largest blocs. According to researcher David Barrett, one-third of the world's 6 billion people are Christians. Roughly half of these believers—1 billion—are Catholics. With tremendous growth in the past generation, Pentecostals and charismatics now number 500 million.

Benedictine monk Killian McDonnell, a consultant to the Pontifical Council for Christian Unity, which was established after Vatican II to promote the Roman Catholic church's ecumenical efforts, believes discussion is essential. "The two most numerous Christian bodies in that world, which have historically been characterized by mutual hostility and denunciation, are getting together, and sitting down, and finding out that both sides have a lot of myths about what the other teaches," says McDonnell, a charter participant.

The goal of the talks is not structural unity, or even doctrinal uniformity. Pentecostal participants do not speak for their own denominations and usually pay their own way to the international meetings. But the dialogue has built relationships and fostered understanding. "We have become old friends," says McDonnell. "We're astonished at the degree of agreement on the most central truths."

"DARK SIDE OF CONFLICT": Over the past 26 years, dialogue has been frank about such divisive issues as baptism and the Holy Spirit. But some of the toughest times came as members worked to write "Evangelization, Proselytism, and Common Witness," a document that goes to the heart of some of the two communities' most divisive disputes.

"We have come up with a document in which the pain is evident," says McDonnell. (The entire report will run in the fall issue of Pneuma, the journal of the Society for Pentecostal Studies.)

Both Protestant missionaries to Latin America and Catholic clerics who have tried to protect their parishioners from such evangelism efforts can recount horror stories of intense religious rivalries that, at times, have included angry demonstrations, violence, and church burnings. More common is an ongoing war of words, with Protestants calling Catholics "non-Christians" or "demoniacs," and Catholics referring to Protestants as "wolves in sheep's clothing."

The authors of the report describe such events as "the dark side of our histories." As the report states, "It is a scandal when unbelievers are more aware of the things which separate these churches than those things they hold in common." Or, as Robeck told John Paul II last year, "We believe that Pentecostals and Catholics have far too often sinned against one another, thereby bringing shame upon the Name of the One who died for us."

During the dialogue, both sides have acknowledged past errors. Catholics, for example, have admitted to using political and economic power to intimidate Pentecostal pastors and to various failures in making Christian disciples, including "not always bringing parishioners to a personal faith commitment." Pentecostals, meanwhile, have confessed a need for greater systematic reflection on theology and its social implications.

EVANGELISM VERSUS PROSELYTISM: Dialogue participants are motivated by more than a mere desire for global goodwill. In both dialogue documents and phone interviews they talk about their "sorrow" over the church's failure to exhibit the unity Jesus prayed for in John 17:11 and that Paul pleaded for in Ephesians 4:3, a sorrow they experienced firsthand during the parallel and mutually exclusive Communion rituals that have been a part of the ecumenical worship services that conclude their annual meetings.

The report also describes how "the regrettable division among Christians is a counter witness to the credibility of the gospel," a reality that Muslims and Hindus have exploited in their own crusading efforts.

The report calls evangelism "an essential part of the mission of the church." However, proselytism is described as "a disrespectful, insensitive, and uncharitable effort to transfer the allegiance of a Christian from one ecclesial body to another." The report further describes proselytism as an unethical activity that can take many forms, including willful misrepresentation of the beliefs and practices of others, or the use of force, coercion, compulsion, mockery, or intimidation to press for conversions.

The report challenges believers to learn more about the theology of other Christian faith communities, to engage with other believers in public demonstrations of unity, such as joint prayer meetings and pulpit exchanges, to stand with others in the defense of civil and religious liberties, and to practice evangelism with an eye toward "ecclesial etiquette" as Billy Graham has done in many of his crusades.

Of course, divisions remain over such areas as the nature of the church or the question of who is or is not church-ed or evangelized.

Will the talks have significant impact? Vinson Synan, dean of Regent University's School of Divinity, says they are "essential" but adds, "for most Pentecostals, they are really not a big deal. Most have never even heard of them." Within the Assemblies of God, which has a rule prohibiting ministers from supporting the "ecumenical movement," there have been calls for disciplining Robeck and charges that he has been "meeting with the Antichrist."

But Robeck remains committed to the discussion. "When I talk about it with students or laypeople, they are excited," he says. "The greatest problem is with people in leadership in both faith communities who are concerned primarily with self-preservation."

By Steve Rabey.

THE NEW STATUS SYMBOL

Mens Short Sleeve Knit Shirts
This classic unadorned short sleeve knit shirt is made with 100% Pique cotton fabric. It features a two button placket, unadorned collar and cuffs.

Producer #15704
$39.00 plus shipping
M L XL

Colors: White, Royal Blue, Black, Jade, Purple

The New Status Symbol is "An Outward Expression of Faith". It is the symbol that represents your status as a Christian. Early Christians used the ICHTHS as a secret symbol to identify themselves to other followers of Christ.

Today's Christians will use the New Status Symbol as an outward expression of their commitment to Christ.

You may order by phone at 800-242-4775
24 hours a day, or order from our complete line of New Status Symbol products on our web site at: www.NewStatus.com.

Our mailing address is NSS, P.O. Box 631826, Houston, Texas 77263

Check Enclosed (payable to New Status Symbol Company)
Color	Size	Qty	Price	Total
			$39.00
			$39.00
			$39.00
			$39.00
			SubTotal
			Sales Tax
			Shipping
			TOTAL

☐ Discover ☐ Mastercard ☐ Visa Exp. Date:
 Credit Card No:
 Signature (required for credit cards)
 Name:
 Street: Apt:
 City: State Zip:
 Telephone:
 Shipping: Add $6.50 for 1, $9 for 2, $11 for 3 or more. Next Day Delivery: Call for rates. Sales Tax: Tx add .825%

CT998

Real Ministry for REAL LIFE

Dr. John J. Davis, Professor of Old Testament

Grace Theological Seminary offers M.A. and M.Div. programs in four tracks:
 Pastoral Ministries • Intercultural Ministries
 Counseling • Youth and Family Ministries

D.Min. programs are offered in two tracks:
 Pastoral Ministries • Intercultural Ministries

Call today for more information.

1-800-54-GRACE

200 Seminary Drive • Winona Lake, IN 46590
www.grace.edu • gtsrec@grace.edu

Dr. Ronald T. Clutter's History of Doctrine Class

GRACE

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

CONTENTS

Essays

- | | | |
|----------------------|------------|----|
| A Theology of Things | Gina Bria | 9 |
| Notes on Drowning | Doug Frank | 15 |

Studies

- | | |
|--|-----------------|
| Art and Christian Spirituality:
Companions in the Way | Luci Shaw 25 |
| Searching for Our Fathers | Don Hudson 37 |
| Resurrection Face
The Addict and the Artist | Sharon Hersh 49 |

The Mars Hill Interview

- Reminders of God

The Writing Life

- | | |
|-----------------------|----------------------|
| Fiction | |
| A Deep, Black Joy | H.E. Francis 77 |
| Nonfiction | |
| Bad Host, Added Guest | Kevin Heath 90 |
| Grandma's Cookbook | Stuart C. Hancock 99 |

Poetry

- | | | |
|------------------------------|-----------------------|-----|
| "The Coiled Spring" | Luke Schellhaas | 102 |
| "Four," | Paul Willis | 103 |
| "Spring Herons" | John Leax | 104 |
| "Further in to Fleckness" | James Durrell Shivers | 106 |
| "Hands" | D.S. Martin | 108 |
| "Hail the Daisy" | Grace Holdom | 109 |
| "The Lame Priest's Exegesis" | Bryan D. Dietrich | 110 |

Views and Reviews

Music

- | | | |
|---|-------------------|-----|
| Essay: Dylan Revisited | Douglas Thorpe | 112 |
| Reviews: Bob Dylan, Time out of Mind | Brent Short | 121 |
| Fiona Apple, Tidal | Eric Von Fullgraf | 124 |
| Music Also Reviewed | Douglas Thorpe | 127 |

Books

- | | | |
|---|---------------------|-----|
| Essay: The Prodigal Son at Home in Lake Wobegon | Joy Alexander | 129 |
| Reviews: Asylum , Patrick McGrath,
Mount Miery , Samuel Shem,
The Angel of Darkness , Caleb Carr | James A. Sparrell | 138 |
| The Secrets of Barneveld Calvary ,
James Calvin Schaap | Joy Earl Horsman | 141 |
| Books Also Reviewed | Judith Terry McCune | 144 |

Film

- | | |
|---|-----------------------|
| Essays: "Real" vs. Reel:
Religion as Art and Idea
in the Films of Woody Allen | Jory Earl Horsman 145 |
| Reviews: Boogie Nights and The Ice Storm | Scott Sawyer 151 |
| Films Also Reviewed | Sheryl Cornett 157 |

Risvolti

- Timeless graffiti
- Compiled by James Vescovi*
- 158

1-800-990-MARS
www.marshallforum.org
in association with
WESTERN SEMINARY SEATTLE

Sects Not So Bad After All?

A German parliamentary commission of inquiry into "sects and psychogroups" has wrapped up two years of work by declaring that new religious and psychological movements generally pose no real danger to state and society.

The commission, composed of a dozen representatives of the country's main political parties and a dozen public religious experts, found that a fraction of the religious movements indeed had the potential to cause "conflicts" with some individuals. But commission members, in a 600-page report, concluded that the country's constitution, guaranteeing religious freedom, need not be amended. It called for tolerance and understanding within society, and demanded discontinuation of the "derogatory" term sect. Instead, such groups should be referred to as "new religious and ideological communities."

In its recommendations, the commission encourages parliamentarians to set up a federal foundation dealing with new religious and ideological communities. It further suggests that lawmakers pass legislation for state support of private counseling and information centers and look into profiteering by the new groups.

JUSTIFICATION FOR PROBE? Even though the outcome does not trample on individual religious freedoms, some German observers are upset at the scope and purpose of the study. During a June parliamentary debate on the final report, commission chairperson Ortrun Schätzle, of Chancellor Helmut Kohl's ruling Christian Democratic Union Party, refuted criticism that the commission targeted "fringe Pentecostal, charismatic, and end-times" churches.

"The Commission of Inquiry always oriented itself on the areas of conflict and not on individual groups and certainly not on any set of religious beliefs," she stressed.

Schätzle says the commission formed in 1996 as a result of petitions submitted by citizens complaining of "physical and psychological harm, extortion, oppression, and the use of manipulative techniques" against victims in certain groups.

"These victims and family members watched the work of the commission with high expectations and called on the state to evaluate the situation, warn the citizens of potential dangers, and, above all, to prevent violations of human rights," she added.

She noted that there has been increased public concern about the activities of certain groups since the 1960s as changes in society prompted a boom in self-help groups with religious or New Age ideology. In general, there have been no "passive victims" among persons who joined new religious groups, she said, but added that the state must intervene "when basic law is violated."

SCIENTOLOGY WATCH: Roland Kohn, panel member from the liberal Free Democratic Party, reported that the commission has asked federal and state authorities to monitor the Scientology Organization, which has come under increased fire in Germany for its economic and political activity (CT, March 3, 1997, p. 68). The final report labels Scientology not a church, but an "extremist political" group. During the 1990s, several government and church officials have demanded that the Scientology Organization be banned.

Findings of the commission have been backed by representatives of the two main church bodies to which Germans nominally belong, the Roman Catholic Church and the umbrella Protestant Evangelical Church in Germany (EKD), which includes Lutheran and Reformed bodies. The EKD noted that churches must engage in dialogue with different religious groups and, where needed, assist with counseling of affected persons.

"We took care that in this process groups would not be persecuted, stigmatized, or defamed," said Hans Gasper, a commission member representing the Catholic Bishops' Conference. "The final report speaks highly of respect for religious and confessional freedoms."

Gasper told CT that "fringe" Pentecostal churches had been mentioned during discussions, particularly in connection with faith healing. In one incident in Cologne, a charismatic believer allegedly encouraged hospital patients to stop taking medicine and allow the Holy Spirit to heal them instead.

Gasper said 90 percent of the cases he researched deal with youth who join a sect or cult, then break off studies and isolate themselves from family members. Followers of unorthodox philosophies in Germany include 450,000 adherents of the New Apostolic Church, 166,000 Jehovah's Witnesses, 50,000 transcendental meditators, and 36,000 Mormons.

By Richard Nyberg in Bonn.

Church Chair Industries, Inc.

Cathedral Stacker

Free Chair Test Compare
(100+)

Royal Stacker

Plush, tall backs over 1/2" plywood.

Free Lumbar Back Support

Now Only
$25.25
100+

Now Only
$26.25
100+

Design Stacker #1

Plush 4 & 5" deep foam
seats over 1/2" plywood.

Oak Pew Chair

Call 1-800-331-5411

For Free Catalog & Steel
Frame Sample Chair

GREAT PEW LIKE CHAIRS OAK OR STEEL FRAMES
LOCKS TOGETHER TO FORM A CONTINUOUS BENCH

DESIGN PATENT NO.
DES. 333,7333

OPTIONS

Arms

Kneelers

Book & Card Pockets

PAPUA NEW GUINEA

Christians Aid Tidal Wave Survivors

The survivors of the July 17 tsunami that hit Papua New Guinea are slowly rebuilding their lives, despite the continued threat of disease. As many as 2,000 are feared dead in the remote area. Christian aid groups are supplying medical care, food, and fresh water.

Initially, decomposing corpses contaminated water sources, increasing the risk of typhus and malaria. Shallow graves and gasoline-ignited cremations substituted for traditional burial ceremonies.

Randall Karcher, a Wycliffe staff member in Papua New Guinea, says the absence of the traditional burial practice of sharing stories around the body of the deceased will create significant psychological damage among survivors who lost everything. "It's kind of a reminiscing; a closure time," he says. "They're not going to have that chance."

Waves towering higher than 25-foot coconut trees decimated villages along 18 miles of the South Pacific island's northwestern coast, following an underwater earthquake. Some of the drowning victims were tossed miles from their villages.

Hundreds of children died, including many who attended inland missionary-run schools. They had returned home for a two-week holiday when the waves struck the island located north of Australia. Some schools may not reopen because most of the children died.

Drowning victim: The body of a Nimas village resident caught in the tsunami.

Wycliffe linguists John and Bonnie Nystrom work in Arop, one of the villages destroyed by the waves, but they were in Ukarumpa, about 300 miles away, when the tidal wave struck. "There's virtually no evidence the village was ever there," John Nystrom told CT. "The only evidence that someone once lived there is a cement foundation of a church."

By Christine J. Gardner.

New find: Thomas Parker (left) believes he has located the oldest church.

'Oldest Church' Discovered in Jordan

North Carolina State University archaeologist Thomas Parker believes he has uncovered remains of what may be the oldest church in the world, dating from the late third century, in the Jordanian port city of Aqaba.

Although other buildings used for Christian gatherings during the first century and a half following Jesus' ministry have been unearthed, Parker maintains these are the remains of "the earliest known building specifically designed as a church."

The church apparently crumbled during an earthquake in 363 and then was buried by desert sand until Parker's excavation team uncovered it. "It may offer valuable clues about early church architecture unavailable from many Near Eastern churches continuously remodeled since that period," Parker told CT.

German archaeologists working in Umm Qais, in northern Jordan, believe they have found the remains of another church, this one built to mark the miracle of the Gadarene swine. It is a five-aisled basilica similar in design to a dozen other churches, such as the Church of the Nativity and the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, which mark significant events in the life of Christ. The church was built over the remains of a first-century tomb.

By Gordon Govier.

AUSTRALIA

Racing Fans Can Find Faith at Track

Australia's biggest tire mogul, a recently born-again Christian after winning a battle against cancer, wants to bring religion to the center of his favorite pastime: auto racing.

Bob Jane has rescued an 80-year-old rustic church set for demolition and moved it to the Thunderdome NASCAR racing track in Melbourne. The church will be part of extended Christian activities at the first NASCAR track outside the United States.

The idea of having a church at the racing site came as a result of prayer. "This is a dangerous sport," says Jane, a self-made millionaire. "The drivers need all the help they can get to stay alive." The interdenominational church, to be completed next month, will be available for weddings, christenings, funerals, and other events.

In addition to opening races with prayers and eulogies, Jane plans to bring sports ministers from Charlotte, North Carolina, to join Australian evangelism teams during the summer racing season that starts in October.

Jane, a racing-car driver himself, built the track as part of a motor-racing complex that includes flat and drag racing.

By Clare M. Booth in Melbourne.

Bob Jane

Rescued from demolition: The country church has been moved to a setting with more traffic.

Congress May Merge Efforts

Rather than competing for congressional votes, sponsors of two religious persecution bills are discussing how to combine the measures (CT, May 18, 1998, p. 20).

The Freedom from Religious Persecution Act (the Wolf-Specter bill), designed to punish countries guilty of severe religious persecution, passed the House by a 375-to-41 vote. In July, both the Wolf-Specter bill and the more comprehensive International Religious Freedom Act, introduced by Sen. Don Nickles (R-Okla.), had been scheduled for full Senate consideration. But legislators put the brakes on further congressional action and began talks on possibly fusing the bills.

Groups that monitor religious persecution abroad are cautiously supporting a compromise. "We don't want to see Wolf-Specter watered down to where it doesn't have any teeth," says Keith Rodrick of the Coalition for the Defense of Human Rights Under Islamization.

Karen Lord of the Helsinki Commission says, "When compared, Wolf-Specter is good for specific situations where religious persecution is most egregious. Nickles's bill takes a much broader view to get at the root of the problem."

Both lawmakers and religious groups say passage of some form of the legislation through both houses of Congress before the end of the year is critical.

By Walter Ratliff in Washington.

In Brief

◆ Following an 18-month audit, the French Tax Authority has imposed a 60 percent tax on religious contributions made by Jehovah's Witnesses, covering a four-year period. The government agency ruled it is not a religion, and therefore owes $50 million in back taxes. The organization appealed the decision after the government put a lien on its property. In an open letter to French President Jacques Chirac, Jehovah's Witnesses representative L. A. Swingle called the ruling "a shocking display of religious discrimination" that "could affect donations to any religion, charity, or not-for-profit organization the tax administration chooses to target in the same manner." With 220,000 adherents, Jehovah's Witnesses are the third-largest religious body in France.

◆ Britain's House of Lords, the upper legislative body in Parliament, voted 290 to 122 to overturn a law reducing the age of consent for homosexual acts to 16 from 18. The House of Commons earlier had overwhelmingly supported the change in age (CT, Aug. 10, 1998, p. 27). The archbishop of Canterbury led the reversal move, with support from a variety of religious leaders, including the UK's Evangelical Alliance.

◆ Police in Kastoria, Greece, stopped an open-air program in July of the interdenominational antidrug society Philemon, which is associated with the evangelical Hellenic Ministries (CT, Nov. 17, 1997, p. 96). The ministry says police revoked their permit and ordered the group to disband upon orders from Orthodox Archbishop Seraphim. [CT]

Martyrs Carved in Stone

A congregation representing various denominations from around the world gathered July 9 at Westminster Abbey for the unveiling of ten limestone statues commemorating twentieth-century Christian martyrs. Queen Elizabeth, Anglican Archbishop George Carey, and relatives and colleagues of those honored attended.

The gleaming, nearly life-size figures included noted heroes such as Baptist civil-rights leader Martin Luther King, Jr., of the United States, Catholic Bishop Oscar Romero of El Salvador, Lutheran theologian Dietrich Bonhoeffer of Germany, and Franciscan friar Maximilian Kolbe of Poland.

Canon Anthony Harvey, innovator of the project, says the selection process was complicated by the committee's desire to include every continent and a broad denominational representation.

"The cost of Christian witness, and the number of Christians willing to die for what they believed . . . has been greater in this century than in any previous period in the history of the church," Harvey says.

Others included are Saint Elizabeth, an Orthodox nun martyred during Russia's Bolshevik Revolution; Esther John, a Presbyterian evangelist in Pakistan; and Wang Zhiming, a pastor slain during China's Cultural Revolution.

Anglicans honored are Ugandan bishop Janani Luwum, killed during the rule of Idi Amin; Mange Masawala of South Africa, a teen murdered by her animist parents; and Lucian Tapiedi of Papua New Guinea, killed during the Japanese invasion in World War II. Tapiedi's murderer later converted to Christianity and became the rector of a church named in his honor.

By Karen L. Mulder in London.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY

Martyrs row: The statues, including King (above), fill niches that have been empty since the fifteenth century above the great doors.

Christians Expelled from Maldives

At least 15 foreign Christians have been expelled from the Republic of Maldives, a nation of 200 inhabited islands in the Indian Ocean, after government authorities launched unannounced searches of their homes. No official charges have been filed.

As many as 50 Maldivians also were arrested in June under suspicion of being Christians, which is illegal under the Maldivian constitution. The Evangelical Alliance of Sri Lanka reports they are being held in solitary confinement at the Dhoonidhoo prison and are likely being subjected to torture.

The national religion of Maldives is Islam and nearly all 280,000 residents are adherents, although a tiny native Christian population exists.

Recently, the country's Supreme Council for Islamic Affairs warned Maldivians not to listen to Christian programs broadcast for the first time in the Dhivehi language by Far East Broadcasting Association from Seychelles or they would risk arrest. [CT]

Growing Unrest

Greek Church says laity lamentations are groundless.

Is there a genuine crisis in the Greek Orthodox Church of America or is a small band of well-financed dissidents stirring up trouble in an otherwise stable archdiocese?

Opinions vary dramatically, but one thing is certain: the chasm is widening between the top leadership of the Greek Orthodox Church in America, which has 1 million U.S. members, and the newly formed dissident coalition Greek Orthodox American Leaders (GOAL). The intensifying conflict became evident at July's biennial clergy-laity congress in Orlando.

The Greek Orthodox Church's internal dispute over the role of their highest leader in America reached a new level in March, as GOAL leaders called for the resignation or reassignment of Archbishop Spyridon if he did not respond to their concerns by May 1 (CT, June 15, 1998, p. 13). So far, no resolution is in sight.

GOAL members, many of whom hold prominent church and community positions, lament what they consider Spyridon's autocratic leadership, a "pay-and-obey" mentality, and questionable financial dealings by the archbishop.

GOAL came together after the June 1997 firings of four priests by the archbishop at the Hellenic College/Holy Cross Seminary in Brookline, Massachusetts. Many members believe the firings are related to a sexual harassment cover-up at the seminary.

According to Mark Arey, executive director of communications for the Greek Orthodox Church in America, school officials have promised to work with two accrediting agencies to correct any defects in their current policies.

VOTE INDICATES DIVISION: In an emotional vote at the congress that illustrates the deepening rift within the church, members of the clergy-laity congress voted Archbishop address: Spyridon delivers an opening speech at the congress.

260 to 255 to recommend reinstating the four priests who had been dismissed and to develop a task force to study the situation.

Steve Angelides, an Oakland judge and a GOAL founder, believes the outcome is telling. "This vote proves that when the archbishop tried to minimize the discontent to 10 or 15 people, as he said at the beginning of the conference, he was wrong," he says. "It shows that he's divided the church right down the middle."

The congress is composed of clergy and lay representatives for the 500 Greek parishes across the country. Since the gathering, the four priests have written a letter to Spyridon asking to be reinstated. However, the vote is nonbinding and it can make all the difference!

Study in Israel

- MASTER OF ARTS DEGREES • GRADUATE OR UNDERGRADUATE SEMESTER ABROAD
- SHORT-TERM ACADEMIC STUDY TOURS • CREDITS TRANSFERABLE

Jerusalem University College

an evangelical Christian institution of higher learning celebrating 40 years in Jerusalem

formerly: INSTITUTE OF HOLY LAND STUDIES

For literature and free video: 1-800-891-9408
or (815)229-5900 in North America, all others 972-2-718628

Sharing the Good News with New Readers

Bible SUNDAY '98

Awakening Hearts of Faith

GOD IS AT WORK in the hearts of millions of people in China, Cuba and America's neediest urban communities. Spiritual renewal is an exciting reality!

But men, women, and children urgently need the Scriptures to fully understand the gospel and God's work in their lives.

Your congregation can meet their need. By participating in Bible Sunday you will help provide

God's Word to people in their own language in China, Cuba and America's inner cities.

On November 22, 1998, Bible Sunday, join with Christians across the nation to be used by God to awaken hearts of faith!

To receive a FREE Bible Sunday information packet (includes a children's activity sheet, Bible reading marathon sheet, bulletin insert, planning and devotional guides, poster and worship helps), clip and mail the coupon below today.

☐ YES! Our congregation will participate in Bible Sunday '98.

Please send me FREE information for:

☐ Bible Sunday #106429

☐ Dia de la Biblia (Espanol) #106431

☐ Bible Sabbath #106430

Church Name _____ PLEASE PRINT

Contact Name _____

Street Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

Phone () _____ 8CBMB46AN HR37

American Bible Society • 1865 Broadway • New York, NY 10023

Spyridon has the power to dismiss it. Several priests say the vote represented the first time they had openly taken a stand against the archbishop.

CRISIS OR MISUNDERSTANDING?

Arey believes Spyridon has been unfairly portrayed as heavy-handed, and he says the archbishop cares deeply for his flock. Furthermore, he says talk among laity of financial impropriety is irresponsible. "We have the lowest deficit in ten years," Arey says. "We have the most comprehensive audits and financial disclosures ever. There's a disconnect between complaint and reality."

GOAL press officer Dean Poppes alleges that Spyridon has been fiscally capricious, citing a $1.4 million home the archbishop tried to purchase—without committee approval—using a nonrefundable check for $139,500 as one example. Arey counters that the archbishop had nowhere else to live, and his chancellor believed the executive committee would approve the transaction.

A subcommittee formed by the Archdiocesan Council Committee headed by San Diego Chargers owner Alexander Spanos reported finding numerous irregularities in financial procedure and accused archdiocesan staff of impeding their investigation. Spyridon is not implicated directly.

Many GOAL leaders believe Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew and Spyridon place little value in laity views. Angelides says, "They act like the Holy Spirit only comes through the patriarch of Constantinople."

Poppes concurs. "We have no beef with the doctrine, worship, or hierarchical structure of the Orthodox Church," he says. "We just want our hierarchs to be good hierarchs."

DIFFERING PHILOSOPHIES: The foundational disagreement may stem from disparate understandings of the role of Orthodoxy in modern American society. The underlying problem to activists such as Poppes is that the Greek leadership seems set on stopping the drive for an autocephalous American church.

Poppes complains that Spyridon and Bartholomew do not understand Americans. "They only understand tenth-century Constantinople," he says. "The model then was that the patriarch and emperor were hand-in-hand. That model doesn't work in the twenty-first century."

Arey says the growing pains of the American church have led to confusion of long-standing clergy and laity roles. "You can't come in like the one-minute manager and change everything according to your liking and understanding," Arey considers GOAL to be "a very small, narrowly based group that has significant financial resources to run an ad campaign to portray the church as chaotic and mismanaged." Poppes says GOAL did spend $125,000 in sending an eight-page newspaper mailing on "the crisis in the church" before the congress to almost 122,000 Greek Orthodox households.

At the conference, Spyridon said he "regrets the recent letters which have been circulated within our community whose sole purpose is to attack and hurt clergy and lay members of the church."

Despite the difficulties, Angelides is hopeful. "We've been religious couch potatoes," he says. "Our parents built these churches and we've done nothing. I am certain the Holy Spirit is using this as part of the transformation process."

By Shelly Houston.

The value of your computer just went up a degree.

Pictured are Ed.D. faculty (L to R) Warren Benson, Brian Richardson, Jack Cunningham, Mark Simpson and Dennis Williams.

The School of Christian Education and Leadership at Southern Seminary invites you to explore the first Doctor of Education in Leadership degree on-line.

- Use the Internet to study full time without having to relocate.
- Complete most of your course work at home while continuing your full-time ministry.
- Come to campus for seminars three times a year in July, November and March.
- Complete course work for seminars at home through Internet discussion groups, e-mail and on-line research.
- Study with the renowned education and leadership faculty of Southern Seminary and other guest specialists.

Application requirements and detailed program information are available on-line at:
<http://www.sbts.edu/celead/edd/edd.html>.

The Southern Baptist
Theological Seminary

2825 Lexington Rd. • Louisville, KY 40280
1 800 626-5525, ext. 4058 • (502) 897-4058

Portable Sunday School Partitions

simply the world's most versatile portable partitions!

Imagine . . . being able to easily partition any area in your church to provide the Sunday School classrooms you need. Partitions which are tackable, sound absorbing and totally free of any exterior connections. No complicated or limiting track systems, no costly structural supports, no interference with your building's heat, light, and ventilation systems. Screenflex Portable Sunday School Partitions . . .

the partitions of the future are here!

YOUR CLASSROOM NEEDS

... NO PROBLEM!

FOR COMPLETE INFORMATION PLEASE CONTACT:

Screenflex Portable Partitions, Inc.
250 Lexington Drive
Buffalo Grove, IL 60089
800-553-0110
www.screenflex.com

Create instant Sunday School classrooms as easy as . . .

Locate partition

Unlock partition and pull handle

Position partition as desired

Focus on the Family

know the truth.
know the facts.
no apologies.

TEENS can get confused while trying to figure out life—especially when making choices about sex. They need to be encouraged that they do have the power to make smart decisions—but first they need to hear the truth.

Hosted by actor Austin O'Brien, this cutting-edge production features powerful testimonials that encourage teens to choose self-respect, responsibility, and self-control.

Look for No Apologies, the Truth about Life, Love + Sex wherever quality videos are sold.

Tyndale House Publishers, Inc.
www.tyndale.com

Resources for Life

Anglicans Deem Homosexuality 'Incompatible with Scripture'

Lambeth kickoff: Archbishop of Canterbury Carey (standing) addresses the opening service.

The campaign by liberal bishops for the ordination and marriage of practicing homosexuals suffered a striking setback in August at the historic Lambeth Conference in Canterbury, England.

Anglican bishops from around the globe voted 526 to 70 with 45 abstentions for a resolution declaring that homosexual practice is "incompatible with Scripture." During the past year, several other major Protestant church bodies have issued statements either rejecting ordination and marriage for practicing homosexuals or affirming that sexual relations should be limited to heterosexual marriage.

Archbishop of Canterbury George Carey said, "I stand wholeheartedly with traditional Anglican orthodoxy. I see no room in Holy Scripture or the entire Christian tradition for any sexual activity outside matrimony of husband and wife."

INFLUENTIAL RESOLUTION: Once a decade, the bishops of the world's 55 million Anglicans, known in the United States as Episcopalians, gather for the Lambeth Conference, held this time at the University of Kent in Canterbury. The meetings are advisory in nature and nonbinding, but are nevertheless highly influential.

The debate over the place of sexually active homosexuals overshadowed much of the three-week-long conference's agenda. Early on, a controversial meeting between the Lambeth sexuality study group and homosexuals was canceled. Bishop John Spong of New Jersey, a leading advocate for homosexuals, was put on the defensive when he called African Christians "superstitious" and backward in their views on sexuality.

The bishops' sexuality study committee was drawn into intense exchanges as they drafted a compromise resolution. But two days later during a plenary session, bishops approved conservative amendments to the committee's hard-won agreement.

During debate, Bishop Catherine Wainwright of Indianapolis told the conference that, in the past, the church had thought it had the correct answers to moral problems such as slavery but centuries later had to repent. She said, "Our call is not to correctness but to love."

After the vote, Bishop James Stanton, president of the conservative American Anglican Council of Dallas, said the sexuality debate has "sapped our energy from urgent tasks such as evangelism and justice for the poorest of the poor."

Liberal bishops stressed that they would not end their efforts on behalf of homosexuals. Scottish Bishop Richard Holloway said he felt "gutted, shafted, and betrayed, but the struggle will go on."

AFRICAN VOICES: The sexuality resolution may signal the most influence ever by African and Asian bishops. In a reference to the growing influence of African Anglicans, Stanton noted how "eloquent learned voices from other places around the globe" were powerfully persuasive at Lambeth. About 87 percent of Anglicans worldwide reside in eight countries.

The greatest growth has been concentrated in Africa and in a few spots in Asia.

In Nigeria, for instance, the number of Anglican dioceses has increased 35 percent from 26 a decade ago to 61 this year. There are 5.7 million Anglicans in Nigeria. In the United States, by comparison, there are 2.3 million Anglicans (mostly in the Episcopal Church, U.S.A.).

Bishop John Rucyahana of Shyira, Rwanda, is one example of a new generation of church leaders from the developing world who have been tested by internal warfare, religious persecution, and poverty. Rucyahana told CT, "The church is losing the ability to preach the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. We don't like your First World way of speaking ambiguous words and not being straight on the issues. We don't feel it's time for more dialogue [on homosexuality]."

"It's not the institution per se which we want to save. We want to save the ability to preach the transforming gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, the ability to convert the world to Jesus, not to the institution."

In other action, Lambeth bishops voted to oppose compulsion in ordination, lending support to four American bishops who refuse to ordain women.

By Timothy C. Morgan, with Robert Nowell and David Virtue reporting from Canterbury, England.

Lambeth Sexuality Resolution

The resolution states in part that the Anglican Communion:

- In view of the teaching of Scripture, upholds faithfulness in marriage between a man and a woman in lifelong union, and believes that abstinence is right for those who are not called to marriage.
- Recognizes that there are people who experience a homosexual orientation. Many are members of the church and are seeking pastoral care and moral direction, and God's transforming power for the ordering of relationships. The church commits to listen to the experience of homosexual people and assure them that they are loved by God, and that all baptized, believing, and faithful persons, regardless of sexual orientation, are full members of the body of Christ.
- While rejecting homosexual practice as incompatible with Scripture, calls on all Anglicans to minister pastorally and sensitively to all, irrespective of sexual orientation, and to condemn irrational fear of homosexuals, violence within marriage, and any trivialization and commercialization of sex.
- Cannot advise the legitimizing or blessing of same-sex unions, nor the ordination of those involved in such unions.

Learn more about your Jewish heritage in the Messiah

Enrich your Walk

Purchase both books and receive a FREE copy of Presenting Messiah
to your Jewish Friend

CALL

1-800-776-3976

Chosen People Ministries

1300 Cross Beam Drive • Charlotte, NC 28217
www.chosen-people.com

Bringing the message of the Messiah to the Jewish people worldwide for more than 100 years

The bestselling author of Jesus CEO paves
the way for fulfillment

THE PATH

Creating Your Mission Statement

for

Work and for Life

Laurie Beth Jones

The National Bestseller
NOW IN PAPERBACK

"[The Path] offers practical, useful help to Christians and nonbelievers alike. Jones has made her mark, and her books are here to stay."

—Christian Retailing

ALSO IN PAPERBACK BY LAURIE BETH JONES

JESUS CEO

Using Ancient Wisdom for Visionary Leadership

JESUS IN BLUE JEANS

A Practical Guide to Everyday Spirituality

AT BOOKSTORES FROM HYPERION

Keeping Students in School

Christian colleges seek to improve retention rate.

Jennifer Martin looked forward to attending a Christian college. After graduating from a public high school where she participated in Young Life, Martin sought a refuge from the world where she could be fed spiritually. "I thought it would be like a big summer camp, with everyone jumping up and down about God every day." Martin, a scholarship recipient, selected Eastern College in Saint Davids, Pennsylvania, largely because of its proximity to her home in Willow Grove.

But anticipation quickly turned to disillusionment. Four months into her first year, Martin seriously considered leaving. "I was feeling very disconnected at Eastern," she says. "I wasn't feeling I had found a niche." Martin is one of many Christian college students who contemplate leaving school. Research shows more Christian college students drop out before graduation than students at comparable private colleges: 47 percent of first-year Christian college students stay through graduation, compared to 53 percent at other private institutions.

Student retention is a worsening national problem at both private and public institutions, with rates declining 1 to 2 percent a year, according to Eastern College psychology professor Laurie Schreiner, director of the Coalition for Christian Colleges and Universities (CCCU) Quality/Retention Project. "Students are much more likely to shop around, to vote with their feet," she says.

Christian college students see themselves as consumers, Schreiner says, and will transfer to a public school or drop out altogether before considering another Christian college if they are unhappy with the product.

Some Christian colleges have been slow to recognize retention as a problem, relying instead on recruitment efforts to increase enrollments. Others have realized the challenge, but have not had the financial resources to tackle it.

FOCUS ON FACULTY: Now, though, institutions are trying to learn from one another how to keep their students in school. The CCCU recently surveyed 20,000 students at 79 member schools to find ways of increasing student retention. The survey measured students' satisfaction with their college experience as an indicator of their propensity to stay through graduation.

The survey indicates Christian college students are generally more satisfied with their educational experience than students at secular private colleges, which makes the dropout rate especially perplexing.

Although respondents indicated the greatest discontent with parking, food, and financial aid, they also reported dissatisfaction with academic advising. Retention experts are hoping a renewed focus on one-on-one interaction with faculty outside the classroom will help.

About 20 CCCU faculty and staff joined the largest-ever National Conference on Student Retention in New Orleans in July for training in mentoring students. "We need to see [advising] as more than course scheduling," Schreiner says.

New from BAKER

Invitation to the Classics

Masterworks Series

Louise Cowan and Os Guinness, editors

Invitation to the Classics will open a new generation of readers to the wonder of some of humankind's greatest creations. This volume helps the reader enter the world of the great books. With rich, full-color illustrations and clear, understandable text penned by fifty experts, the work introduces the major Western classics from a Christian perspective. 0-8010-1156-6 $34.99 cloth

Dismissing God

Modern Writer's Struggle

Against Religion

D. Bruce Lockerbie

In Dismissing God, D. Bruce Lockerbie explores the role of unbelief and disbelief in the lives of leading writers from the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. He reveals how writers dismiss God in different ways, opening up each author's inner life and the biographical background behind that rejection. Lockerbie then shows how the dismissal takes shape through an analysis of the writer's own work.

0-8010-5804-X $15.99 paper

Encountering The New Testament

Encountering Biblical Studies Series

Walter Elwell and Robert Yarbrough

With its full-color illustrations and multimedia, interactive compact disc—not to mention its rigorous scholarship, readable style, and educational soundness—Encountering the New Testament: A Historical and Theological Survey sets a new standard in introductory undergraduate biblical studies. 0-8010-2156-1 $44.99 cloth

Available at your local bookstore.

Visit the Baker web site at www.bakerbooks.com.

YOUR PRESENCE IS REQUESTED.

*Bestselling author and pastor
Charles Stanley*

God invites you to experience something better, grander, more powerful—and you will only find it in His presence. In Enter His Gates, bestselling author and pastor Charles Stanley, takes you on a year-long devotional encounter based on the spiritual significance of Jerusalem's twelve city gates.

You have an invitation from the King.

This inspirational collection will make a wonderful Christmas gift.

THOMAS~NELSON
publishers

CELEBRATING 100 YEARS OF HONORING
GOD AND SERVING PEOPLE

Available in fine bookstores everywhere or call 1-800-231-0442.

Please refer to Source Code 06824.

Because of counsel from her adviser, Liddy Tuleja, Martin decided to remain at Eastern, despite having a boyfriend at Virginia Tech and her indecision on a major. Over coffee or during impromptu meetings after class, Tuleja says, "I would just listen and let her make her own decisions." Martin, who is a senior business major this fall, calls Tuleja both a mentor and friend.

Such time-intensive retention solutions come at a price for already overburdened faculty members. "You've got a full teaching load, you're expected to be on committees, preparing for classes, [doing] scholarly research," says Tuleja. "You're kind of a jack-of-all-trades." Most professors advise about 20 students. The best advisers can mentor as many as 40 at a time, but a larger advising load does not necessarily mean a larger paycheck.

DESIRE FOR DIVERSITY: Institutions may have the most difficulty retaining ethnic minorities, despite increased efforts to attract them.

Mentoring moment: Tuleja (left) convinced Martin to stay in school.

The survey indicates nonwhite students are among the most disenfranchised with their Christian college experience, a situation that is mirrored across the board in higher education. At Christian institutions, Schreiner says, "It's not that we're not welcoming and nice, but we're geared to a white mentality." Recently, the Mustard Seed Foundation, which awards grants to Christian organizations, committed to help Christian colleges retain underrepresented students by creating a $10 million scholarship fund. The money will be distributed among ten CCCU institutions over a five-year test phase in an effort to attract African-American, Hispanic, and Native-American students.

Schreiner says schools can improve their retention of minority students if they work to broaden their curriculum offerings and employ more minority faculty and staff.

But the pool of qualified nonwhite faculty is small, forcing Christian colleges with limited budgets to recruit amid offers from other private and public institutions. "It is impossible for us to compete in salary and status," says Grace Ju, an Asian-American professor of biology at Gordon College in Wenham, Massachusetts, which has 9 percent minority faculty. "What are we to do?"

Some minority professors are wary of

The Theodora W. Grow Center for the Renewal of the Churches at Northern Baptist Seminary
"Building The Church" series presents:

Celebrating the 3rd MILLENNIUM

A Renewed Church for the 21st Century

November 5-6, 1998 • Lombard, Illinois

Northern Baptist Theological Seminary

FEATURING

Mike Regele

Co-founder and president of the Percept Group,
Costa Mesa, CA

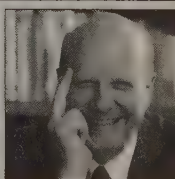

Eddie Hammett

Laity Leadership Development Team
Leader with the Baptist
State Convention of NC

Garth Rosell

Professor and Director of the Ockenga Institute,
Gordon-Conwell
Seminary, South
Hamilton, MA

J. David Schmidt

Founder of J. David
Schmidt Research &
Associates, Inc.,
Wheaton, IL

LEARN ABOUT...

- the role of the Word in Renewal
- how postmodernism is shaping our world,
- making spiritual renewal possible in the church,
- reaching our unchurched culture ...AND MORE!

ALSO INCLUDING...

Michael Kelly Blanchard

Singer, songwriter and storyteller
Unionville, CT

Robert Price

Assistant Professor of Evangelism
Northern Baptist
Theological Seminary

Timothy Sharp

Director of Choral
Activities
Belmont University,
Nashville, TN

Tony Payne

Assistant Dean
Wheaton College
Conservatory of Music,
Wheaton, IL

Call Dr. William Clemmons at 1-800-YES-NBTS (x2193)
or 630/620-2193

Northern Baptist Seminary
660 E. Butterfield Rd. • Lombard, IL 60148

Of all the reasons not to drink and drive,
getting special rates on your insurance is
the least important.

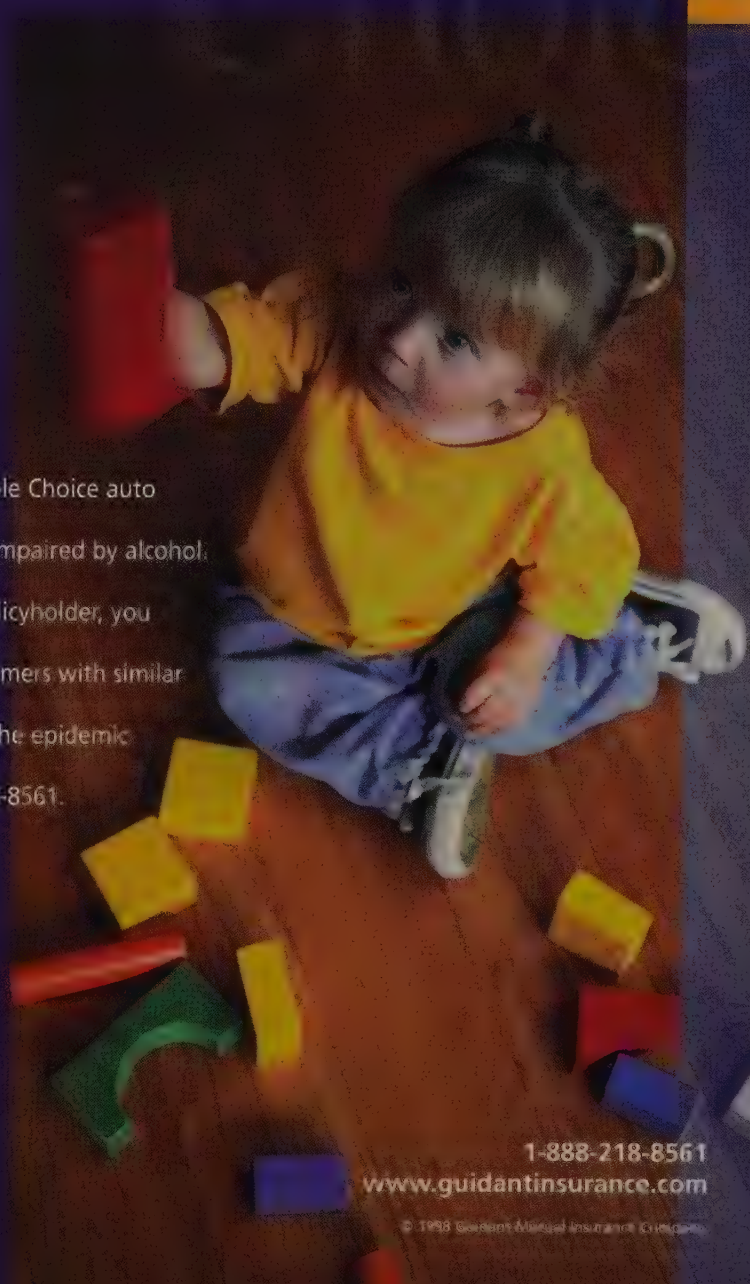

The Guidant Insurance Group

is proud to exclusively offer Responsible Choice auto insurance to people who don't drive impaired by alcohol.

By becoming a Responsible Choice policyholder, you join thousands of other Guidant customers with similar values. To join the fight to eliminate the epidemic of drinking and driving, call 1-888-218-8561.

Valuing Customers As Partners

1-888-218-8561
www.guidantinsurance.com

© 1998 Guidant Mutual Insurance Company

affirmative action-type efforts at Christian colleges. Michelle Loyd-Paige, an African-American professor of sociology at Calvin College in Grand Rapids, Michigan, says faculty should be hired for their skills, not just their skin color. "You want to be sure, when you are bringing people in, they feel they are welcome, not as a statistic," she says.

Creating a sense of community that acknowledges cultural differences but focuses on Christian unity is critical to ethnic minority-student retention, Loyd-Paige says.

She believes campuses that tie Christian identity to a particular denomination—especially mostly white denominations—may have a difficult time achieving multiculturalism. She says more campuses strive to be multiracial, acculturating different races to the college's subculture, than truly multicultural, acknowledging "individual expressions of [Christianity] might be a little bit different." Loyd-Paige, a 1981 Calvin alumna, commutes 45 miles to the college from her home in Muskegon Heights, which is 80 percent African-American.

While the percentage of minority students and faculty is small at Christian colleges, diversity is slowly increasing. Some colleges are hiring minority recruiters and inviting inner-city students to summer programs on campus. At Bethel College in Mishawaka, Indiana, white and nonwhite students are forming intentional communities by sharing campus houses. Calvin College and Point Loma Nazarene College in San Diego are offering graduate fellowships for minority alumni who agree to teach at their alma mater.

TUITION COSTS: Affordability is another piece of the retention puzzle. For 1997-98, CCCU tuition grew at 6.3 percent versus 5 percent at similar private colleges. But CCCU tuitions are still $2,800 less expensive per year on average.

The cost of attracting students is high. Colleges spend an average of $1,600 in marketing costs for each new student, according to CCCU president Robert Andringa, even though most students attend colleges within 400 miles of home.

Administrators are dealing with the affordability factor by offering institutional scholarships and seeking additional sources of revenue. "Discounting" is a common institutional pricing strategy. "On average, private colleges are using 29 percent of their tuition revenue to pour back into scholarship aid for students," Andringa says. Still, Steve Moore, vice president for campus life at Seattle Pacific University, cautions, "If you hold tuition down, you have to increase your revenue some other way."

QUALITY IS KEY: As colleges consider how to enhance the quality—and affordability—of the education they deliver, the latest education trend of Internet-based distance learning could pose a significant challenge by reducing the face-to-face interaction with faculty. "I'm concerned that if we go in the direction of distance learning that we still maintain relationships, in the advising process as well as the teaching process," Schreiner told CT.

Students say having more contact with faculty and seeing successful alumni are necessary elements for them to see the cost of college as a worthwhile investment.

Ultimately, retention experts believe students will stay if the quality of education remains high. For Christian higher education, this means staying true to its mission of integrating faith and learning. "Christian higher ed sometimes has focused too much on its survival instead of focusing on its service," says Moore. "The driving factor has to be the mission, not the economy."

By Christine J. Gardner.

More Good News About Messiah

MESSIAH COLLEGE

Grantham • Pennsylvania 17027 • USA

Call 1.800.233.4220
1.800.382.1349 in PA

RIGOROUSLY ACADEMIC.
UNAPOLOGETICALLY CHRISTIAN.

www.messiah.edu

A CHRISTIAN COLLEGE OF THE LIBERAL AND APPLIED ARTS AND SCIENCES

Explicitly evangelical

*what we mean
by what we say*

Explicitly evangelical. From the founding of Samford University's Beeson Divinity School in 1988, we have used these words to describe what we believe, under God, our school is about.

THEOLOGICAL INTEGRITY. In an age of relativism and secularism, we do not declare theological neutrality. We affirm without reservation the total truthfulness of Holy Scripture and the great principles of historic Christian orthodoxy. On these central values of the gospel we cannot and we will not compromise. We believe that theology is best done in a community of love and trust, so we pledge to nurture one another toward full maturity in Christ.

MISSIONS AND EVANGELISM. Evangelicals are "Great Commission" Christians who are determined to share the good news of Jesus Christ. At Beeson we believe this missionary mandate should inform every aspect of a theological education. We also know that we cannot share what we have not received, and so we commit ourselves to a pattern of theological training which emphasizes the disciplines of the Christian faith, a life of prayer and worship, witness and discipleship, and social compassion with justice and peace.

CHRISTIAN UNITY. Although our school is related in a special way to the Baptist tradition, we belong to a wider community of Bible-believing Christians, a fellowship in Christ which transcends the boundaries of denominational divergence. It is imperative for Christians who believe the gospel to stand and work together in the name of the one Lord whom we worship and serve.

May God help us to be faithful to these marks of evangelical identity as we seek to build the kind of school which will honor the Lord Jesus Christ and serve the upbuilding of His church.

Soli Deo Gloria!

Timothy George

Dean

SAMFORD UNIVERSITY
Birmingham, Alabama

FOR INFORMATION ABOUT BEESON DIVINITY SCHOOL CALL 1-800-888-8266

Beeson is affiliated with the National Association of Evangelicals and is accredited by The Association of Theological Schools in the United States and Canada. Samford University is an Equal Opportunity Institution and welcomes applications for employment and educational programs from all individuals regardless of race, color, sex, disability, or national or ethnic origin.

Reorganized Latter Day Saints Aim to Grow After Revising Doctrines

Several thousand members have left the Independence, Missouri-based Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (RLDS) due to recent steps taken to become more ecumenical and theologically moderate.

After the death of founder Joseph

Smith in 1844, most Latter-day Saints (Mormons) followed Brigham Young to Utah, where their descendants have experienced strong growth (CT, June 15, 1998, p. 25). But more than 200 splinter groups claim the right to prophetic leadership, with the 250,000-member RLDS being the largest offshoot.

Jim Cable, RLDS communications director, says thousands of members have quit attending over issues such as presidential succession, more open Communion, and especially ordination of women. Rather than formally withdrawing their membership, however, Cable says former attendees have started their own congregations, which they believe have retained Smith's original intention. Those spinoffs have names such as the Restoration Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the Church of Jesus Christ Center Branch Restoration.

The 1996 appointment of W. Grant McMurray marked the first time since the RLDS organized in 1860—when Smith's son was old enough to become leader—that a descendant had not led the church. Smith's great-grandson, Wallace B. Smith—who had no male heir—chose McMurray as his successor. McMurray earned his master of divinity degree at a United Methodist seminary. In an effort to increase membership, the RLDS has abandoned language that defined the church as the truest reflection of Smith's vision. The RLDS, with its more Trinitarian theology, no longer emphasizes beliefs that make it distinct from Protestants. "When you go into a Buddhist culture, a Hindu culture, or a tribal African culture, they don't care two hoots how you differ from a Lutheran," says McMurray, 51.

The RLDS church, which never adopted the doctrines of polygamy, celestial marriage, and baptism of the dead, began ordaining women in 1984 and now has more than 5,000 women among its 19,000 ordained leaders. In April, the RLDS World Conference approved appointing two women to the church's Council of Twelve Apostles. The Morsx zmon church has only male leadership, from the local to national levels.

The RLDS has also joined mainline Protestants in discussing the place of homosexuals in local congregations. McMurray broached that volatile subject for the first time in April. RLDS ministers are free to function at meetings with the church's homosexual and lesbian caucus.

In spite of the doctrinal shifts, RLDS doctrine remains founded on the Book of Mormon and Smith's Doctrine and Covenants. McMurray also says the RLDS is committed to an "open canon of Scripture," which is consistent with Smith's teaching.

By Doug LeBlanc in Independence, Missouri.

Roberts Wesleyan College Master of Social Work

Two-year Program or Advanced Standing Program

CSWE Accredited

The only nationally accredited program in the Coalition of Christian Colleges & Universities

Roberts Wesleyan College
2301 Westside Drive
Rochester, New York 14624-1997
(716) 594-6600 or 1-800-777-4RWC

*Christian Perspective
Serving the Church, Community, and World*

WE PRACTICE WHAT WE TEACH

FULLER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

An unchanging focus for an ever-changing world

135 NORTH OAKLAND AVENUE, PASADENA, CA 91182

1-800-AFULLER HTTP://WWW.FULLER.EDU

Pasadena Seattle Sacramento Menlo Park Irvine Phoenix Colorado Springs

From the day Fuller Theological Seminary opened its doors half a century ago, our faculty and students have shared a dual commitment: to outstanding biblical scholarship and to the ministry of Christ.

That same focus remains central to the Fuller mission today. Our professors not only excel in the classroom, but they are out in the world, pastoring churches, engaging in mission, practicing psychology. Just as founding faculty member Carl F. H. Henry used to witness between theology classes, so New Testament scholar Isaac Canales serves as minister of a 1,300-member church and volunteer chaplain to a high school football team. Judith Tiersma Watson lives and works among the poor in Los Angeles as part of InnerChange, when she's not teaching classes in urban mission. And they are joined by scores of Fuller colleagues who are equally active on campus and in the community.

The reason for their dedication is simple: Teaching and preaching are the best ways we know to nurture keen minds and compassionate hearts.

Still faithful.
Still Fuller.

When Lies Become News

Christian journalists should be fairer than their secular counterparts.

As we write this, the Brenda Starr comic strip is featuring an Internet-rumormonger-turned-journalist named Ratt Sludge. Like most of her real-life counterparts, our high-minded heroine is appalled at the way gossip now masquerades as reporting, and the pursuit of circulation and ratings these days trumps the pursuit of truth.

Brenda Starr has a point. Americans have plenty to be worried about as journalistic irresponsibility has grabbed headlines on the front pages, stimulated self-flagellation and self-righteousness on the editorial pages, and, yes, spawned satire on the comic pages.

- The Cincinnati Enquirer in June published a front-page apology to Chiquita Brands because one of its reporters had allegedly stolen thousands of messages from the banana firm's voice-mail system.

- CNN and Time, also in June, conceded they did not have adequate proof to back up a lengthy report alleging that the U.S. military had used deadly sarin nerve gas to kill American defectors in Laos during the Vietnam War. Correspondent Peter Arnett got his hands slapped. Two producers got fired.

- The Boston Globe, earlier this year, apologized after one of its most popular columnists admitted to having fictionalized people and quotes.

- The New Republic owned up to multiple fabrications and fantasies on the part of a young hotshot writer.

One such trespass might be the result of an individual, irresponsible, rogue reporter. But this epidemic of journalistic felonies (violation of privacy, fraud, unsubstantiated allegations) is evidence of something bigger: The practice of reporting the news has lost its moorings in telling the truth, plainly and simply.

Principles under assault

In 1996, the Society of Professional Journalists (SPJ) overhauled its ethics statement, anchoring the practice of newsgathering to four principles: Seek the truth and report it; minimize harm; act independently; and be accountable.

Unfortunately, all four of these principles are under assault in new ways. The growing trend of journalistic commentary is undermining the time-tested role of the media in reporting accurately and truthfully. Several months ago, the Project for Excellence in Journalism surveyed coverage of the White House intern scandal, finding that nearly half of what newspapers published in the first week of the scandal was commentary. In the public's consciousness, journalists, both print and broadcast, are slightly more credible than used-car salesmen. News commentary sells a point of view. But commentary is all too often seeping into straight news coverage. The coverage of Monicagate demonstrates how far the news media have detoured not only into commentary but speculation.

The principle of minimizing harm is a refreshingly honest admission that too many individuals caught in the headlights of the news media end up as road kill. In journalism school, educators drill many an aphorism into students' minds, including their mission "to comfort the afflicted and afflict the comfortable." But in the public's mind, journalism has moved from afflicting the comfortable to afflicting anything in its path.

The SPJ code says, "Pursuit of the news is not a license for arrogance." Unless journalists make allowances for the inherently intrusive nature of newsgathering, they are likely to face yet greater public hostility. Senators Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.) and Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), at the urging of the Screen Actors Guild, are sponsoring legislation that would make it a federal offense for the "menacing pursuit" of a celebrity or a news subject. Though such a law would be practically unenforceable, it would have a chilling effect, exposing much legitimate newsgathering to costly civil litigation.

The principles of independent action and accountability must go hand in hand. American journalism has an honorable tradition of independence, but accountability has only infrequently been a strength. With the recent apologies by the national press, news media accountability has taken a small step forward. But accountability means much more than openly correcting mistakes. Full accountability requires a new level of transparency and openness about the process of newsgathering.

Journalism and morality

Increased competition in journalism, brought about by the timeliness of cable news and Internet technology combined with shifting consumer desires, has changed the professional environment for journalists from public service to self-service. Traditional journalistic values have suffered as Internet technology has handed a megaphone to unaccredited and unaccountable gossip merchants.

How can journalists reconnect their historic standards with the contemporary practice of reporting? Looking across more than two hundred years of journalism in North America, it is clear that the best journalists and journalism not only respect the absolute truth of divine revelation, but also terrestrial truth, methodically and painstakingly discovered.

Neil Reynolds, editor of the recently redesigned and refurbished Ottawa Citizen, said a newspaper is "a daily journal of moral conduct." Speaking at a faith and media conference, sponsored by Christian Week in June, Reynolds observed that a newspaper is "a vehicle for parables about people and how they make moral decisions." Sometimes these parables concern the media themselves. Until journalists revive the long-forgotten moral dimension implicit in each reporting task they undertake, more scandals, more mistakes, and more fabrications are certain to occur—and citizens will be deprived of the careful chronicling of the moral odyssey of our society.

It would be a mistake to tar all news media alike. In their best moments, journalists are mission-minded people. But when personal ambition, prejudice, or carelessness get in the way, grotesque mistakes are made. Each issue of the Columbia Journalism Review, for example, not only casts darts at error but crowns with laurels the excellent efforts of the nation's reporters and editors. For Christians, neither reactionary condemnation of the news media nor withdrawal from media interaction are adequate responses.

The First Amendment providentially intertwines freedom of speech and freedom of religion. Undergirding these twin freedoms is fear of oppression and a love of truth. Truth indeed is the best defense against demagoguery.

Our commitments

From the founding vision of Billy Graham, CHRISTIANITY TODAY has approached journalism both as a ministry and as a mission field. We aim for excellence in truth-telling as a service to all readers and an example to other journalists. Trustworthiness, fairness, truthfulness, respect, and impartiality are some of the journalistic values we lift up out of our commitment to evangelical truth and charity.

But like all other journalists, we struggle with issues that affect fairness and accuracy. We struggle with independence, being only too aware that at times reporting on advertisers has removed money from the paychecks of our colleagues in advertising sales. We struggle with the difficulties of reporting thoroughly, hampered by the limits of staff, budget, and editorial deadlines. Still, we look to our mission of reporting truthfully on the Christian world and try to surmount these obstacles.

In an era when major metropolitan dailies are trimming their foreign bureaus, a magazine of much smaller scale must rely on reports from trusted friends around the globe. We build our reputation on their trustworthiness—and on the rare occasions they don't get the story right, we wince and say we're sorry.

In an effort to encourage staff accountability and guard against error, we have instituted careful procedural review of pending articles, which becomes more rigorous and intensive as a story's potential for controversy or harm rises. Our news editors check bad news stories about fellow Christians against a set of criteria—none of which has to do with the juiciness or entertainment value of the material. Instead, we examine the national prominence of the figure being reported on, the certainty of his or her malfeasance, the potential for public harm if the matter is not reported, and so forth. People acting like jerks, creeps, and blockheads do not qualify for our attention. Crooks and con artists do.

One reason such bad news stories do not occupy more of our news space is that we function with a limited staff: only three in-house editors and one reporter on a part-time stipend are devoted to news. None of us has much time to go fishing for scandal. Often we must wait till such issues become a matter of record.

Take our reporting of financial scandals, for example. In the past 12 months, we have covered five stories of Christians who solicited investments from fellow believers and ended up deep in debt and shamefaced in court. In each case, we waited to report until formal charges were filed, indictments were handed down, or verdicts were announced. We are rarely able to do the original investigative reporting that might have exposed these individuals. But our purpose was served nevertheless: to remind our readers that such confidence games go on all the time, and that—especially in church circles where we all trade on trust—believers must beware. Friends of the fallen have complained that we were kicking Christian brothers while they were down. But our purpose is not to smear: only to warn.

Objectivity is no longer in fashion. Most journalists, including many Christian journalists, believe it is no longer possible: Since we all come to the events of the day with our precommitments, whether to kingdom values or worldly ways, we should be transparent, own up to our prejudices, and report with vigor.

But fairness should never be out of fashion. And part of the way CT's editors measure their fairness is by the reactions of those on the wrong side of our commitments. Do those whose positions we consider wrong recognize themselves in our reporting? When they say they were not caricatured, but disagreed with in an accurate and principled fashion, we know we've been doing our job. Recent coverage of Mormonism brought forth just such responses from Latter-day Saints ("Mormons on the Rise," June 15, 1998, p. 24). They thanked us for our fairness, despite our differences.

In 1993, journalist-historian Paul Johnson said, "Fairness is one of the deepest human yearnings—it is the first moral point a small child recognizes—and lack of it the commonest complaint the public flings at the media." Christian journalism has a moral and scriptural mandate to be even fairer than its secular counterparts.

Too many individuals caught in the headlights of the news media end up as road kill.

DID THE EXODUS NEVER

KEVIN D. MILLER

“The actual evidence concerning the Exodus resembles the evidence for the unicorn,” writes Baruch Halpern of Pennsylvania State University.

“The Book of Joshua is of no historical value as far as the process of settlement is concerned,” contends Volkmar Fritz, director of the German Protestant Institute of Archaeology in Jerusalem.

“The period of the patriarchs, exodus, conquest, or judges as devised by the writers of Scriptures . . . never existed,” declares Robert Coote of San Francisco Theological Seminary.

The Genesis and Exodus accounts are “a fiction written around the middle of the first millennium,” states Niels Peter Lemche at the University of Copenhagen, and, “The David of the Bible, David the king, is not a historical figure.”

Welcome to the intellectual world of the biblical minimalists, a new breed of radical scholars who would turn Abraham, Joseph, Moses, and even King David into legends and myths by the stroke of their pens. As far-out as their pronouncements may sound, their work is filtering its way into our world through seminary textbooks and media soundbites. The effect is a wholesale rejection of the Bible’s accounts of Israel’s origins—a matter of no small concern to believing Jews and Christians.

Answering these skeptics, however, is not always so easy as one might expect.

The fact is that not one shred of direct archaeological evidence has been found for Abraham, Isaac, or Jacob or the 400-plus years the children of Israel sojourned in Egypt. The same is true for their miraculous exodus from slavery. And remember those reassuring Sunday-school stories about archaeologists finding Jericho’s walls lying outward just as the Book of Joshua suggests they fell? It turns out that the most respected archaeologist to dig at Jericho earlier this century, Kathleen Kenyon, differed.

But before anyone scribbles “Fiction” over the title page of the Old Testament, some scholars want to tell another side to the story, one that Kenneth Kitchen, James Hoffmeier, and a handful of others are meticulously piecing together.

ER-HAPPEN?

How two Egyptologists are countering scholars who want to turn the Old Testament into myth.

ENRICH LESSING/ART RESOURCE

Through top university presses and in academic conferences, they are exposing a fundamental problem with the conclusions of the biblical minimalists: the skeptical, narrow lenses through which they read the Bible serve them a bit too conveniently—allowing them not only to dismiss uncritically the historical value of the Bible's texts but also to avoid certain bothersome details that get in the way of their own accounts of the origin of Israel.

Back to the future

In one respect, the current skepticism is nothing new. As early as the eighteenth century, some scholars using the then-new methods of higher criticism had dismissed the early biblical accounts as legends. By the end of the nineteenth century, Julius Wellhausen had unified decades of theorizing about the authorship of the Pentateuch into his now-famous (slightly modified) Jahwist-Elohist-Priestly-Deuteronomist grid. Known as the Documentary Hypothesis, this theory claimed to detect four different authors or documents behind the "Books of Moses."

By distinguishing these various sources, one could understand the development and progress of Jewish religion from its primitive nomadic origins through the era of the Prophets onward to a religion of the Law. Thus, instead of believing the Law was given to Moses on Mount Sinai in the second millennium B.C., Wellhausen thought it was composed after the Jews had returned from their exile in Babylon only 450 years before Jesus.

Well-worn path: Semites from Canaan were traveling to Egypt long before Jacob did, as seen in this 1890 B.C. scene.

Though discounting the stories of early Israel is not new, the rise of the current skepticism is surprising because of what came between the Wellhausens of the past century and the Lemches of the present decade: the moderating influence of William Foxwell Albright, the "dean of biblical archaeology."

When Albright was born in 1891, Wellhausen's theory had already become the reigning orthodoxy in Old Testament studies. Later, as an established professor of Semitic languages at Johns Hopkins University, Albright recalled that as a young student he had absorbed the assumptions of higher critics like Wellhausen and had held to an "initially rather skeptical attitude toward the accuracy of Israelite historical tradition." However, while taking part in archaeological digs in Palestine as a graduate student, his skepticism "suffered repeated jolts as discovery after discovery confirmed the historicity of details which might reasonably have been considered legendary."

Albright came to suspect scholars like Wellhausen who built grand theories on textual speculation. He saw little use in surmising, for example, whether the children of Israel had conquered Canaan. To know, one needed to dig and see if there existed the layers of destruction that would correspond to an Israelite conquest. Empirical facts, not abstract theory, held the answers.

Perfecting modern excavation techniques, Albright and others discovered cities in Judah whose destruction layers seemed to support the biblical accounts of the Babylonian exile. Pottery inscriptions revealed the existence of a Sea People called the Philistines. And thirteenth-century devastation layers at a site believed to be biblical Bethel were interpreted by Albright's student G. Ernest Wright to be the work of Joshua's army.

Eventually, even many liberal scholars began to accept the general outline of biblical history proposed by the "Albright-Wright synthesis." So influential in the middle years of this century was their biblical archaeology, as it came to be called, that as recently as 1981 Old Testament scholar John Bright could state, "There can really be little doubt that ancestors of Israel had been slaves in Egypt and had escaped in some marvelous way. Almost no one today would question it."

"We've given up the patriarchs"

Open up the popular magazine Biblical Archaeology Review today and you will find almost everyone questioning the Exodus account and a lot of the other biblical stories as well. In the July-August 1997 issue, a curious exchange takes place between Niels Peter Lemche and Thomas Thompson, on the biblical minimalist side, and two challengers to the minimal-

Understatement:

Joshua 11:11 says Joshua burned "Hazor with fire."

Archaeologists digging at Hazor (right) found the fire was so hot it turned mud bricks to glass.

ist position, William Dever and P. Kyle McCarter. What is revealing in the dialogue are the defensive tactics taken by one of the moderates, Dever, a professor at the University of Arizona and a leading authority on Syro-Palestinian archaeology (he long ago rejected the term "biblical archaeology").

"I agree with you that [the Book of] Joshua has little to do with any historical events," he says at one point. "If you guys think I—or the Israeli archaeologists—am looking for the Israelite conquest archaeologically, you're wrong. We've given that up. We've given up the patriarchs." After Dever has defended the likelihood of a united monarchy under David and Solomon (which is part of what makes him a moderate) and is attacked by Thompson for his motives in searching for and finding a gate at Gezer thought to have been built by Solomon, Dever retorts: "Tom, I don't care in the least whether Solomon ever existed. I'm probably more of a disbeliever than you. I don't really care about the tradition. I don't believe any of the myths." Finally, after having endured Thompson's innuendoes and attacks throughout the debate, Dever exclaims in sheer exasperation: "I do resent being called a fundamentalist."

What is it that turns a William Dever into a "fundamentalist" for seeing an association between a gate and the biblical account of Solomon? The answer, says James Hoffmeier of Wheaton College in Illinois, is summed up in one phrase: the hermeneutics of suspicion. If Albright had been able to convince a generation of scholars that the Bible's account of Israel's origin could be matched in general terms to the evidence from the digs, it was because the Bible was still considered "innocent until found guilty." The undoing of the Albright antidote to Wellhausen skepticism came when people like Lemche and Thompson began insisting that the Bible stories should be viewed as fables until indisputable evidence proved them to be historical. The accounts were now seen as fictional until proven factual, guilty until proven innocent.

This virulent neoskepticism has proven exceptionally resistant to anything smacking of a "fundamentalist" interpretation, and its proponents have set about revising what they believe was the Albright school's overeager attempts to identify discoveries as biblical events when other events in Near Eastern history could account for them just as well or better. For the minimalists, the paradigm shift has left the Bible largely irrelevant and the fight over the Bible's historical value passé.

Answering the minimalists

But the battle for Jericho, the Exodus, and the other stories of Israel's origins isn't over yet, say Hoffmeier, who has just published a monograph titled Israel in Egypt with Oxford University Press, and Kenneth Kitchen, a veteran ancient-languages expert at the University of Liverpool in England. It is just the beginning of round three.

In countering the revisionist history, these two bring something to the fight that Lemche and Thompson and most of the radical minimalists (with the exception of D. B. Redford) don't have: the credentials of being Egyptologists in addition to backgrounds in biblical studies and Syro-Palestinian archaeology. Using their unusual expertise, they are pointing to discoveries that, vis-à-vis the minimalist pronouncements, show the historical plausibility of the following Bible stories:

Father Abraham. The Bible says God called Abraham out of Ur of the Chaldeans (modern Iraq) and led him to the land of Canaan (modern Israel). From his descendants arose the 12 tribes of Israel. These Semitic-speaking, Asiatic people migrated to Egypt, returning only 400 years later to settle Canaan, the land promised to their forefather.

Not so, say the minimalists. One suggests the story is a myth written in the sixth century B.C. to console the Jews being held in Babylon with the knowledge that they are really "back home," since "Abraham" had originated from there. And just as God had led their forefather to Canaan, they too would one day return to the land promised his seed. Seen this way, the story reflects the circumstances of the middle of the first millennium B.C., not the first half of the second millennium B.C.

If so, asks Kitchen, how does one explain the following odd coincidences:

- Abraham—if he existed—would have lived sometime between 1800 and 1600 B.C. (using the late Exodus dating based on the death of Pharaoh Rameses II in 1213 B.C. and Exodus 1:11, which says that the children of Israel built the city of Rameses). Why, then, does the Genesis 14 account of Abraham defeating a coalition of kings from the east fit so well the geopolitical conditions of that—and only that—era?

Before that time, the region of Mesopotamia was closely governed by the dynasties of Ur, and after that time, the empires of Babylon and Assyria controlled the region. Only during the first half of the second millennium could kings of small city-states have roamed the countryside, as did the potentates Abraham encountered, looking to expand their domains.

- Abraham, and later Isaac, made a treaty with King Abimelech, and Jacob made a treaty with Laban. "I have over 90 documents [of ancient treaties and covenants] to compare from 2600 B.C. down to 600 B.C.," Kitchen told CT, "and so there's no room for mistake here." The treaties, he explains, take distinctive forms over the centuries, with oaths and curses and stipulations being presented in different orders and being given different emphases. The ones with Abimelech and Laban fit precisely the structure of treaties from the middle of the second millennium—but neither later nor earlier ones.

- The names Yitzchak (Isaac), Ya'akov (Jacob), Yoseph (Joseph), and Yishmael (Ishmael) all begin with something linguists call the "Amorite imperfective." From studying lists of thousands of names found from the third millennium and later, Kitchen shows that 55 percent of the names during the time of the Patriarchs begin with an i/y sound, but already "by 1500 the whole thing drops to a tiny percentage and never ceases dropping after that." Where, Kitchen asks, did the fiction writers of the middle first millennium B.C. get these names if they were composing their biblical novellas a thousand or more years after the names had fallen from popular use?

- Kitchen asks the same question about Genesis 37:28, which states that Joseph was sold by his brothers to slave traders on their way to Egypt for 20 silver shekels. Tracking the price of slaves sold from 2400 B.C. to 400 B.C. using extrabiblical sources, he finds that this amount matches exactly the going price in the eighteenth century. Steady inflation had driven it up to 30 shekels by the thirteenth century (which corresponds to Exod. 21:32), 50 shekels in the eighth century (which corresponds to 2 Kings 15:20), and to nearly 100 shekels soon after the Exile in the sixth century.

Joseph in Egypt. Is it realistic to think that a Semitic-speaking foreigner like Joseph, and later Moses, could have risen to the highest levels of Egyptian government? Hoffmeier answers by pointing to an Egyptian tomb discovered in Sakkara, Egypt, in the late 1980s. It contains the coffin of a Semite named Aper-el along with the coffins of his wife and children. His titles include "vizier," "mayor of the city," "judge," "father of god," "child of the nursery."

Hoffmeier points out that Aper-el's name was the first of a high-ranking, Semite official to be found there, even though Sakkara has been excavated and explored for more than a century. "If such a high-ranking official as Vizier Aper-el was completely unknown to modern scholarship until the late 1980s, despite the fact that he lived in one of the better documented periods of Egyptian history [fourteenth century], and was buried in arguably the most excavated site in Egypt, it is wrong to demand, as some have, that direct archaeological evidence for Joseph should be available if he were in fact a historical figure." This is even more the case, he says, because Joseph lived during a period when surviving Egyptian documents of any kind are sparse and because Joseph operated in the Nile Delta, an area that remains "underexcavated" to this day.

Joseph's high ranking becomes even more plausible when considering the regular migrations and imperial transactions that occurred between Canaan and Egypt, as seen in the following discoveries:

- The Wisdom of Merikare and the Prophecy of Neferti, ancient Egyptian documents, report influxes of thousands of Semites into the Nile Delta between 2200 and 2000 B.C. Similar patterns of settlement recurred over the next thousand years, creating a "significant Asiatic population" in the Delta region, says Hoffmeier. The Merikare document explains that these Asiatic, Semitic-speaking peoples, like Jacob and his sons, had come to the fertile Delta area in search of food during times of famine.

- For several periods in its history, Egypt's empire expanded into surrounding regions, including Canaan. During these times, young men and boys from those provinces were brought to Egypt to be trained in the pharaoh's ways and later sent back home as regional rulers who were loyal to the pharaoh.

Also, a study on foreign children reared in the pharaoh's nurseries during the eighteenth dynasty shows that some of these children became court officials, and that a few eventually attained high government posts. The similarities to the stories of Joseph and Moses (and Aper-el) are obvious.

- For two centuries ending in 1550 B.C., a foreign Asiatic people called the Hyksos actually ruled Egypt. After their expulsion, the new pharaoh extended his rule into Canaan and Syria, transporting back to Egypt many prisoners of war. In an address to the meeting of the Institute for Biblical Research last year, Hoffmeier explained that he believed that "after the expulsion of the Hyksos ruling and military elite, Pharaoh Ahmose and his successors discovered large numbers of Semitic-speaking peoples, including the Hebrews, in the Delta, who were subsequently forced to work alongside the POWs. This shift in status from being tolerated immigrants to an enslaved population described in Exodus 1:8 may represent the transition from the Hyksos period to the eighteenth Dynasty. It is worth noting that the practice of using forced labor for building projects is only documented for the period 1450 to 1200, the very time most biblical historians place the Israelites in Egypt. The realization that there were others enslaved along with the Hebrews may explain who the 'mixed multitude' of Exodus 12:38 are who joined the 'freedom train.'"

Moses and the Exodus. It is simply too fantastic, say the minimalists. The ten plagues, a million-plus runaway slaves traversing a desert, the miracles—all of these put the story squarely in the realm of fable and legend. Furthermore, how could the children of Israel escape from Egypt and the pharaoh's army be destroyed without getting recorded in Egyptian annals?

In answer to the latter question, Hoffmeier agrees with his critics: such a momentous event would not have transpired without being recorded. But recorded where?

"I don't know of any surviving papyrus documents from Egypt's Delta," says Hoffmeier. "It's too wet. And papyrus [made from the reed-like plant of the same name] is where most of the records were kept.

The inscriptions that we see on statues and temple façades tend to be propagandistic, what-we-want-you-to-know messages. And where papyrus records have survived, they tend to be from the desert areas. So we have very few of the day-to-day court records of 3,000 years of Egyptian history."

While direct evidence for the Exodus is missing, the following circumstantial evidence supports viewing the Exodus as a historical event rather than a late, fictive legend:

- In a surviving Egyptian document called Leiden Papyrus 348, orders are given to "distribute grain rations to the soldiers and to the 'Apiru who transport stones to the great pylon of Rames[s]es." This brings to mind Exodus 1:11, which says the Hebrews "built supply cities, Pithom and Rameses, for Pharaoh." While hotly debated, 'Apiru is believed by some scholars to refer to the Hebrews, the 'Ibri. If a future discovery of an inscription could link this word to the Hebrews, this document would prove to be our first direct extrabiblical reference to the children of Israel in slavery in Egypt.

- Recent discoveries of military outposts on a road leading from Egypt into Canaan, built by Pharaoh Seti I and earlier kings in the thirteenth century B.C., shed new light on why a northern route for the Exodus would have meant war for the Israelites. Exodus 13:17 states: "When Pharaoh let the people go, God did not lead them by way of the land of the Philistines, although that was nearer; for God thought, 'If the people face war, they may change their minds and return to Egypt.'" Instead, the Bible explains, "God led the people by the roundabout way of the wilderness."

- While it is virtually impossible 3,000 years later to retrace the footsteps of a people who escaped over a sand-swept wilderness, an Egyptian letter (Anastasi III) from guards at a "border crossing" between Egypt and the Sinai helps explain Moses' insistent cry, "Let my people go!" The text indicates that in the thirteenth century the Egyptians maintained a tight border control, allowing no one to pass without a permit. The letter describes two slaves who—in a striking parallel to the Israelite escape—flee from the city of Rameses at night, are pursued by soldiers, but disappear into the Sinai wilderness. "When my letter reaches you," writes the official to the border guard, "write to me about all that has happened to [them]. Who found their tracks? Which watch found their tracks? Write to me about all that has happened to them and how many people you send out after them." Another inscription from the same cache of documents (Anastasi VI) records that an entire tribe gained permission to enter Egypt from Edom in search of food.

- If it seems incredible to believe that 600,000 men plus women and children could have survived as a people in the Sinai wilderness for 40 years, we may be misinterpreting the number, says Hoffmeier. Hebrew University professor Abraham Malamat, for one, points out that the Bible often refers to 600 and its multiples, as well as 1,000 and its multiples, typologically in order to convey the idea of a large military unit. "The issue of Exodus 12:37 is an interpretive one," says Hoffmeier. "The Hebrew word elep can be translated 'thousand,' but it is also rendered in the Bible as 'clans' and 'military units.' When I look at the question as an Egyptologist, I know that there are thought to have been 20,000 in the entire Egyptian army at the height of Egypt's empire. And at the battle of Ai in Joshua 7, there was a severe military setback when 36 troops were killed. If you have an army of 600,000, that's not a big setback." In other words, the head count may have been far fewer than suggested by a literal reading of Exodus 12:37.

- While conservative scholars debate an "early" and "late" date for the Exodus

That idolatrous look:

Recently unearthed, this Canaanite bull may have been one of those the Israelites were tempted to worship since it dates to the twelfth century B.C.

"KING DAVID WAS HERE"

By the 1980s, superskepticism about Israel's origins had reached as far as Kings David and Solomon, whose reigns stretched from about 1000 B.C. to 920 B.C. In the early 1990s, says Kenneth Kitchen of the University of Liverpool, "Thomas Thompson wrote a big, fat book on ancient Israel that more or less denied there was ever a united monarchy of Israel, and it claimed that people like David and Solomon were fictions." It turned out to be bad timing because of several discoveries that followed soon after the book was published.

In 1993, excavators at the ancient city of Dan unearthed a stone slab dating to 841 B.C. It contained the first ancient extrabiblical reference to the "House of David"—a phrase used more than 20 times in the Old Testament. Immediately, the biblical minimalists proposed that a better rendering of the phrase would be "House of Dod," referring to a Canaanite deity. In 1994, however, a second fragment belonging to the same stone was found. The words it added to the original portion of text, says Kitchen, "limited the amount of ways you could interpret the text," making "House of David" the obvious translation. Concerning "Dod," Kitchen says, he has "demolished that false deity" in a recent scholarly article (in Journal for the Study of the Old Testament) by showing that this deity, in fact, never existed in ancient Canaan, but only in the linguistic inventions of nineteenth-century scholars.

Soon after the 1993 discovery, a second likely ninth-century B.C. reference to "House of David" came to light when André Lemaire reassessed a section of an inscribed stone called the Mesha Stele. And just last winter, Kitchen himself tentatively proposed the deciphering of a third mention of David in an ancient source—this one dating to 924 B.C., fewer than 50 years after David's death and four years after Solomon's. Inscribed on a temple wall in Thebes, the name appears in a list of places in Palestine that Pharaoh Shoshenq I is said to have raided successfully. While this portion of the victory boast is cracked and parts of it are missing, a probable interpretation for the line in question is "highlands of David." Kitchen believes it may correspond to passages in the Book of Samuel where David is presented as a fugitive leader in the "highlands" of Judah.

Written in stone: Discovered in two pieces, the Tel Dan Stele is helping to muffle those who say King David was a myth.

In addition to these David sightings, several recent references to King Solomon and his temple have surfaced in antiquities markets and have gained the attention of the academic world. One is a receipt for a donation to "the House of Yahweh," which may date as early as the ninth century B.C. when Solomon's temple still stood in all its glory. Another is a seal with Solomon's name on it that could very well date to the tenth century B.C. when Solomon still lived.

By Kevin D. Miller.

Tax deductible: Dated to the 800s B.C., this ancient receipt for three shekels donated to the "Temple of Yahweh" gives us the oldest known reference outside the Bible to King Solomon's temple.

(fifteenth century or thirteenth century B.C.), all but the most skeptical scholars agree that the Israelites were in Canaan by the year 1208 B.C. This date was set a century ago with the discovery of the Merneptah Stele. This seven-foot high, black granite stone contains a victory hymn of Pharaoh Merneptah, which proclaims, "The Canaan is plundered with every hardship. / Ashkelon is taken, Gezer is captured, / [and] Yano'am reduced to nothing. / Israel is laid waste, his seed is no more."

Not surprisingly, the minimalists downplay its significance, claiming it simply refers to an insignificant early nomadic tribe—a proto-Israel, if you will. But the undeniable fact is that a pharaoh considered Israel's defeat worth inscribing on stone, and that a people called Israel lived in Canaan by that time. Just as fascinating are pictorial carvings on a temple wall in Luxor, Egypt, which Egyptologist Frank Yurco believes depict the destruction of Ashkelon, Gezer, Yano'am, and the Israelites mentioned in the Merneptah Stele. If so, the first existing reference to Israel comes complete with pictures of them.

Joshua fit the battle?

By the time the archaeological search arrives in the Promised Land, the rocks and pottery scraps begin to cry out their history more loudly. Archaeologists love having more artifacts and inscriptions to study—but how best to interpret a rock's cry? Often, the interpretation ends at the very place the interpreters' prejudices begin.

Such prejudice got Hoffmeier flunked from a class he was taking in the early 1970s in graduate school. Raised in Egypt as a missionary kid, Hoffmeier found his first year of graduate studies unsettling, especially in a class where the professor was denying the history of Abraham in his lectures drawn from a book he was writing on the subject. "I remember the knots in my stomach when he was lecturing. He said the type of nomadic way of living in tents and riding on camels didn't fit the second millennium, but it did fit the first. But when he trotted out all the evidence for the first millennium, he made a statement in passing that his reason for that position was that texts from the ancient Near East rarely mention the use of tents."

Made curious by the word rarely, Hoffmeier began noticing numerous references to nomads from Syria and Palestine using tents in Egyptian texts he was reading for his hieroglyphics class. To his surprise, he also discovered that his professor had written extensively on a particular Egyptian text that described nomads and their tents in Syria-Palestine during the second millennium. "So he knew about this reference to how the Bedouin lived, but he didn't talk about it," Hoffmeier says. "I realized there's a pattern here of minimizing evidence that doesn't fit."

Though Hoffmeier failed the course, "not because of my work, but because of what he knew I stood for," he ultimately had the last say when he published an article—on tents in the ancient Near East. "Later, I saw him at a wedding," Hoffmeier remembers. "He walked up to me and said, 'Well, it was a good article on tents. But there are a lot of other things in the book you haven't really dealt with.' But he conceded on that point that I was right. It was a great moral victory for me." It also taught Hoffmeier the lesson "that some of these experts are close-minded people. They're not willing to wrestle with different views," he says.

A good example of this can be seen in the cover stories

Time and U.S. News & World Report ran in 1995 on how archaeological discoveries confirm and discredit the Bible. In their sections on the conquest of the Promised Land, both painted a dark portrait of the historical trustworthiness of the Book of Joshua. Experts were quoted to say that of the sixteen cities said to have been destroyed by Joshua's forces, only three have been shown to have been destroyed during a time period that would fit an Israelite conquest—and Jericho wasn't one of them.

The alleged nonevent at Jericho became the poster child of the skeptics; few questioned the negative conclusion since it was based on the findings of Kathleen Kenyon, who excavated Jericho for six years in the 1950s. She believed the site was uninhabited from 1500 B.C. to about 800 B.C., encompassing the very time of the Exodus and the Israelite crossing of the Jordan River into Canaan. What's for Israel to conquer, this line of reasoning goes, if nobody's home?

This seemingly bleak assessment can be answered in part by the Bible itself, says Hoffmeier. Many times scholars claim that the Book of Joshua paints the conquest as one of burning every city to its foundations. "A careful reading of Joshua shows there are only three cities that Joshua was specifically said to have burnt with fire—Jericho, Ai, and Hazor." So when a city lacks an expected destruction level, "we should remember that to besiege a city does not necessarily mean to destroy a city. To capture a city may not involve destroying it in such a way that you'd find that destruction in the archaeological record." What would there be left to settle if everything was destroyed?

Furthermore, literary comparisons of Joshua with other war chronicles of the period show that the Book of Joshua reflects the rhetorical hyperbole commonly used in such writings. For example, Joshua 10:20 boasts that Joshua's men had "wiped out" their enemy, but in the very next phrase begins speaking unself-consciously of "the survivors."

Even archaeologically, the picture is not so bleak as the minimalists paint it to be, says Hoffmeier. A detailed look at the archaeological finds at Hazor, Ai, and Jericho puts the foregone conclusions of "uninhabited" and "not destroyed" into perspective.

- One of the three cities under question, Hazor, has, in fact, proven to have been inhabited and destroyed during the time of Joshua. Already current excavations have uncovered a palace with a small chapel area. Littered across its floor are the heads of decapitated statues of Canaanite deities and an Egyptian sphinx with the name of the pharaoh hacked out. "The palace was destroyed in such an inferno that many of the mud bricks actually turned to glass," says Hoffmeier. "No Canaanites would destroy their own deities, and no Egyptians would deface their monuments." Only the account in Joshua 11:11 of the Israelites burning "Hazor with fire" fits the evidence.

- "Ai is a little more complicated," admits Hoffmeier. The excavated site thus far shows that it indeed wasn't inhabited during the time of Joshua and wasn't destroyed at that time by fire. That is, if this site is, in fact, where ancient Ai was located. "Part of the problem is that, in the Bible, Ai and Bethel are always mentioned as being close to each other, and the identification of Ai has been based on the proposed identification of the site at Bethel—neither of which has been clearly demonstrated. We may be looking in the wrong place."

- "Jericho," says Hoffmeier, "is still an open question." Despite the problems it poses, there is archaeological agreement on three important points that correspond directly with the biblical record: Jericho was destroyed violently sometime in the second millennium B.C.; it was occupied briefly and partially during the period of the Judges (a small palace from that period has been identified); and it was rebuilt completely in the days of King Ahab in the ninth century. The point of difference is over exactly when that first destruction occurred, and by whom.

Mother of all billboards: Pharaoh Merneptah (d. 1203 B.C.) boasted (prematurely!) on this seven-foot-high stone that "Israel is laid waste and his seed is not." It is the first extrabiblical mention of Israel.

Kenyon dated Jericho's destruction to 1570 B.C., when the Egyptians kicked the Hyksos out of their land and pursued them north to Jericho and beyond. But while her early findings were published in journals and in a popular book on the subject, only recently has the technical report of her excavations been completed and published. By studying it in detail, Bryant Wood, director of the Associates for Biblical Research, discovered evidence in her findings that sometimes contradicts Kenyon's own conclusions.

For example, one type of pottery she had unearthed was made for a limited time in the late fifteenth century—150 years after Kenyon's 1570 B.C. date of destruction. And seals were found for pharaohs from 1570 to as late as Amenhotep III, who died in 1349 B.C. Contrary to Kenyon's conclusions, these artifacts make dating Jericho's destruction feasible between the fifteenth and thirteenth centuries when most conservative scholars believe the Exodus occurred.

• The Bible says the Israelites crossed the Jordan River on dry ground and then besieged Jericho, seeing its walls fall after they had marched around it seven days. Wood finds this credible even in terms of natural causes (which God controlled for his purposes), given the seismological activity in the region. In an intriguing article in Biblical Archaeology Review, he cites Stanford University geophysicist Amos Nur, who documents a 1927 earthquake and mudslide in this century "that cut off the flow of the Jordan." Nur adds: "Such cutoffs, typically lasting one to two days, have also been recorded in A.D. 1906, 1834, 1546, 1267, and 1160." In the 1927 quake, writes Wood, "a section of a cliff 150 feet high collapsed into the Jordan near the ford at Damiya, blocking the river for some 21 hours." Perhaps, he suggests, the collapse of Jericho's walls resulted from an aftershock to the earthquake that blocked the Jordan River and allowed the Israelites to cross into Canaan.

Fools with spades

Despite the current revisionist work, Hoffmeier and Kitchen are confident the future will side with those who take the Bible's history seriously. As seen with the three recently discovered "House of David" inscriptions (see "King David Was Here," p. 49), archaeologists keep unearthing objects straight from the world of the Bible. Almost yearly now, seals for the kings of Judah and Israel and surrounding Canaanite nations are being found. In the last number of years, a twelfth-century B.C. bronze bull and a sixteenth-century silver Canaanite calf were excavated, illustrating why the Israelites were constantly warned against idol worship.

In 1979 a silver scroll from the seventh-century B.C. was found in a cave near Jerusalem. Containing the words in Numbers 6:24-26 ("May Yahweh bless and keep you; May Yahweh cause his face to shine upon you and grant you peace"), it forced revisionists to explain how their sixth-century B.C. composition date (or even later) for Numbers squared with a portion of that book appearing a century earlier.

Such discoveries have theological implications, says Hoffmeier. "There is a lot at stake here. The New Testament interweaves the salvific events of the Old Testament into it in such a way that Jesus the Passover Lamb loses significance if there is no historical Passover. And methodologically, there is the issue of how one interprets Scripture. In a sense we are seeing [with the minimalists] the Old Testament counterpart to the Jesus Seminar in New Testament studies. Also, what happens in scholarship today may feel irrelevant, but it soon trickles down into 'this is what the scholars say' in newspapers and television broadcasts."

For those who find such newspaper reports disturbing, Hoffmeier and Kitchen urge patience. "The biblical record, when you give it a fair test, fits its world and the world fits it," says Kitchen. "When scholars say such things as 'We have no evidence,' that merely means we do not know. Negative evidence is no evidence. It only takes one fool with a spade to dig up a new inscription and, whoosh!, that 'no evidence' disappears. I'm just amazed over the 40 years I've been in this business how we keep blundering into things you didn't expect that tie in with the Scriptures. If something doesn't seem to fit, the answer is to wait and see, not out of cowardice, not out of escapism, but just to see what happens when you have fuller evidence." CT

Focus on the Family

Parents and Teens Can Turn Anger to Honor

DURING Greg's teen years, best-selling author Gary Smalley went through a stormy time with his son. But now they've teamed up to share what they learned with others.

A relationship of honor, trust, respect, and love is possible with your teenager. Just like God designed it.

Look for Bound by Honor, coauthored by Gary Smalley and his son, Dr. Greg Smalley, wherever quality books are sold.

Tyndale House Publishers, Inc.
www.tyndale.com

Resources for Life

A different path.

A person is walking away from the viewer on a path that leads into a dense forest. The scene is bathed in the warm, golden light of a low sun, creating long shadows and a hazy atmosphere. The trees are tall and their leaves are dappled with light. The overall mood is contemplative and serene.

*"Trust in the Lord with all your heart and lean not on your own understanding;
in all your ways acknowledge Him,
and He will direct your paths."*

Proverbs 3:5-6

For more information on our 52 undergraduate and 8 graduate programs, please contact:

Dallas Baptist
UNIVERSITY

3000 Mountain Creek Parkway
Dallas, TX 75211-9299
1.800.460.1DBU www.dbu.edu

Today's Momentous Crisis: The Separation of Church and Faith

Red Sky in the Morning will take you on an exciting adventure—redefining how to recapture God's purpose for His church in America and how you can rediscover God's plan for your life!

Internationally Acclaimed Leaders Of The Faith Have Said...

"This is a brilliant work. You are in for a rich experience. You will be moved."

—CHUCK COLSON, Chairman, Prison Fellowship Ministries

"Bill Bright and John Damoose have written this great nation to read."

—JOHN ASHCROFT, U.S. Senator

"I read only one book during the campaign. This is the one!"

—ROBIN MEESSE III, The Heritage Foundation, Former U.S. Attorney General

"An important book for all to read!"

—BEVERLY LAHAYE, Ph.D., Chairman, Concerned Women for America

"Why American must read this book."

—D. JAMES KENNEDY, Ph.D., Senior Minister, Coral Ridge Presbyterian Church

"If Americans humbly put God first in their lives, we could experience an awakening that parallels that of the first century."

—GEORGE GALLUP, JR., Chairman, The George H. Gallup International Institute

Why The Authors Wrote This Book

"This book was written to help inspire men and women to commit their lives to restoring our nation and our historic mission of world evangelism."

—JOHN DAMOOSE, Co-Author

"This book was written to move you to stand for righteousness, speak out against evil and hold on for the ultimate victory."

—BILL BRIGHT, Co-Author

Available through your favorite distributor or by calling 1-800-235-7255 ext. 776 or faxing 1-800-514-7072 or from our website: www.newlifepubs.com

NewLife
PUBLICATIONS

J. I. PACKER

Still Surprised by Lewis

Born 100 years ago come November, C. S. Lewis is today beloved of evangelicals. His books have brought provided beeline expression to our rabbit-trail thoughts, compelling language to our religious longings, and a vision of God to our impaired imaginations. In this essay, J. I. Packer explains why a man whose theology had decidedly unevangelical elements has come to be the Aquinas, the Augustine, and the Aesop of contemporary evangelicalism.

Yes, I was at Oxford in Lewis's day (I went up in 1944); but no, I never met him. He was regularly on show as the anchorman of the Socratic Club, which met weekly to discuss how science, philosophy, and current culture related to Christianity; but as a young believer, I was sure I needed Bible teaching rather than apologetics, so I passed the Socratic by. The nearest I ever got to Lewis was hearing him address the Oxford theologians' society on Richard Hooker, about whom he was writing at that time for his assigned volume of the Oxford History of English Literature, the "Oh-Hell" as for obvious reasons he liked to call it. He spoke with a resonant Anglicized accent (you would never have guessed he was Irish),

PHOTO COURTESY OF MARION E. WADE CENTER, WHEATON COLLEGE

Why this nonevangelical Oxford don has become our patron saint.

C. S. Lewis

and when he said something funny, which he did quite often, he paused like a stage comedian for the laugh. They said he was the best lecturer in Oxford, and I daresay they were right. But he was not really part of my world.

Yet I owe him much, and I gratefully acknowledge my debt.

First of all, in 1942–43, when I thought I was a Christian but did not yet know what a Christian was—and had spent a year verifying the old adage that if you open your mind wide enough much rubbish will be tipped into it—The Screwtape Letters and the three small books that became Mere Christianity brought me, not indeed to faith in the full sense, but to mainstream Christian beliefs about God, man, and Jesus Christ, so that now I was halfway there.

Second, in 1945, when I was newly converted, the student who was discipling me lent me The Pilgrim's Regress. This gave me both a full-color map of the Western intellectual world as it had been in 1932 and still pretty much was 13 years later, and also a very deep delight in knowing that I knew God, beyond anything I had felt before. The vivid glow of Lewis's scenic and dramatic imagination, as deployed in the story, had started to grab me. Regress, Lewis's first literary effort as a Christian, is still for me the freshest and liveliest of all his books, and I reread it more often than any of the others.

Third, Lewis sang the praises of an author named Charles Williams, of whom I had not heard, and in consequence I picked up Many Dimensions in paperback in 1953 and had one of the most overwhelming reading experiences of my life—though that is another story.

Fourth, there are stellar passages in Lewis that for me, at least, bring the reality of heaven very close. Few Christian writers today try to write about heaven, and the theme defeats almost all who take it up. But as one who learned long ago from Richard Baxter's Saints' Everlasting Rest and Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress the need for clearly focused thought about heaven, I am grateful for the way Lewis helps me along here.

The number of Christians whom Lewis's writings have helped, one way and another, is enormous. Since his death in 1963, sales of his books have risen to 2 million a year, and a recently polled cross section of CT readers rated him the most influential writer in their lives—which is odd, for they and I identify ourselves as evangelicals, and Lewis did no such thing. He did not attend an evangelical place of worship nor fraternize with evangelical organizations. "I am a very ordinary layman of the Church of England," he wrote; "not especially 'high,' nor especially 'low,' nor especially anything else." By ordinary evangelical standards, his idea about the Atonement (archetypal penitence, rather than penal substitution), and his failure ever to mention justification by faith when speaking of the forgiveness of sins, and his apparent hospitality to baptismal regeneration, and his noninerrantist view of biblical inspiration, plus his quiet affirmation of purgatory and of the possible final salvation of some who have left this world as nonbelievers, were weaknesses; they led the late, great Martyn Lloyd-Jones, for whom evangelical orthodoxy was mandatory, to doubt whether Lewis was a Christian at all. His closest friends were Anglo-Catholics or Roman Catholics; his parish church, where he worshiped regularly, was "high"; he went to confession; he was, in fact, anchored in the (small-c) "catholic" stream of Anglican thought, which some (not all) regard as central. Yet evangelicals love his books and profit from them hugely. Why?

As one involved in this situation, I offer the following answer.

In the first place, Lewis was a lay evangelist, conservative in his beliefs and powerful in his defense of the old paths. "Ever since I became a Christian," he wrote in 1952, "I have thought that the best, perhaps the only service I could do for my unbelieving neighbors was to explain and defend the belief that has been common to nearly all Christians at all times." To make ordinary people think about historic Christianity, and to see and feel the strength and attraction of the case for it, was Lewis's goal throughout. All through his writings runs the sense that moderns have ceased to think about life and reality in a serious way and have settled instead for mindless drift with the crowd, or blind trust in technology, or the Athenian frivolity of always chasing new ideas, or the nihilism of knee-jerk negativism toward everything in the past. The Christian spokesman's first task, as Lewis saw it, is to put all this into reverse and get folk thinking again.

So his immediate goal in a sustained flow of didactic books, opinion pieces, children's stories, adult fiction and fantasy, autobiography, and poems, along with works of literary history and criticism, spread out over more than 30 years, was to stir up serious thought. About what? About the Christian values and perspectives that the people he once labeled the Clevers had left behind, and about the morasses one gets bogged down in once the Christian heritage is abandoned; and on from there. He would have agreed with the often-stated dictum of fellow evangelist Martyn Lloyd-Jones that the Christian is and must be the greatest thinker in the universe, and that God's first step in adult conversion is to make the person think.

Lewis was clear that, as he has Screwtape tell us in many different ways, thoughtlessness ruins souls; so he labored mightily by all kinds of stimulating persuasives—witty, argumentative, pictorial, fanciful, logical, prophetic, and dramatic by turns—to ensure, so far as he could, that death-dealing thoughtlessness would not flourish while he was around. His constant pummeling of his reader's mind was neither Ulster temperament nor Oxford didacticism, but the urgent compassionate expression of one who knew that the only alternative to grasping God's truth and seeing everything by its light is idiocy in one form or another.

And he believed, surely with reason, that his credibility as a Christian spokesman in an anticlerical age was enhanced by the fact that he had no professional religious identity but was just an Anglican layman earning his salt by teaching English at Oxford. As G. K. Chesterton was to himself simply a journalist with a significant Christian outlook, so Lewis was to himself simply an academic with a significant spare-time vocation of Christian utterance. Evangelicals appreciate lay evangelists of Lewis's kind.

Second, Lewis was a brilliant teacher. His strength lay not in the forming of new ideas but in the arresting simplicity, both logical and imaginative, with which he projected old ones. Not wasting words, he plunged straight into things and boiled matters down to essentials, positioning himself as a common-sense, down-to-earth, no-nonsense observer, analyst, and conversation partner. On paper he had a flair, comparable to that of the great evangelists in the pulpit (Whitefield, Spurgeon, Graham, for example), for making you feel he is in personal conversation with you, searching your heart and requiring of you total honesty in response. Never pontifical, never browbeating, and never wrapping things up, Lewis achieved an intimacy of instruction that is very unusual. Those who read today what he wrote half a century ago find him that they throw light directly on realities of truth and fact.

G. K. Chesterton, Charles Williams, and to some extent Dorothy L. Sayers exhibit the same sort of bipolar mental development, and what I have said of Lewis's writings can be said of theirs, too. Such minds will always command attention, and when possessed, as the minds of these four were possessed, by the values and visions of Christian faith and Christian humanism, they will always make an appeal that is hard to resist; and that appeal will not diminish as the culture changes. Visionary didacticism, as in Plato, Jesus, and Paul (to look no further) is transcultural, and unfading in its power. Bible-loving evangelicals, who build their whole faith on the logical-visionary teaching of God himself via his servants on Genesis to Revelation, naturally seek and appreciate this mode of communication in Lewis's mind was so highly developed that all of his arguments are illustrations, while all of his illustrations are arguments.

engaging and holding their attention, and when the reading is over, haunting them, in the sense that they do not forget what he said. At his best, Lewis is a teacher of great piercing power. What is his secret?

The secret lies in the blend of logic and imagination in Lewis's make-up, each power as strong as the other, and each enormously strong in its own right. In one sense, imagination took the lead. As Lewis wrote in 1954:

The imaginative man in me is older, more continuously operative, and in that sense more basic than either the religious writer or the critic. It was he who made me first attempt (with little success) to be a poet. . . . It was he who after my conversion led me to embody my religious belief in symbolic or mythopoeic forms, ranging from Screwtape to a kind of theologized science-fiction. And it was of course he who has brought me, in the last few years, to write the series of Narnia stories for children . . . because the fairy tale was the genre best fitted for what I wanted to say.

The best teachers are always those in whom imagination and logical control combine, so that you receive wisdom from their flights of fancy as well as a human heartbeat from their logical analyses and arguments. This in fact is human communication at its profoundest, for in the sending-receiving process of both lobes of the brain (left for logic, right for imagination) are fully involved, and that gives great depth and strength to what is heard. The teaching of Jesus presents itself as the supreme example here. Because Lewis's mind was so highly developed in both directions, it can truly be said of him that all of his arguments (including his literary criticism) are illustrations, in the sense that they throw light directly on realities of life and action, while all his illustrations (including the fiction and fantasies) are arguments, in the sense that they throw light directly on realities of truth and fact. that no twentieth-century writer has managed it so brilliantly as did C. S. Lewis.

Third, Lewis projects a vision of wholeness—sanity, maturity, present peace and joy, and finally fulfillment in heaven—that cannot but attract, willy-nilly, the adult children of our confused, disillusioned, alienated, and embittered culture: the now established culture of the West, which we shall certainly take with us (or maybe, I should say, which will certainly take us with it) into the new millennium. Both Lewis's didactic expositions (think of The Problem of Pain, The Screwtape Letters, Mere Christianity, Miracles, The Four Loves, Letters to Malcolm: Chiefly on Prayer, and Reflections on the Psalms) and his fiction (think of the three Ransom stories, the seven Narnia tales, The Great Divorce, and Till We Have Faces) yield a vision of human life under God (or Maleldil, or Aslan, or the unnamed divinity who confronts Orual) that is redemptive, transformational, virtue-valuing, and shot through with hints and flashes of breathtaking glory and eternal delight in a world to come. To be sure, the vision is humbling, for the shattering of all egoistic pride, all Promethean heroics, and all the possessive perversions of love is part of it. In the text of all his Christian writings, and in the subtext, at least, of all his wider literary work, Lewis rings endless changes on the same story: a story of moral and intellectual corruption, embryonic or developed, being overcome in some way, whereby more or less disordered human beings, victims of bad thinking and bad influences from outside, find peace, poise, discernment, realism, fulfillment, and a meaningful future. Evangelicals love such writing: who can wonder at that?

Here we are at the deepest level of Lewis's creative identity. At bottom he was a mythmaker. As Austin Farrer, Lewis's closest clerical friend and Oxford's most brilliant theologian at that time, observed, in Lewis's apologetics "we think we are listening to an argument; in fact, we are presented with a vision; and it is the vision that carries conviction." Myth is perhaps best defined as a story that projects a vision of life of actual or potential communal significance by reason of the identity and attitudes that it invites us to adopt. Lewis had loved the pre-Christian god-stories of Norse and Greek mythology, and the thought that did most to shape his return to Christianity and his literary output thereafter was this: In the Incarnation, a myth that recurs worldwide, the myth of a dying and rising deity through whose ordeal salvation comes to others, has become a space-time fact. Both before Christ, in pagan mythology, and since Christ, in imaginative fiction from Christian and para-Christian Westerners, versions of this story in various aspects have functioned as "good dreams," preparing minds and hearts for the reality of Christ stepdaughter, after she had read all the Narnia stories, cried bitterly, saying, "I don't want to go on living in this world. I want to live in Narnia with Aslan"—and then adding the five-word paragraph: "Darling, one day you will." The power of Lewisian myth as Christian communication could not be better shown, and countless believers who have nourished their children on Narnia will resonate with Sayer here.

Not is that all. Over and above its evangelistic, or pre-evangelistic, role, Lewisian myth has an educating and maturing purpose. Lewis's 1943 Durham University lectures, published as The Abolition of Man (whew!) with the cooler academic subtitle, "Reflections on education with special reference to the teaching of English in the upper forms of schools," is a prophetic depth charge (it has been called a harangue) embodying his acute concern about our educational and cultural future.

The combination within him of insight with vitality, wisdom with wit, and imaginative power with analytical precision made Lewis a sparkling communicator of the everlasting gospel.

according to the gospel. With increasing clarity, Lewis saw his own fiction as adding to this stock of material.

Lewis knew that by becoming fact in Christ, the worldwide myth had not ceased to be a story that, by its appeal to our imagination, can give us "a taste for the other"—a sense of reality, that is, which takes us beyond left-brain conceptual knowledge. He found that what he now knew as the fact of Christ was generating and fertilizing within him stories of the same shape—stories, that is, that picture redemptive action in worlds other than ours, whether in the past, present, or future. In the fantasy novels (Out of the Silent Planet, Perelandra, That Hideous Strength, Till We Have Faces, and the seven Narnias) he became what Tolkien called a "sub-creator," producing good dreams of his own that, by reflecting Christian fact in a fantasy world, might prepare hearts to embrace the truth of Christ. The vision of wholeness that these myths project, and of the God-figures through whom that wholeness comes (think here particularly of Aslan, the Christly lion), can stir in honest hearts the wish that something of this sort might be true, and so beget, under God, readiness to accept the revelation that something of this sort is true, as a matter of fact.

Lewis once described The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe as giving an answer to the question, "What might Christ be like if there really were a world like Narnia and he chose to be incarnate and die and rise again in that world as he actually has done in ours?" All the Narnia books elaborate that answer: Aslan's doings are a reimagining in another world of what Jesus Christ did, does, and will do in this one. George Sayer, Lewis's finest biographer, ends his chapter on Narnia by telling how "my little Lewis's educational philosophy called for imaginative identification on the part of young people, with paths of truth and value foreshadowed in the Platonic tradition, focused in the biblical revelation, and modeled in such writings as Spenser's Faerie Queene and his own stories; and The Abolition of Man was the waving of a red flag at an oncoming juggernaut that would reduce education to the learning of techniques and so dehumanize and destroy it, tearing out of it that which is its true heart. (Could he inspect public education today, a half-century later, he would tell us that what he feared has happened.) His fiction, however, was meant to help in real education, moral aesthetic and spiritual—value-laden education, in other words—and it is from that standpoint that we look at it now.

A close-up on Lewis's philosophy of education is needed here. Its negative side is hostility to any reductionist subjectivizing of values, as if the words that express them signify not realities to discern and goals to pursue, but just feelings of like and dislike that come and go. As a long-term Platonist and now a Christian into the bargain, Lewis had for some time been troubled by the lurching of twentieth-century philosophy into this subjectivism, and The Abolition of Man begins as his assault on a school textbook that assumed it. Such subjectivizing, he says, produces "men without chests"; that is, adults who lack what he calls "emotions organized by trained habit into stable sentiments"—what we would call moral formation and moral character.

Positively, Lewis calls for adherence to the Tao (his term: Tao means way). The Tao is the basic moral code (beneficence, obligations and respect within the family, justice, truthfulness, mercy, magnanimity) that all significant religions and all stable cultures maintain, and that Christians recognize from the first two chapters of Romans as matters of God's general revelation to our race. Lewis sees this code as a unity, and as time-honored and experientially verified wisdom, and as the only safeguard of society in this or any age, so it is no wonder that he states its claim emphatically. Commenting on the fact that would-be leaders of thought dismiss some or all of the Tao in order to construct alternative moralities (think of Nietzsche, for instance), he declares:

This thing which I have called for convenience the Tao, and which others may call Natural Law or Traditional Morality or the First Principles of Practical Reason or the First Platitudes is not one among a series of possible systems of value. It is the sole source of all value judgments. . . . The effort to refute it and raise a new system of value in its place is self-contradictory. . . . What purport to be new systems or (as they now call them) 'ideologies', all consist of fragments from the Tao itself, arbitrarily wrenched from their context in the whole and then swollen to madness in their isolation, yet still owing to the Tao and to it alone such validity as they possess. If my duty to my parents is a superstition, then so is my duty to posterity. . . . If the pursuit of scientific knowledge is a real value, then so is conjugal fidelity. The rebellion of new ideologies against the Tao is a rebellion of the branches against the tree: if the rebels could succeed they would find that they had destroyed themselves.

Lewis's novel That Hideous Strength, which tells of a devilish research organization called the N.I.C.E. taking over a British university in order to take over Britain in the name of science, seems to me as to others an artistic failure, but it is a striking success in the way that it pictures this process of moral rebellion and the self-destruction to which it leads—and that, I suspect, was the only success that Lewis cared about when he wrote it.

Now, Tao-orientation is an internalized mindset that has to be learned. Lewis invokes Plato on this: "The little human animal will not at first have the right responses. It must be trained to feel pleasure, liking, disgust and hatred at those things which really are pleasant, likable, disgusting, and hateful." Yes, but how? Partly, at least, through stories that model the right responses: poems like Spenser's Faerie Queene, one of Lewis's lifelong favorites (best read, he once affirmed, between the ages of 12 and 16), novels like those of George MacDonald, and myths like the Chronicles of Narnia. Doris Myers urges that the chronicles are a more or less conscious counterpart to the Faerie Queene, modeling particular forms of virtue in a Tao frame with Christian overtones across the spectrum of a human life. Affirming that "the didacticism of the Chronicles consists in the education of moral and aesthetic feelings . . . to prevent children growing up without Chests," Myers reviews them to show how in each one "a particular virtue or configuration of virtues is presented, and the reader is brought to love it through participating in the artistry of the tale." The child will thus absorb the Tao by osmosis through enjoying the story.

Specifically, in the first chronicle, The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe, Lewis works to "strengthen the Chest" by inducing an emotional affirmation of courage, honor, and limitless kindness, with an emotional rejection of cowardice and treachery. In Prince Caspian, the second, he highlights joy within responsible self-control, in courtesy, justice, appropriate obedience, and the quest for order. In the third, The Voyage of the Dawn Treader, the endragoning and dedragoning of Eustace, "the Boy without a Chest," is flanked by vivid images of personal nobility (Reepicheep the Mouse) and public responsibility (Caspian the captain), while a tailpiece tells us how Eustace after his dedragoning was seen to be improved—"you'd never know him for the same boy." (The image, of course, is of Christian conversion.) Numbers four and five (The Silver Chair and The Horse and His Boy) teach lessons on managing one's thoughts and feelings as one nears adulthood; number six (The Magician's Nephew) invites hatred for the life-defying development of knowledge and use of power apart from the Tao; and number seven (The Last Battle) inculcates bravery in face of loss and death.

Thus Lewis's Narnia links up with his attempt, in The Abolition of Man, to recall education to its Tao-grounded roots. The attempt was ignored, and today we reap the bitter fruits of that fact. The inner desolation and desperation that young people experience as subjectivist relativism and nihilism are wished upon them in schools and universities is a tragedy. (If you do not know what I am referring to, listen to the pop singers; they will tell you.) Yet Lewis's imaginative presentation in his tales of a life of wholeness, maturity, sanity, honesty, humility, and humaneness, fictionally envisaged in order that it might be factually realized, still has great potency for both conversion and character building, as Narnia lovers most of all will testify. And evangelical believers greatly appreciate potency of this kind.

This brings us to the fourth factor in evangelical enthusiasm for C. S. Lewis: namely, the power with which he communicates not only the goodness of godliness, but also the reality of God, and with that the reality of the heaven that exists in the fullness of God's gracious presence.

Lewis's power here stemmed from his own vivid experience. From childhood he knew stabbing moments of what he called joy, that is, intense delightful longing, Sweet Desire (his phrase), that nothing in this world satisfies, and that is in fact a God-sent summons to seek the enjoyment of God and heaven. The way he describes it is calculated (Lewis, like other writers, could calculate his effects) to focus in our minds an awareness that this experience is ours too, so that Augustine was right to say that God made us for himself and our hearts lack contentment till they find it in him, in foretaste here and in fullness hereafter. Having found Sweet Desire to be an Ariadne's thread leading him finally to Christ (the autobiographical Surprised by Joy tells us how), Lewis holds our feet to the fire to ensure, if he can, that the same will happen to us. "If we consider the unblushing promises of reward and the staggering nature of the rewards promised in the Gospels, it would seem that Our Lord finds our desires, not too strong, but too weak. We are half-hearted creatures, fooling about with drink and sex and ambition when infinite joy is offered us . . . We are far too easily pleased." Nothing must be allowed to distract us from staying the course with Sweet Desire.

Lewis's power to communicate God and heaven's reality was exerted through his marvelously vivid rhetoric. Rhetoric—that is, the art of using words persuasively—ran in the Lewis family, and C. S. Lewis himself was a prose poet whose skill with simple words, like Bunyan's, enabled him to suggest ineffable things to our imaginations with overwhelming poignancy.

Thus, in The Voyage of the Dawn Treader, a momentary breeze brought the three children "a smell and a sound, a musical sound. Edmund and Eustace would never talk about it afterwards. Lucy could only say, 'It would break your heart.' 'Why,' said I, 'was it so sad?' 'Sad!! No,' said Lucy.

"No one in that boat doubted that they were seeing beyond the End of the World into Aslan's country."

And this is how The Last Battle ends:

"There was a real railway accident," said Aslan softly. "Your father and mother and all of you are—as you used to call it in the Shadowlands—dead. The term is over: the holidays have begun. The dream is ended: this is the morning."

And as He spoke He no longer looked to them like a lion; but the things that began to happen to them after that were so great and beautiful that I cannot write them . . . we can most truly say that they all lived happily ever after. . . . All their life in this world and all their adventures in Narnia had only been the cover and the title page: now at last they were beginning Chapter One of the Great Story which no one on earth has read: which goes on forever: in which every chapter is better than the one before.

The knockout quality of such writing is more than words can express.

The combination within him of insight with vitality, wisdom with wit, and imaginative power with analytical precision made

Lewis a sparkling communicator of the everlasting gospel. Matching Aslan in the Narnia stories with (of course!) the living Christ of the Bible and of Lewis's instructional books, and his presentation of Christ could hardly be more forthright. "We are told that Christ was killed for us, that His death has washed out our sins, and that by dying he disabled death itself. That is the formula. That is Christianity. That is what has to be believed." Then, on the basis of this belief and the future belief that he is risen and alive and so is personally there (that is, everywhere, which means here), we must "put on," or as Lewis strikingly renders it, "dress up as" Christ—that is, give ourselves totally to Christ, so that he may be "formed in us," and we may henceforth enjoy in him the status and character of adopted children in God's family, or as again Lewis strikingly puts it, "little Christs." "God looks at you as if you were a little Christ: Christ stands beside you to turn you into one." Precisely.

Not just evangelicals, but all Christians, should celebrate Lewis, "the brilliant, quietly saintly, slightly rumped Oxford don" as James Patrick describes him. He was a Christ-centered, great-tradition mainstream Christian whose stature a generation after his death seems greater than anyone ever thought while he was alive, and whose Christian writings are now seen as having classic status.

Long may we learn from the contents of his marvelous, indeed magical, mind! I doubt whether the full measure of him has been taken by anyone as yet.

CT

"Distinctive."

That's how Dr. Adrian Rogers describes our school.

Not just different, but distinctive. Students are required to witness; professors are scholars with a soul winning passion; and every day is an atmosphere of revival. If you are called to be distinctive, call Mid-America first and find out about our fully-accredited associate, masters and doctoral level programs, our new student housing, and our Memphis, Tennessee and Albany, New York campuses.

MID-AMERICA BAPTIST
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

901.751.8453 800.968.4508 www@mabts.edu

Dr. Rogers is pastor of the 27,000 member Bellevue Baptist Church, an accomplished author and Bible teacher on Love Worth Finding

*Real
Students.*

Real Stories.

In Africa, I learned that good intentions are no substitute for good preparation.

LAURA CORCORAN didn't expect to fail when she headed to Kenya. Even though she was fresh out of college, she already had a lot of experience doing what she loved – working with disadvantaged kids. There was a summer at a reservation in Wyoming, winter weeks in Belize, and a summer in Philadelphia's inner city.

But Nairobi was different. More complex. Despite her best efforts, the door closed, and she came home early.

"I felt like a total failure," she recalls.

After months of prayer, Laura still felt called to urban ministry, so she decided to study at Gordon-Conwell. Here she has taken many classes with Professor Dean Borgman at Gordon-Conwell's Center for Urban Ministerial Education (CUME) in Boston. In her first class, a guest teacher was Dr. Doug Hall, an adjunct professor who directs Emmanuel Gospel Center, an inner city ministry.

"He said we need to research our methods and goals, or we can be counter productive.

"It was like light bulbs flashing – that's what happened to me in Kenya! Everything I've learned since has reinforced my conviction that good intentions are no substitute for good preparation.

"I can see that my experience in Africa has actually helped me get more out of my classes at Gordon-Conwell. Now I'm eager to go back out and put everything I've learned into practice!"

Laura Corcoran teaching Bible stories in Kenya.

SOUTH
HAMILTON
Massachusetts

BOSTON
Massachusetts

CHARLOTTE
North Carolina
(800) 600-1212

Gordon-Conwell
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

(800) 428-7329

www.gcts.edu

The Return of the Jewish Church

In 1967, there were no Messianic Jewish congregations in the world. Today there are 350.

Who are these believers?

How long have you been a Christian?" "I'm not a Christian," the woman replied indignantly. "I'm a Messianic Jew."

I was visiting Beth Yeshua in Philadelphia, one of the leading Messianic Jewish congregations in the United States. Though my question was poorly chosen, I was stunned by the definitive rejection of the label Christian and reminded that there may never be an easy fit between Jewish faith and 2,000 years of evolving Christian culture.

"In A.D. 150, Justin Martyr wrote to Trypho the Jew, saying, 'You can be a Jew or a Christian, but you can't be both.' And that is the one thing both communities have traditionally agreed on," says Jamie Cowen, rabbi of Tikvat Israel, a Messianic Jewish congregation based in Richmond, Virginia. "The whole thrust of Messianic Judaism is to restore the roots of the faith as a belief in Jesus as a Jewish Messiah.

"We see our mission as being two primary things—to help Jews understand Jesus as their Messiah, and to help the Christian church understand her Jewish roots."

The rapid growth of Messianic Judaism has been remarkable. In 1967, before the Jewish people regained control of Jerusalem, there was not a single Messianic Jewish congregation in the world, and only several thousand Messianic Jews worldwide. Today, over 350 Messianic Jewish congregations—50 in Israel alone—dot the globe. There are well over one million Jews in the United States who express some sort of faith in Yeshua (the Jewish form of Jesus), according to a 1990 survey, one of the most extensive ever conducted. Sid Roth, host of the Messianic Vision radio and television show, estimates that more than 100,000 Jewish people in the former Soviet Union alone have made professions of faith.

As the numbers of Messianic Jews have increased, so has the profile of the movement grown in evangelical circles. For instance, last year's Promise Keepers "Stand in the Gap" rally began with Messianic leaders blowing the shofar (ram's horn) and standing with Gentile Christian leaders on the platform.

This merging of two of the three major Abrahamic religions is setting the world on edge. Many Arab observers view the phenomenon with a curious astonishment, while a number of Jews and Christians take turns attacking and defending the controversial faith of Messianic Jews.

What's behind the numbers, the passion, and the controversy?

Strange symbols

Congregation Beth Yeshua ("House of Salvation" or "House of Jesus") in Philadelphia is one of the leading Messianic Jewish congregations in America. It was founded by Martin Chernoff and is now led by his son, David, a messianic rabbi. It typifies the growing faith of Messianic Judaism.

You will not find a cross at Beth Yeshua. Stars of David are plentiful, but in the front of the congregation—the place where a Christian church might plant a huge wooden cross—there is an ark containing a Torah scroll (the five books of Moses).

Worship services are held on Friday night and Saturday morning. Participants, including visitors, are offered a prayer shawl and a kippa (a small head covering). The service is exuberant. Children and some adults dance together in organized Jewish dances at the front of the synagogue as the worship team leads the congregation with the enthusiasm of a charismatic service.

The integration of the young and old is startling. Though children are eventually excused to go to their own classes, during the worship time the dancing and singing insure that the children are perhaps the most active participants of all. I kept thinking, “My kids would love this,” as I saw a young girl go to her seat for a quick sip from a water bottle before returning to dance some more.

The worship songs are laden with Jewish allusions and a liberal use of Hebrew. Much of the rabbi’s message sounds quite evangelical, but the frequent Hebraic references repeatedly reminded me I was not in a Gentile Christian service: instead of cross, I heard about the tree of sacrifice; and the apostle Paul is referred to as Rabbi Shaul (pronounced “Shaw-ool”).

Faith in a Jewish key

What exactly is a Messianic Jew (MJ)? The one constant is a desire to strip away centuries of Gentile accretions. “The basic point Christians must understand is that even though Jewish people may not be able to define what it means to be Jews, they feel an obligation of loyalty to their people to remain Jewish,” writes Jews for Jesus founder Moishe Rosen with his wife, Ceil, in their new book, Witnessing to Jews.

“Jewish people often have aversions to Christian symbols such as the cross, the crèche and depictions of Jesus,” they write. “At the very least, those symbols puzzle Jews, who have been taught from childhood not to make images of God. At the worst, they seem to a Jewish person to verge on idolatry. . . . For these reasons, sometimes a messianic congregation can be very helpful in bridging the culture gap between Jewish and Gentile Christians.”

Eliezer Maass, director of training for AMF International (formerly American Messianic Fellowship), warns that “there are many different models of messianic congregations; there is a lot of diversity in this movement.”

This makes it hazardous to describe its congregations, since new expressions of worship and belief are arising all the time as the movement grows. In general, however, there are a number of cultural differences. MJs prefer “synagogue” or “congregation” to the word church, and rather than spell out God and Lord, they often use the Jewish practice of denoting respect by referring to G-d and L-rd. The Anglicized word Christ is dropped in favor of Messiah. MJs usually recognize Saturday as the Sabbath, and many still observe the rite of circumcision. Most MJs also believe that God desires the Jewish people to remain a “distinct and obedient” nation until Jesus’ second coming—hence the objection to the title Christian.

A typical Messianic Jewish synagogue will serve a variety of believers. Some are previously secular Jews who found faith in the MJ context. Others are previously evangelical Christians with Jewish blood, eager to incorporate the beloved traditions of their heritage with their belief in the Messiah. There are also Torah-observant Messianic Jews who continue to follow the strict orthodox practices of Orthodox Judaism, including kosher food preparation.

How to maintain a distinct and authentic Jewish practice has been a constant family debate throughout Messianic Judaism. Christians have not been silent as they watched from the outside. In 1975, the Fellowship of Christian Testimonies to the Jews (FCTJ) passed a resolution stating that “Christian faith is consistent with, but not a continuation of Biblical Judaism, and is distinct from rabbinical Judaism. . . .

Bible-believing Hebrew Christians should be aligned with the local church in fellowship with Gentile believers.” The same resolution challenged the practice of wearing yarmulkes and prayer shawls, stating that “any practice of culture, Jewish or non-Jewish, must be brought into conformity with New Testament theology.”

A Messianic Jewish Alliance of America (MJAA) member responded with an article that was published in Israel My Glory Quarterly: “Why can an American remain an American and be a Christian, why can a Pole, a Russian, a Japanese, but only the Jew can no longer identify himself with his people?”

Much of this controversy between Messianic Judaism and Christianity remains today in certain circles. Many Christians have a difficult time understanding the historic persecution the Jewish people have undergone and the corresponding walls that exist between the two faiths. For centuries, Jews have seen Christians as their primary persecutors. The Inquisition, the crusades, various pogroms in Europe, and the atrocities of Nazism were waged in the name of Christianity. When you have a grandfather who was murdered in a Nazi gas chamber under a sign reading “You are being killed in the name of Jesus Christ,” it’s a bit of a stretch when an eager young evangelist tries to tell you the good news about Christianity.

Raised with such awareness, new Jewish believers often go into culture shock as they are assimilated into Gentile Christian churches. Though they are willing to believe in the Messiah who was a Jew, it is difficult to get over the atrocities that have been done in his name.

Messianic leader Stuart Dauermann explains, “Before they can seriously consider the claims of Jesus, Jewish people need a ‘cultural bed’ to rest in. The messianic congregation attempts to penetrate that cultural barrier."

While constructing this cultural bed, many MJ leaders have removed Western elements of Christianity, including the very label Christian. That's why many Messianic Jews will state forthrightly, "I'm not a Christian, I'm a Messianic Jew."

"Linguistically, the terms are equivalent," Rob Kirsch, a medical doctor and Messianic Jew, explains. "But in common thought, Christian means Gentile. Since I'm not a Gentile, I'd rather avoid a label that carries that connotation."

The whole thrust of Messianic Judaism is to restore the roots of the faith as a belief in Jesus as a Jewish Messiah.'

As the only practicing Messianic mohel—a physician who performs ritual circumcision—Kirsch likes to consider himself on the "cutting edge" of Messianic Judaism. He was raised in a conservative Jewish home but met Yeshua at the age of 19 through the "slow, persistent, and dogged witness" of some college classmates.

For many years, Rob could not shake the feeling of being a "visitor" in the independent churches he regularly attended. He and his wife attempted to celebrate some of the Jewish holidays at home on their own, but they ran into many difficulties trying to assimilate their Jewish roots and their faith in Yeshua.

When Rob's family finally came to Beth Yeshua in Philadelphia, it felt like "coming home," he says. "I realized it was possible and appropriate to remain Jewish and be a believer, but working out how to do it was a big question for me."

Rob was delighted to learn that the leaders of Beth Yeshua had worked out many of the issues he and his wife had confronted in trying to live the life of a Jew who believes in Yeshua.

Apart from the MJ reticence to use the label Christian, the absence of crosses is another sore point for many Western Christians who grew up singing "The Old Rugged Cross."

"[The cross is] is synonymous with the symbol of death for all the wrong reasons," explains Joel Chernoff, president of the International Messianic Jewish Alliance. "Due to the centuries of death and persecution of Jews by people prominently displaying that symbol, the cross has become a symbol not of the Messiah's atonement, but of untold horror and misery."

Joel points out that Hezekiah was willing to burn Aaron's rod when such a dramatic symbol of Israel's deliverance became venerated in and of itself, apart from what it represented. So, too, the Messianic Jews don't hold symbols sacred—simply the truth behind them.

That also explains why Easter is celebrated as part of Passover. "There's a reason the crucifixion occurred during the Passover," Joel points out. "It loses a great deal of its power and meaning if it's divorced from that context."

As for Christmas, Joel notes that there is no biblical command to celebrate Christmas, so many Messianic Jews simply decide not to—though they don't fault Gentile Christians for such celebrations.

"We have the same faith, but a different cultural practice or expression," he points out. "In first-century Jerusalem, the early Messianic Jewish body of believers decided that the cultural worship experience of Gentile believers could be diverse, that they should hold to a few things, and then be themselves."

The MJAA wing of Messianic Judaism is not interested in any of the cultural trappings of Gentile Christianity, unless those cultural practices reflect a specific, biblically prescribed practice.

"Christian churches are very Gentile," admits Arthur Glasser, dean emeritus of the School of World Mission at Fuller Theological Seminary. According to Glasser, what the Messianic Jews are doing is no different from what the Chinese and German Christians are doing—working hard to contextualize a faith that supersedes all nationalistic cultures and makes sense in their own. Besides, he adds, it is the only effective way to reach a people who need the Messiah as much as anyone.

"You can't say to the Jews, 'You're on the ash heap of history because you failed Jesus, and God has tossed you aside, making you of no significance. God is through with your people, but here's the gospel through Jesus Christ.' That's not a very effective way to win friends and influence people," he chuckles, adding, "You don't have to become a Western-style Christian to worship God in a legitimate fashion."

Some within the MJ movement are more cautious than those leading the MJAA. Maass offers the friendly, in-house critique that "sometimes the temptation is to bend over backwards and be so concerned about acculturation and being sensitive to the Jewish community to the point where Jesus becomes secondary."

Messianic pastor Louis Lapidus, a colleague of Maass's, warns, "We risk structural damage when we hide the Messiah or drape him in so much Jewish garb that he appears to be merely a great Rabbi."

In reality, the Gentile church doesn't have "some kind of major say about this," says Maass. Western Christians do not own the gospel. MJs are here to stay, regardless of how the Gentile church feels about it. In many ways, the tensions from Acts 15 and the Jerusalem council are being revisited.

Even so, Maass wants the Messianic Jewish movement to "keep those doors and channels of communication open to the Gentile church."

The cost of belief

The personal costs that Messianic Jews pay for their faith in Yeshua are often severe, from being shunned by their families to being excluded from the local Jewish Community Center. Historically, Judaism has been a nonproselytizing faith, but now there is a full-time missionary in the United States who tries to counteract the Messianic Jewish movement. Jews for Judaism missionary Mark Powers believes that the traditional Jewish community is at one in its opposition to Messianic Judaism: "Regardless of our differences, be they political or whatever, the Jewish community is united on this issue: They [MJs] are not Jews. They are Christians. There's nothing wrong with being Christian, but it's just not Jewish. . . . It's provable that [the messianic movement] was designed specifically as a marketing strategy to bring Jews into the church."

Gary and Shirley Beresford, a South African Messianic Jewish couple, found out the hard way that their faith would even exclude them from being citizens of Israel. On December 25, 1989, while Christians around the world celebrated the birth of Jesus, the Israeli Supreme Court disinherited any who believed in Jesus' name. Justice Menahem Elon wrote an opinion that stated that Messianic Jews cannot make aliyah (literally, ascend, or immigration to Israel) under the Law of Return.

"Messianic Jews attempt to reverse the wheels of history by 2,000 years," he wrote. "But the Jewish people have decided during the 2,000 years of its history that [MJs] do not belong to the Jewish nation . . . and have no right to force themselves on it."

The MJAA responded with a full-page ad in the Jerusalem Post, warning that the circle of exclusion would expand. Within seven years, that prophecy came true as the Orthodox Union of North America declared that Reform and Conservative sects are "not Judaism," setting off a seething controversy within the Jewish community.

"It is a trifle ironic that the Reform and Conservative Jews expect Messianic Jews to abandon our Jewish identification on their demand," observes Bruce Choen, rabbi of Congregation Beth El, a Messianic Jewish synagogue in New York City. "The issue of how exactly to define 'Jewish' is on the table as an 'in-house' issue like never before in modern Jewish history."

Messianic Judaism is now the fastest-growing stream of faith within the Jewish community, by far, according to Joel Chernoff. The nation of Israel has not watched this explosion dispassionately. The December 1989 decision stating that Messianic Jews cannot make aliyah under the Law of Return met with little organized opposition; now the Israeli Knesset has decided to up the ante. It is currently considering a law titled "Prohibition of Inducement for Religious Conversion," which aims to stop all proselytizing of traditional Jews. Joel Chernoff fears that the proposed law "lays the groundwork for the legalized harassment and persecution of Messianic Jews and Gentile Christians in Israel."

The law is certainly extreme—something that you would expect to find in a Muslim nation: "Whoever possesses, contrary to law, or prints or copies or distributes or shares or imports tracts or advertises things in which there is an inducement for religious conversion is liable for one year imprisonment. Any tract or advertisement in which there is inducement to religious conversion will be confiscated."

Although this bill is mired in committee, an even more stringent bill has been proposed (and at this writing has passed a preliminary reading in the Knesset) that calls for a three-year jail sentence and NIS 50,000 ($13,700 U.S.) fine for "anyone preaching with the intent of causing another person to change his religion." Unlike the previous bill, this one has the support of Prime Minister Netanyahu and his cabinet.

These new rounds of legislation were proposed after American evangelist Morris Cerrullo mailed close to one million booklets to households in Israel. The booklets, written in Hebrew, made the case that Yeshua is the Messiah. As soon as the ultra-orthodox community learned of the booklets, they warned postal delivery men to cease distribution. (A few postal workers were beaten when they ignored the warnings.) All but approximately 150,000 of the booklets were delivered.

Cerrullo's organization acted independently, and there are mixed feelings within the Messianic community about what took place. While many MJs thought the booklet was well done, they recognized the potential political consequences.

Many might ask, "How could such severe legislation be seriously considered

Mapping the Messianic Jewish World

Several organizations are riding the wave of burgeoning Jewish interest in the Messiah. Clearly, the largest and most representative in this country is the Messianic Jewish Alliance of America (MJAA), with some 85 to 90 congregations.

The Union of Messianic Jewish Congregations (UMJC) is next, comprising about 70 Messianic congregations worldwide. The MJAA and the UMJC are close in spirit, with relatively similar visions and virtually identical practice. In fact, the UMJC originated from within the MJAA, the result of a "personal division" in 1979 that has since been addressed and "healed." Though a future merger is not a foregone conclusion, it is a distinct possibility.

The Federation of Messianic Congregations is a much smaller group of about 12 synagogues. Eliezer Maass, who attends an FMC congregation, points out that the FMC tends to be on the "right wing" of the spectrum and "more conservative" doctrinally. As such, FMC congregations tend to have a closer relationship with Gentile churches.

These three groups account for about 90 percent of the Messianic Jewish congregations. Of course, there are a number of independent synagogues as well. In general, the MJAA is seen as the organization most clearly "pushing the envelope" in its effort to define an indigenous Messianic Jewish congregation. In the middle would be the UMJC, with the FMC on the right. Though there are clearly differences (Maass cites the common saying within the Jewish community, "Where there are two Jews, you have three opinions"), the groups have a fairly amicable association. The FMC invited the UMJC president to speak at a conference several years ago, and the UMJC and MJAA jointly sponsor events today. It would be more of a stretch to see the MJAA and the FMC work closely together.

Beyond these three groups are several missions organizations, with Jews for Jesus and Chosen People Ministries being the largest and most influential. Both of these groups have also begun planting congregations (in fact, several of the FMC congregations were planted by Chosen People Ministries). Though traditionally these missions may have followed the assimilation and the "Hebrew Christian" model, this is changing as the entire movement seeks to define a more indigenous model. The Assemblies of God and the Southern Baptists have launched their own missions efforts as well.

The movement has even entered the Roman Catholic church. Cardinal Jean-Marie Lustiger, archbishop of Paris, states openly, "I'm a Jew," though his theological beliefs are obviously in line with the Roman Catholic tradition.

The Messianic Jewish movement is strongest in the United States and then Israel. Russia is also a very active nation, with numerous congregations being founded. Holland and Great Britain round out the "top tier."

in a supposed democracy?" The answer is hinted at by Larry Derfner, a Tel Aviv journalist who wrote in a June 1997 issue of the Jerusalem Post: "Judaism may be a broad, comprehensive culture, but it has one vital organ, and that organ is religion." In this spectrum, apparently, belief is thicker than blood.

Coalition whip Meir Sheetrit has said that this new legislation will be held down in committee, as was the case with its predecessor. Since this is the case, more important than the bills themselves may be the way the Messianic Jewish community is coming together to respond to them. "In 1989," Joel Chernoff admits, "all we had was a loosely formed organization with several great conferences." That has changed. There are now over 50 Messianic congregations and 30 more fellowships in Israel alone, which are being backed by the efforts of Messianic groups around the world. Together, they have formulated a strategy for political involvement to block the law's passage.

Overture to modern Messianic Judaism

The modern manifestation of the MJ movement took almost a hundred years to develop. Its story is one of dogged determination and foresight reminiscent of Abraham himself.

The father of "Messianic Judaism" is Joseph Rabinowitz, a Russian Jew who lived from 1837 to 1899. Rabinowitz became a believer in Yeshua as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, pondering the suffering of the Jewish people. In the waning years of the nineteenth century, Rabinowitz established a Jewish Christian synagogue in Kishineff, Russia.

Just a few years after Rabinowitz's death, Mark Levy, an English Jew, got hold of the same vision and worked to establish a similar movement in the United States. These initial efforts soon waned, but they were revived at a New York City conference in April 1915 in which the Hebrew Christian Alliance (HCA) was officially formed. An early resolution explains that the HCA sought to unite and encourage Jewish believers to come out "openly and boldly" in their confession of the Messiah. In 1925, a worldwide group, the International Hebrew Christian Alliance (IHCA), came into existence.

Though Levy was largely responsible for getting the movement started in the United States, his views regarding indigenous Jewish worship and practice were not popular until much later in this century. The immediate controversy arose over Levy's insistence that Jewish believers be allowed (and even encouraged) to maintain practices of the Jewish faith. His argument would be forwarded two decades later by Sir Leon Levison, president of the IHCA in the thirties, who said that "Paul stood out against Judaizing the Gentiles; and now [we] must plead against Gentilising the Jews."

As anti-Semitism spread in the 1930s, particularly in European countries, the IHCA encouraged the formation of specific congregations, especially in communities where Jewish believers were not welcome in Christian churches. The Holocaust naturally impeded many evangelistic efforts well into the forties. Many Jewish believers were understandably hurt by the tepid response of Christians to the reports of wholesale Jewish slaughter. Correspondingly, they felt little or no loyalty toward the Gentile churches who turned their backs on such suffering. On an international scale, at least, the once unquestioned practice of assimilation into Gentile Christian churches began to be challenged by necessity as much as anything else.

There was a temporary revitalization of organizational efforts in 1955 when the IHCA held the World Congress of Hebrew Christians in Chicago, but interest cooled off once again, and the early sixties presaged a relatively silent decade.

That changed suddenly in 1967 when, during the Six Day War, Jerusalem was returned to Jewish control. Glasser explains that "with the establishment of the State of Israel, a new wave of Jewish concern came through a lot of American Jewish hearts." Earlier, Glasser points out, assimilation was the "natural" route to take. But after the Holocaust and then the emergence of the State of Israel, "there was something among the Jewish people which made them feel that Israel had a future and that they should be identified with Israel in a different way."

There is no biblical command to celebrate Christmas, so many Messianic Jews simply do not.

Paul and Bertha Swarr experienced this wave firsthand while living in Israel as Christian workers with the Mennonite Board of Missions and serving in an interdenominational church in Jaffa. The Swarrs had moved to Israel in 1957 as Protestant missionaries with little idea of Messianic Judaism, as Paul explains, but with the directive to "represent Yeshua in whatever way we could." By the early seventies, one of the Anglican congregations was pastored by a Messianic Jew, who decided to use fewer Gentile trappings and create a more Hebraic worship context at the Beit Immanuel Messianic Congregation.

"At that stage, we made a choice to link up with what was happening at Beit Immanuel," Paul says. By 1977, the Swarrs were pastoring Beit Immanuel, a position they continued in for ten years before returning to develop the School of Jewish Studies at the University of the Nations in Richmond, Virginia.

"In our early years there, if we saw one baptism a year, we saw it as a victory," Paul recounts. "In our last ten years there, the growth came from the university group. When the [university group] made the discovery that Yeshua was a Jew—that they were not leaving their heritage, but discovering their heritage—they 'owned' what was happening. The young Israelis are wide open, and it's now a much more demonstrative witness there."

"Political Zionism has not met the need of their spirits," Bertha adds. "But the young Israeli believers see themselves as a sign of hope in the Middle East."

This explosion of interest erupted among Jewish youth in North America, too, resulting in more aggressive evangelism and more emphasis on indigenous Jewish practice. Joel Chernoff, son of the prominent Hebrew Christian leader Martin Chernoff, joined another believer, Rick Coghill, to form the highly successful recording group Lamb, and soon began pioneering a new, distinctive sound that combined Eastern European and ancient Jewish music with the pop sound of the seventies. Organizations and conferences geared toward the youth were developed to foster the burgeoning interest, and once the youth were included, Messianic Judaism would never be the same.

During this same time, the well-known Jews for Jesus (JFJ) missions organization was founded by Moishe Rosen, raising Jewish evangelism to a new pitch. Some of the Jews who became believers in Jesus were assimilated into Gentile churches. Others began joining Messianic congregations that started to form throughout the United States.

In 1975, the alliance voted to change its name from the Hebrew Christian Alliance of America to the Messianic Jewish Alliance of America (MJAA). Soon after, in 1980, the alliance headquarters moved from Chicago to Philadelphia (where it remains today), the first denominational-type organization. David Chernoff (brother of Joel) was appointed the first chairman of the steering committee, which formed the International Alliance of Messianic Congregations and Synagogues (IAMCS) in 1986. The IAMCS has since developed a program for ordination and the Institute for Messianic Rabbinic Training. In June of 1997, Joel Chernoff was elected president of the International Messianic Jewish Alliance, which represents groups in 15 nations, including Israel.

Toward Jerusalem Council II

The rise of Messianic Judaism is not only stirring religious authorities in Israel; it is also generating interest among Gentile churches. It may even lead to a significant meeting called "Toward Jerusalem Council II," tentatively scheduled during Shavuot (Pentecost), 1999. A number of denominational leaders are coming together in an effort to "repair and heal the breach between Jewish and Gentile believers in Yeshua . . . primarily through humility, prayer and repentance." The vision is for a gathering of cross-denomina-

'Despite the evils Jews have experienced at the hands of Gentiles, Jews are more responsive to the gospel today than they have been for a long time.'

tional representatives (Gentile and Jew) to gather in Jerusalem and produce a historic document.

Early goals include recognizing the schism between Jewish and Gentile believers, which culminated in the decrees of the Nicene Council II (A.D. 787). This would involve denouncing that council's decree declaring Messianic Jewish communities had no right to exist.

Toward Jerusalem Council II will also seek to understand and affirm the Jewish roots of Christianity (and the validity of the Messianic Jewish community), while recognizing the "sacrificial, loving effort of true believers from among the Gentiles to share the Good News of the Messiah with the Jewish people."

"The Church is cursed with division, because its rejection of the Messianic Jewish community [in the second century] was the first church split, which led to other church splits," says Daniel Juster, messianic rabbi and leader of Tikkun Ministries. "The resolution of later church splits requires repentance and returning to a first-century understanding of the Bible in its original Jewish context." Of course, some evangelicals might counter that, though the New Testament was written by Jewish writers, it was produced in a Hellenistic Graeco-Roman cultural context, not a Jewish one.

At Toward Jerusalem Council II, Messianic Jews will be called on to repent of pride. Gentiles will be called to "recognize and to grieve" over the Christian church's sins against Jewish believers in Jesus, including "all forms of 'replacement' teaching" (which treats the first covenant as obsolete and discarded, with the Gentile Christian church inheriting Israel's promises). Finally, the council would call upon the church to affirm a declaration similar to that of Acts 15, affirming Jews who follow Jesus and who want to continue in their Jewish life and calling (within the context of scriptural norms).

The absolute rejection of all forms of replacement teaching will no doubt cause considerable controversy among evangelical churches. While some forms of this teaching have anti-Semitic roots, other forms can be deduced quite easily from the writings of the apostle Paul, not to mention the anonymous author of Hebrews.

A revival from within

The future of the movement is a paramount concern to many MJ leaders. "The key is the next generation—if [Messianic Judaism] survives, it will remain until the Lord returns,” says Tikvat Israel’s Cowen.

Gentiles also seem mesmerized by future implications. “Jewish people are becoming reminded of Jesus Christ in a way that they haven’t been for centuries,” Glasser notes. “Despite the Holocaust, despite the evils Jews have experienced at the hands of Gentiles, including some Christians, Jews are more responsive to the gospel today than they have been for a long time.

“We have to ask ourselves, what is the significance of this? Is the stage being set for the return of Christ, according to Matthew 24:14? Are we living in apocalyptic times? I’m no prophet, but it seems to me that the church in our day is not paying enough attention to the truths of the coming of Jesus Christ and what that will mean to the nations and to the Jewish people.”

Outside of the Book of Romans, perhaps one of the most insightful comments regarding the turning of Jewish people toward faith in the Messiah was uttered over 75 years ago by John Zacker during a 1921 “Hebrew Christian”

conference in Buffalo:

“The Jew has dwelt in every degree of latitude and longitude. His history cannot be explained by geography, climate, genius, or politics. He was scorched and chilled by the suns of Africa and the snows of Lapland. He has tasted of the Tiber, Thames, Jordan, and Mississippi. These experiences are but characteristic of the wandering Jew. He is a riddle to himself and a by-word to others. He is the paradox of history. He is proud of being a Jew and yet wishes assimilation. He boasts of religion and is an infidel. He cries for Palestine and remains in America. He is the greatest cosmopolitan and the most extreme racist. With unsurpassing ferocity he has been smitten [sic] by papal superstition and Moslem barbarism. . . . Why this miraculous preservation? Because their present experiences and persecutions are but a training and preparation for ultimate conversion and through them the conversion of the human family. . . . But how shall the veil be torn from the faces of this indestructible people? The spiritual revival must come from within.”

What Zacker could only hope for—a spiritual revival from within—is now being witnessed by Jews such as Chernoff and Maass, and Gentiles such as Glasser and the Promise Keepers. This is no homogenous movement (see “Mapping the Messianic Jewish World,” p. 44), nor has it been without its own fights and theological squabbles.

But two things are certain. One, more Jewish people than ever before are coming to believe that the Messiah did indeed appear 2,000 years ago in the Incarnation as a Jewish carpenter. And two, Gentile Christians may find that they no longer “own” the gospel in the way they have since the mid-second century. Jesus the Messiah is for all nations, and now he is reaching back to reclaim the first of the three major Abrahamic faiths. While no one is certain how all this will turn out, it is clear that faith in Yeshua, or Jesus, is breaking new ground. CT

Gary Thomas is author of The Glorious Pursuit: Embracing the Virtues of Christ, to be released by NavPress this September. This article included reporting by Carolyn McCulley.

Answer God's calling

You don't have to leave your ministry to earn a Master's degree.

“I enjoyed my work a great deal,” says Dennis. “But, I felt the Lord moving in my heart to be available for full-time service. I also realized that I needed training to prepare for Christian ministry.”

Moody Graduate School allowed Dennis to begin working full-time as the associate pastor at New Castle Bible Church while completing graduate school coursework.

Moody Graduate School offers modular courses designed for people in ministry. Programs that fit the schedule of people on the go. People like you.

Practical ministry related courses provide immediate application to your life. Courses such as Conflict Management, Teaching Skills, Leadership and Motivation of People, Marriage and Family Counseling, and much more!

*Interested in pursuing further education,
while staying in full-time ministry?*

Check out MOODY GRADUATE SCHOOL

You don't have to leave your ministry to earn a Master's degree.

MOODY GRADUATE SCHOOL

Admissions Office

820 N. La Salle Boulevard • Chicago, Illinois 60610

1-800-967-4MBI(4624) • admissions@moody.edu

Dennis Schlappi was a husband, father of three kids, and an electrical engineer when he felt God's call to full-time ministry.

Are there things your M.Div. didn't prepare you for?

Pastor. Preacher. Counselor. CEO. COO. Chief strategist. Facilities manager. Master of ceremonies. Administrator. Volunteer recruiter. Media specialist...and more.

You give your whole self to your whole job 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. And now, we can help.

If you feel like you need more knowledge, more encouragement and more leadership skills, the DENVER SEMINARY DOCTOR OF MINISTRY may be for you. Designed to address real, practical needs of pastors and missionaries, Denver Seminary's D.Min. offers programs in:

■ Pastoral Ministry

■ Marriage and Family Counseling

■ Church and Parachurch Leadership

All are geared around the schedule and budget of full-time ministry professionals, now including students from 32 states and 12 foreign countries.

Our special mentoring program matches you with a mature professional who understands the demands and challenges you face. He or she will walk with you as you grow your mind, your heart and your ability to impact lives — for Jesus' sake. D.MIN. BE MORE. DO MORE.

D.Min. Faculty Includes:

Dr. Haddon W. Robinson
Gordon-Conwell Seminary
Relevant Biblical Preaching

Dr. Calvin Miller
Southwestern Seminary
Creative Preaching

Dr. Gary J. Oliver
John Brown University
Marriage/Family Counseling

Dr. Clyde McDowell
President, Denver Seminary
Mobilizing Through Leadership

Dr. Bruce Demarest
Denver Seminary
Spiritual Formation/Mentoring

Dr. Rod Cooper
Denver Seminary
Developing Men

Dr. Dan Trathen
Southwest Counseling Associates
Marriage/Family Counseling

Dr. Ralph Covell
Denver Seminary
Communicating Christianity Cross-Culturally

Dr. Bruce Shelley
Denver Seminary
Strategies for Ministry

Dr. Steven Lee
Huntington College
Marriage/Family Counseling

Dr. Neil Anderson
Freedom in Christ Ministries
Spiritual Formation & Leadership

Dr. Craig Blomberg
Denver Seminary
Preaching the Parables

Dr. Harold Westing
Center for Leadership Development
Developing People With Purpose

Dr. H. Norman Wright
Christian Marriage Enrichment
Marriage/Family Counseling

Dr. Les Parrott, III
Seattle Pacific University
Marriage/Family Counseling

Dr. Everett Worthington
Virginia Commonwealth University
Marriage/Family Counseling

For the rest of the answers, contact:
Doctor of Ministry Office

Denver Seminary
P.O. Box 10,000

Denver, CO 80250

Or call Dr. David Osborn

1-800-922-3040

Ext. 245

DENVER SEMINARY

The D.Min. for the next generation of leaders

ONCE Every Thousand Years Or So, A Notable OPPORTUNITY COMES

Along... This One Features a Return Engagement at the Sea of Galilee

Announcing JERUSALEM 2000 — The event of the millennium

Christians from around the world will travel to the Holy Land in the year 2000, for good reason. Where better to celebrate the millennial milestone of Jesus? But only relatively few will have the worship experience offered by Jerusalem 2000. This unique, limited-registration event package will not only allow participants to tour the holy land, but will enable them to worship the Holy One as never before.

Jerusalem 2000 will include praise and worship, and on-location experiences produced for Christians by Christians. These will include participation in dramatic reenactments of biblical accounts, staged in the natural setting of the land where the events occurred. Your group will be part of the story, when they join the cast in the reenactment of the baptism of Jesus in the River Jordan, Jesus walking on water at the Sea of Galilee, Ruth and Boaz gleaning wheat from the fields of Judea, carrying the sheaves of the first fruits in a grand processional through the streets of Jerusalem, and taking part in a moving remembrance of the Last Supper.

Group reservations are now available.

Spaces are limited.

- Only twelve U.S. departures
- Attractive group leader incentives
- Flexible installment payment plan
- Quality travel arrangements
- Messages by internationally known evangelicals
- Commissioned by The Millennium Council — an inter-denominational coalition of Christian leaders

Call today for a complete information packet

(800) 477-2306

First class: At Messmer High in inner-city Milwaukee, 98 percent of students graduate from the independent Catholic school, and many go on to college. Bob Smith, Messmer president (below), stresses accountability, respect, and dignity.

Voucher VICTORY

School-choice advocates win in Wisconsin, but can the movement gain momentum?

SPECIAL NEWS REPORT

TED C. OLSEN in Milwaukee

During the 1997-98 school year, visitors to Milwaukee's Holy Redeemer Institutional Church of God in Christ might not have known that the students playing together actually attended two separate schools. The students wore the same uniforms, took classes in the same building, and even attended morning devotions together. Yet some of those students attended D. J. Young Academy, not Holy Redeemer. The difference? Holy Redeemer was officially a religious school, Young Academy was not.

D. J. Young Academy began in 1996 when a court injunction excluded "sectarian" schools from an expansion of the Milwaukee Parental Choice Program (MPCP), the nation's first city-operated school-voucher system. The Pentecostal church decided to create a school similar to its Christian academy—then filled to capacity—but without the religious-themed textbooks. With parents' permission, the students still received an hour of religious instruction each day, but classroom curriculum remained the same as that of Milwaukee public schools.

On June 10, the Wisconsin Supreme Court ruled that religious schools could participate in the program, expanding the nation's most extensive school-choice program even further (CT, Aug. 10, 1998, p. 28). An appeal is likely.

Jerry Fair, president of both Holy Redeemer schools, says the implications for D. J. Young Academy will not be overwhelming, but the distinction between it and Holy Redeemer Christian Academy will be even more blurred.

Both schools will now use A Beka Book textbooks published by Pensacola Christian College. D. J. Young Academy will no longer need to obtain specific permission from parents for morning devotions and other religious instruction. Parents will still have the opportunity to remove their children from overtly religious activities such as morning devotions. But because every parent has chosen to enroll children in such activities, Fair does not anticipate any opting out.

Beginning with the term that starts this month, the only real difference between the two schools will be in their names.

"LANDMARK DECISION": In recent years, voucher supporters have experienced small successes and setbacks across the nation, but the Wisconsin ruling—the first time a state's highest court has ruled on the issue—is the most monumental victory to date for voucher proponents.

"This is a landmark decision," says Christian Coalition executive director Randy Tate. His organization's members have ranked the importance of school choice as second only to pro-life issues. "For years people have pointed to Milwaukee as an example of a solution that has worked, and this decision reinforces that."

The 4-to-2 ruling draws upon federal and state court rulings dating to 1878, but relies chiefly upon the U.S. Supreme Court's 1971 ruling in Lemon v. Kurtzman. Known as the "Lemon" test, the Court ruled that a law does not violate the Constitution's First Amendment if it meets three requirements: it serves a secular purpose; its chief effect neither enhances nor inhibits religion; and it does not create an "excessive entanglement" between government and religion.

Wisconsin Justice Donald Steinmetz wrote for the court majority: "We hold that the amended MPCP, which provides a neutral benefit directly to the children of economically disadvantaged families on a religious-neutral basis, does not run afoul of any of the three primary criteria the Court has traditionally used to evaluate whether a state educational assistance program has the purpose or effect of advancing religion."

About 1,500 children attended nonreligious private schools under the MPCP during the 1997-98 year. Under the court's ruling, the program can expand tenfold. That will not happen overnight; Milwaukee's 80 religious and 31 nonreligious private schools do not have enough seats to hold 15,000 more students. But both advocates and detractors of the program anticipate a slew of new choice schools to open in the coming years now that the go-ahead has been given.

The MPCP started as an experiment in the 1990-91 school year, with 300 students attending seven nonreligious schools. Proposed by Democratic State Rep. Annette Polly Williams and bolstered by Republican Gov. Tommy Thompson, 1 percent of Milwaukee public-school students were allowed to attend private schools at state expense. Within five years, 1,100 children had enrolled in the choice program. Academic studies on the program came out, and Thompson called the experiment a success (CT, Oct. 23, 1995, p. 76).

At the time, he argued that the trial run should be expanded into a real program, and one that included religious schools. Shortly after the governor signed the expanded program into the budget, Milwaukee teachers, the Wisconsin American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), and others sued to block the program. A deadlocked Wisconsin Supreme Court returned the case to Dane County Circuit Court Judge Paul Higginbotham, who refused to lift the injunction (CT, March 3, 1997, p. 59). During the interim, a provoucher state supreme court judge replaced one who had opposed the program expansion, and he cast the deciding vote when the case, Warner Jackson v. Benson, returned.

TOMORROW, WASHINGTON? The voucher detractors who lost the suit, including the National Education Association, the ACLU, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Americans United for the Separation of Church and State (AU), vow to appeal the case to the U.S. Supreme Court.

"This is as clear a set of facts as we're going to see in a voucher case," says AU executive director Barry Lynn. "Some of the other cases coming up are quirky and don't have the impact that the Milwaukee case does."

The winners are as eager to see the case go to federal court as the losers are. A positive ruling from the U.S. Supreme Court would undoubtedly encourage other states to create voucher programs. And a positive decision, voucher advocates say, is probable.

"We're cautiously optimistic," says the Christian Coalition's Tate. "There's a compelling argument to be made, particularly in regard to precedent."

Last year, the Supreme Court ruled in Agostini v. Felton that a

New York program sending state teachers into religious schools to teach remedial classes did not violate the First Amendment's ban on establishing religion (CT, Aug. 11, 1997, p. 53). In the decision, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor noted a "significant change" in "our understanding of the criteria used to assess whether aid to religion has an impermissible effect."

"They couldn't have written a decision more encouraging to voucher advocates," says Dick Komer, senior litigation attorney for the Institute for Justice, which represented the voucher advocates in the Wisconsin case. "The Supreme Court is emphasizing neutrality more. They're saying people who've made religious choices can benefit as much as people who've made nonreligious choices."

Though the Agostini decision makes it clear that the Supreme Court's understanding of the First Amendment's Establishment Clause has changed, it might not have changed enough to allow vouchers for religious schools. "The Supreme Court drew a very specific line distinguishing the provision of services and the transfer of funds," AU's Lynn says. The Agostini ruling, Lynn says, determined that no funds would ever reach the coffers of religious schools, yet in Milwaukee, vouchers are endorsed to the school.

STATE BATTLEGROUND: Whether the Supreme Court will even accept Jackson v. Benson for review remains to be seen. "It depends on whether other voucher decisions come out at the same time," says Komer. "That's one reason we're hoping the decisions come out soon." Vouchers and school-choice issues are on the dockets of at least five state courts.

The Ohio Supreme Court has heard oral arguments in a case regarding a Cleveland voucher program that since its inception has included religious private schools (CT, Oct. 28, 1996, p. 90). The program is similar to Milwaukee's, so the Supreme Court may wait until it can hear both cases together. In May 1997, the Ohio Court of Appeals ruled that the Cleveland program violates church and state separation, but the Ohio Supreme Court stayed the decision. About 2,000 low-income students attend both religious and nonreligious private schools in the state's test program.

States seem to be the most promising battleground for school-choice supporters. According to Nina H. Shokraii of the Heritage Foundation, a conservative think tank based in Washington, D.C., nearly two-thirds of the states considered a school-choice program of some kind last year, and at least 45 governors expressed support for school choice or charter schools. Many of these declarations of support, however, focused on public-school choice—the ability for parents to choose any public school they wish.

NATIONAL EFFORTS STYMIED: Still, state efforts have fared better than national ones. In May, President Clinton vetoed the first congressional voucher legislation, a plan to provide vouchers for 2,000 needy students in Washington, D.C. "We must strengthen our public schools, not abandon them," Clinton said after the veto. "This bill is fundamentally misguided and a disservice to those children."

Vice President Al Gore had even harsher words for voucher programs, calling them

"fraudulent" and "dangerous" at a July convention of the National Education Association. (As the convention began, a rabbi led a prayer asking God for protection from vouchers and tuition tax credits.)

Voucher supporters did not have enough votes in Congress to overrule presidential vetoes on the issue; so they tried another tack: educational savings tax breaks. But in July, Clinton vetoed the Education Savings Act for Public and Private Schools. It would have provided tax-free education savings accounts for educational expenses of elementary- and secondary-school children in public, private, and home schools.

Clinton is a strong supporter of public-school choice. "Every state should give parents the power to choose the right public school for their children," he said in his 1997 State of the Union address. "Their right to choose will foster competition and innovation that can make public schools better."

But while federal efforts at vouchers and school choice have been thwarted, the private sector has responded with its own programs to move children out of public schools and into private ones. The most notable example is the Children's Scholarship Fund, which will provide $200 million for 50,000 public-school students to attend private schools. Financed largely by investment banker Ted Forstmann and Wal-Mart heir John Walton, it will first be open to schoolchildren in New York, Washington, Los Angeles, Chicago, and Jersey City, New Jersey. Forstmann hopes to extend it to another 40 cities. The fund, announced June 9, has earned praise from Clinton as well as voucher supporters House Speaker Newt Gingrich and Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott.

AGAINST PUBLIC SCHOOLS? Many opponents of school vouchers are worried that supporters of the movement are driven by a dislike of public schools as much as anything else. In fact, several conservatives have called for the abolition of publicly financed schools. The Fresno, California-headquartered Separation of School and State Alliance has enlisted more than 5,700 supporters, including conservatives such as R. C. Sproul, Jr., D. James Kennedy, Howard Phillips, and Marvin Olasky. Another group, the Columbia, South Carolina-based Exodus 2000, has asked Christian parents to remove their children from public schools. AU's Lynn thinks such attitudes are more common among evangelical leaders than the community at large.

"I don't believe most evangelicals hate public schools, especially since they see good teachers, and their kids are learning," he says. "But many still think that teachers in public schools are too busy throwing condoms off kindergarten rooftops."

The Christian Coalition has attempted to avoid bashing public schools. "Public education plays a role even though there's some concern that certain values have been taken away from the public-school system," Tate says. "But public schools will represent the values of their communities as long as parents get involved."

Eastern College sociology professor Tony Campolo agrees. "Seventy percent of public-school teachers are regular attenders of churches and synagogues," he says. "Public schools are ragged on all the time, and it infuriates me."

Campolo says there is some justification for rhetoric against public schools. "They have pressure from the ACLU and other groups and have been veering away from the Christian religion," Campolo says. "Secular humanism has become a value system in the public schools, justifiably upsetting Christian parents." Yet

Campolo says Christian parents are pulling their children out when there are signs of improvement. "Across the country, crime is down, scores are up, and schools are getting better."

RIGHT TO CHOOSE: Campolo believes that a voucher system could lead to sectarian attitudes like those that ripped Northern Ireland apart. "They have a program basically the same as a voucher program that allows Protestant students to go to Protestant schools and Catholic students to go to Catholic schools," he says. "It has nurtured the animosity between those groups."

Charles Glenn, professor at Boston University's School of Education and one of school choice's most respected supporters, points to another country: the Netherlands. There, 70 percent of children go to nongovernment schools. It has resulted in great benefits for the children, he says, and has not damaged schools. In fact, he says, "Every other democracy but Italy enjoys educational freedom."

Glenn, a minister in Boston's inner city for 40 years, rejects the argument that vouchers will force public schools to better themselves to compete for students. "Thousands upon thousands leave Milwaukee public schools each year without making it better," he says. "You can't assume that a monopolistic organization will improve with competition."

Market arguments are a mistake for Christians to make, Glenn says, because markets are not always positive. "If Jack in the Box closes because it can't compete with McDonald's, that's one thing," Glenn says. "But we're talking about children here, and it strikes me that we can't be as callous about school closings as we are about fast-food chains."

Instead, Glenn would rather have his fellow voucher supporters argue the justice side of school choice. "School choice already exists, but not for the poorest students," he says. "All parents should have the right to make decisions on what is best for their children."

JUST LIKE PUBLIC SCHOOL: For now, at least, voucher programs have surpassed the experimental stage. For administrators of those schools affected by the programs, battles over whether they should be implemented have been overtaken by how they should be implemented.

In Milwaukee, storms are brewing over the more than 300 pages of state and federal rules—governing everything from admissions and teacher certification to religious activity—that private-school

Milwaukee's Model Choice School

When Milwaukee's advocates of vouchers and school choice talk about the potential of private urban education, Messmer High School is often the school they have in mind. Approximately 75 percent of its students come from impoverished homes. About the same proportion have only one parent. About 85 percent are minorities. In short, Messmer has the same kinds of students as Milwaukee's problematic public-school system.

But Messmer boasts some of the best statistics of any school in the state: 98 percent of its students graduate, and almost all of its graduates go on to a four-year college. Its daily attendance rate averages 97 percent. Even more amazing is the fact that it is the only Milwaukee school to have no gap between the grades of minority students and nonminority students.

In contrast, two local high schools had no black male graduates at all last year. The Milwaukee public-school system dropout rate hovers around 50 percent. On a given day, around 40 percent of the students do not show up.

Bob Smith, Messmer's president, attributes his school's success to strict accountability and respect for personal dignity, pillars based on its Christian commitment. "We don't have a lot of rules, but we do have certain nonnegotiables," he says. "We're really raising children as well as tending to their educational needs."

That means everything from no weapons to no baseball caps. A student caught fighting or possessing a weapon—even outside the school—is likely to be expelled. Each year, only one or two of the school's 330 students are kicked out.

"That's not to say we only want the best students," says Smith, "because we often take kids the public schools have expelled."

But Smith, a black, Capuchin monk from Chicago, credits Messmer's ultimate success to its religious commitment as an independent Catholic school. Only 40 percent of its students are Catholic, and though prayer and mass are optional, students are required to take a theology class every year. For that reason Messmer has been excluded from Milwaukee's voucher program—until this fall.

"I'm a believer in religious-based education," he says. "I've never seen religion harm someone in a classroom."

By Ted C. Olsen in Milwaukee.

administrators are being told they must follow. What angers many private-school officials is that these are administrative—not legislative—restrictions created by the Department of Public Instruction.

"By making us follow each and every rule public schools have to follow, they're trying to create two public-school systems," says Holy Redeemer's Fair. Milwaukee public-schools superintendent Alan Brown has warned that private schools accepting vouchers will "look just like public schools."

For example, Milwaukee's five single-sex private schools have already been excluded from the program because they are not allowed in the public-school system. Even more contentious, however, is the potential threat the "opt-out" clause holds for the religious character of religious schools.

"The primary purpose of most of these schools is to spread the faith," says Lynn. "It's one example of the state entanglements that are just going to get greater and greater."

Jeff Monday, principal of Messmer High School, an independent Catholic school, says his institution interprets the "opt out" guidelines as covering only practices such as devotions, prayer, and chapel. It does not affect the use of religious texts in the classroom or the teaching of classroom subjects such as science, history, and theology. Messmer will mandate attendance at all-school prayer services, but will allow students to sit quietly at the assemblies without praying.

While schools and administrators clash over the new regulations, observers say they do not anticipate many urban private schools opting out of the program altogether.

Though Fair is fighting the new administrative restrictions, he is no stranger to working with the system. D. J. Young Academy started when the government ruled that his school could not take voucher students. Another school at the church is a partner with the school district to educate at-risk students who were failing.

"Our priority is educating kids," he says. "We go in the hole every year in operating costs, but you can see you're making progress when kids' reading scores are up one-and-a-half grades." CT

GOD IS IN THE BLUEPRINTS

Our deepest beliefs are reflected in the ways we construct our houses of worship.

All church buildings tell stories about the people who build them and about their understanding of how God meets his gathered people. To understand the stories new church buildings tell, I started with an old one—Hollywood Presbyterian, built in 1924.

That's not very old as buildings go, but it is old on a human horizon. Our grandparents built such places. Hollywood Presbyterian is a Southern California evangelical monument, where Henrietta Mears inspired future leaders like Campus Crusade's Bill Bright.

You have seen buildings just like this on a hundred urban streets—a neo-gothic brick pile shoe-horned onto a corner, just inside the sidewalk. With its soaring tower, it "looks like a church," but it doesn't make much of an impression on its environment. 2 Step into the grand old sanctuary, however, and a hush comes over the world. In the sacred darkness, stained-glass windows, ornate wooden trusses, stone arches, and a high pulpit unmistakably communicate "holy place."

Dominating the chancel are five ornamented thrones, the center one designated for the preacher to sit in until the moment he ascends the pulpit, ten feet above the congregation. If Moses appeared lugging the Ten Commandments, he would fit right in. This is a church that makes you want to sing "A Mighty Fortress." This is what our grandparents meant when they said "sanctuary."

Now take, by contrast, Saddleback Community Church, the "Purpose-Driven Church" that pastor Rick Warren leads in south Orange County, California. This gigantic Southern Baptist "seeker-sensitive" congregation is hardly obsessed with buildings—they met in a tent for years. When it came time to build a 3,000-seat worship center, Saddleback deliberately chose an architectural firm that had never designed a church. They wanted to avoid creating a "churchy" environment that might put off newcomers.

The most impressive spot in this open, airy campus is outside on the main patio, a broad rectangle of concrete, undecorated except for a square of nine large palm trees and some concrete benches. Along one side of the rectangle is the vast, reflective-glass wall of the main church building. Looking at it you see simultaneously three scenes. Through the glass, you look in to the interior of the worship center. Reflected in the glass you see an immense outdoor vista of sky, palms, and patio. And etched into the glass are words, so that a message stretches over the indoor and outdoor scenes. OUR PURPOSES: MAGNIFICATION, MEMBERSHIP, MATURITY, MINISTRY, and MISSION. Clustered around these words are biblical phrases that underscore each word's meaning. 3

TIM STAFFORD

The effect is subtle, since the color is all in the outdoor reflection, while the words are a glass gray. Yet the wall unmistakably communicates that this church is governed by a purpose, inside and out.

Another outdoor patio has the baptismistry as its focal point—an attractive, below-ground fountain, with steps leading into a shallow, splashing pool. It might be in the courtyard of a bank building, a lovely spot to eat a sack lunch. The fountain looks nonreligious, but those who attend Saddleback will soon know its purpose from the frequent baptisms performed after services. The design allows the pool to be filled to a depth suitable for immersions, and the broad steps then give easy access into the water. 4 (The first person baptized in the pool was its architect, Brian Connor.)

For me, the most notable aspect of Saddleback is that all its grace is on the outside. Hollywood's building is like a shell protecting an inner sanctum, but Saddleback's worship center is nothing but a clean, airy exhibition space, with exposed air ducts, retractable bleachers, industrial carpet, giant JumboTron screens, and a stage that looks like a TV talk-show studio without the sofas. 1 5

As facilities director Karen Kelly explained to me, much of the reason for this utilitarian ethos is practical—trying to seat 3,000 people in a multipurpose facility on a limited budget. Nevertheless, the planners' greatest effort obviously went outside—into the message communicated on entering and leaving. It is not a grand message, such as the one Hollywood Presbyterian delivers. From a distance, Saddleback looks like an office building, and nothing about it would provoke reverence. Through a pleasant, neutral space, the building reaches out to new arrivals and says: We are people just like you, and you can feel comfortable with us—but pay attention, because we have a unique purpose.

Hollywood carries a different message: This is not the world; you will meet God here.

Hollywood is rooted in tradition and awe; Saddleback, almost devoid of history, is rooted in its clearly communicated purpose. Hollywood prefers darkness and mystery; Saddleback, simplicity and light. Hollywood is most concerned for the atmosphere of worship; Saddleback, for the atmosphere of arriving. Hollywood is pointed up; Saddleback, out. In the contrast between these two churches, one can see an outline of the changing church.

Exegeting new churches

Nobody keeps statistics on church buildings in America, so that, for example, no one can say with any accuracy how many display a cross as a central focus of worship, or how many use pews as opposed to individual seating. I visited new churches churches, however. I saw a wide spectrum—Presbyterian and Episcopal, Baptist and Christian and Missionary Alliance. I also talked to pastors, architects, and church administrators in other parts of the country, so I have some sense that what I describe is not unique to L.A.

in the Los Angeles area because there are lots of new churches to see and because California continues to influence the nation. In particular, Southern California is a leader in producing what USC's Donald Miller calls the "new paradigm churches"—those like Calvary Chapel or the Vineyard, which have taken a decidedly untraditional path. I did not only visit "seeker sensitive" or "new paradigm"

Churches are built one at a time, on an entirely individual basis. Ordinarily a church committee, most of whose members have never built a church, meets with an architect whose first question is, "What do you want?" Church committees can rarely articulate what they want with much specificity. So they grope toward a design. Incrementally and unconsciously, church designs reveal what church people are thinking.

Of course, there are vast differences between liturgical, historically attuned churches and seeker-sensitive churches meeting in converted warehouses. My strong impression, however, is that underneath these differences are some fundamental similarities. You will find these trends, as I found them, in all kinds of new churches.

Emphasis on entering

I walked through new buildings that emphasized visual linkages to tradition, such as Romanesque arches and massive pipe organs, and churches that looked precisely like modern office buildings or condominium clubhouses. Yet every building I visited had, like Saddleback, put great energy into the question of how people arrive and depart.

It's not merely a question of parking

TODAY'S CHURCHES ASSUME THAT PEOPLE COME WITH FAR LESS CONFIDENCE AND NEED A CLEAR MESSAGE FROM OUTSIDE SPACES THAT THEY WILL FEEL COMFORTABLE AND CAN FIND FRIENDS IF THEY WANT THEM.

perform this function of making people convivial and comfortable.)

It was not always so. Older churches like Hollywood Presbyterian were built with no concern whatsoever for the transition between sidewalk and sanctuary. Today's churches assume that people come with far less confidence and need a clear message from outside spaces that they are welcome, will feel comfortable, and can find friends if they want them.

Democracy and informality

Hollywood Presbyterian, like many older churches, is at pains to communicate the majesty of its ministry. The pastor sits in a high and lofty place until he rises even higher into the pulpit to preach. Heavy, ornate furniture and a raised, separated chancel communicate magnificence and hierarchy. This is not like somebody's house, unless that somebody is William Randolph Hearst.

Today's churches, even those that value liturgy and tradition, display understated, modest furniture at or near ground level. The Communion table—if one is visible at all—will be simpler than many dining room tables. The pulpit will be little more elaborate than a lectern. Access to the chancel or platform is usually by broad and central stairs, making little separation from the congregation. 8

Even churches determined to communicate transcendence show new informality and democracy in their worship space. Roman Catholic churches have pulled their altars away from the wall and out toward the congregation so that what happens there is not so much a hidden priestly mystery as a shared community ritual.

Todd Hunter, national director of the Vineyard churches, told me that their philosophy regarding buildings is "pragmatic and functional." "We would often say, 'People aren't afraid of a junior high school gym.' It doesn't have the connotation, 'darken the door of a church.'"

Natural light and electronic sound

Most new churches want light, and lots of it. Natural light establishes continuity with the outside world; the Creator God is emphasized, not the God of Mystery and Revelation. Besides, everybody in our age likes windows, as one can see in office buildings, banks, and shopping malls.

Yet not all new churches have large windows. Consider Lake Avenue Congregational Church, a large Pasadena congregation that moved from a dim, neo-gothic sanctuary to a modern, space-age auditorium that depends almost entirely on artificial light. Windows are expensive, both for construction and for heating and cooling. Also, windows fight against another new worship imperative: video.

Most of the large churches I visited have JumboTron screens, which they use to project musical lyrics, announcements, and a larger-than-life simultaneous version of the service in progress (Video clips and sermon notes are also used, but more sparingly.) Video is at war with windows. Projection is less effective in a room full of natural light.

Electronics are a fundamental part of new church buildings. Placement of JumboTron screens and video cameras must be considered as rigorously as where to put the baptismal font. Backstage or underground control rooms, where the video production is orchestrated, are essential. Stage lights and sound systems require elaborate controls. Even modest churches have sound systems that would outdo and freeway access, though that is a major concern. The greater concern is how people feel as they enter the building. In the "Mother Vineyard" (formerly Anaheim) created from a Rockwell R&D office building, you find large, airy entryways and an extensive coffee bar for those who want to linger and mingle. 6

At Irvine Presbyterian Church, pastor Mark Roberts told me that the building committee spent as much time thinking about the approaches to the church as they did the interior sanctuary. An outside patio "probably tripled our friendliness quotient. I hear so much more from visitors how friendly we are. I don't have to say, 'Greet each other' so much, because people naturally stop to talk in the spaces designed to bring them together." 7 (In harsher climates, large, well-lighted narthex areas entire recording studios a generation back.

AN OUTSIDE PATIO HAS “PROBABLY TRIPLED OUR FRIENDLINESS QUOTIENT,” SAYS MARK ROBERTS FROM IRVINE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN CALIFORNIA.

Smaller churches may not be able to afford video technology, but they think about it. Irvine Presbyterian's Roberts told me that in planning their middle-sized church, “The hardest thing to give up was video technology.” For him it meant, “We're not on the cutting edge of worship.”

As we talked further, however, he showed considerable ambivalence. “It's not just a matter of good communication. There is a changed ethos.” Roberts mentioned a church that used its JumboTron screens to show baptisms, “so you can get a good view. Does that make the baptism more personal or less? I don't know. I'm of the mind that it is less.”

Such hesitations seem to be a minority view, however. At least in large churches, worship has become something like attending a live recording of a TV show. The platforms are even decorated like TV sets, with their ubiquitous plants and understated “family-room” furniture. In most older churches, you cannot imagine a pastor as a late-night talk show host doing his show. That would seem jarring, even sacrilegious. In many of the newer churches, however, nothing would seem more natural.

Semicircular seating

New church buildings generally seat worshippers so that they surround the platform. That way, even people in the back rows are close. These churches are, in their seating configuration, a throwback to the auditorium churches first designed by evangelist Charles Finney. He wanted to stare every inquirer in the eye and (against architectural tradition of the time) designed his New York Broadway Tabernacle so that his audience surrounded him. That pattern survived to the early part of this century—the holy reverence of Hollywood Presbyterian has the same horseshoe balcony—when it was largely abandoned in favor of the traditional basilican style (a long rectangle with the chancel at one end).

Why has the semicircle come back? That's easy: it feels more personal, both in relation to the preacher (whose facial accessible. Each worshiper can keep his or her space, as shown by the preference for theater seating. (In pews—generally less expensive than theater seating—you can't be sure that someone won't sit uncomfortably close.) Yet you can see it will still be easy to make friends if you want to. Even the pastor has a friendly face, which you rapidly get to know via the big screen.

In small to midsize churches, semicircular seating allows a congregation to go beyond relational to communal. Worshipers can hear each other as they speak and pray from their seats; they look each other in the eye as they worship; congregational singing is powerful, if the acoustics expressions can be seen even without the JumboTron) and in relation to other worshippers, who surround and face you like a family circle. The word, pastor Tod Bolsinger told me, is relational.

While this trend makes for good sociological dynamics, it also echoes an important theological issue. The liturgical renewal that took place in churches in the sixties emphasized the church as the “gathered people of God” rather than the church as priestly dispenser of sacraments or preacherly dispenser of truth. This is an important biblical theme that was recovered theologically and is now underscored architecturally.

Modern church buildings generate a congregation that seems friendly and are right. I talked to several pastors who had, in conjunction with architects and acoustical engineers, spent considerable effort tuning their sanctuary to make it “live” enough for congregational singing yet not so live that the preacher's words were garbled by the echo. These pastors believed “live” acoustics made for a stronger sense of the church as body of Christ.

That does not seem to be the trend, however. In larger, “all-electric” auditoriums, amplified sound overwhelms everything. You can only hear what is generated from the platform. Carpeting and cushions swallow audience noise. This may be true even in very small churches if they use a contemporary “band” sound.

What our churches say

Only churches with public confidence, security, and money construct durable buildings. The early Christians left few stone monuments, for they were a suspect minority. Today's church in China, similarly, will not be remembered for its buildings. Only after Constantine made Christianity the official religion of the Roman Empire did European Christians begin to build. Anyone who has traveled in Europe knows how powerfully they published their beliefs in stone. Even today, in dense, modern city centers, cathedral spires speak of another time and another way. European villages are unthinkable without their churches, which seem to hold the crooked streets together, like a fastener at the central node.

From the time of Constantine, these churches often solemnity and humility before an awesome God. They are suited to a theology emphasizing Christ as ruler and judge. They are also suited to an ecclesiology that emphasizes, as noted above, the church as dispenser of sacrament and/or truth.

This basic form and feeling stayed remarkably constant through the centuries. The Reformation made the pulpit more prominent and downgraded or did away with visual symbols of worship—statues, paintings, and elaborate ceremonies. Reform is the appropriate word, however, not revolution. Right up to the present the typical older church building embodies the traditions of the basilican church. Even at Hollywood Presbyterian, which strays far from the classic form, the fundamental statements remain of the transcendence of God, the authority of the clergy, and the solemnity and holiness of worship.

In a stunning reversal of a 1.5 millennia trend, new churches convey the cheerful, democratic, informal atmosphere of modern American life. Their affections are horizontal. Hierarchy and awe are out. Friendliness and the enjoyment of nature are in. Even where church buildings attempt to connect to tradition, they usually do it in an airy, light-hearted way. They are in close continuity with the outside world.

Most feel as normal as a shopping mall. They don't try to make grand statements; they try to make people comfortable.

For many centuries Christian churches pointed vertically, often erecting the tallest building in town. Today, churches extend outward, making people-friendly spaces. Look at our new buildings, and you will see our theology of church.

A place to meet the people of God. This is an informal age, in which people wear casual clothes to important affairs, and grocery clerks call you by your first name. So new churches follow that kind of feeling. Transcendence, authority, and solemnity don't fit. Friendliness, naturalness, informality do.

The pastor as one of us. In Protestant churches, the pastor has always been "one of us"—but one called to be an authoritative instrument of God, preaching his Word. Thus the high, ornate pulpits and the chancels cut off from the congregation. That is radically changed. Nowadays, anybody can hop up to the chancel from the congregation—there's no barrier, just some broad steps. Nothing sets the pastor apart from anyone else.

Ironically, the pastor more than ever is crucial to a successful church. Where once churches displayed Jesus in stained glass, now many display the pastor in Jumbotron. The pastor's face is the key image. But—here is where the irony can be ironed out—the video lets us see the pastor as simply one of us. Seeing his winsome smile, we feel that we know him personally, even if we are sharing the view with 3,000 other "friends." He speaks to us less as an oracle of God than as a persuasive friend.

Worship is persuasion. Whereas the Reformers sought to raise preaching to the level of sacrament, they never dreamed of displacing the sacraments. Yet new church buildings suggest that something like this is happening. The ecclesiastical furniture of sacrament—the tables, the baptistries—are less and less noticeable, if visible at all. New churches are designed as spaces for communication, not sacrament or ceremony. We have moved persuasion—with rhetorical flourish, the pastor presents a "message" to the people—to the center of our worship. The people come to hear the pastor.

Second, they come for music. That's why video is such a natural fit in the new churches. TV is, after all, the mode of communication Americans know best. Similarly, it is the mode of entertainment Americans know best. Many modern church buildings are clearly intended to house a video spectacle—a service that can be captured well on tape but is fun to see "live."

borrowed the form of the basilica, an oblong Roman building designed for public and imperial ceremonies and for law courts. Just as Roman basilicas cultivated respect and awe for the public authorities, basilican churches lend themselves to

What's new and what's ageless

Once for six months I worshiped in a fourteenth-century French cathedral. I found that as the weeks passed its beauty penetrated me deeply, elevating my soul toward God. Yet I also noticed that the cathedral was nearly empty. I am therefore not an alarmist about the new churches. I regret losing the reference to transcendence, the stillness and awe that the best older churches provoke. The diminishing of sacrament troubles me. Yet I like very much the simplicity, lightness, and ease with my neighbors that the best new churches can evoke. I can't see any claim that we connect with one another, building our identity as disciples together. In a way that our grandparents did not, we need to go to church to express our identity as the people of God and to be persuaded anew that Jesus is Lord. The new churches help us do that. They remind us we're not alone. They also help us appeal to outsiders in a way that is reassuring and doesn't seem cultic.

Having said all that, it helps me to know that new churches do not necessarily have to look like a shopping mall. At the end of one day touring churches, architect Lew Dominy asked me whether I would like to see one more building. He took me to the coastal city of Carlsbad, where we stopped at Saint Elizabeth Seton Catholic Church, which he designed.

As with every new church I saw, the approach to Saint Elizabeth's is important—a lovely patio and garden area underneath twin Spanish towers. The interior, though, is what captivated me. It makes the statements of a horizontal church in a simple but exquisite way. The sanctuary is very simple, filled with light from high windows. Pressed concrete, formed and colored to look like rough sandstone, makes the floor. Overhead are exposed wooden trusses and tension members (steel rods, like those you sometimes see in old barns, holding the walls together across central spans). It looks like a working building, but with a style completely unlike the industrial air ducts and steel girders I had seen elsewhere.

I think the pastor was a little offended when I told him it reminded me of a barn. What I meant is that an old barn is often a peaceful and living place—high, quiet, cool, with a pattern of light and darkness descending from its cracked boards, and the smell of sweet straw and warm active creatures. Saint Elizabeth's put me in mind of moments I have paused in such barns. 9 10

Or perhaps I may put it more simply: Saint Elizabeth Seton is a lovely place to be. As such, it says something ageless—that beauty belongs to God, and when we build in his name we want to make something beautiful. Some new churches strike me as very ugly, and many strike me as ordinary and uninspired. I have seen a few that are exquisite. I found it comforting that amid the modernity of video churches and secular entryways, with the toned-down informality of chancels and the loss of grand statements, people still manage to create beautiful new places in the name of Jesus. C1

It is true that praise music remains vital to worship, but mainly by way of electronic sound broadcast from the platform. The congregation participates, but in most new churches their voices are neither needed nor heard. The music functions as an auxiliary to the pastor's persuasive message. The congregation expresses agreement by singing along.

Church is for evangelism. The last thought occurring to builders of medieval cathedrals was whether "unbelievers" would feel comfortable. Yet that is the first thought behind many new churches. They consciously draw from secular architecture, assuming that unbelievers will feel most comfortable with that. Mark Roberts, pastor of Irvine Presbyterian Church, told me that the church's building committee spent large amounts of time discussing the values of Fashion Island, a nearby mall. Architect Lew Dominy, who designed the Irvine church, said that "there is a generation coming up with values generated by retail shopping. They expect places to sit. They expect plantings."

George Whitefield, then John Wesley, took preaching out of the churches because they wanted to reach the unsaved where they were—in the coal fields. This scandalized the church leaders of the time. Now the church is being turned into a place, and public worship into an occasion, where the unsaved feel comfortable. This too scandalizes some church leaders. Still, the church-growth movement has won. Its theology is seldom forgotten by those building new churches.

that vertical is necessarily better than horizontal. Scripture emphasizes that one is inextricably linked to the other. Loving my neighbor is closest kin to loving God. The new churches are not decadent, it seems to me. They are just different. They are suited to a new time.

I would define the newness this way: Christianity is reaping the fruits of disestablishment. For the first time since Constantine, we are truly on the periphery of Western civilization. We have lots of people, money, sophistication, and security, but we can no longer assume that other Americans sympathize with or understand what we are doing. For that matter, we ourselves easily forget.

The very meaning of "the people of God" has a fragile hold on Christians' consciousness. It is extremely important

REGENT UNIVERSITY

AMERICA'S PREMIER CHRISTIAN GRADUATE SCHOOL

RSVP NOW
FOR PREVIEW WEEKEND
Nov. 12-14

For 20 years, Regent University has focused on the role of Christian leadership in society. It is our calling—just as you have a calling.

Today at Regent, dynamic deans, faculty and distinguished industry professionals are showing graduate students how to integrate faith with the disciplines of divinity, government, law, business, communication, counseling, education, and organizational leadership. And our approach is working. Nearly 5,000 Regent alumni, from Capitol Hill to Hollywood, and in cities around the globe, are changing their world! Let Regent University help you focus on your calling. Choose from 21 on-campus or 15 flexible distance/Internet programs.

Desire God's best for your life! Call Regent University today for more information on your Christian graduate education!

Cynthia Welch
Regent University
Class of '97
Public Relations Coordinator
Washington, D.C.

Call (800) 373-5504

E-mail to: admissions@regent.edu

Internet: www.regent.edu

REGENT UNIVERSITY

1000 Regent University Drive, Virginia Beach, VA 23464-9800

Regent University is accredited by the Commission on Colleges of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools (1866 Southern Lane, Decatur, Georgia 30033-4907; Telephone number 404-697-4501) to award the master's and doctor's degrees. Regent University admits students of any disability, race, color, gender, and national or ethnic origin.

Regent University
Virginia Beach Campus

Take the Pledge

A practical strategy for loving the poor.

Ronald J. Sider

Generous Christians are changing the world. Habitat for Humanity will soon be the largest private house builder in the world. They have already built 60,000 houses for the poor around the globe. World Relief Corporation has resettled over 125,000 refugees. Christian micro-loan organizations have made hundreds of thousands of small loans to very poor people.

Opportunity International alone will make loans to one million families in the next five years. On average, each loan costs about $500, which includes training costs, and these loans are repaid with interest. Often a loan lifts the standard of living for a family of five by 50 percent within one year.

Christians today have a total annual income of over organization funded by Opportunity International) gave her and her husband, Vijay, a small loan of $219. They purchased a small, inexpensive sound system and a bicycle. With this equipment, the Kumars are able to provide the sound system for weddings, funerals, and other celebrations for poor villages in several surrounding communities. They now own three sound systems and hire a couple of employees.

Mrs. Kumar proudly showed me the new lighting equipment and the bicycle loaded down with their third sound system. Their little one-room cement house with a thatched roof has no indoor plumbing, but I could see many improvements. Family income had grown significantly. Most important, the Kumars had new dignity, hope, and confidence.

Most of the poor want to earn their own way. They have enormous social capital: intact families, a desire to work, pride, and integrity. But, like the Kumars, they need some help.

Globally, we are making progress. In 1970, 35 percent of all people in developing countries were chronically malnourished. Today that figure has dropped to 20 percent. In 1980, only 20 percent of the children in developing nations received immunization for typical childhood diseases; today—thanks in part to Bread for the World's advocacy work to set in place a U.S.-funded Child Survival Fund—80 percent do.

There is still a lot to do. About 34,000 children die every day of hunger and preventable diseases; almost one person out of four in our world—1.3 billion people—lives in grinding poverty, struggling to survive, the World Bank says, on a dollar a day; 1.45 billion have no access to health services; and 1.33 billion lack safe water.

According to the United Nations, it would cost only $30–$40 billion a year to provide all people in developing countries with basic education, health care, and clean water—the same amount spent on golf every year.

I think many more American Christians would find a way to give $500 this year to help a poor family with a small loan if they could look into the eyes of Mrs.

Generous Christians: Organizations like Habitat for Humanity are working to eliminate poor housing and homelessness.

$10 trillion. Let's suppose the Christians of the world gave just 1 percent of their income for microloans of $500, the average loan needed to help a poor family of five. Assuming the efficiency ratio of Opportunity International, it would take just one year to improve dramatically the lot of the poorest one billion, often by 50 percent.

I'll never forget Mrs. Kumar's joyous, confident smile. She lives in a tiny one-room house in a poor village in South India near Bangalore. A couple of years ago the Bridge Foundation (a Christian microloan

Kumar and see her joy and gratitude. I believe many more Christians want to be generous—if they can discover successful programs that really work. And if they can take concrete, doable steps without the feeling they must solve all the problems of 1.3 billion poor people.

Nobody can do everything, but everybody can do something, and together we can change the world. That is why World Vision, Bread for the World, Opportunity International, Compassion International, Christian Community Development Association, World Relief Corporation, The Evangelical Environmental Network, MAP International, and Habitat for Humanity have joined Evangelicals for Social Action in the Generous Christians Campaign.

At the center is this simple pledge: the Generous Christians Pledge.

I pledge to open my heart to God's call to care as much about the poor as the Bible does.

Daily, to pray for the poor, beginning with the Generous Christians Prayer: Lord Jesus, teach my heart to share your love for the poor.

Weekly, to minister, at least one hour, to a poor person: helping, serving, sharing with, and, mostly, getting to know, someone in need.

Monthly, to study, at least one story, book, article, or film about the plight of the poor and hungry and discuss it with others.

Yearly, to retreat, for a few hours before the Scriptures, to meditate on this one question: Is caring for the poor as important in my life as it is in the Bible?—and to examine my budget and priorities in light of it, asking God what changes he would like me to make in the use of my time, money, and influence.

Some of us can make more microloans or support a needy child. Others can volunteer more time in the inner city or make sure everybody has a share in the fish ponds. Together we can do all the different things needed. United we can become a mighty movement that future historians will call the Generous Christians Generation.

I dream of a Generous Christians Campaign that sweeps through the Western church. Missions agencies, prayer networks, Christian social ministries, and others could all implement what the Bible says about the poor. Rallies, conferences, retreats, small groups, contemporary music, and creative art could be used as part of the Generous Christians strategy.

The Generous Christians Pledge is not intended as a legalistic straitjacket. When appropriate, for example, the weekly hour for sharing with a needy person could be done less often in larger blocks of time. Those who take the pledge should stay centered on their love for Christ and his kingdom, not their own deeds, however noble. Gratitude for God's astounding love, not guilt, should energize our generosity.

This Generous Christians Pledge is not complicated. Every Christian could make it—and keep it. Let's not kid ourselves, however. Conceptually, the pledge is simple, straightforward, doable. But actually implementing it would involve intense spiritual warfare. As Rodney Clapp reminded us recently, the Devil takes Visa, and he would not be amused (CT, Oct. 7, 1996, p. 18). The global forces promoting consumerism are enormously powerful.

Each one of us must engage in a personal struggle with materialism. Each individual must look into the face of our Lord and answer his question: "Do you love me more than these things?" Faithful discipleship in an age of cascading materialism will be difficult and costly.

But it will also be joyful and successful. The ironic truth is that Jesus was right—it is better to give than to receive (Acts 20:35). Mother Teresa knew more joy than Donald Trump. We cannot gain happiness by seeking it directly; it follows as a by-product when we give ourselves to others. Generous Christians will live what they speak. They will joyfully follow the biblical call to love God and the poor more than possessions. And their generosity will glorify God and transform the world. CT

Ronald J. Sider is president of Evangelicals for Social Action. For information on the Generous Christians Pledge, contact: Generous Christians Campaign, 10 E. Lancaster Avenue, Wynnewood, PA 19096.

The First Principles Series

ORDERED LEARNING FOR SMALL GROUPS

Grounding believers in the First Principles of the Christian Faith.

THIRTEEN, SIX-SESSION BIBLE STUDY GUIDES

"We have found them to be an excellent resource. All of our home Bible studies will be using the First Principles Series from start to finish."

— Gary Yet, Pastor of Discipleship, Fox Valley Bible Church, St. Charles, IL

"We just finished book one of the First Principles Series with our leadership team; the response was excellent!"

— Don McReavy, Senior Pastor, Harvest Evangelical Free Church, Ft. Collins, CO

1-888-540-9813

www.learncorp.com

LearnCorp Resources • P.O. Box 1427, Ames, IA 50014-1427

learncorp@ames.net

LearnCorp Resources and its sister organization, BILD-International, conduct discipleship and leadership training seminars and on-site training for churches throughout the US. Please call the toll-free number for more information.

BOLDLY EVANGELICAL!

Since 1913

So what exactly does it mean to be "boldly evangelical"? At Northern Seminary it means balancing the authority of scripture and salvation through Christ alone with a concern for people and a serious commitment to evangelism and missions. It means balancing truth and love.

BOLDLY EVANGELICAL!

It's who we are.

Call us today!

800-YES-NBTS (800-937-6287)

Our evangelical commitment directs everything we do at Northern—from the hearts of faculty and staff, to what is taught in the classroom, to our plans for the future.

Explore whether God is leading you to Northern Seminary!

NORTHERN

baptist theological seminary

660 E. Butterfield Rd. • Lombard, Illinois 60148
630-620-2100 • Fax 630-620-2194
e-mail: admissions@northern.seminary.edu

Master of Arts • Master of Divinity • Master of Christian Ministries • Doctor of Ministry

The One Book To Help You Pass Every Test.

Okay, so maybe life's toughest tests don't come in the classroom. But they do come with a textbook. The Student's Life Application Bible has thousands of application notes and other features that really make the Bible come alive. You'll be blown away by how easy it is to find answers – and how well those answers work. And since it's written in the clear and simple New Living Translation, understanding is definitely not a problem. Look for the Student's Life Application Bible at your bookstore today. And get ready to ace your next test.

Tyndale House Publishers, Inc.

www.tyndale.com #TYNDALE

Live It Now

REFLECTIONS

Classic and contemporary excerpts

The Rest of the Story

Evangelism is not simply a matter of bringing individuals to personal faith, though of course that remains central to the whole enterprise. It is a matter of confronting the world with the good, but deeply disturbing, news of a different way of living, . . . the way of love.

—N. T. Wright in
For All God's Worth

Bleak Satisfaction

We are disgusted by the things that we desire, and we desire what disgusts us.

—New York Gov. Mario
Cuomo in a speech
(Newsweek, Oct. 24, 1994)

No Home Here

Heaven is not here, it's There. If we were given all we wanted here, our hearts would settle for this world rather than the next. God is forever luring us up and away from this one, wooing us to Himself and His still invisible Kingdom, where we will certainly find what we so keenly long for.

—Elisabeth Elliot in Keep a Quiet Heart

Eternity's View

A man has made at least a start on discovering the meaning of human life when he plants shade trees under which he knows full well he will never sit.

—D. Elton Trueblood;
posted on A.Word.A.Day e-mail
(July 19, 1998)

Abundance Means Reliance

Material affluence in no respect lessens my need to rely on God. Actually, it increases it. I am in greater spiritual danger when I have plenty than when I have nothing. Hence the almost greater need of the wealthy to cry to God for mercy that they may not fail to trust him.

—C. Stacey Woods in Some Ways of God

The Whole Truth

To worship God in spirit and in truth means to worship God as we should worship him. . . . To worship God in truth is to recognise him for what he is and to recognise ourselves for what we are.

—Brother Lawrence in
The Practice of the Presence of God

Wrong Cure

Religion was [once] a set of obligations owed to God. Today people regard religion as a species of therapy; a dimension of individual self-consciousness, individual meaning and reaffirmation. Religion is about what God owes them.

—Edward Norman in the Spectator (July 4, 1998)

Respect What God Has Made

God treat[s] His Creation with integrity: each thing in its own order, each thing the way He made it. . . . If God treats the tree like a tree, the machine like a machine and the man like a man, shouldn't I, as a fellow-creature, treat the machine like a machine, the man like a man, the plant like a plant—each thing in integrity in its own order? And for the highest reason: because I love God—I love the One who has made it! Loving the Lover who has made it, I should have respect for the thing He has made.

—Francis Schaeffer in Pollution and the Death of Man

God's Great Gift

You, eternal Trinity, are the craftsman; and I your handiwork have come to know that you are in love with the beauty of what you have made, since you made of me a new creation in the blood of your Son.

O abyss! O eternal God-head! O deep sea! What more could you have given me than the gift of your very self?

—Saint Catherine of Sienna in Teachings of the Christian Mystics

A Knee Is Not a Nose

Just as important as knowing what gift God has given you is knowing which gifts He hasn't given you. Many Christians try for years to function with gifts they never had in the first place, and this doesn't do the Lord's work much good. It's like trying to hear something with your knee or throw a ball with your nose. Knees and noses are better off doing other things.

—C. Peter Wagner in Stop the World,
I Want to Get On

Opening Minds to God's World

Faith in a risen Lord whose sovereign rule encompasses all of life. Obedience to the will of God revealed in his Word and his creation. A richly biblical view of the world and our calling to be busy in it. Those are the foundations of education at Dordt College.

And because we work hard to make those beliefs come alive in every classroom, education at Dordt can be a life-changing experience for a Christian young person. Living and learning in this vibrant Christian community, our students are challenged to choose lives of service, challenged to let God's light shine in their careers, their families, their communities...in every corner of the world.

- 1300 students from more than 30 states, eight Canadian provinces, and a dozen other countries.
- A true residential learning community – over 95 percent of Dordt students are full-time and close to 90 percent live on campus.
- Rated the “best value” among Midwestern liberal-arts colleges twice in the last five years by U.S. News and World Report. Included in America's 100 Best College Buys and America's Best Christian Colleges.
- More than 30 bachelor's degree majors, plus associate of arts programs and a master's degree in education.
- A modern, well-equipped campus in a safe, friendly community.

DORDT COLLEGE
Sioux Center, Iowa 51250
1-800-34-DORDT (36738)
www.dordt.edu

DORDT COLLEGE

Denominations—Divided We Stand

Q: Why do we have denominations when Jesus prayed for the unity of believers?

—Lydia Miller
Carol Stream, Illinois

Many are surprised to learn that denominations were created to make peace in the church possible.

A: Many people see the existence of denominations as a blot against the church's witness to unity. So they are surprised to learn that denominations were created with quite the opposite intent—to make unity in the church possible. To understand this counterintuitive historical reality, one has to look back 400 years to the century following the Protestant Reformation.

The Reformers had glimpsed a coming day by insisting that the true church could never be identified exclusively with a particular institution (contra Constantine in the fourth century). Still, the Reformers failed to follow this lead; like the Catholics, the Protestants continued to believe that Christian truth held societies together and that only one side in a religious conflict could have the truth. Nonconformity could not be tolerated, and the truth was worth fighting for. And fight they did.

It was not until sheer exhaustion—not victory for any party—brought an end to the religiously motivated Thirty Years War (with the signing of the Peace of Westphalia in 1648) that something of a truce over territorial religion began to take shape. This truce allowed Calvinism to join Lutheranism and Catholicism as a recognized expression of the Christian faith. But this new “peace” retained the territorial concept—those who weren’t Calvinist, Lutheran, or Catholic, such as the nonterritorial Anabaptists, or who lived in the wrong territory, continued to be persecuted.

At about the same time in England, the first clear philosophy of denominations was being articulated by the Independents (Congregationalists), who represented the minority voice at the Westminster Assembly (1642–49). In contrast to the majority who held to Presbyterian principles and expressed these convictions in the Westminster Confession of Faith, the Independents followed congregational principles. Keenly aware of the dangers of “dividing the godly Protestant party,” these “Dissenting Brethren of Westminster” looked for some way to express Christian unity even in disagreement.

The result was a denominational theory of the church that was based on the following principles: First, considering the human inability always to see the truth clearly, differences of opinion about the outward form of the church are inevitable. Second, even though these differences do not involve fundamentals of the faith, they are not matters of indifference. Third, since no church has a final and full grasp of divine truth, the true church of Christ can never be fully represented by any single ecclesiastical structure. Finally, the mere fact of separation does not of itself constitute schism. It is possible to be divided at many points and still be united in Christ.

Though drafted in old England, these principles found their fullest expression in New England. To be profitable, the American colonies needed people to settle the land, and the promise of religious toleration provided a powerful incentive. Also, many of those who came from Europe brought with them the lesson of the Thirty Years War—that the price of enforced religious conformity was too high.

Inevitably, immigration patterns and the lack of a state religion led to the flowering of a multiplicity of religious groups—traditional and novel—living side by side in the New World. In such a setting, the denominational theory seemed a plan from heaven. “Denominationalism” came to be set against “sectarianism,” which denoted groups claiming the authority of Christ and truth for themselves alone and believing that they alone constituted the true body of Christ. Against this exclusive connotation, denomination became an inclusive term, implying that any Christian group “denominated” by a particular name was but one member of a larger group—the church.

As we know, the denominational concept prevailed—not because it was considered ideal, but because it was better than any alternative the preceding years and centuries had offered. Today, in the United States alone, there are almost 2,000 denominations and associations representing 385,000 congregations.

At a personal level, many of us have at times experienced denominations as sources of conflict, not unity, proving that no organizational solution can of itself fulfill the oneness for which Jesus prayed. Organized unity is only possible if there is an experienced unity, a oneness of spirit or attitude. The apostle Paul once said of those who differed with him, “Christ is preached and in this I rejoice.” Apparently it is possible to find our unity in Christ and the gospel even as we agree to disagree over some finer points of doctrine and traditional practices. CT

By Bruce Shelley, church history professor at Denver Theological Seminary and author of Church History in Plain Language (Word). Send questions to be answered by evangelical scholars to “Directions” at CTedit@aol.com.

Interested in a Bible Education?

over 6,000 students earning degree in Bible fields such as
Theology and Ministry.

CALL TODAY FOR A FREE
CATALOG & EVALUATION:

-800-525-1611

Andersonville Baptist Seminary

P.O. Box 545

54 S. Butler St.

Camilla, GA 31730

Phone: 1-800-525-1611

Fax: 1-912-336-7000

Internet:

www.andersonvilleseminary.com

ANDERSONVILLE BAPTIST SEMINARY

Even though as Christians we are required to study our Bibles, Bible study can seem at times to be a difficult task. But Andersonville Baptist Seminary can help give your studies guidance and purpose. All ABS students are working towards earning their degrees in fields such as Theology, Ministry, or Christian Counseling.

Some are enjoying courses such as Galatians, Romans, and Ephesians verse-by-verse, while others are involved in Homiletics, Grief Counseling, Missions, and Ministry Preparation. ABS has been training Bible students for over 16 years, and we are waiting for you...

Join thousands today and earn your degree!

- Monthly Payment Plans
- Preacher's Discounts
- NCCA Christian Counseling Program
- Fundamental & Conservative
- Lifetime Credit
- Transfer Credit Accepted
- Associate Through Doctorate Degrees

ANDERSONVILLE
BAPTIST SEMINARY

Gagging on Shiny, Happy People

Churchy types present the Christian experience as blandly perfect.

I flipped back the corners of the rugs, one after another. It was a clammy, rainy day, and these hand-knotted wool specimens from Iran, Pakistan, India, and China were giving off a fresh-from-the-sheep smell.

I didn't know what I was doing; I'd never shopped for a rug before. But the one thing that struck me as I gazed at one gorgeous carpet after another was that they looked too perfect.

Then I peeled back one more layer and saw a rug that won my heart. It had humility, I thought. The red color was warmer, less chemically uniform. Though tightly knotted, the pattern was less rigid than that of the other rugs. They were all handmade, but this one looked it.

There was a time when "looks handmade" meant "looks shabby." The advent of machine manufacture has raised the ante; now products are strictly uniform, more so than the most skilled hands can make them. They are cheaper, too. Today anyone can own dishes, clothing, furniture, and rugs of a perfection previously available only to kings. But when I went looking for a rug, I didn't want perfect.

I'm not alone in this quest. Hangtags from clothes reassure us that the "the subtle slubs and flaws in this garment are a mark of its uniqueness." In a world where the seamlessness and predictability of machine manufacture makes us feel small and lost, we search for traces of the immediate and the real.

Demographer Paul Ray caused a stir not long ago with his research on an emerging segment of American society, the "Cultural Creatives."

In contrast to Traditionalists and Modernists, Ray says, Cultural Creatives are interested in feminism, the environment, and a complex package of "altruism, self-actualization, and spirituality."

They also are hungry for the real; as Ray puts it, they make "an angry demand for authenticity." Cultural Creatives, he claims, lead the widespread consumer rebellion against anything imitation or fake. It's a sensibility that is growing in influence; it obviously influenced me. We have "reality hunger."

What if it's not rugs or clothes or yogurt people are shopping for? When they head to Ye Olde Spiritualite Shoppe to pick out a faith, how does Christianity stack up against the other brands? Not so well, if you ask the Cultural Creatives. Churchy types, they say, present the Christian experience as blandly perfect. It doesn't appear to have those subtle slubs and flaws that assuage reality hunger.

This complaint would be easily answered by actually spending time inside a Christian community, where the failures and sorrows of the faithful are all too obvious. But when a customer is looking at the outside of the package, it can appear to be (as in the R.E.M. song lyric) "shiny happy people holding hands."

The movie The Truman Show presented this kind of world in its portrayal of Seahaven Island, that biodome of artificial bliss. The developer of Seaside, Florida, the real town used in the film, reports that the movie's designers cut down real trees and put up plastic ones in order to enhance the location's feeling of impossible perfection. Seahaven might have charmed an earlier generation, but it makes modern viewers uneasy and wary. When we suggest that becoming a Christian will be the equivalent of living in Seahaven, customers stay away in droves.

How do we get real? A reflexive reaction is to do the opposite and showcase angst. I was once on a retreat for clergy families, led by the pastor of a large metropolitan church, who would regularly announce he was "putting his guts out on the table" and confess to low self-esteem and generalized "brokenness."

He never looked more cocky or confident than at those moments; those bursts of confession were, he knew, when his wide-eyed audience was in the palm of his hand. During the breaks he flirted boldly with any available wives and reveled in his celebrity. He didn't look all that darn broken; in fact, he looked in dangerously good repair and set to hit overdrive. "You know how novelty shops sell fake rubber 'accidents' to 'fool your friends'?" I complained to my husband. "That guy's got a set of rubber guts."

The "real" in Christianity doesn't have to do with our emotional burdens, but with the raw fact of our sin. The good news is not that God makes us feel better, but that he is King and Lord.

We won't win reality-hungry converts by being shiny-happy or by displaying rubber guts. It's a third approach that most directly speaks forth our imperfections, in the embrace of a perfect and forgiving light. In receiving mail and E-mail from Christians of the Eastern hemisphere, I've encountered a way they have of bringing this truth to constant remembrance: they sign themselves "the unworthy Catherine" or "the sinful Andrew," and they often close with the injunction, "Please pray for me, a sinner." Those who constantly recall that they have been forgiven much love much and fear little. That's the kind of reality the world is hungry for.

CI

Your youth group is loaded with greatness.

Einstein wrote his first paper on the theory of relativity when he was 16.

Joan of Arc led 3,000 French Knights to victory in the Battle of Orleans when she was 17.

David was anointed King of Israel at age 15.

Through the 30 Hour Famine, Josh Mitchell helped save an entire village in Africa when he was 15.

ALBERT EINSTEIN licensed by The Hebrew University. Represented by The Roger Richman Agency, INC., Beverly Hills, CA • © Corbis-Bettman

World Vision's 30 Hour Famine invites your youth to achieve great things. But not for greatness' sake.

For the sake of the 33,000 kids who die every day from hunger and hunger-related causes.

That's what will bring more than 600,000 young people together on February 26-27, 1999 in a nationwide fast. When groups like yours go without food for 30 hours and raise money, you provide food and care for hungry children and kids' lives are saved!

World Vision's 30 Hour Famine lets your group make its mark on a hungry world.

Plus, the 30 Hour Famine gives you a chance to make a lasting mark on the lives of your group members.

You'll challenge every member to act on faith. To look outside of his or her own needs and imprint the love of Christ on kids and families in need.

The 30 Hour Famine is a powerful group event. It's easy to organize. And it's free!

So do the 30 Hour Famine. Let your youth—and the world—know the greatness that comes from serving others.

FREE VIDEO

make your mark

☐ Sign me up! Please send materials for ☐10 ☐15 ☐20 ☐ _____ Famine participants.
(We will send you 10 unless you indicate otherwise.)

☐ I'm not ready to sign up yet. But I would like to receive more information about the 30 Hour Famine.

Name _____

(Mr./Mrs./Miss/Other _____)

The following is a: ☐ Church/School/Organization address ☐ Home address
(If possible, we'd prefer to have your organization's address.)

Organization Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

Phone: day (____) _____ eve (____) _____

Fax (____) _____ E-mail _____

Mail to: World Vision 30 Hour Famine • P.O. Box 70094 • Tacoma, WA 98481-0094

SAVE TIME • CALL TOLL FREE!

1-800-7-FAMINE

(1-800-732-6463)

In Canada, call 1-800-387-8080.

B920

www.30hourfamine.org

A Library in a Book

Raymond Brown provides an excellent synthesis of contemporary New Testament scholarship.

An Introduction to the New Testament, by Raymond E. Brown (Doubleday, 878 pp.; $42.50, hardcover). Reviewed by Michael J. Gorman, professor of New Testament and dean of the Ecumenical Institute of Theology at Saint Mary's Seminary and University in Baltimore. He is the author of Abortion and the Early Church (InterVarsity).

Of the making of books introducing the New Testament there is no end; some 25 sit on the shelves of my office, many more in the seminary library. Each is helpful and useful in its own way, and a few have become classics, issued in several editions over decades; Kümmel and Guthrie, for instance, are household names in New Testament circles because of their New Testament introductions.

The late Fr. Raymond Brown, S.S. (Society of Saint Sulpice, whose members teach in Catholic seminaries worldwide), is already a household name not only in the field of New Testament studies but in religious and academic circles more broadly. Father Brown, Auburn Distinguished Professor Emeritus of Biblical Studies at Union Theological Seminary in New York, is best known for his work on the Johannine literature—especially the classic two-volume Anchor Bible commentary on the Gospel of John and a study of the Johannine community (The Community of the Beloved Disciple)—and for his exhaustive studies, The Birth of the Messiah and The Death of the Messiah. He began his illustrious career at Saint Mary's Seminary and University in Baltimore, the Sulpician institution that I serve, teaching courses like those I now teach in his shadow. His sudden death on August 8 was a great loss.

A monument and a foundation

As anyone familiar with Brown's earlier writings would expect, his Introduction is a comprehensive, clear, balanced, ecumenical, and centrist work that leads the reader through the New Testament documents in their historical context. Brown had the credentials to write for the "scholarly majority" in the field of New Testament at the close of the twentieth century, and his "consensus" approach to basic issues does in fact reflect the positions of many specialists in the field.

It comes as no surprise, then, that numerous scholars—Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish—endorse the volume with very high praise, as inscribed on the book's dust jacket. What we have here is a synthesis of the results of biblical scholarship in this century and a starting place for the century to come. This Introduction is both a monument and a foundation.

The plan of the book is clear and simple. Following a few opening comments, chronological tables, and maps, Part 1 covers the "preliminaries" for understanding the New Testament: its nature and origin (including canon); methods of interpretation; manuscripts; and the political, social, religious, and philosophical worlds of the New Testament. Parts 2–4 deal with the Gospels and related works (Acts, epistles of focus is one,

When the
our vision
is clear.

*We don't just see the needs of the world.
We see one person who has a world of needs.*

Samaritan's Purse provides food, medicine, and relief supplies, and shares the Good News of Jesus Christ with people in need in 80 countries. But we can't help without people like you.

It's that simple. For more information on how you can be involved, call 1-800-873-7200.

Samaritan's
Purse Reaching a World of One.

Franklin Graham, President
P.O. Box 3000-H
Boone, NC 28607

Canada
Box 20100, Calgary Place
Calgary, AB T2P 4J2

John); the Pauline letters and the other NT writings. Each NT book has a chapter devoted to it, ranging in length from about 50 pages each for the Gospels and Acts to 20 or 25 pages for longer letters and 10 or fewer for shorter ones.

Appendixes on the historical Jesus and on relevant noncanonical Jewish and Christian writings, as well as indexes to authors cited (23 pages) and topics, conclude the volume. Each chapter has an ample bibliography and footnotes, so that students and scholars can follow up on topics of interest. The student (formal or informal) is, in fact, Brown's primary intended audience.

An especially helpful and appealing aspect of the chapters in Parts 2-4 is the (usually) first and main section of each chapter, entitled "general analysis of the message." This section, occasionally encompassing more than half of the chapter, provides a "mini-commentary" on the entire book in question. While some other NT introductions also do this, none to my knowledge is as thorough or as engaged with other scholars (in the notes) as Brown's.

The rest of each chapter is devoted to more traditional introductory issues (date, authorship, community, etc.), which are also summarized in a neat one-page chart early in the chapter, and to "issues and problems for reflection." This section concluding each chapter, briefly addresses a handful of particularly significant critical, textual, theological, and even spiritual and pastoral topics raised by each writing. In this section we get a glimpse into the mind of Raymond Brown: of all the issues raised by a writing, which ones really mattered to him?

A work of such scholarly breadth and depth has many excellent features, some of which have already been mentioned. I wish especially to highlight three: clarity and readability; attention to theological and spiritual concerns; and engagement with diverse religious and scholarly perspectives.

Clarity and readability

Among the book's chief virtues are its clarity and readability. Unfortunately, many scholars cannot write well for the educated, interested laity or the busy pastor; Raymond Brown could and did. I have used the book as the main text in an introductory master's-level New Testament course for laypeople. Carefully studying the entire New Testament while reading a 900-page introduction at the same time is a daunting task. All of my students, however, praised the book's readability, even when they found the quantity of reading overwhelming. (Other colleagues in the field have used it, with greater ease, for courses on the Gospels or the Synoptics.) For the layperson or minister who wants a clear "lay-of-the-land" regarding any NT book or the NT as a whole—whether for the first time or as a refresher course—this book is a gem.

It is also encyclopedic. Indeed, it may function just as well as a reference book (it is part of the Anchor Bible Reference Library), something to which one can turn again and again for clear presentations about New Testament topics. As some of the endorsements claim, this may indeed be the book to buy if one is only going to own one scholarly volume on the New Testament.

For some potential readers, this Introduction will necessarily function more as an encyclopedia than as a book to read cover-to-cover. Although there are some helpful charts scattered throughout the volume, it

SPIRITUAL • THEOLOGY

Spiritual Friends.

Craig Barnes

Marva Dawn

Larry Crabb

We are pleased to welcome Craig Barnes, Marva Dawn, and Larry Crabb, who have all entered into regular part-time teaching relationships with Regent College. Each brings expertise to Regent's Spiritual Theology concentration, from Craig Barnes' experience in pastoral ministry, to Marva Dawn's sensitivity to the issues of pain and suffering, to Larry Crabb's insight into contemporary counseling. They join such instructors as Maxine Hancock, Eugene Peterson, James Houston, Luci Shaw, Paul Stevens, Charles Ringma, Edwin Hui, Sven Soderlund, Charles Nienkirchen, and others here at Regent during the 1998/99 school year to help direct your mind and heart. Experience such classes as Barnes' Ministry and Spirituality, Crabb's Soul Healing and Community, James Houston's Experiencing the Trinity, and Luci Shaw's Journalling.

Spiritual Theology. Spoken—and lived—here at Regent College.

Admissions Dept, C098
5800 University Blvd.
Vancouver, BC Canada V6T 2E4
☎ (604) 224-3245 Fax 224-3097
Toll free 1-800-663-8664
Website: www.regent-college.edu
E-mail: admissions@regent-college.edu

AN INTERNATIONAL
GRADUATE SCHOOL
OF CHRISTIAN STUDIES

is not excessively reader friendly, especially when compared to other NT introductions on the market. There is no color and no photography, and the text is dense and traditional in appearance. Were it not for Brown's engaging writing, this format might have proven deadly.

Theological and spiritual concerns

A surprising and very welcome feature of this introduction is Brown's attention to the theological and spiritual dimension of his topic. This has been, again unfortunately, something of a rarity in New Testament scholarship. Too often, especially in introductions, the material is presented only as (largely irrelevant) historical data "like pages of an ancient telephone book," according to one former student). Brown's interest in the religious dimension of the text comes through in three ways.

First, he devotes part of an introductory chapter to questions of revelation and inspiration. After surveying modern methods of biblical study ("criticisms"), he anticipates the reader's question: How does his historical approach correlate with a belief in the divine inspiration of the Scriptures? Brown's own approach is "centrist," rejecting both a literalist inerrancy, on the one hand, and a refusal to acknowledge inspiration or allow it to be considered in scholarly discussions of the New Testament, on the other. He attributes inspiration to all of Scripture, not just certain parts, and quotes with approval (as one might expect) the Second Vatican Council's appealing understanding of inerrancy and inspiration: "The books of Scripture must be acknowledged as teaching firmly, faithfully, and without error that truth which God wanted put into the sacred writings for the sake of our salvation." Brown finds the guiding hand of the Spirit in the production of the NT writings, and this allows him to acknowledge cheerfully the diverse, fully human conditions in and through which the writings came into existence, as well as their power to speak today.

Second, Brown deliberately draws attention to texts and themes in the NT writings that have provoked, and still provoke, differing interpretations and thus differing beliefs and practices in the Christian churches. For instance, he comments on the difficulties in reconstructing the function of deacons and elders in the various Pauline communities whose letters mention those offices, and in understanding the precise significance of actual or possible references to "sacraments" in both Gospels and letters.

Third, Brown dares to probe (with questions or comments) controversial and otherwise significant topics raised by NT texts. Regarding Paul's view of homosexual relations, for example, he argues that Paul condemned all sexual activity outside marriage and that "Paul and indeed, Jesus himself, walking among us in our times, would not be frightened by being considered sexually and politically 'incorrect'" (p. 530). In his discussion of Philippians, Brown tactically criticizes selfish "upward mobility" and raises questions about the meaning of "taking the form of a servant" and anticipating the resurrection of the dead today.

Throughout the book, Brown reveals himself as a scholar who actually believes in his subject—the content of the NT writings. A theme of the book is the wisdom and plausibility of New Testament affirmations (i.e., Christian orthodoxy) in the face of modern challenges to them. He (usually gently) affirms the resurrection of the body, the "existence of an intelligent

BIBLES for China

"For $4.00 you can place a Bible into the hands of a Chinese House Church Christian.

These Bibles are full Bibles — both Old and New Testaments. They are hard bound and printed LEGALLY in China.

Because these Bibles are printed and distributed legally, there is not the associated risk to the Chinese believers as with smuggled Bibles."

Billy Graham
Billy Graham

For more information contact

EAST GATES MINISTRIES

P. O. Box 2010, Summer
Washington 98390
1-800-959-3464
www.egmi.org

Billy & Ruth Graham

Ned Graham — President

A PASTORS' CONFERENCE ON THE LIFE ISSUES

"Building a Ministry for Life"

OCTOBER 21-23, 1998

TRURO EPISCOPAL CHURCH, FAIRFAX, VIRGINIA

Speakers will be:

ELIZABETH ACHTEMEIER, CARL BRAATEN, JOHN KILNER, LEONARD KLEIN, RICHARD LAND, RICHARD JOHN NEUHAUS, AND DAVID REARDON.

For information and registration forms, write

Donna Blackstone, Director, "Make It Happen"

9923 Natick Rd., Burke, VA 22015

703-978-2948

principle of evil" (the Devil, p. 746), and other dimensions of the New Testament that many scholars either shun or dismiss. Not Brown.

Ecumenical engagement

A third strength of Brown's Introduction is that it is thoroughly ecumenical and inclusive of diverse perspectives. This strength appears in two ways. First, Brown interacts with, and clearly respects, scholars of all denominational and theological traditions. As both he and Princeton's Bruce Metzger have independently said at recent public events at Saint Mary's Seminary and University, biblical studies has made great contributions to ecumenical understanding in this century. Readers of CHRISTIANITY TODAY will be happy to see that Brown's one or two favorite commentaries for each NT book include works by the late Robert Guelich (Mark), Dallas Seminary's Darrell Bock (Luke), the late F. F. Bruce (Acts), Wheaton's Gerald Hawthorne (Philippians), Regent's Gordon Fee (1 Corinthians), James Dunn (Romans), Andrew Lincoln (Ephesians), William Lane (Hebrews), and Richard Bauckham (2 Peter and Jude). Many of these works are part of the highly respected and thoroughly evangelical Word Biblical Commentary series. Indeed, Brown's favorite commentary series appear to have been the Anchor Bible and the Word sets.

Second, Brown reminds his readers that various parts of the NT speak to the needs of the church and the churches at various points in their existence. For example, the two concluding paragraphs of his section on the canonicity of James deftly but non-judgmentally explain both Luther's (and Protestantism's) hesitation about the "epistle of straw" and the letter's rehabilitation in the last half of this century, thanks to liberation theology and to a general concern with Christian social ethics, particularly with respect to questions of wealth.

Brown, then, is open to a variety of religious and scholarly perspectives—though not all perspectives. He is suspicious of much supposedly "cutting-edge" scholarship, especially the kind that attracts media attention, finding its adherents idiosyncratic at best and self-aggrandizing at worst. Though he does not explicitly identify all the culpable scholars or schools of thought, he is critical of the well-known Jesus Seminar. On the other hand, in discussing various interpretive approaches to the New Testament, Brown invites his readers to acknowledge with him the valuable contributions made by "advocacy" scholars—non-First World,

a ministry of CRISTO

Change your Job...

Change your Life!!!

We'll show you how --TODAY!

a ministry of CRISTO

www.jobleads.org

800-126-1342

www.jobleads.org

Inter Cristo knows about thousands of jobs with hundreds of Christian organizations. Jobs for teachers, managers, accountants, and many more!

Our personalized computer job matching system searches out all the job possibilities fitting your unique qualifications!

Inter Cristo - The Christian Career Specialists for 30 years

SEEKING PEACE

Everyone's seeking peace, but few find it. Why? Most people are looking in the wrong direction.

In his first book Arnold plumbs a wealth of spiritual traditions and the wisdom of ordinary people who have found peace—sometimes in surprising places. There is a peace greater than personal fulfillment, he writes; a peace greater than nations no longer at war. It is waiting for everyone. But there's a catch: it can't be had without the readiness to "die to self."

Seeking Peace by Johann Christoph Arnold
$20.00, hardcover, 256 pp, 0-87486-958-7

AVAILABLE IN BOOKSTORES, OR CALL PLOUGH

1-800-521-8011

PLOUGH

Easy, Proven Way to Raise $400 to $4,000 and More For Your Organization

Special Offer:

Free wreath for your home with your group's order!

◆ OUTSTANDING QUALITY AND VALUE

Finest quality fragrant handmade Christmas wreaths, garlands and swags.

◆ PROVEN SUCCESSFUL

Raise big money in little time. Double your costs for up to 100% profit and more.

◆ SATISFACTION GUARANTEED

Fourth generation family owned and operated. Outstanding customer service.

◆ NO RISK, No Investment, Take up to 30 Days to Pay

PRE-SELL with our FREE color brochures

1-800-733-WREATH ext. 9808

Dinihanian Floral Products, Inc.

15005 NW Cornell Road • Beaverton, OR 97006

www.wreath_fundraiser.com e-mail: info@dinihanian.com

NEW
Youth Leadership
TRACK

Stay put while you move ahead

We asked youth ministers how we could help them reach their educational objectives. You said being able to complete a youth work M.Div. without having to move to seminary would be a nice start. So be it. Announcing our new M.Div program for those already in youth ministry. Now you can complete your degree without relocating and disrupting your present youth ministry. Call (800) 255-8706 ext. 6288 today for details.

What you hear could affect your vision.

BETHEL SEMINARY
SAINT PAUL • SAN DIEGO

www.bethel.edu AOL: keyword BETHEL

Ph.D.

If you're ready to get serious, consider Calvin Theological Seminary. Rock-solid theological training. Deep thinking. Our Doctor of Philosophy program will equip scholars like you for teaching and research.

Calvin Theological Seminary
3233 Burton Street SE
Grand Rapids,
Michigan 49546-4387
616-957-6036
800-388-6034
www.calvin.edu/seminary

BOOKS

nonwhite, and nonmale interpreters of the New Testament, particularly those with a liberationist perspective.

Similarly, Brown recognizes the importance of newer methods of NT study, including literary approaches (structuralism and narrative criticism), rhetorical criticism, and "social" criticism (i.e., sociological analysis and social-scientific criticism). For seasoned, expert practitioners of the more traditional methods of twentieth-century scholarship like Brown, simply acknowledging these new approaches is significant, and to Brown's great credit, he clearly intends to take them seriously.

Where is NT studies heading?

Reading Raymond Brown's Introduction might lead readers to conclude that despite all the bibliographical entries and footnotes, there really is a significant consensus among a great majority of NT scholars, with respect to both method and results in NT study. To some extent, this conclusion is correct.

But behind the consensus that Brown represents lie much more variety and disagreement than one might suspect, particularly regarding the history of Jesus and of early Christianity. The distinctive and controversial views of the "cutting edge" interpreters minimized by Brown probably exercise more influence in NT studies than he cares to admit. (Glancing at the program of the annual meeting of the Society of Biblical Literature should prove my point.)

In reality, NT studies is currently a highly diverse field, with various methods and agendas vying for prominence. Some NT scholars, such as Stephen Fowl of Loyola College in Maryland, would say it is not merely diverse, but "fragmented." Candler School of Theology's Luke Timothy Johnson has gone even further, arguing that the discipline is in crisis. Whether merely diverse, fragmented, or in crisis, NT studies is experiencing the same kind of predicament that all fields of study are undergoing in this postmodern era. Old certainties have collapsed, the possibility of "objective" interpretations is denied, and venerable scholarly methods are supplanted or supplemented. No method or perspective is judged inherently preferable to another.

But if the field of NT studies is diverse, or even fragmented, the variety afforded

REFORMATION Heritage LECTURES

This portrayal of Martin Luther's Ninety-five Theses by artist Petru Botezatu is one of many murals in the Beeson Divinity Chapel.

James B. Torrance

Samford University's Beeson Divinity School presents the tenth annual Reformation Heritage Lectures October 27-29, 1998. This year's speaker is James B. Torrance, professor emeritus of Systematic Theology at the University of Aberdeen, Scotland. Professor Torrance is well known for his widespread involvement in both academic and church circles. A frequent lecturer across the globe, Professor Torrance has also been chairman of international conversations between the World Alliance of Reformed Churches and the Lutheran World Federation, chairman of the British Council of Churches' Commission on the Trinity and chairman of the Joint Commission on Doctrine of the Church of Scotland and the Scottish Roman Catholic Church. Professor Torrance will lecture on "Work of the Holy Spirit in the Christian Community, and the Triune God of Grace." Everyone is welcome and admission is Beeson sponsors this annual lectureship to honor the heritage of the Protestant Reformation and its abiding value for the renewal of the church today. For information on the lectures or Beeson Divinity School, call Gregg S. Morrison at 1-800-888-8266.

Lecture Series Schedule

Lectures	October 27-29, 11:00 a.m. in the Beeson Divinity Chapel Topic: "Worship, Community, and the Triune God of Grace"
Discussion Luncheon	October 28, 12:15 p.m. in the Divinity Hall Student Commons (Please make reservations by calling 1-800-888-8266.)

SAMFORD UNIVERSITY

Birmingham, Alabama 35229-2
1-800-888-8266
<http://beeson.samford.edu>

Beeson is affiliated with the National Association of Evangelicals and is accredited by The Association of Theological Schools in the United States and Canada. Samford University is an Equal Opportunity Institution and welcomes applications for employment and educational programs from all individuals regardless of race, color, sex, disability, and national or ethnic origin.

M

MATTHEW

E

MARK

E

LUKE

T

JOHN

At Dallas Seminary you'd expect to study the writings of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John in the pages of the Bible—and you will. DTS offers the finest biblical training anywhere. You'll also learn how to put God's Word to work as you study with fellow students and alumni like Matthew Blackwell, Mark Irving, Luke Dodd, and John Dodd.

They are just a few of the more than 1,500 students and over 8,500 alumni of Dallas Seminary who are taking the Word to a hurting world. You can choose from ten fully accredited master's or doctoral degree programs with emphases in areas like pastoral ministries, cross-cultural ministries, Christian education, theological studies, and much, much more.

For more information on how you can study with Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, call, write, or check out our Website. Dallas Seminary has been standing strong for the truth for almost 75 years.

3909 Swiss Avenue
Dallas, Texas 75204
(800) 992-0998
www.dts.edu

"We will teach you the Bible and how to communicate it effectively."

Chuck Swindoll,
President

DALLAS
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Web Site Directory

Calvin College (Alumni)
www.calvin.edu
Fasting & Prayer '98
www.fastingprayer.net/awm
Food for the Hungry
www.fh.org
Gordon Conwell Theo. Seminary
www.gcts.edu
Wycliffe Bible Translators
www.wycliffe.org

To list your Web address in a
Computing Today Web directory
phone (630) 260-6202 x239.

Check Us Out Online!

Keyword: CO
on AMERICA ONLINE

One of the top
50 sites on
America Online

- Community Interactivity.
Constantly packed chat rooms, dozens of weekly events, hundreds of message board topics to meet any interest.
- Current News & Magazines.
Including: Christianity Today, Today's Christian Woman, Computing Today, plus daily news updates.
- Music & Media • Resource Center • Church, Bible & Reference • Marketplace • & More

Use AOL's integrated Web browser to access Christianity.Net, Christianity Today, Inc.'s exciting new Web site.

www.christianity.net

A member of Christian Community Network
www.christcom.net

- NET/SEARCH.
One of the most comprehensive Christian Internet directories on the Web with nearly 5,000 links to Christian Web sites.
- Church Locator.
A searchable database of over 4,000 links to church Web sites from around the world. Add a FREE link to your church's Web site.
- Newsstand • Message Boards • & More

Get unlimited access to America Online
and the Internet for $19.95 a month.
Call 1-800-633-8888 for a free start-up kit.
To advertise online call (630) 260-6202 x 239

by our present context can be the occasion for hope, not despair. One reason for hope is that the complex dimensions or "textures" of the Bible require a variety of interpretive approaches, like the proverbial diamond whose beauty can be fully appreciated only from a variety of angles.

Frances Taylor Gench, who teaches at the Lutheran Theological Seminary at Gettysburg, calls this new interdisciplinary era a "time of ferment," after which the historical-critical method will not be replaced but enhanced, putting new tools into scholars' pockets.

Gench finds an additional reason for hope in the current diversity, which is not merely varied with respect to method but also with respect to the practitioners. The entrance of women and of ethnic and racial minorities into biblical studies has enriched our reading of the Bible, she says. "People from different social locations bring different questions to the texts and see different things in them," she contends.

Still another reason for hope is that the postmodern situation allows us, scholars and students alike, to own up to our real

(and diverse) purposes in reading the New Testament. For most of us who are confessing Christians, these purposes are spiritual, theological, ethical, and practical.

The media lead us to believe that the "hot" topics in NT study are historical in nature: the historical Jesus, the Dead Sea Scrolls, and so on. In my experience of teaching NT primarily to adults, however, people are primarily interested in responsible interpretation of the text so that it may be heard again as the Word of God for this time. James Brownson, academic dean and professor of New Testament at Western Theological Seminary, points out that a similar preoccupation with the historical Jesus ended the nineteenth century and led to a deluge of work in NT theology at the beginning of the twentieth century. It may well be that the end of this century will also lead us to a healthy outpouring of NT scholarship in the twenty-first century—scholarship that has a theological, missional, and ethical focus. If so, that outpouring could be one not only of scholarship but of the Spirit. And for that, Raymond Brown would be both grateful and, in part, responsible.

CT

TOUGH QUESTIONS?

The Quest Study Bible asks, and answers, the questions you have after reading the Bible.

Does God cause natural disasters?
Why doesn't the Bible condemn slavery?
How did God inspire the writing of the Bible?

You'll benefit from over 100 strategically placed charts and maps. You'll read fair summations of controversial passages and explanations of peculiar types of writing—like genealogies, proverbs, and prophecies.

Prepared by respected Bible scholars and the editors at Christianity Today, The Quest Study Bible answers more than 6,000 of the most common and provocative questions asked by contemporary readers of the Bible.

Order The Quest Study Bible in hardcover (retail price $39.95) or in paperback ($24.95). Buy in bulk for a special discount or more and receive a FREE leather Quest Study Bible. QSB

Call toll free 1-800-806-7798
and ask for offer QE8JD4

Please allow 4-6 weeks for delivery.

No. of Bibles	% Off	Price Each
1	15%	$32.25
2	20%	$30.95
3-5	40%	$22.75
6+	50%	$18.95

Please add 10% shipping. Q
Foreign orders add 30% ship

Your preaching & teaching will come alive with...

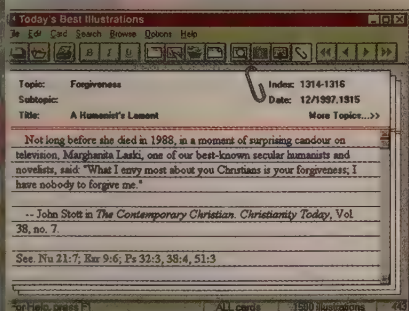

TODAY'S BEST SERMONS

When you want to gain spiritual refreshment and strengthen your preaching, open this unique CD-ROM. You'll find 156 of the best sermons in three volumes* preached by your favorite communicators. Today's Best Sermons CD-ROM includes sermon transcripts, highlighted illustrations, video and audio clips and much more!

* The first 52 sermons and a few previews are viewable when you purchase the CD-ROM. Volumes 2 and 3 can be unlocked for $49.95 each by calling the 1-888 number enclosed in your CD-ROM packet. TBS CD-ROM requires an IBM or compatible PC, MS Windows 95 or later, approximately 20 MB of hard drive space and a CD-ROM drive.

TODAY'S BEST ILLUSTRATIONS

Bring your teaching to life with gripping stories, powerful quotations, and wholesome humor! Today's Best Illustrations contains special selections from your favorite publications including Christianity Today, Leadership, and Christian Reader. Search by word, phrase, topic, sub-topic or Bible reference to find the perfect illustration for your lesson.

TBI requires an IBM or compatible PC, Microsoft Windows 3.1 or later and approximately 8MB of hard drive space. TBI Deluxe CD-ROM requires an MPC or compatible CD-ROM and approximately 20MB hard drive space.

Order today at these low introductory prices!

Call toll-free
1-800-806-7798
to order
Today's Best Sermons
or Today's Best
Illustrations NOW!

To receive these special introductory prices, have your credit card ready and ask for offer CE8JJ4 and refer to the product code listed on the order form to the right.

Mail order with payment to:
Christianity Today, Inc.
P.O. Box 606
Mt. Morris, IL 61054-0606

Product Code / Description	Qty.	Unit $	Total
TBSV1 Today's Best Sermons—Volume 1 (1 CD-ROM)		$49.95
TBX22 Today's Best Illustrations STANDARD (3,000 illustrations on 2 PC diskettes)		$29.95
TBX33 Today's Best Illustrations PLUS (6,000 illustrations on 3 PC diskettes)		$49.95
TBXCD Today's Best Illustrations DELUXE (Over 39,000 illustrations on 1 CD-ROM)		$69.95

* Shipping and Handling: Within U.S. 10% of total order. Outside U.S. 30% of total order. U.S. funds only. Prepaid orders only. Please allow 4-6 weeks for delivery.

Mail to: Christianity Today, Inc., PO Box 606, Mt. Morris, IL 61054-0606

☐ Check or money order (Made payable to Christianity Today, Inc.)

☐ Please charge my credit card: ☐ VISA ☐ MasterCard

Subtotal

Shipping*

TOTAL

CE8JD4

Card No. _____ Exp. Date _____

Signature _____

Name _____

Address _____

City, State, Zip _____

Phone No. (_____) _____ E-mail _____

Or shop our stores online—visit Christianity Online, AOL keyword: COStore or www.Christianity.net

Master of Arts

in Counseling

*"An approach to counseling that emphasizes CHARACTER over technique, that promotes maturity over relief, that values loving wisdom over theory. That's what's needed and that's what the counseling program at Colorado Christian University offers."*

—Larry Crabb

Author of Inside Out
Finding God
God of My Father
Silence of Adam

CCU's Master of Arts in Counseling program offers a distinctive approach to counseling. In its sixteenth year, the program emphasizes biblical/theological knowledge as a framework for understanding personal difficulties.

Biblical Counseling Track

A foundational one-year program designed to build and improve counseling and/or relational skills.

Professional Counseling Track

A two-year program designed to meet requirements for those seeking careers as Licensed Professional Counselors (LPC).

COLORADO
CHRISTIAN
UNIVERSITY

180 South Garrison Street
Lakewood, Colorado 80226
www.ccu.edu

Foothills Campus:
(303) 697-8135
Fax: (303) 697-4879

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

Potential Leaders

We all know them. Young men and women who, with the proper training, could be used powerfully by God to influence their generation.

We know, too, that their college or seminary choices can determine whether that potential will be realized or wasted.

Please take a moment to fill out the mail-in card adjacent to page 88 to receive more information for yourself or your church library. Or give the card to someone who needs practical help in making this crucial decision.

PREPARE FOR IMPACT.

If you want to have an impact on the world, choose the seminary that can have the greatest impact on you. At Columbia, we focus first and foremost on your spiritual life, then challenge you to academic excellence and give you practical ministry skills. Our customized degree programs offer the flexibility you need to build on your past as you prepare for the future.

Become a world Christian who serves God with excellence. Call Columbia today at 1-800-777-2227.

Columbia Biblical Seminary
& Graduate School of Missions

A division of Columbia International University
7435 Monticello Rd. • P.O. Box 3122 • Columbia, SC 29230-3122
803.754.4100 • Toll Free 1.800.777.2227 • www.ciu.edu

Preparing World Christians To Know Him And To Make Him Known
CALL FOR OUR EXTENSION CATALOG

Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary

P H I L A D E L P H I A

Providing a high view of scripture and evangelism with values that affirm women and promote ethnic, international and denominational diversity.

Degree Programs offered:

- Master of Divinity
- Master of Theological Studies
- Dual Degree Programs: M.Div./M.B.A.; M.Div./M.S.; M.Div./M.S.W.
- Doctor of Ministry in Ministry to Marriage and Family
- Doctor of Ministry in the Renewal of the Church for Mission

And, certificate and diploma programs in Christian Ministry.

Eastern Seminary, for 73 years, offering "The Whole Gospel to the Whole World through Whole Persons."

1-800-220-3287
<http://www.ebts.edu>

6 Lancaster Avenue
Wynnewood, PA 19096

Multnomah BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Thank You!

The readers of Christianity Today selected
Multnomah
as the best overall seminary in the CTI 1997 Seminary and Graduate School
Awareness and Perception
Report

MULTNOMAH WAS RANKED

#1 in Doctrinal Soundness

in Christian Life Preparation #1

1st in the Combined Overall Rating

MULTNOMAH
BIBLICAL
SEMINARY

TOLL FREE: 1.800.275.4672

VOICE: 503.255.0332

E-MAIL: admiss@multnomah.edu

WEBSITE: www.multnomah.edu

MAIL: 8435 N.E. Glisan Street
Portland, OR 97220

"Ministry is the Word"

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

COLLEGE & SEMINARY DEGREES THROUGH HOME STUDY

WE OFFER

Life experience credit to full-time Christian workers
Graduate & Undergraduate Degrees
Associate thru Ph.D. in Theology, Christian Counseling, Religious Ed., Divinity
Affordable tuition

Dr. Cecil Johnson, Pres.

Christian Bible College

106 Zebulon Ct.

P.O. Box 8968

Rocky Mount, NC 27804

(252) 451-1031

e-mail: chrbbiblecoll@earthlink.net

www.christianbiblecollege.org

(Non-secular, Private Accreditation)

A Change For the Better!

Geneva College announces a revision of its longstanding M.A. in Psychology. This new 60-hour Counseling Masters will help students as they apply for licensure as professional counselors in most states.

The quality remains unchanged, as does the integration of theory and practice within a Christian worldview.

Come and prepare to counsel from a Christian perspective.

Geneva College

Masters in Counseling

150
GENEVA COLLEGE
PRO CHRISTO ET PATRIA

For information:

Geneva College

Beaver Falls, PA 15010

1-800-847-8255

724-847-6571

rjware@geneva.edu

Southern Christian University

- B.S.; B.A.; M.S.; M.A.; M.Div.; D.Min.
- Distance Learning Program
- Financial Aid Available
- Major in Biblical Studies or Counseling
- Celebrating 29 years of Christian Education
- SCU is accredited by the Commission on Colleges of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools to award Bachelors Masters, and Doctoral Degrees.

Colleges of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools to award Bachelors
Masters, and Doctoral Degrees.

Phone today for a free information package

1-800-351-4040

www.southernchristian.edu

1200 Taylor Road • Montgomery, AL 36104

DOCTOR OF MINISTRY SPECIALIZATION

NEW CHURCH DEVELOPMENT

"Columbia's Center for New Church Development is meeting a crucial need for ministers of all denominations, and its Doctor of Ministry program is providing a valuable service for the church at large. D.Min. candidates will be able to focus on the theological and practical training needed to meet the unique challenges and demands of the stages of new church development."

Richard S. Armstrong,

Ashenfelter Professor of Ministry and Evangelism Emeritus,
Princeton Theological Seminary

Columbia's New Church Development specialization aims to equip church leaders in the mission of starting new congregations for the twenty-first century.

Introductory core seminar: April 5-16, 1999

For more information on the general program or on other specialized Doctor of Ministry programs (which include Gospel and Culture, Cross-Cultural Ministries, Christian Spirituality, New Church Development, and Pastoral Care), write or call:

COLUMBIA
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

A seminary of the Presbyterian Church (USA)

George Telford
Director of Advanced Studies
Columbia Seminary

701 Columbia Drive, P.O. Box 520

Decatur, Georgia 30031

TEL 404/687-4534; FAX 404/687-4591

Lehfeldt@CTSnet.edu

WE TRAIN MEN AS IF LIVES DEPEND ON IT.

We build men of God through careful biblical and theological study, internship in a vibrant local church, required small-group discipleship, and training in expository preaching.

Dr. John MacArthur, Jr.
President

The Master's Seminary
13248 Roscoe Blvd. • Sun Valley, CA 91352
1(800)CALL-TMS

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

The NEXT GREAT LEAP
for equipping church leaders
is really
a STEP BACK.

Back to the way Jesus himself
equipped and trained the 12. At DENVER
SEMINARY, we're following the example of the Master Professor with an emphasis on
hands-on learning directed by EXPERIENCED
MENTORS. Learn more about the seminary
education with an innovative approach to knowing, being and doing. We borrowed it
from the best!

1-800-922-3040 Ext. 278
-mail: admit@densem.edu
www.gospelcom.net/densem/

DENVER SEMINARY

P.O. Box 10,000 • Denver, CO 80250

PASTORAL MINISTRIES

*Educating leaders who are Authentically
Christian and Culturally Sensitive*

Call today
1-800-697-1133

- Degree programs:
Doctor of Ministry
Master of Divinity
Master of Arts
Master of Theological Studies
Master of Religious Education

- Features:
Biblical/Theological Foundation
Skill Development
Church-based philosophy
External Studies

GRAND RAPIDS
BAPTIST SEMINARY

1001 E. Beltline NE • Grand Rapids, MI 49525

Knox Is Here For You!

"Apply your heart to instruction"
(Proverbs 23:2)

Knox is here with solid Reformation theology to equip you to change the world for Christ.

- Doctor of Ministry
- Master of Divinity
- Biblical and Theological Studies
- Certificate in Biblical Studies

1-800-344-5669
E-mail: knox@crpc.org

KNOX
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Fort Lauderdale, Florida
D. James Kennedy, Chancellor

CAPITAL
BIBLE SEMINARY

—Changing the World from the Nation's Capital —Training the Leaders of the 21st Century

- ATS ACCREDITED
- COMMITTED TO THE INERRANCY OF GOD'S WORD
- EMPHASIS ON ORIGINAL SOURCES
- 40 YEARS OF TRAINING PEOPLE WHO MAKE A DIFFERENCE
- M.A.—M.Div.—Th.M.

6511 Princess Garden Parkway
Lanham, Maryland 20785

301-552-1400, ext. 293
1-800-787-0256

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

CONCORDIA SEMINARY

GRADUATE SCHOOL

Addressing Contemporary Issues with the Historic Christian Faith

M.A. (Master of Arts in Theology)
S.T.M. (Master of Sacred Theology)

Ph.D. in Biblical Studies
Doctrinal Theology
Confessional Studies
Reformation Studies

801 De Mun Avenue
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
314.505.7103
314.505.7003 fax

A Graduate School with
M. Phil. F. and Ph. D. 's
in these areas:

*Philosophical Theology
History of Philosophy
Philosophy of Science
Aesthetics
Political Theory
Systematic Theology
Biblical Studies
Systematic Philosophy
One-year master's in Worldview/Education.*

For more info contact

Institute for Christian Studies

229 College Street
Toronto, Ontario, Canada M5T 1R4
(416)979-2331

- ☐ Balancing academic and practical training
- ☐ Mentoring of students
- ☐ Partnering with the local church

PHOENIX SEMINARY

*Scholarship
with a Shepherd's Heart*

- ☐ Contact our offices in Phoenix at (888)443-1020, or find us on the web at www.phoenixseminary.edu

Global Connection

Off Campus and On Line

Without disrupting your family or leaving your present Ministry, you can complete your degree program. With Bethany, you can study off campus and on line via the World Wide Web. At your computer, in your home or office, or whether you use the mail, you can have a dialogue with Bethany's faculty, students, or alumni. Bethany will not take second place when it comes to providing nontraditional education. Bethany... A Seminary of Distinction.

The Bethany Degree Program...
Bachelor's, Master's and Doctorate
Degrees in the following areas:

Biblical Studies
Theology, Missions
Pastoral Ministry
Religious Education
Christian Counseling

Bethany is an Independent, Co-Sectoral, Baptist College with a trans-denominational student body. Bethany is designed for educating Pastors, Missionaries, and Evangelists. Bethany places its emphasis on the immutability of the Word of God.

Advanced standing is given for college transfer credits and portfolios. Learning Assessment for life experience and credit arrangements are possible.

Bethany Worldwide

BETHANY BAPTIST COLLEGE AND THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

2573 Hodgesville Road / P.O. Box 1944 / Dothan, AL 36302

Ph: (334) 793-3189 • Fax: (334) 793-4344

E-mail: bethanybc@ala.net

ORDER NOW!

Intercristo serves up-to-date job leads matched to your background and experience. Your job skills are needed

in Christian service.
We'll show you where!

Call Intercristo!

1-800-426-1342

www.jobleads.org

YES! Please send me information on Intercristo's Christian
Placement Network.

Name _____

Address _____

City/State/Zip _____

Publication _____

19303 Fremont Ave. N.
Seattle, WA 98133-3800

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE COLLEGE & SEMINARY

Since 1973

Individualized Faculty-Directed
Home Study

Accredited Ministerial Degree Programs

Low Tuition Interest Free Financing

Transfer Credits For: Ministerial Service,
Previous College Credit, Teaching Experience

- ASSOCIATE DEGREE
- BACHELOR'S DEGREE
- MASTER'S DEGREE
- DOCTORAL DEGREE
- CHRISTIAN COUNSELING

Our 26th Year

FREE CATALOG

CALL TOLL FREE 1-800-369-0009
In Missouri Call (816) 461-3633

ERVE GOD AND COUNTRY.

The Army and Army Reserve need ministers to meet the diverse needs of America's soldiers and their families.

As a chaplain you can expand your ministry by helping people who truly need spiritual guidance.
As a chaplain serving in the Army or Army Reserve will help you develop professionally and improve your ability to serve as a leader.

The need is great, but the rewards are even greater. For specific information call 1 800 USA ARMY or visit the Army Chaplain website at www.goarmy.com

ARMY CHAPLAIN CORPS
BE ALL YOU CAN BE

EXPLORATORY WEEKENDS NOV. 6-8, 1998 & MAR. 5-7, 1999

BUILDING UP THE BODY OF CHRIST

Is This Your Calling?

Is God calling you to ministry or leading you toward further education in your current ministry? Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary may be the right place for you.

- The Master of Divinity Degree is a three-year program for students seeking ordination.
- The Doctor of Ministry Degree meets the needs of practicing ministers who are seeking to change, expand, or deepen their ministry.

We also offer the following degrees:

- Master of Arts in Marriage & Family Therapy
- Master of Arts in Religion
- Master of Arts in Christian Education
- Master of Theology

Nearly 150 years old, Louisville Seminary is one of 10 theological schools of the Presbyterian Church (USA), is approved for educating United Methodist, Christian Methodist Episcopal, and African Methodist Episcopal pastors, and welcomes the wider ecumenical community. At Louisville Seminary you will find a diverse campus community devoted to building up the body of Christ. Come visit!

Louisville Seminary—Is this where God is calling you?

Call us at 1-800-264-1839 or visit us at www.lpts.edu

LOUISVILLE

SEMINARY

Carolina University of Theology

EARN YOUR DEGREE AT HOME

YOU ALREADY LIVE ON CAMPUS!

Going to seminary or graduate school once meant packing up the family station wagon and the rental truck so you could move to a strange city, get a minimum wage job, and go in debt. Those days are over! Through Carolina University you can complete an accredited Bachelors of Arts, Masters, or Doctorate degree without leaving your home, your ministry, or your job.

TUITION FINANCING AVAILABLE

AREAS OF STUDY INCLUDE:

- Biblical StudiesMinistryChristian Education
- TheologyChristian Counseling Psychology

FOR MORE INFORMATION WRITE OR CALL

Carolina University of Theology

505-B Woodlawn Street

Belmont, NC 28012

(704) 827-1740 (704) 827-1802 FAX

E-Mail CUT@TNTIE.COM

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

Rooted in grace FOR A lifetime of MINISTRY

COVENANT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
and the Francis Schaeffer Institute

1-800-264-8064

12330 Conway Rd. • St. Louis, MO 63141 • Website: www.covenantseminary.edu • E-mail: admissions@covenantseminary.edu

Columbia Evangelical Seminary

Formerly Faraston Theological Seminary

*offers Distance Learning
Programs through
Mentorship Studies
Earn your degree at home*

1-800-768-3997

To request information 24 hours a day

- ▶ Majors in Apologetics, Bible, Theology, Philosophy, Ministry, more
- ▶ Work one-on-one with one of our more than 80 scholars throughout your entire degree program.
- ▶ You may bring an outside Mentor to your program.

To talk, call 1-360-577-8039

Faraston@tdn.com

<http://www.Faraston.edu>

Columbia Evangelical Seminary
P.O. Box 847, Longview, WA 98632

Fast-Track Masters.

Long-Term Results.

If you want to earn an MA, but can't find the time, Simpson Graduate School has the answer. It's the MA in a modular format — one-week sessions spaced over three years. Or, simply sign up for individual sessions that suit your needs. For pastors, worship leaders, counselors, missionary candidates, church education staff, church planters, evangelists, administrators, and lay persons, these programs emphasize practical experience and spiritual enrichment.

For a brochure call, 800-598-2493.

Busy minister

Simpson's modular MA

Spiritual enrichment

Practical experience

Be a more effective minister

MA in Christian Ministry

Church Education
Church Planting & Growth
Diversified Ministry
Pastoral Counseling
Pastoral Ministry
Preaching
Worship Ministry
Youth Ministry

MA in Missiology

Graduate School

2211 College View Drive, Redding, CA 96003

800-598-2493 530-224-5606 Fax: 530-224-5627

www.simpsonca.edu

Philadelphia Theological Seminary

Affordable Excellence in Education
Since 1886

Programs Include:

Master of Divinity
Diploma
Certificate in Bible
Seminary at a Distance

For more information call:

800-899-5158 or 215-483-2480

or write us at

Philadelphia Theological Seminary

7372 Henry Avenue

Philadelphia PA 19128-1401

Associate Member ATS

7501 5th Avenue N.W.
Calgary, Alberta
T2N 0P5
www.pst.ca
1-800-239-0422
Accredited ATS-accredited

25 Ballymore Court
Toronto, Ontario
M2M 4B3
www.tyndale-canada.edu
1-800-663-6052
US accredited

4 good reasons to study theology in Canada

- Learn from a world class internationally-recognized faculty
- Save more than 40% on the cost of quality theological education (US exchange)
- Enjoy a Transdenominational, cross-cultural experience in the U.N.'s top country
- Benefit from flexible program options to fit any schedule (modular, intercession, summer)

Otterburne, Manitoba R0A 1G0
www.providence.ca
1-800-668-7768
ATS accredited

510 College Drive,
Campana, Saskatchewan S0P 0S0
www.briercrest.ca
1-800-667-5199
ATS accredited

Contact us toll free or visit our websites

LEE UNIVERSITY

CLEVELAND, TENNESSEE

announces the dedication of the

HELEN DEVOS COLLEGE OF EDUCATION

September 11, 1998

Training
Christian Teachers
for the 21st Century

THE MARKETPLACE

Cost: 46 cents per character (each space & punctuation counts as a character); avg. 45 characters per line. Min. $39.10 (85 characters). CT blind box number available at $6 each insertion; checkmark box 1¢ $14 each insertion. Supply permanent street address and phone number. Ads set display style: $276/column inch. Combination package available for CHRISTIANITY TODAY, CHRISTIAN READER, & YOUR CHURCH: 2 magazines—44 cents per character per insertion; 3 magazines—42 cents per character per insertion. Display style: 2 magazines—$263 per insertion; 3 magazines—$252 per insertion. All classified ads will now be automatically placed on CHRISTIANITY ONLINE at no additional charge. IMPORTANT: Prepayment & written confirmation required to process ads. Visa, MasterCard, or personal check accepted; fax (630) 260-9401. Employment ads are given priority. All other ads will be placed in first available issue. Deadline for reservation or cancellation is seven weeks prior to actual issue date. Address correspondence to: Classified Advertising, Christianity Today, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

CALVIN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY has two tenure-track openings: Systematic theology (primary responsibilities in the master's programs) and Philosophical and Moral theology (primary responsibilities in the M.D. program). Please contact the office of the seminary president for a position description with a list of qualifications for each opening. Inquiries will be received until September 1, 1998: 3233 Burton SE, Grand Rapids, MI 5546; www.calvin.edu/seminary.

RECTOR OF YOUTH: 1,100-member USA located in historic district. Minister to -12th graders. Salary $25,000-$35,000 plus benefits. Send résumé, statement of faith and cover letter to: Matt Fowler, Chair, Director of Youth Search Committee, First Presbyterian Church, 307 Gates Avenue, Huntsville, AL 35801-3102.

ASSOCIATE PASTOR OF YOUTH MISSION AND MINISTRY University Presbyterian Church of Seattle, Washington, a 3,800-member church, seeks youth pastor. We desire a candidate with a minimum of 2 yrs. experience leading an effective youth ministry program as well as demonstrated ability designing and implementing meaningful programs for youth and families. Visit our Web site: www.upc.org for information about UPC. Send your résumé to: Doug Marshall, Chairman, YMMC, C. University Presbyterian Church, 4540 1st Ave., NE, Seattle, WA 98105; e-mail mpnc@yahoo.com.

CENTRAL BAPTIST THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY invites applications for a possible tenure-track faculty position as Professor of angelism and Church Growth, available August 1, 1999. An academic doctorate preferred; committed to Christian ministry with sufficient pastoral/missionary experience; comfortable and conversant with multiple denominational traditions, holistic evangelism, and classical Christian tradition of evangelism and missions; committed to women in ministry, cross-cultural ministry, and the development of new congregations. The candidate should be an active member of a predominantly African-American community of Baptist churches and institutions. Applicants must submit by December 31, 1998: (a) a letter describing teaching interests and experience with specific reference to applicant's qualifications for the position, scholarly plans, and commitment to ethnic/cultural/gender diversity; (b) vita; and (c) three reference letters. Send Dr. James F. Hines, Academic Dean, Central Baptist Theological Seminary, 741 N. 1st Street, Kansas City, KS 66102-3964

MULTICULTURAL CHURCH IN MIAMI, membership 2,200, school, TV broadcast, seeks ministerial staff position directing purpose-driven philosophy. Contact Dr. Rick Ackwood, 8900 SW 168 St., Miami, FL 33157; (305) 238-1818.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

MINISTRY POSITION AVAILABLE. Associate Pastor of Music and Ministry Development, Mansfield Baptist Church, Port Murray, NJ; (908) 689-3272, fax: (908) 689-3280. Call for job description.

USE MINISTRY AND LIFE SKILLS to reach the unreached hurting, broken and lost through creative access to Asia/SE Asia. How? Contact: Gary Brewer, Mission to Unreached Peoples, toll free at (1-888) 847-6950 or e-mail: mupinfo@mup.org or HTTP://www.mup.org/mupinfo/

TEACH IN JAPAN: Reach Asians for Christ. Teach in English. Several K-12 & ESL teacher openings. Mission school of 400; 2-year contracts. Must raise partial support. Write Dr. Bob Greninger, Okinawa Christian School, P.O. Box 14250, Gainesville, FL 32604; (1-800) 446-6423.

ASSOCIATE PASTOR sought for growing, evangelical community church of 400 in southwest Portland suburbs, to provide leadership in small groups, assimilation, and office staff administration. Church motto: "Teamwork in Extending Christ's Love." Send résumé and cover letter to Search Committee, Mountain Park Church, 40 McNary Pkwy., Lake Oswego, OR 97035.

FILM THE BIBLE MINISTRIES, a faith-based organization, is looking for an executive director with excellent fundraising, speaking, writing, and assessment skills; director will develop and oversee programs, represent the organization, recruit and oversee volunteer and paid staff, etc. Send or fax résumé to Film the Bible, 600 W. Hillsboro Blvd., #210, Deerfield Beach, FL 33441; (954) 428-4030; fax (954) 725-3445; filmthebible@netscape.net.

DIRECTOR OF ADULT MINISTRIES 1,700-member Christ-centered independent evangelical church in the Anglican tradition has an exciting opportunity for you to further develop existing vision of the church for Adult Ministries. We seek a committed individual with experience as a Senior Pastor of 500+ member church or Associate Pastor of a larger church. Master of Divinity degree preferred. Located in north Atlanta, our purpose is to reach the lost and equip the saints with the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Résumés to: Donna Watson, The Church of The Apostles, 3585 Northside Pkwy., NW, Atlanta, GA 30327.

DIRECTOR OF MISSIONS AND EVANGELISM

A new, full-time, nonordained position is being offered at the First Presbyterian Church of Evanston, IL. You will assist members in supporting missionaries and planning local and international mission projects. For position description, write: Mr. Larry Holm, First Presbyterian Church, 1427 Chicago Ave., Evanston, IL 60202.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

THE BOARD OF CBH MINISTRIES (Children's Bible Hour) is seeking qualified applicants for this worldwide ministry located in Grand Rapids, MI. The new director will build on the excellent foundation that now exists and creatively, courageously, and tastefully move the ministry into new realms of service and impact. For application materials, contact Marcia at CBH Ministries, Box 1 Grand Rapids, MI 49501; (616) 451-2009; fax (616) 451-0032; e-mail cbh@cbhonline.com.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR. Hope for New York, a Christian nonprofit foundation offering financial assistance, volunteer resources, and other support to selected holistic mercy ministries in metro New York City. Qualified applicants will possess a B.A., exc. comm. skills, min. five years mgmt. exp., & PCA membership. Nonprofit service, fundraising, inner-city ministry exp. a plus. Fax résumé and cover letter to: HFNY Search Committee, (212) 808-4465.

DEVELOPMENT/DIRECTOR

Experienced professional to head young department in growing 50 year-old ministry to disabled. Great opportunity to build own department. Minimum 2 to 5 years professional development experience. Create department vision, utilize every appropriate method, take department to next level, capital campaign experience helpful. Competitive salary, benefits. Résumé to Dave Rowland, Christian League for the Handicapped, Box 948, Walworth, WI 53184.

TEACH IN JAPAN

Evangelical church reaching out to the Japanese through teaching English as a second language. Mission-minded single female person needed; 2-year contract. Support and accommodations. Write Shukugawa Bible Church, 7-12 Aioi-cho Nishinomiya-city, 662-0063 Japan; phone: 011-81-798-72-6055; fax: 011-81-798-72-4128; e-mail: scc@msg.biglobe.ne.jp

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, BRISTOL, TN, a congregation of 500, seeks a director of Youth Ministries/coordinate of Christian Education. If you show, in word and deed, a commitment to Christ; if you love youth, and relational youth ministry is your special gift; if you can motivate, encourage, and train adults; if you can nurture young people and their families; if you are familiar with Presbyterian and Reformed traditions; if you can perform pastoral duties related to youth and educational ministries; if you have a B.A./B.S. degree, further relevant training, and, possibly, an appropriate advanced degree, then we want to know more about you. Send letter of application and résumé to DYM/CCE Search Committee, First Presbyterian Church, 701 Florida Ave., Bristol, TN 37620. We provide Christian love, nurture, fellowship, volunteers, and competitive salary and benefits (PC/USA).

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

SENIOR PASTOR OPPORTUNITY

The Evangelical Free Church of Libertyville seeks a senior pastor to lead the church into the next millennium. Applicants should possess vibrant people skills, outstanding preaching/teaching gifts, and strong team leadership abilities. Qualifications shall include master of divinity or higher, minimum ten years of demonstrated pastoral experience, and experience in working with pastoral team in a growing church environment. The EFC of Libertyville is a growing church of 500+ with a current pastoral staff of five. Worship services tend toward a contemporary-blended style. Interested applicants should send their résumé of qualifications to the Evangelical Free Church of Libertyville, 431 W. Austin Ave., Libertyville, IL 60048, Attn: Sr. Pastor Search Committee.

FIELD REPRESENTATIVES

National Christian organization seeks a self-motivated professional with sales background and a proven record to join its marketing division. The individual will be responsible for developing a network of churches, ministries, and nonprofit organizations in a multi-state region to implement the sales and marketing strategy for their line of Scripture products. Requirements for position:

- 1-3+ years professional sales experience
- 4-year college degree
- Personal desire for spreading God's Word
- Relational, personable, and good communication skills
- Self-starter, creative, and detailed
- Well organized, with good time-management skills
- Resident in Chicago, St. Louis, Los Angeles, or Houston areas, which would facilitate 40% to 50% travel to all major cities in the corresponding regions of the U.S.

We offer an attractive compensation package based on the experience of the candidate. This package would include competitive salary, health, dental, disability, pension, and life insurance benefits. Please respond with cover letter, résumé, and compensation history. Equal opportunity employer. Mail to: S.P.M., P.O. Box 246, Macungie, PA 18062; fax: (610) 965-0573.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES: Advent Group Ministries, a Christian social service agency located in San Jose, CA, seeks resident counselors, night counselors, summer interns for adolescent residential treatment programs. Competitive salary, benefits. Residential positions provide room & board. Contact Deborah Norris: (408) 281-0708; (1-800) 98ADVENT; fax: (408) 281-2658.

MINISTRY PLACEMENT for pastors & associates or churches. Call (503) 357-7830 or Believer's Dynamics, POB 596, Forest Grove, OR 97116. Since 1977.

DIRECTOR OF CELEBRATION MINISTRIES sought for a growing, nondenominational, evangelical church in Albany, NY. Qualified applicants should have keen administrative abilities, an ability and a desire to create and mobilize multiple teams of lead worshipers, be highly relational in leadership style, and have proven experience as a worship leader. Will need to recruit, train, and oversee volunteer personnel, coordinate and be involved in multiple subministries while planning and implementing expansion of celebration ministries. Negotiable salary. Please send a video sample of your worship leading along with a résumé to: Dave Triller, c/o Grace Fellowship, 3 Cerone Commercial Dr., Albany, NY 12205.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

DUE TO GROWTH AND EXPANSION, Belhaven College seeks those faculty who are excited to serve in the following areas at a college which prepares students to serve Christ Jesus in their occupation, relationships, and in the world of ideas.

- Business Administration Faculty in Memphis (DBA or PhD required)
 - Director of Libraries (Librarian Masters required)
 - History Faculty (Fall 1999, PhD required)
 - Mathematics Department Chair (PhD required)
 - Sports Medicine Faculty (PhD & Athletic Training Certification required)
 - Theatre Department Chair (MFA required)
- Send vita to Daniel C. Fredericks, Provost, 1500 Peachtree St., Jackson, MS 39202. Minorities are encouraged to apply.

MUSIC MINISTER

The Church of the Holy Spirit, located in Virginia's Roanoke Valley, is a growing 500+ member Evangelical Episcopal Church with a young congregation. We are in search of an experienced professional who can lead and train a large praise team. Must be familiar with Vineyard, Integrity Hosanna, Maranatha, and various other contemporary and traditional worship styles. Send résumé to Music Minister Search Committee, The Church of the Holy Spirit, P.O. Box 21038, Roanoke, VA 24018, prior to September 30th.

YOUTH PASTOR

Shady Grove Presbyterian Church (PCA), located in Montgomery County, MD, north of Wash. D.C., is a 180-member congregation seeking a full-time Youth Pastor to develop its ministry to teens. Candidates should possess a commitment to the Reformed faith, a relational/discipleship orientation to youth ministry, and the proven ability to equip volunteers. Compensation commensurate with experience. Direct inquiries to: Search Committee, Shady Grove PCA, 16911 Redland Rd., Derwood, MD 20855; (301) 330-4326.

PHYSICIAN

Christian woman gynecologist needs like-minded, board-certified, experienced woman to associate immediately in busy private practice of gynecology only. Contact Ruth K. Dix, M.D., 8135 Painter Ave., Whittier, CA 90602; fax: (562) 698-9653; e-mail: RRDix@aol.com.

SR. PASTOR/CHURCH PLANTER needed for a strong core group seeking to reach 40ish professionals in Cincinnati. This is a unique and incredible opportunity with a well-funded core group seeking a killer leader committed to seeker-targeted ministry. If you are worth it, money is not a problem. We are committed to reproducing seeker-targeted churches in the Cincinnati region, uniquely geared to each local community with this being #2. Only contact us if you have a track record. Search Team, 3322 Erie Ave., Cincinnati, OH 45208, or NHISPeace@aol.com.

MAKE A CHANGE! Teach English, business, or computers in China, Russia, Muslim Asia, or C. Europe. Call ESI at: (1-800) 895-7955. All college majors/degrees welcome.

PASTOR

First Union Church in Cedarville, MI, is seeking an experienced full-time pastor. Located on the North Shore of Lake Huron in what are called the Les Cheneaux Islands, this non-denominational church has a membership of approximately 250. Please submit résumé to: Pastor Search Committee, P.O. Box 245, Cedarville, MI 49719.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

YOUTH PASTOR

Shannon Forest (PCA), Greenville, SC. This contemporary/traditional worshipping congregation of 380 seeks a man to join pastoral team to evangelize and disciple jr. & sr. high (about 50) and their lay leadership (about 12). Primary duties include: biblical teaching, evangelism, visitation on kids' "turf," discipleship, counseling, organization of activities, events and mission trips, and to communicate with parents. Previous exp. And seminary desired but not required. Contact: Smurphy@lg.com. Send résumé to: Shannon Forest, 830 Garlington Rd., Greenville, SC 29615.

CHILDREN'S MINISTRIES DIRECTOR

Position available for an experienced person who loves children and is gifted in teaching, administration, and leadership. Major responsibilities would include: developing, implementing, and evaluating programs for children ages 0 to 6th grade, selecting and enabling teachers and volunteers for all children's ministry programs. We are a 145-year-old PCUSA church, committed to our urban community. Please send résumé to CMD Search, Tabernacle Presbyterian Church, 418 E 34th Street, Indianapolis, IN 46205, or fax to (317) 923-1413.

NEW MAJOR GIFTS PROGRAM

The Salvation Army offers a superb opportunity for the right mission-driven development professionals. We are looking for nine such candidates in the Southeastern United States. Candidates will have a record of successful major donor work, be responsible to develop an annual plan, have strong written and verbal skills, and be self-motivated. The focus of these positions is to develop long-term relationships with key individuals, foundations and corporate donors while representing the mission of The Salvation Army. EOE. Please send a cover letter, résumé, and salary requirements to: Paul Curnow, The Salvation Army, 1424 Northeast Expressway, Atlanta, GA 30329-2088.

CHRISTIANITY TODAY, INC. is growing and is looking to fill various newly created positions. Our mission is to communicate, primarily through 13 outstanding periodicals, the depth and transforming power of the Gospel as it penetrates all spheres of life. We are looking for editors, graphic designers, direct mail marketing and circulation professionals, advertising sales manager, computer support technician, and various administrative support staff who would like to combine career with ministry. Send résumé and cover letter with salary history to: CTI, HR Dept.-CT, 465 Gunderson Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188; fax: (630) 260-0114; email: CTIHRDept@aol.com

SENIOR PASTOR

Karl Road Baptist Church, an evangelical/theologically conservative American Baptist Church in Columbus, Ohio, is seeking a senior pastor. The church has an average attendance of 450. The congregation has a strong missions program and an "every member a minister" emphasis. Our need is for a dynamic, energetic pastor to educate, encourage, and motivate us for growth as individuals and as a congregation. Minimum requirements include an M.Div. degree from an accredited seminary, ten years of ministry experience, supervisory experience in a multi-staff environment, and strong pulpit skills. If interested in learning more or to apply for the position, please send your résumé (an audio or videotape would be welcome) in confidence to: Mr. Richard Shaw, 4575 East Walnut St., Westerville, OH 43081.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

SENIOR PASTOR

Far Hills Baptist Church is the largest Southern Baptist Church in Ohio with 8 full-time ministers and a weekly attendance of over 1,500. Our vision is to build a church that makes a difference in the lives of individuals, the community, and the world by using the most effective traditional and innovative approaches for making disciples. Having purchased 40 acres in a prime location, we are preparing to grow into the 21st century. We are seeking a senior pastor who is a gifted biblical preacher with strong communication skills and a proven leader with a passion for reaching the unchurched. Please send résumé to: Far Hills Baptist Church, Attn: Pastor Search Committee, 5200 Far Hills Ave., Dayton, OH 45429.

DIRECTOR OF CHILDREN'S MINISTRIES

A 700-member independent evangelical church in the Anglican tradition located in North Atlanta, seeks a committed individual with previous children's ministry experience. Offering opportunity to develop, direct, and oversee a Christ-centered program serving nursery through 5th grade. If you have a heart for children and evangelism, send your résumé to: Donna Watson, The Church of The Apostles, 3585 Northside Pkwy, NW, Atlanta, GA 30327.

NATIONAL CHURCH PLACEMENT SERVICE Churches and Ministers are connecting. h CMPN, P.O. Box 1132, Barre, VT 05641; (2) 476-8902.

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

ANNY CROSBY: Her life and her hymns on min. cassette. Send $8.95 to: Fanny's Closet, 11 N. Third Avenue, Maywood, IL 60153.

JOYCE LANDORF HEATHERLEY Books & Tapes: Balcony People, Irregular People, My Blue Blanket, The Inheritance, Grace of Beauty, Change-points, Unworldly People, Richest Lady in Town, Silent September, Fragile Times, and others. Balcony Publishing, P.O. Box 340079, Austin, TX 78734; (1-800) 777-7949.

FROM AUGUSTINE TO C. S. LEWIS: LEGACIES OF THE FAITH, by Dr. Ed Emery. Daily devotional readings collected from over 30 years of great Christian literature. Subject index aids ministers, evangelists, and Christian workers. Order your copy/ies now for only $8 plus $1.25 (U.S.) P/H per copy from the OMS International Bookstore, P.O. Box A, Greenwood, IN 46142-6599.

SHORT-RUN BOOK PUBLISHING! We can publish your book professionally in quantities as low as 250 books for less than $1,200 U.S.! The advantage of the Canadian dollar: For info contact: Essence Publishing, 103B Wilminton Rd., Belleville, ON, Canada K8N 2Y5; (1-800) 238-6376; fax: (613) 962-3055; w.essence.on.ca

AS A FLAKEY PREACHER, by Ted Wicks. A former charismatic preacher steps forward to admit his participation in exorcisms and extrabiblical experiences within charismatic circles. 107 pp./paperback, $9.95. P&H, to: Solid Rock Publications, 9739-34, Westlock, AB T7P 1Y5.

Offers OF CHRISTIAN USED BOOKS for sale. free monthly lists write: Corey Smallman, Box 9626, Chattanooga, TN 37412.

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

☒ WORSHIP MUSIC RESOURCES print music and helps for the classically trained church pianist; recordings by William Phemister; phone/fax: (630) 665-9321; www.wheatonmusres.com

BAKER BOOK HOUSE buys libraries, large & small. Phone: (616) 957-3110; fax: (888) 263-7310; E-mail: used.books@bakerbooks.com. Grand Rapids, MI 49546.

6,000 GOOD USED BOOKS FOR SALE. Get monthly free book list from Pastor Wayne, 3940 Winewood Ct. SE, Grand Rapids, MI 49508; E-mail: 73223.2010@compuserve.com

EVANGELISTIC MATERIAL IN ARABIC: books, tracts, cassettes. In English: The Bible and Islam ($4.95 U.S./$5.95 Canada). Write: Arabic Dept., Back to God Hour, 6555 W. College Dr., Palos Heights, IL 60463.

CHRISTIAN LITERARY AGENT. No reading fee. Send manuscript to Maranatha Ministries Int'l, 3800 Scarlet Oak Ln., Lexington, KY 40514.

200,000 USED BOOKS. Libraries purchased. Kregel Used Books, Box 2607, Grand Rapids, MI 49501; (616) 459-9444; fax: (1-888) USD-BOOK; Web: www.Kregel.com

MANUSCRIPTS WANTED, ALL TYPES. Publisher w/ 75-year tradition. Author's Guide to Subsidy Publishing: (1-800) 695-9599.

THE LIBRARY OF SPIRITUAL CLASSICS. The greatest literature on the deeper Christian life ever penned. Free catalog. Spiritual Classics, 1275 Hwy. 16 W, Newnan, GA 30263; (770) 254-9442.

THE HOUSE CHURCH MOVEMENT—a catalog of books and tapes available on this fresh, new, revolutionary movement. P.O. Box 285, Sargent, GA 30275; (1-800) 645-2342.

THE RAPTURE IS COMING! Prepare for this great event. Our exciting new book, Heaven Bound, teaches how to protect your possessions from the Antichrist, what the Great Deception is about, how to help those left behind, etc.; $10.00 ppd. Silos Publishing, Dept. CTR, PO Box 26115, Tamarac, FL 33320.

PUBLISH YOUR BOOK NOW! Your book can be produced and promoted by the leading subsidy book publisher. Send for free booklet P-53. Vantage Press, 516 W. 34th St., New York, NY 10001.

MINISTRY AIDS

☒ SERMONHELP.COM is the finest, most affordable sermon-preparation service on the Web. For CT readers: mention CT, and ask for the 14% discount on our 2-yr. subscription. <www.sermonhelp.com>

UNDERSTANDING YOUR TEENAGER parenting seminars. Find out how to schedule one at your church. Call (1-800) 561-9309 or visit our website at <http://www.uyt.com>

SERVICES

OUTREACH CENTER MINISTER

If you believe you are called to minister to people in small groups, the National Conservative Christian Church will provide you a course of study, coaching, and assistance to begin a cell group, home church, or an outreach center. Write the N.C.C.C. at 4460 Northgate Court, Sarasota, FL 34234, or phone (941) 365-8115.

SERVICES

TAX-EXEMPT NONPROFIT STATUS for your mission, ministry, church. Recorded message toll-free (1-800) 268-1635.

ASPIRING WRITERS—Get fired, fired with enthusiasm for developing God-given writing talent. Send for FREE STARTER KIT. Christian Writers Guild, 260-H Fern Lane, Hume Lake, CA 93628; phone: (209) 335-2333; fax: (209) 335-2770; or: NVRohrer@juno.com

DIABETICS with Medicare or insurance, get your diabetic supplies at no cost. Call (1-800) 337-4144.

Moving Interstate?

The Service and Thrift Relocation Service offers discounted rates and other benefits to reduce your moving cost on moves within the Continental U.S. For a free, no-obligation estimate call Lewis, CORD northAmerican:

1-800-873-2673

ICC# MC 167012

 northAmerican.
VAN LINES/AGENT

ORDINATION. International Ministerial Fellowship, an association of evangelical churches and ministers, offers many services, including ordination, newsletters, networking, ecclesiastical endorsement, consultation in area of legal, accounting, church planting, biblical/theological training, Internet services (FREE Web site and E-mail address) and a missions sending agency. For free information, check out our Web site: www.i-m-f.org or write: P.O. Box 32366, Minneapolis, MN 55432; (612) 571-5967.

PRODUCTS

1999 CHRISTIAN ENGAGEMENT CALENDAR

Great Christmas gift for yourself or loved ones. Fundraiser for church or club. Dramatic nature photography with inspirational Scripture. Daily schedule for reading Bible in 1 year. Call (1-888) 231-2572 for free color brochure.

MINISTRY OPPORTUNITIES

COUPLES NEEDED. Boys averaging in age from 12 to 16 need you to create a loving, caring, nurturing home. Become a House Parent at the Omaha Home for Boys. You'll get training in our nationally recognized treatment program, enjoy full benefits, including health insurance, and know you're making a difference in young people's lives. Starting salary of $29,000 plus free housing, meals, and utilities. For information, call Kevin Orr (1-800) 408-4663 Monday-Friday or visit our Web site: www.omahafreeneet.org/boyshome, The Omaha Home for Boys, 4343 N. 52nd Street, Omaha, NE 68104, An Equal Opportunity Employer.

MINISTRY SERVICE, matching ministers/ministries. Connect with CCRS, P.O. Box 398, Sheffield, MA 01257. Phone: (413) 229-3627; e-mail: churchrectr@juno.com

VISIT PRISON IN AN ENVELOPE. By writing an inmate you can fulfill the Lord's command to remember those in prison. Contact Prison Fellowship Ministries (CT), P.O. Box 17500, Washington, DC 20041; (703) 478-0100, x590; <http://www.pfm.org>

MINISTRY OPPORTUNITIES

PREACH CHRIST to nations via shortwave radio. (561) 697-4547; www.flinet.com/~grlmin

MISSION NANNYS. Women 50+ travel and help missionaries with domestic duties. P.O. Box 609, Edgewater, MD 21037

PRAYER MINISTRY

National Prayer Ministry dedicated to intercessory prayer and personal ministry to sports and entertainment industry seeks volunteers for this marketplace ministry: (877) Team Genesis (832-6436).

COMPUTER/VIDEO PROGRAMS

CHURCH MANAGEMENT SOFTWARE: Windows, MD-DOS; contributions & membership; financial; $85 each. Free trial. Vian Corporation (908) 537-4642; <http://www.vian.com>.

COMPUTER SOFTWARE for church membership, contributions, and accounting. PowerChurch Plus is the most widely used church-administration software package. Call or write today for free information. F1 Software, Dept. CT, 208 Ridgefield Dr., Asheville, NC 28806; (1-800) 486-1800.

POSITIONS WANTED

MINISTER

Wants to hold revivals or pastor. Has 40 years experience, preaches KJ Bible, prayer for lost and sick: 240 E Ruth Ave., Apt. 201, Phoenix, AZ 85020. I will go anywhere in the U.S. or Canada.

REAL ESTATE

MOVING? Call us to find a full time, highly recommended Realtor who:

- *Is committed to utmost integrity and service
- *If requested, will also introduce you to the Christian community, churches and schools

A totally FREE SERVICE (USA/Canada)

The EXODUS Network 1-800-395-8556

MOVING TO TUCSON? Let a Christian assist in finding a home. Margaret Arveson, Tucson Realty, 5151 E. Broadway, Tucson, AZ 85711; (520) 745-5151.

DRAMA

☒ CHRISTIAN DRAMA. Hundreds of plays for adults and youth. Free catalog. Eldridge Publishing: (1-800) 95-CHURCH, or <http://www.95church.com>.

TRAVEL

JOIN THE INTERNATIONAL Christian Bed & Breakfast Network. Call (1-800) 881-1940, or write to ICBBN, 550-777 Royal Oak Dr., Box 139, Victoria, BC V8X 4V1 Canada.

☒ GOLDEN RULE TRAVEL is a Christian agency specializing in wholesale and bulk rate airline tickets for church and missionary travel. Our services are available to individuals as well as all mission and church organizations. We try extra hard to save you money! Mention this ad for a one-time, 2% discount. Call toll-free (1-888) 950-3273 FARE for pricing.

NEAR GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, MONTANA. 3BR log cabin; secluded. Color brochure: (320) 384-7739.

TRAVEL

LONDON U.K. Foreign Missions Club, Christian guesthouse. Reductions for missionaries and full-time ministers. 26 Aberdeen Park, Highbury, London N52BJ Fax (011) 071-704-1853

FUNDRAISING

Fund Raising Idea For 1999:

Commemorative Plates

Our fine Porcelain Fotaware® is prized throughout the USA for its heirloom quality. Perfect for anniversary celebrations. A gift your church or organization can cherish. Wonderful reunion gift!

Your choice: Full Color, Brown Tone, Black and White

For Free Brochure and Wholesale Price List Call:

1-800-872-1278

PRESTON-HOPKINSON—Since 1949
P.O. Drawer 341
Bedford, Virginia 24523
www.holidayfundraising.com

Call Toll Free! 800-872-1278 Ask for Dept. 2021

FREE INFO. Your church etched on beveled glass suncatcher/ornaments. Low min. Wullbrandt Studio C, 1270 Hwy. 65, Hampton, IA 50441; (515) 456-3580. www.heartofiowa.com/wullbrandt/

PUBLICATIONS

CRUCIAL END TIME knowledge! Send SASE, $3 to Brothers in Christ, Box 9054, Wichita Falls, TX 76308.

EDUCATION

FREE! Audio Bible courses by correspondence. Write P.O. Box 233, Washington, KY 41096. USA only.

SEMINARY DEGREES: HOME STUDY Theological Education Center, 4701 88th Ave. N. #103, Pinellas Park, FL 33782. Online catalog <http://www.harborcity.org/tec/> or send $2. Phone: (504) 296-7531.

FINANCE

MONEY TROUBLES? Overdue bills? Reduce interest, cut monthly credit card payments, restore credit. Nonprofit agency can help. Call (1-800) SAVE-ME-2.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

ASSEMBLE PRODUCTS at home for best companies. Great extra income idea! (1-800) 377-6000, ext. 8290.

INSURANCE

Missionaries Worldwide,
Health Plan

For Missionaries working overseas!

FHI Benefit Plans/Aetna Global Benefits
800-347-9547
www.rfdriver.com/fhigroup.htm

If you are interested in placing an ad in The Marketplace, fax your ad to Karen Booker at (630) 260-9401.

GET RESULTS!

We'll expand your
job search!

Inter Cristo will put you in touch with current job leads
in the United States and
overseas.

If you're interested in using your job skills in Christian service and are open to relocating, call Inter Cristo
now at

1-800-426-1342

www.jobleads.org

or return the coupon below

The Christian Career Specialists
19303 Fremont Ave N
Seattle, WA 98133-3800

a ministry of CHRIST

Name

Address

City State Zip

TS!
T NN
YES
our in leads d using an o sto
42 elow peaks are
o

The next great leap for equipped church leaders is really a

step back.

Back to the way Jesus himself
equipped and trained the 12.

Smelly fishing boats. Dusty streets. Windblown hillsides. Not much of a campus! But the student body of 12 sure learned the secrets of effective ministry. At Denver Seminary, we're following the example of the Master Professor with an emphasis on hands-on learning directed by experienced mentors. Learn more about the seminary education with an innovative approach to knowing, being and doing. We borrowed it from the best!

Take the leap.

DENVER SEMINARY

1-800-922-3040 Ext. 278
P.O. Box 10,000

e-mail: admit@densem.edu
Denver, CO 80250

www.gospelcom.net/densem/

"ACCESS"-ible Education

Accessibility is a prominent feature of contemporary education. Many colleges and seminaries serve traditional students, but also those who cannot study full-time on their main campuses. This is good news if you have a life situation that is rooted with family, ministry, employment, budget, and other significant matters of stewardship. The schools on these pages have developed open programs through extension locations, modular (intensive) courses, independent study (correspondence) formats, and courses using on-line access and CD-ROM technology. For information about specific opportunities, please contact the schools themselves.

ACCESS, the Association of Christian

Continuing Education Schools and Seminaries, is an organization of professionals representing a wide variety of institutions and individuals in distance education. We encourage the development of open opportunities that combine accessibility and quality. For more information about ACCESS, please write to P.O. Box 132, Wheaton, IL 60189.

Berean University, an accredited institution, offers institute, college, and graduate programs in Bible and related areas, entirely by distance education. Institute courses provide enrichment and ministerial training. The college program offers B.A. and A.A. degrees by independent study, and the graduate program offers M.A. degrees by independent study.

Call 800/443-1083 for more information, or write to Berean University, 1445 Boonville Ave., Springfield, MO 65802. Web: www.berean.edu

COLUMBIA
INTERNATIONAL UNIVERSITY

With over 15 years of experience, Columbia Bible College and Columbia Biblical Seminary have provided undergraduate and graduate extension courses designed to help you Know Him and Make Him Known. Whether by e-mail or toll-free telephone, our experienced faculty and staff are committed to helping you become more effective in your ministry. Ask our college or seminary admissions department for a Columbia Extension Catalog: P.O. Box 3122, Columbia, SC 29230-3122; 800/777-2227; internet: yesciu@ciu.edu

Visit our Web site at <http://www.ciu.edu>

COVENANT
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

call: 800/264-8064; e-mail: admissions@covenantseminary.edu; www.covenantseminary.edu; or write: 12330 Conway Rd., St. Louis, MO 63141.

Learn wherever you are, and get help along the way! With Covenant Theological Seminary, you can take classes individually or at one of our extension sites with a personal mentor to answer your questions. Earn credit toward an M.Div. or M.A., or complete a Graduate Certificate for M.A. by extension. Extension classes are ATS & NCA accredited. For more information

DALLAS
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

Practical ministry training, combined with the historic strength of Dallas Seminary's Bible and theology curriculum, provides the opportunity to earn the Master of Arts degree through extension sites in Houston, Tampa, San Antonio, and Chattanooga/Atlanta. The convenience of home-study courses through audiocassette tapes and a pilot Internet course (tentatively set for January 1999) makes it possible to earn up to 12 hours toward your degree without leaving home!

External Studies Department, 3909 Swiss Ave., Dallas, TX 75204; 800/992-0998, ext. 3497

E-mail: External_Studies@dts.edu; Web: www.dts.edu

FULLER
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Anytime. Anyplace. At-your-pace, media-assisted, accredited, master's degree courses—assistance only a phone call or e-mail away! Ask about Individualized Distance Learning (IDL). Or, if you prefer a traditional classroom context, earn an entire master's degree at any of these extended locations: Phoenix; Menlo Park or Orange County, California; Colorado Springs; or Seattle.

Fuller Theological Seminary, Division of Continuing and Extended Education, 135 N. Oakland Ave., Pasadena, CA 91182; 800/999-9578; e-mail: cee@fuller.edu or visit our Web site: www.fuller.edu/

Lee University
External Studies

Enhance your ministry now! Accredited B.S. degree in Christian Ministry allows specialization in Bible, Theology, Christian Education, or Pastoral Ministry. Independent study and extension course locations available.

Lee University External Studies, 100 Eighth Street, N.E., Cleveland, TN 37311; 800/256-5916
E-mail: externalstudy@leeuniversity.edu

The World is Our Campus

Luther Rice Seminary... provides distance education at the graduate and undergraduate levels. Since 1962 the seminary has been a pioneer in the field of distance education and the Doctor of Ministry program.

Studies include Bible, Theology, Preaching/Pastoral Ministry, Missions/Evangelism, Christian Education, and Christian Counseling. Luther Rice Seminary has affordable tuition with financial assistance available.

For information, contact us at Luther Rice Seminary, 3038 Evans Mill Road, Lithonia, GA 30038; 770/484-1204; 800/442-1577; e-mail: lrs@lrs.edu; Web: www.lrs.edu

Moody Bible Institute

Now anyone, anywhere can earn a bachelor's degree through our Center for External Studies!

Study the Bible for college or for continuing-education credit. You can count on biblically based, practical training that the Moody Bible Institute has been providing for over 100 years.

Call 800/955-1123 for information, or write to us at 820 N. LaSalle Blvd., Chicago, IL 60610.

Yes, You Can... earn a degree at home! Complete an accredited Bachelor of Ministry Degree entirely by distance education.

- Over 75 courses to choose from
- Start any time, take up to 12 months to complete
- Tuition costs as low as $75.00 (US) per credit
- Various program options, from certificate to degree

Canada's leader in theological distance education

P.O. Box 4000, Three Hills, Alberta, Canada T0M 2N0
800/785-4226; fax: 403/443-5540. Call for a free catalogue.
Web: www.pbi.ab.ca; e-mail: distance.ed@pbi.ab.ca

Jackson • Orlando • Charlotte

External Education at RTS. Courses, which may be audited or taken for credit, can be applied toward the M.A.T.S., M.A.B.S., and M.Div. degrees. Certificate programs in Biblical, Historical, or Theological Studies and Missions are also available.

800-227-2013; Internet: rts@rts.edu

Visit our Web site at: www.rts.edu

Study with Richard Pratt, Steve Brown, Ronald Nash, and Sinclair Ferguson without ever leaving your home through the Department of

TAYLOR UNIVERSITY

World Wide Campus

Earn college credit RIGHT WHERE YOU ARE!

- College Students: Anytime, anyplace learning solves scheduling problems.
- High Schoolers: Get a head start on college by earning college credit now!
- 13 online and 75 correspondence courses available.
- Coming soon: AA degrees online!

For information or a free catalog:

Call: 800/845-3149 or 219/456-2111, ext. 32225

E-mail: wwcampus@tayloru.edu

Web: www.wwcampus.tayloru.edu

Celebrating 60 years of integrating faith and learning through distance education.

TRINITY EVANGELICAL DIVINITY SCHOOL

2065 Half Day Road • Deerfield, Illinois 60015 • USA

At your pace and in your place!

We offer more than 40 graduate-level independent study courses. TEDS also provides graduate-level programs through our extension sites in the following cities:

Akron, OH; Chicago, IL; Erie, PA; Grand Rapids, MI; Indianapolis, IN; Madison, WI; Milwaukee, WI; Urbana, IL; and Washington, DC.

Call 800/417-9999.

WESTMINSTER
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

Interested in seriously studying the Bible and theology? In addition to classes in Philadelphia, Westminster now offers graduate-level training every semester through extension programs in New York City and Dallas, TX. Not only are courses offered at Redeemer Presbyterian Church in NYC and Park Cities Presbyterian Church in Dallas, but individual audio-taped courses are also available. Through these you can earn a Certificate in Christian Studies or work toward a master's degree. Please contact: 800/626-8599 or 215/887-5511; e-mail: scasselli@wts.edu or write to: P.O. Box 27009, Philadelphia, PA 19118.

Wheaton
College

Wheaton College Graduate School's distance learning courses allow you to get a head start on your education without leaving home. Courses are available in missions and theological studies. Non-credit courses are also available in Old Testament, New Testament, and Theology to help you meet the proficiency requirements of the Graduate School. For further information, contact us at Graduate Extension, Wheaton College, Wheaton, IL 60187; 800/888-0141

Fax: 630/752-5935; e-mail: Gradexten@wheaton.edu

The Fox and the Writer

I felt a thrilling flashback to Eden, when the barrier of fear had not yet arisen between the species.

Last spring, three kits were born in a fox den visible across a ravine from my driveway. I watched the early progress through binoculars: the kits nursing, sunning themselves, playing, and frantically diving for cover if a large bird sailed overhead.

Fancying myself a latter-day Saint Francis, I decided to befriend them. I took daily walks in the vicinity of the den, whistling softly and leaving small gifts—a bone, a raw egg, a handful of cat food. Purists frown on such interference with nature, I know, but I figure houses like mine, built in the foxes' territory, have already disrupted the natural order.

The first few weeks the kits scrambled into the den whenever they saw me. As they grew accustomed to my presence, though, they retreated to rocks nearby. They peered at me inquisitively, golden eyes alert, ears twitching to every sound, their unscarred red coats glistening in the sun.

Eventually the three began following me. I felt like the Pied Piper. If I stopped, they stopped and hid behind a rock or bush. If I ran, they ran too. If I sat for a picnic lunch, they surrounded me. Once I tossed an apple core into some bushes and in a flash all three pounced. Quivering, frozen in a hunting posture, they waited, and I realized that they were waiting for it to move, like all their food.

As the Colorado summer progressed, I would stand in my driveway and whistle; on command, the three handsome young foxes came bounding across the ravine. They stalked butterflies in a patch of wildflowers. They gave futile chase to wily squirrels. They stood on their hind legs and lapped water from our birdbath—once jumping back in alarm when a skim of ice reflected their own images.

In order to keep the deer, elk, and rabbits out of flower gardens, we have connected water hoses to sprinklers activated by motion sensors. Walk in front of the sensor, and water sprays out with a loud, startling noise. (Neighborhood kids love to introduce their unsuspecting friends to this technology.) The first time the foxes wandered in front of the motion sensor, setting off the water, they high-tailed it, literally, all the way back to their den. Soon, though, they were playing games with the sensor, dashing in front of it to see if they could set it off without getting wet.

If I threw a tennis ball, one would chase it down and run, with the other two in hot pursuit. Like some dogs, though, they never learned to relinquish the retrieved object.

The three had very different personalities. We named the bravest Mr. Bold, the most fearful Shy Guy, and the third Black Socks because of his distinctive leg markings. If I put out food, I started with one pile, which Mr. Bold immediately gobbled up, then moved a few feet away and put down another pile, which Mr. Bold dashed over to investigate.

By the time I set out a third pile, Shy Guy would cautiously approach the dregs left in the first pile—until Mr. Bold charged over to chase him away. Poor Shy Guy—his personality kept him in a state of perpetual hunger.

In animals as in humans, cleverness can help one surmount personality obstacles. Shy Guy prevailed after I started putting food in a metal dog dish. Foxes track food with their noses, not their eyes, and the three could not seem to distinguish the food from the dish. They would smell the food and bite the dish, which didn't taste at all like cat food or lamb bones. Plus, the sound of a metal dish scraping across gravel startled them. They would stare at the dish and circle it for half an hour, smelling the food but not knowing how to get it.

Shy Guy, however, mastered the dish, assuring that from then on he got a fair portion. I would put down two piles of food and leave some in the dish. The other two might chase him away, but, unable to solve the mystery of the dish, they ultimately left its contents to a grinning Shy Guy.

All summer I had three constant companions. As I weeded the garden, cut the grass, or read the mail in a hammock, they followed my every move. If I ate lunch on our wooden balcony, they would climb the steps to join me.

Mr. Bold, especially, seemed without fear. On fine summer days I tote my laptop computer outdoors and sit on a lounge chair in the shade. Mr. Bold would observe me for a while, then curl up, his white-tipped tail folded across his eyes, and go to sleep.

At such moments I felt a thrilling flashback to Eden, when the barrier of fear had not yet arisen between the species, and a flash-forward to heaven, when the lion shall lie down with the lamb and the fox shall curl up with the writer.

Naturalist John Muir once sighed, "It is a great comfort . . . that vast multitudes of creatures, great and small and infinite in number, lived and had a good time in God's love before man was created."

It can still happen, John.

CI

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

OCTOBER 5, 1998

PROCESSED

SEP 2 '98 1098
GTU LIBRARY

How Evangelicals Became Israel's Best Friend

US $2.95 CANADA $3.95

74470 84052 7

AOL Keyword: CT
www.ChristianityToday.net

Chart a higher course

with our award-winning faculty members, including:

RICHARD E. AVERBECK

Ph.D., Associate Professor of Old Testament and Semitic Languages [1994]

MARTIN R. CRAIN

D.Min., Director of Placement [1997]

MICHAEL P. GREEN

Ph.D., Director of Supervised Ministries, Associate Professor of Practical Theology [1995]

STEPHEN P. GREGGO

Psy.D., Assistant Professor of Pastoral Counseling and Psychology [1996]

ECKHARD J. SCHNABEL

Ph.D., Associate Professor of New Testament [1998]

PHILLIP W. SELL

Ph.D., Associate Professor of Educational Ministries [1998]

K. LAWSON YOUNGER, Jr.

Ph.D., Professor of Old Testament, Semitic Languages and Ancient Near Eastern History [1998]

ROBERT W. VARBROUGH

Ph.D., Associate Professor of New Testament, Chair, NT Department [1996]

TO CHANGE YOUR COURSE, CALL 800.345.TEDS

DEGREE PROGRAMS CERTIFICATE IN BIBLICAL STUDIES • MASTER OF DIVINITY: APOLOGETICS, BIOETHICS, CHRISTIANITY AND CONTEMPORARY CULTURE, CHURCH HISTORY, CHURCH PLANTING, EDUCATIONAL MINISTRIES, ETHICS, EVANGELISM, MISSION, PASTORAL COUNSELING, PREACHING, URBAN MINISTRY, AND YOUTH MINISTRY • MASTER OF ARTS: CHILDREN'S MINISTRY, CHRISTIAN THOUGHT, CHURCH HISTORY, COUNSELING MINISTRIES, EDUCATIONAL MINISTRIES, EVANGELISM, MISSION, NEW TESTAMENT, OLD TESTAMENT, OR YOUTH MINISTRIES • MASTER OF ARTS IN RELIGION • MASTER OF THEOLOGY: CHURCH HISTORY, MISSION AND EVANGELISM, NEW TESTAMENT, OLD TESTAMENT, PASTORAL COUNSELING AND PSYCHOLOGY, PRACTICAL THEOLOGY, AND SYSTEMATIC THEOLOGY • DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY: EDUCATIONAL STUDIES, INTERCULTURAL STUDIES, THEOLOGICAL STUDIES • DOCTOR OF MINISTRY: BIOETHICS FOR THE CHAPLAINCY, CHURCH MANAGEMENT & LEADERSHIP, MISSIOLOGY, PREACHING, PASTORAL COUNSELING, PASTORAL MINISTRIES • NOT ALL DEGREES OFFERED IN ALL LOCATIONS.

Trinity Evangelical Divinity School

The Divinity School of Trinity International University

DEERFIELD/CHICAGO • MIAMI • EXTENSION LOCATIONS
800.345.TEDS • 847.317.8000 • tedsadm@tiu.edu • www.tiu.edu

Don't look now, but you're being followed.

"This Bible will prove to be an excellent, hands-on resource for any leader who wants to motivate and empower others in a Biblically directed manner. I can't wait to get my hands on it!"

—John Maxwell

Pastor, author and founder of INJOY Christian Leadership Organization

From parents to presidents, we all have our personal following. People who look up to us. People who justify their own behavior by what we do.

Enter the Leadership Bible, the perfect resource for anyone who wants to get better at being the leader God intended. You'll get a sharp focus on the three most important areas of a leader's life: Personal development, leadership skills, and relationships with others. 52 weeks of practical study on leadership principles will help hone your skills in just 15 minutes a day. And words of wisdom from proven leaders like Bill Hybels, Pat Riley, and Ken Blanchard will motivate you and those you lead to do great things.

Become the leader you were created to be. Call 1-800-727-3480 or visit your local Christian bookstore today.

Zondervan
www.zondervan.com

Attend Class While Tending Your Flock

Balancing the needs of your ministry with the needs of your family isn't easy. But furthering your ministry through education doesn't have to disrupt your home life. You can study for your bachelor's, master's, or doctorate and still continue your ministry through the external studies program at Trinity.

Trinity College and Seminary allows you to complete your education through a personalized, accelerated degree program without a residency requirement. Our traditional off campus program, along with our virtual campus and optional Regional Seminars, lets you choose the method of study that best fits your responsibilities to your family and your personal educational goals.

Contact an Admissions Counselor for more information.

- B.A., M.A., M.Div., Ph.D., D.Min. in Various Disciplines
- Financial Grants are Available
- Off Campus and On-line Degree Programs
- Accelerated Study
- Regional Seminars Optional
- Accredited by the University of Liverpool, England

TRINITY
COLLEGE OF THE BIBLE
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
800-457-5510

International Academic and Administrative Offices
Newburgh, Indiana, USA

Phone: 800-457-5510

Fax: 812-858-3235

E-mail: 74777.245@compuserve.com

Visit our website! www.trinitysem.edu

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Volume 42, No. 11
October 5, 1998

A Magazine of Evangelical Conviction

FEATURES

38 Cover Story: How Evangelicals Became Israel's Best Friend

The amazing story of Christian efforts to create and sustain the modern nation of Israel.

By Timothy Weber

Plus: Jerusalem As Jesus Views It

50 "Smuggling" Jesus into Muslim Hearts

Brother Andrew's boldest mission yet.

By Wendy Murray Zoba

2ND ANNUAL FICTION SECTION

58 Satan with a Stethoscope

Novels you don't want to read before surgery.

By Susan Wise Bauer

62 Putting Death in Your Daytimer

Even fictional death casts light back on life.

By Doris Betts

67 The Lord Puts Strange Hooks in the Mouths of Men

A story. By Betty S. Carter

72 Special News Report: Finishing Well

After achieving success, some baby boomers are now finding significance in second-career mission assignments.

By Christine J. Gardner

DEPARTMENTS

5 Inside CT: Obsessed with the End Times

9 Letters

36 Editorial: The Prodigal Who Didn't Come Home

76 Highlights: The Unmoral Prophet

87 Matters of Opinion: Me? Apologize for Slavery?

84 Church in Action: Bringing up the McCaugheys' septuplets

86 Arts: Unreached People Group: Classical Musicians

88 Reflections

90 Conversations: The Good HMO

92 Directions: Is Hell Forever?

94 The Baroness Cox: The Homeless Church of Myanmar

96 Books: Theology for the Rest of Us

160 Charles Colson: Evangelicals Are Not an Interest Group

NEWS

18 Methodists: Council Bans Same-Sex Rites

20 Promise Keepers: Cutbacks Prune Full-time Staff

26 Congress: Curbing Religious Persecution Difficult

27 Washington: Split Deepens over Religious Liberty Bill

28 Christian Science: Sect Polishes Image

30 Terrorism: Bombings Inflamm Religious Tensions

32 Vineyard: Costa Rican Coffee Finances Urban Outreach

34 Sports: Does Champions for Christ Profit from Players?

15 North American Report

22 World Report

COVER ART BY JEFF THOMPSON. PICTURED (RIGHT TO LEFT): HAL LINDSEY, ISRAELI PRIME MINISTER NETANYAHU (REUTERS), JERRY FALWELL (REUTERS), PAT ROBERTSON, AND TIM LAHAYE.

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Founded 1956

Senior Editors: George K. Brushaber, Chairman; James I. Packer, Visiting Scholar; Timothy George, Senior Adviser; R. Kent Hughes, Earl F. Palmer, Marianne Meye Thompson, John D. Woodbridge

Editorial Director Harold L. Myra
Executive Editor David Neff
Managing Editor Michael G. Maudlin
Art Director Carla Sonheim
Associate Editors Richard A. Kauffman
Kevin D. Miller
Timothy C. Morgan
Wendy Murray Zoba
Administrative Editor Carol R. Thiessen
Associate News Editor John W. Kennedy
Book Review Editor John Wilson
Associate Designer June M. Gunawan
Editorial Resident Christine J. Gardner
Editor at Large Philip Yancey
Senior Writer Tim Stafford
Senior News Writer Arthur D. Moore
Arts Editor Karen L. Mulder
Editorial Coordinator Paulette DePaul
Administrative Assistant Lara Badalamenti

Board of Directors: Billy Graham, Chairman; B. Clayton Bell, Sr., Executive Chairman; Harold L. Myra, President; Miriam Adeney, John N. Akers, Jill P. Briscoe, Stephen W. Brown, A. Kenneth Curtis, Susan S. Eames, Robert P. Evans, Eugene B. Habecker, Ben Haden, Pete Hammond, Michael E. Haynes, Oswald C. J. Hoffmann, C. B. Hogue, John A. Huffman, Jr., Edward L. Johnson, Jay L. Kesler, Dennis F. Kinlaw, Jack Modesett, Jr., William W. Pendleton, Robert E. Reccord, Paul D. Robbins, W. Fred Smith, Jr., Howard S. Williams

Billy Graham, Founder; Carl F. H. Henry, Editor 1956-68; L. Nelson Bell, Executive Editor 1956-73; Harold Lindsell, Editor 1968-78; Kenneth S. Kantzer, Editor 1978-82; V. Gilbert Beers, Editor 1982-85; George K. Brushaber, Executive Editor 1985-91; Terry C. Muck, Executive Editor 1985-90

Contributing Editors: Miriam Adeney, Nigel M. de S. Cameron, Charles W. Colson, James R. Edwards, Nathan O. Hatch, Kenneth A. Myers, Mark A. Noll, Thomas C. Oden, Ben Patterson, David Schiedermayer, David A. Seamands, Howard A. Snyder, John R. W. Stott

Consulting Editors: Paul M. Bassett, Colin Brown, Harold O. J. Brown, Robert E. Cooley, David S. Dockery, William A. Dyrness, Stanley J. Grenz, Christopher A. Hall, Walter C. Kaiser, Jr., Kenneth S. Kantzer, Donald W. McCullough, Alister E. McGrath, Richard Mouw, Roger E. Olson, Haddon W. Robinson, Stephen A. Seamands, Aida Besançon Spencer, John G. Stackhouse, Jr., Donald A. D. Thorsen, Edwin M. Yamauchi

Corresponding Editors: Tokunboh Adeyemo, V. Elving Anderson, Donald G. Bloesch, Edith L. Blumhofer, Darrell L. Bock, Calvin B. DeWitt, Samuel Escobar, C. Stephen Evans, Ajith Fernando, Richard J. Foster, Vernon Grounds, Allen C. Guelzo, Christopher D. Hancock, Alan F. Harre, Roberta Hestenes, Arthur P. Johnston, Robert K. Johnston, David Livingstone, Paul L. Maier, George M. Marsden, David L. McKenna, Stephen V. Monsma, Leon Morris, Terry C. Muck, Nancey Murphy, Bradley Nassif, Armand M. Nicholi, Jr., Roger Nicole, C. René Padilla, William E. Pannell, Eugene H. Peterson, Richard V. Pierard, Robert C. Roberts, John Rodgers, Vinay Samuel, David P. Scaer, Bruce L. Shelley, Ronald J. Sider, Russell P. Spittler, Elmer L. Towns, Grant Wacker, Robert L. Wilken, J. Rodman Williams

Advisory Editors: Leith Anderson, Myron S. Augsburger, William Bentley Ball, David B. Barrett, Paul W. Brand, Michael Cromartie, Edward G. Dobson, James Engel, George Gallup, Jr., Charles E. Hummel, Diane L. Knippers, Steven T. McFarland, Dean Merrill, Bryant L. Myers, Richard John Neuhaus, Will Norton, Jr., Michael Novak, Matthew Parker, James W. Reapsome, Beth Spring, Joseph M. Stowell, Warren W. Wiersbe

CHRISTIANITY TODAY, INC.

Harold L. Myra, President, C.E.O.
Paul D. Robbins, Executive Vice President, C.O.O.
Laurie Powell, Executive Assistant
Keith Stonehocker, Senior Vice President
David B. Smith, Corporate Vice President
David Hemstreet, Vicki Howard, John C. LaRue, Jr., Kevin A. Miller, David Neff, Linda Schambach, JoAnn Selander, Marshall Shelley, Carol Thompson, Vice Presidents

Advertising: Joyce Bardin, Karen Booker, Joel Carlsen, Lee Cunningham, Kevin Flanagan, John Grey, Carol Hayes, Jenny Jorgenson, Tim Platek, Daniel Poorman, Kathryn Stephens, Joel Stombres

Circulation: Charlene Perez, Production Director; Jo Ann Rosenbaum, Fulfillment Director; Leslee Baron, Norma Bormann, Bradley Dupuy, Traci Grieser, Heidi Hall, Jody Harrington, Julie Kaminski, Sherry Kyle, Dianne Lambert, Debra Lane, Jeremy Long, Nancy Nance, Louie P. Parker, Karen Raad, Carol Schaley, Jennifer Stenzel, Elizabeth Tolentino, Bonnie Willman, Joy Windes, Philip Woods

Financial Operations: Terumi Echols, Manager, Cheri Peterson, Credit Manager, Gary Johnson, Sandra Johnson, Judy Van Zanten

Human Resources: Susan Cronk, Manager, Rebecca Bright, Kate Bryant, Bert Davidson, Philip DiCicco, Jane Hyeon, Lew Radabaugh

Internet Online Services: Judy Gill, Manager, Clayton Anderson, Kathy DePue, Sky Findlay, Wendy Harley, Michelle Hayes, Laura Hepker, Michael Herman, Todd Watermann, Aaron Welch

Market Research: Cynthia Solver, Manager, Grace Ferroni, Natalia Marandiu, Douglas Zimmerman

Production: Cynthia Cronk, Manager; Technology: Les Smith, Manager, Jeff DiNanno, Ted Gysan, Kelly Johnson, Jason Olthoff, Tim Ostermiller, Theresa Phillips, Rebekah Santos, James Smeenge

Special Sales: Glenn Bushong, Manager; Becki Bustin, Michael Fister, Rodney Heckler, Jared Johnson, Lynn Long, John Ramsell

Editorial/Advertising Offices: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gunderson Drive, Carol Stream, Ill. 60188 630-260-6200; FAX: 630-260-0114. Advertising in CHRISTIANITY TODAY does not necessarily imply editorial endorsement.

Subscription Services: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, P.O. Box 37060, Boone, Iowa 50037-0060. Customer service: 800-999-1704.

Manuscript Policy: Unsolicited manuscripts are not accepted. A query letter must be sent first, describing a proposed manuscript (poetry is not accepted). Unsolicited manuscripts sent without a self-addressed, postage-paid envelope will not be returned.

Permissions: CHRISTIANITY TODAY grants permission for any original article (not a reprint) to be photocopied for use in a local church or classroom, provided no more than 1,000 copies are made, are distributed free, and indicate the source is CHRISTIANITY TODAY.

Australian Agent: MEDIA.COM, 14 Eton Road, Keswick 5061, South Australia. United Kingdom Agent: MASTERPLAN PUBLISHING Co., 63-67 Kingston Road, New Malden, Surrey KT3 3PB, phone 0181-942-9442.

Indexes: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is indexed in Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature; Christian Periodical Index; Religion Index One: Periodicals; Religious and Theological Abstracts; Book Review Index; and Academic Abstracts and Magazine Article Summaries. ISSN 0009-5753. © 1998 CHRISTIANITY TODAY INC.

Christianity Today (ISSN 0009-5753) is published monthly (semi-monthly in April and October), 14 issues per year, by Christianity Today, Inc., 465 Gunderson Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188. Periodicals postage paid at Carol Stream, IL, and at additional mailing offices.

Postmaster: Send address changes to Christianity Today, P.O. Box 37060, Boone, IA 50037-0060; 1-800-999-1704. GST Registration Number R126028836. Canada Post Mail Product Sales Agreement #59536. Printed in U.S.A.

Subscription Rates: Regular subscription price: one year $24.95. Outside U.S. add $8.00 postage prepaid U.S. currency. $2.50 per copy.

Subscription Renewals? Gift Subscriptions? Address Changes? Call toll-free 1-800-999-1704.

E-mail: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is available electronically on America Online (keyword: CT); E-mail: CHRISTIANITY TODAY at CTedit@aol.com. CT is also on the Web at www.christianitytoday.net. For information on how to enroll in Christianity Online, call 1-800-633-8888.

MORE FUEL FOR THE FIRE IN YOUR HEART.

Rutherford Institute founder John Whitehead believes a full-dimensional Christianity inevitably impacts culture. Here is motivation for you and your church to reclaim the Christian influence in society as the 21st century draws near.

A powerful, never-before published commentary on Romans 1-8 by the most influential Christian thinker of this century, the late Francis Schaeffer. Fresh insight and an arresting perspective on our own times.

Is the evangelical church in trouble? These essays from today's most knowledgeable voices take the pulse of evangelicalism — and show you how to promote the kind of change that leads to an uncompromised body of believers.

Encounter God's ultimate purpose in the world in John Piper's passionate exploration of Jonathan Edwards' incomparable classic, "The End for Which God Created the World." It's more powerful and relevant than ever.

CROSSWAY BOOKS

Making A Difference In People's Lives For Christ.

Available at a Christian bookstore near you.

It Only Looks More Expensive.

Since Bertolini began manufacturing quality stackable chairs, over 30 years ago, our name has become synonymous with superior craftsmanship and subtle elegance. Leading the industry in both durability and innovation, Bertolini is pleased to unveil our latest model: the APEX stacker™. With a wide selection of handsome fabrics, and no unsightly exposed metal frames marring the chair's unique wide back, the attractive

APEX chair enhances auditoriums and sanctuaries of all sizes. Designed to meet even the most challenging of seating requirements, our chairs' unique structure allows for maximum seating capacity, while offering your congregation and assemblies extended comfort. And with the most rigorous quality standards in the industry, Bertolini chairs are guaranteed to remain comfortable and elegant, for many years to come.

We invite you to have a seat.

HAVE A SEAT! FOR FREE! CALL TODAY,
AND WE'LL SEND YOU A COMPLIMENTARY BERTOLINI CHAIR.

20 Year Frame Warranty

5 Year Fabric Warranty

CHINO, CALIFORNIA • TUPELO, MISSISSIPPI

CALL US TOLL-FREE AT 1.800.647.7725

Michael G. Maudlin,
Managing Editor

Obsessed with the End Times

INSIDE CT

Was Hitler the Antichrist? (Some still think so.) Or was it Gorbachev? (He had a mark on his forehead.) Not too many evangelicals think of the pope as a good candidate, though he topped the list among Protestants for several centuries. Then there's Bill Gates.

I told one evangelical leader that CT was marking the fiftieth anniversary of the modern State of Israel. He was excited. I then explained we were exploring how dispensationalist eschatology shaped America's pro-Israel stand (see "How Evangelicals Became Israel's Best Friend," p. 38). He winced. He was embarrassed by the prophecy charts, Rapture movies, and Antichrist spotting of his youth. He didn't relish being reminded how this end-times obsession has characterized popular Christianity.

If you hang out among evangelical leaders or at our colleges and seminaries (including even today's Dallas Theological Seminary), you seldom hear end-times scenarios discussed or see Daniel's prophecies charted. A few years ago, you might even have imagined that Scofield's notes had been, uh, marginalized. But then there was a Gulf War and suddenly Christian bestsellers told how Saddam Hussein and Iraq (ancient Babylon) had been foretold in the Bible. And the latest Christian publishing sensation is a seven-volume post-Rapture, dispensational soap opera.

I understand why my friend winced. There are dangers to end-times obsessions: a disinclination to work toward long-term solutions, a propensity to focus on prophetic fulfillment at the expense of ethical concerns (something Israel's prophets were never accused of), and a perverse satisfaction in cultural decay. However, these problems don't compare with what should be celebrated.

I remember when I first read Revelation's portrayal of the saints' heavenly worship. I realized then that I was part of that crowd. My pulse quickened. Did John see me? Was I in the Bible?

I was, and I am. The most important contribution of dispensationalists' eschatology is their emphasis that we worship an active God who intervenes in history, judges nations, and works out his purposes on earth. Our God is the Lord of history, and everything else.

Many of my dispensational friends will not be surprised if God surprises them at how Jesus returns. Prophecy literature is famous, after all, for changing with the circumstances. But what shines through the details of their scenarios is a bold confidence that God is actively preparing his church for Christ's return. And this is a ministry to us all. CT fiction?

truth?

In the three short years since the release of his acclaimed novel The President, nearly all of Parker Hudson's startling predictions have come true.

Read this remarkable work and decide for yourself where fiction stops and reality begins. You just may find our future.

IS

THIS

OUR

future?

The President. Now available in paperback.

*"As the pulpits go,
the nation goes."*

— Dr. Stephen F. Olford

"... from this school will go out preachers to every part of the earth. I thank God for the many years I sat on the board of this school. I thank God for the thousands of young people who have gone out to the mission field. I thank God for the exhorters. I thank God for the teachers... I have a great burden for preachers."

— Dr. Stephen F. Olford

Dr. Stephen F. Olford (right)
with Dr. Donald L. Hamilton,
first appointee to the Stephen F. Olford
Chair of Biblical Preaching.

COLUMBIA BIBLICAL SEMINARY announces the establishment of the Stephen F. Olford Chair of Biblical Preaching

Has God called you to be a committed, dynamic, convincing expositor of His word?

Dr. Olford's passions are:

- Expository Preaching - Restoring Spirit empowered expository preaching to the pulpits of our land, bringing revival to the church.
- Incarnational Preparation - Preparing preachers who flesh out the truth they proclaim.
- Evangelism - Sending "flaming preachers, flaming prophets of God" to the far ends of the earth.

Call Columbia Biblical Seminary & Graduate School of Missions at

1.800.777.2227

Columbia Biblical Seminary
& Graduate School of Missions

A division of Columbia International University

7435 Monticello Rd. • P.O. Box 3122 • Columbia, SC 29230-3122
803.754.4100 • Toll Free 1.800.777.2227 • www.ciu.edu

Preparing World Christians To Know Him And To Make Him Known

Of all the reasons not to drink and drive,
getting special rates on your insurance is
the least important.

The Guidant Insurance Group

is proud to exclusively offer Responsible Choice auto insurance to people who don't drive impaired by alcohol. By becoming a Responsible Choice policyholder, you join thousands of other Guidant customers with similar values. To join the fight to eliminate the epidemic of drinking and driving, call 1-888-218-8561.

The Guidant
Insurance Group

Valuing Customers As Partners

Formerly Preferred Risk

1-888-218-8561

www.guidantinsurance.com

© 1999 Guidant Insurance Group. All rights reserved.

Confronting Negative Influences

✉ I had just returned home from visiting two teenagers recently sentenced to life in prison for murder when I found my issue of CT with the cover story "Trained to Kill" [Aug. 10]. It was a wise choice to include this informative article. I have often cautioned our church families to employ discretion in what they allow their children to watch on television, and I found this article by David Grossman to supply additional and factual evidence for what many of us have suspected for a long time.

Though the most productive role of the church in influencing culture lies in the proclamation of the gospel, the church should be proactive in directly confronting the negative influences in our society. I concur with the opening comments stating "that parents, the church, scholars, and the government must come together" to address this issue. As a result of reading this article, not only do I intend to share this information with our church families, but I have scheduled an appointment with our state senator to discuss how we can encourage limits to the "probing lenses" of the network news media. Thank you!

*Pastor Jack W. Bruce, Jr.
Elizabethton Alliance Church Elizabethton, Tenn.*

✉ Though I have spent many hours thinking about and discussing this issue with my friends and family, Lt. Col. Grossman shed new light on it. I have a much greater understanding of how violence specifically affects children (and the rest of us) and numbs them (and us).

*Alison Rhodes
Tinker AFB, Okla.*

✉ Grossman loses focus when it comes to charting a response to the problem raised. Curiously, after describing the dangers of extensive exposure to violence on TV, he minimizes the impact of an individual's decision to "just turn it off." If we agree that exposure to TV violence is a causal factor contributing to violent crime, it is obvious that if fewer people were exposed to TV violence, we would experience somewhat less violence at large. Although the remaining victims would still be real people with real hurting loved ones, it is fallacious to say that "it wouldn't have done a bit of good."

I applaud Grossman for gathering and summarizing research and raising awareness on this issue. However, considerable work must be done towards charting a comprehensive and effective response to the problem.

*Wayne Iba
Redwood City, Calif.*

Grossman says, "But it [killing] does not come naturally, you have to be taught to kill." Sounds good. Who taught Cain to kill?

*Jack Knauer
Larue, Ohio*

Seldom do I reread articles. This one I have read three times. Thanks to David Grossman for boldly speaking out to the TV networks, calling for them to assume responsibility for the evident impact that violent programming has on the lives of our children and to "have the moral courage to censure people who think that violence is legitimate entertainment." This is an article that every parent should read and apply in ways that change the destructive trends in our culture. This is an article that calls for reprints for distribution to families in our churches and to the media that want to ignore the evidence of the effect of violent programming.

*Pastor Richard Gerbrandt Mennonite Brethren Church
Reedley, Calif.*

✉ I think it's time to quit arguing and address the real issue. It isn't gun control or TV violence or violent computer games. They simply represent the serious and tragic consequences of the sin and godlessness that pervades our society worldwide. Whether we agree or disagree with some of Grossman's findings, it is clear our generation is becoming more and more violent. I've turned off my TV in the evenings simply because of the violence and sexual situations. My Bible tells me to think on those things that are lovely, pure, wholesome, etc. Where is the insatiable hunger for God today?

Dick Olsen Sunnyvale, Calif.

✉ While reading "Trained to Kill" I was reminded of my experience while watching Saving Private Ryan the day before. In one scene covering the invasion of Normandy, a bullet struck a soldier's helmet, but mercifully did not pierce it. In a daze, the soldier pulled his helmet off to inspect it and to feel the back of his head. While his head was uncovered, the soldier was struck in the back of the head and killed instantly by another bullet. The man sitting next to us in the theater laughed—and did so several more times during the movie, at equally horrifying moments. And he was not alone.

Brian Wells Oak Park, Ill.

Using Our Minds

✉ I was so pleased to read the article "Pray the Lord My Mind to Keep" [Aug. 10]. I have taught classes in church on the basis of CT articles and teaching guides, and then a less structured class, "Faith and Reason," also drawing from CT articles. I am a scientist, and I worship Christ who created what I research, and I struggle with the tensions between beguiling worldly philosophies and Christianity. This article articulates my beliefs and concerns better than any I have ever read. Praise God for Cornelius Plantinga, Jr., and for CT for delivering this important lesson! The image in which we were created requires that we use our minds, that we love with our minds, that we worship with our minds. It is a joy to let God reveal his truth to me, not only through the Word, but also through creation and to do so in proportion to how submissive and adoring I am of him!

*Patrick S. McIntosh
Boulder, Colo.*

What We Need to Know

"In Search of the Lost Churches of Paul," by Wendy Murray Zoba, is a choice piece of writing [Aug. 10]. She reminds us of Turkey's involvement in New Testament history and lucidly brings us up to date on why and how the present government operates. This is information the present generation of Christians needs to know.

Udell Smith Alexandria, La.

Christians are discriminated against in Turkey, and they experience many obstacles in simply trying to survive. The article refers to the Armenian genocide during 1915–16 which took the lives of over one million Christians. My father, a mayor of one of the Christian communities, was arrested, his family murdered, and the entire village completely destroyed. He managed to escape, and with the cooperation of British forces, saved hundreds of orphans by taking them to Cyprus.

The genocide is well documented in primary historical sources, yet the Turkish government denies it. Not only are Christians persecuted even now, but Turkey does not permit any criticism of the government and routinely arrests and holds dissenters without the benefit of a trial.

Turkey has much to answer for, and as Christians we must pray that it will really follow the teachings of the Qur'an, which preaches equality. Presently equality exists only for nondissenting Turkish citizens.

Jerry G. Keshian, Ph.D.
Winston-Salem, N.C.

Those Proxy Baptisms

The new "Directions" feature adds a welcome practical relevance to CHRISTIANITY TODAY.

One point needs to be added to D. A. Carson's otherwise fine explanation of 1 Corinthians 15:29 and the Mormon practice of baptism for the dead ["Directions," Aug. 10]. Carson concluded that, "In any case, Paul's clear emphasis is that people are justified by grace through faith, which demands a personal response." In fact, Mormon teaching does include the need for a faith response to the gospel on the part of the deceased for whom proxy baptism is performed. But it teaches that they can make this faith response in the spirit world, where the gospel is offered to all (Doctrine and Covenants 138). According to Mormon teaching, their vicarious baptism ordinance has efficacy only for those deceased persons who respond positively to the gospel in the spirit world.

